Mr. Owen Paterson (North Shropshire): The Government promised an integrated transport policy, but this last week has been awful for Britain's travelling public. It seems that the Deputy Prime Minister is losing out at every turn to the Treasury. More than £30 billion is taken from the transport industry, and less than £6 billion is put back. There have been ghastly problems on the tube and we have had the embarrassment of the Prime Minister zooming down a bus lane to avoid queues. In Shropshire, I continue to receive desperate representations from the haulage industry, and there is a £94 million backlog on Shropshire's rural roads. Could we have an urgent debate on the disintegrating transport policy of the Deputy Prime Minister?

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Gentleman seems not to have noticed that I have announced a debate—next week, I think—on transport, in Opposition time. No doubt he will seek to catch your eye then, Madam Speaker.

I doubt that the £94 million backlog on Shropshire's roads arose since the general election. Before the general election, as we travelled around the countryside meeting people in the business community, we found that among their most pressing concerns was the desperate need for long-term investment in the transport infrastructure, which they had despaired of ever getting from the previous Government. It takes time to turn these things around.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): Albeit that, in Treasury questions, the Chief Secretary told my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) that he had to wait for the answer to my question, Question 29,

"What (a) has been and (b) he estimates will be the effect on the Contingency Fund of (i) the conflict in Kosovo and (ii) the measures to be taken following the peace agreement relating to Kosovo", that question, alas, was, astonishingly, not reached. Will my right hon. Friend ask the Defence Secretary to give a proper answer next Thursday on what are the costs so far and the likely costs not only of Kosovo, but of obligations that this country seems to be accruing towards the former Yugoslavia?

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend identifies a genuine difficulty for Ministers, in that it would not always be right to pre-empt an answer due to be given on a later question in response to a supplementary question from someone else, as that can cause resentment. I know, however, that he was making a different point of substance about information that he seeks from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. I will draw to my right hon. Friend's attention the fact that he is almost certain to be asked that question next Thursday.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): Will the Leader of the House find time for an early debate on the new meat hygiene charges? The fact that a fully qualified veterinary surgeon must be present when animals are slaughtered has had the most devastating effect in the Vale of York, and the few remaining small abattoirs are likely to close soon if the charges remain. The cost of slaughtering animals has more than doubled since 1 April, even though the charges should not have been introduced until next year. That is making our producers much less competitive, as the charges do not apply to the producers of imported meat.

Mrs. Beckett: I am aware of those concerns. The Government are reviewing the charges and an announcement is expected shortly. Agriculture questions are on 1 July and a further opportunity to press my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food may arise then.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): I associate myself with the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) and the response of my right hon. Friend.

Can we have a debate on prescription charges? After consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Education and Employment, will my right hon. Friend consider having a debate on the way in which prescription charges affect those in receipt of a student loan? I want to raise the case of my constituent, Lucy Little of Nailsworth, who, because she is from a single-parent family and has to pay her way through university partly by working, now has to pay prescription charges, whereas better-off students who receive money from their parents get free prescriptions.

Mrs. Beckett: I hear and understand my hon. Friend's identification with the rural audit report. I agree that it was excellent.

I am aware that difficulties often arise with prescription charges, although I am obviously not familiar with my hon. Friend's specific constituency case. I fear that I am unlikely to find time for a debate on the matter in the near future, but I am sure that he will look for other opportunities to raise it.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Lichfield): May we have an urgent debate on education, following the astonishing press release by the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, which states:

"Blunkett challenges LEAs on red tape spending"?

Is the Leader of the House aware that the Secretary of State has managed a double whammy of outrageous proportions? He has upset all the local education authorities by his inconsistent and spurious definition of central expenditure and he also continues to alienate teachers, who do not see any extra money trickling down to the classrooms and are suffocating under the daily notes that come from the DfEE instructing them what to do next.

Mrs. Beckett: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has made clear, local authorities were invited to supply the information that has been published and it was repeatedly cross-checked with them. He has also made it plain that, if there is some concern about the accuracy of that information, he will be more than happy for local authorities to publish what they believe to be the accurate figures so that people can examine the two cases side by side. That is a sensible approach. As for teachers not seeing money flowing to schools, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware of the dramatic decline in class sizes for the youngest children, which was the key pledge made by the Government at the election. The hon. Gentleman mentioned teachers suffering under central control, but we all know who started that.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Is my right hon. Friend aware that nothing is more important for next Thursday than the special debate on providing devolved powers to the settlement in Northern Ireland? Nobody, certainly on this side of the House, would argue with that. However, in the event of that not happening—I hope that it does—what will be the position of all those people in the Assembly in Northern Ireland who will continue to be paid for producing what appears to be, for the past 12 months, nothing less than gridlock?

Mrs. Beckett: I am not entirely sure of the answer to that question. Everybody shares the view that few things could be more important within the United Kingdom than to see a settlement in Northern Ireland. I find it hard to believe that more than a handful of people would wish not to see that settlement endorsed, and the vast majority of people, wherever they live in these isles, wish to see a settlement that puts behind us the pain, violence and brutality that has disfigured that province for so long.

Mr. Robert Syms (Poole): Will the Leader of the House ask the Deputy Prime Minister to make a statement on the National Air Traffic Service? Last summer, an announcement was made that the service would be sold off. Since then, the proposal has received major criticism from the unions and many Labour Back Benchers. When will the Labour party's disagreements on the issue be resolved so that we can have either a decision to proceed or another Government U-turn, because the lack of progress is causing a loss of confidence in that important service?

Mrs. Beckett: I cannot undertake to provide an early announcement on that matter, but I will undertake to draw my right hon. Friend's attention to the concerns expressed by the hon. Gentleman. I am not sure which side he is on, as—if I recall correctly—the proposal was originally made by the Conservative Government. For the Conservatives to reverse their position would be not unusual, but commonplace.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): Will the Leader of the House confirm that the report by the urban task force chaired by Lord Rogers will be issued on Tuesday? Will she find time for an urgent debate on that report, on where we are to put the 3.8 million houses that we are told we will need in the next 20 years, and on whether ways can be found to encourage people to build them in the north-east and north-west of England which are economically so demanding of them? In that debate, would it also be possible to examine the scarcely credible claims of the Deputy Prime Minister to be the guardian of the countryside?

[Mr. James Gray]

Mrs. Beckett: I am not aware of the timetable suggested by the hon. Gentleman. Of course, the House shares his concern about the issues of planning and housing, but I reject any suggestion that my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is a less than worthy guardian of the countryside. He is a worthy guardian of all our interests.

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): May we have an early opportunity to debate the high price that is being paid for the Prime Minister's gimmicks? Would that give us an opportunity to discuss the revelation today by leading general practitioners that it costs as much for one patient to contact NHS Direct as a general practitioner receives for serving that patient for a whole year? That is a misdirection of resources which has been condemned by GPs, who say that the money would be better spent by them on behalf of their patients instead of in pursuit of a gimmick by the Government.

Will the Leader of the House also update us on the progress of the electronic commerce Bill? Has control of the Bill been transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry to the spooks at the Home Office?

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Gentleman has submitted two separate requests for a debate. I can assure him that, when the Government have something to announce about e-commerce, we will announce it.

I was surprised and disappointed to hear the hon. Gentleman describe NHS Direct as a gimmick when it is an extremely worthwhile and potentially very valuable initiative. I am not aware that many general practitioners condemn it. With regard to the general tone of the hon. Gentleman's remarks, I thought it wrong and odd for him to talk about my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister as someone for ever churning out gimmicks, given his recent record in handling very serious international events in Yugoslavia and Ireland.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Will the Leader of the House arrange an early statement from the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the failure of the Government's so-called new deal? A person who completes its training and education option is twice as likely not to find a job as to find one. Youth unemployment has risen in every quarter since the national introduction of the new deal. Moreover, almost half of those who participate in the new deal receive absolutely no benefit whatsoever from it. Is it not time that the Secretary of State made a statement accepting the verdict of the Business Services Association, which represents companies with an annual turnover of £8 billion? That organisation's verdict was that the new deal "is not working". Is it not time that the Secretary of State owned up to the fact that his flagship has sunk?

Mrs. Beckett: That is a long and elaborate request for what I assume is an urgent debate. I do not accept any of the hon. Gentleman's arguments, so I do not accept that there is a need for an urgent debate. The desperate wish of Conservative Members that the new deal should be a failure is a little sad. They want young people who languished in unemployment without hope for many years under a Conservative Government to remain without hope. The Government are not prepared to give up on them. We have put substantial resources into a scheme that is better and more successful than any in this country for many a long year—better, in fact, than any scheme ever before. It is disappointing that Conservative Members would rather gloat over the supposed failure of a scheme than welcome the success of the young people involved in it.

Mr. Oliver Letwin (West Dorset): Will the Leader of the House arrange an early debate on the worrying contrast between statistics developed by the House of Commons Library and the Government's statistical analyses? As was evident in the response by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to my hon. Friend the Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant) during Treasury questions, those two sets of statistics are wholly in conflict. Will the right hon. Lady find time for the House to determine whether the statistics department of the Library is in urgent need of repair, or whether it is the statistics departments of Government services—or the recollections of Ministers—that are in urgent need of repair?

Mrs. Beckett: When we are talking about accuracy in the handling of financial matters, my own recollection is clear. The hon. Gentleman may recall that members of the Conservative Government—they are now on the Opposition Benches—could not be trusted to give reliable statistics and information. One of the tasks willingly undertaken by the Government was to clean up and restore to independence the Government statistical service.

I understand that the hon. Gentleman's premise—that there is a conflict between statistics produced by the Library and the underlying case presented by the Government's Treasury team—is contested.

BILL PRESENTED

Genetically Modified Food and Producer Liability

Mr. Alan Simpson, supported by Mr. Tony Benn, Audrey Wise, Mr. John McDonnell, Mrs. Alice Mahon, Mr. Llew Smith, Mr. Robert Marshall-Andrews, Mr. David Chaytor, Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, Mrs. Maria Fyfe, Mr. John McAllion and Dr. Ian Gibson, presented a Bill to make further provision with respect to the safety of and liability for the deliberate release or marketing of genetically modified organisms and genetically modified food; to establish a genetically modified organism compensation fund; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 23 July, and to be printed [Bill 128].

Opposition Day

[15TH ALLOTTED DAY]

Widows

Madam Speaker: I have selected the amendment standing in the name of the Prime Minister.

1.20 pm

Mr. David Rendel (Newbury): I beg to move,

That this House welcomes the long-overdue extension of widow's benefits to widowers, and the doubling of Bereavement Payments; but notes that this costs only £100 million annually in the long term, compared with the £600 million cut the Government will make through the replacement of widows' pensions by a Bereavement Tax Allowance, the abolition of Dividend Tax Credits and the restriction of Council Tax Benefit on higher-value properties; regrets the Government's woefully inadequate response to next year's halving of widows' entitlement to additional pension; welcomes the fact that this is now under investigation by the Parliamentary Ombudsman; and calls on the Government to cease their attacks on the living standards of widows.

Before I begin, may I point out to the House an unfortunate transcription mistake? The motion printed in the Order Paper is not that which we had intended. I understand that the original motion was correctly transmitted to the Government and the official Opposition yesterday.

Madam Speaker: Order. The motion that stands on the Order Paper is the one that was given to the House. It was tabled by the Liberal Democrat party, it was checked by an officer of the party, and it has been presented to the House. Whatever dealings the Liberal Democrat party has had with the other main parties to try to amend the motion is a matter for that party. The motion on the Order Paper is the motion that the House will debate.

Mr. Rendel: I entirely accept that, Madam Speaker, and I am sorry if I seemed to imply anything else. I merely meant to inform the House of the words that were not properly transcribed. I entirely accept that an error was made, and I apologise to the House for it.

The motion originally transmitted to the official Opposition and the Government last night contained, after the words "by a" and before the words "Bereavement Tax Allowance", the words:

"Bereavement Allowance; deplores the loss of widows";

I apologise for that unfortunate error. It is one of those things that occasionally happens, but we must take the blame as it happened in our Whips Office last night.

At least two aspects of changes in legislation relating to widows and benefits are welcome. The first is the extension of widows benefits to widowers. For the first time, the benefits are gender neutral, and that is absolutely right. There is no reason to suppose that men who have been bereaved of their spouses need any less protection than women similarly bereaved. It is unfortunate that change has taken so long to occur. The Government waited until the pressure from a European court case forced them to make a change that should have happened long before.

Secondly, the Government were correct to double the bereavement payment from £1,000 to £2,000. The original payment was introduced long ago, and the costs of bereavement have considerably increased since then. Most of us have probably been involved in arrangements for a funeral, and we all know that costs have been escalating for some time. The £1,000 payment should have been increased before now, and the extent of the increase is evidence of that. Such a big jump should not have been necessary.

Rather less welcome is the fact that bereavement payment is still extended only to those below pension age. It would have been better to extend it to all. At the very least, if that was all that the Government could afford following their massive cuts in widows benefits, the payment should have been extended to the very poorest pensioners. It is odd that those below pension age should receive extra help with paying for funeral and other costs, while those above that age, who are often the poorest, should not receive equivalent help.

There are of course ways in which the allowance could be set up so that only the poorest pensioners received the payment. As we suggested in the Committee stage of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, it may be possible to make the bereavement payment only to pensioners already on income support who had therefore proved that their means were very small. The Liberal Democrats would prefer to go beyond that because, as we have often said in the House, some of the poorest pensioners are for one reason or another not in receipt of income support. A case can easily be made for extending the payment to those of pension age, especially the poorest.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): Does the hon. Gentleman recall that, in the Budget press releases issued by the Inland Revenue, the Chancellor promised that these very people would be taken care of? It subsequently emerged that they would not be taken care of and the promise had to be retracted in Committee.

Mr. Rendel: The hon. Gentleman makes a good point. I am delighted to have it added to my argument. It is a worthwhile point to include.

One further point that must be made on this subject takes up something that the Government said in the Committee stage of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. They claimed that there was no need to hand a bereavement payment to pensioners because the equivalent sums were included in the benefits paid to pensioners. We pointed out that, if that were true, it was surely illogical. One assumes that the payment will in most cases be applicable only once in someone's retirement. It is illogical that the one-off payment should be spread over all the pensions and benefits given to pensioners. It is as if the Government were forcing people to start saving something out of their pensions and benefits from the moment that they retired for the day their spouse died. The sensible way is for the Government to make a one-off benefit.

I have pointed out one or two things that are right about the Government's benefit changes. What is wrong about them?

Ms Sally Keeble (Northampton, North): Does the hon. Gentleman accept that the Government have also introduced a carers pension, which will apply particularly to women and help women who have stayed at home to look after children or people with disabilities? It is a big support for family life and for women, especially widows.

[Ms Sally Keeble]

Mr. Rendel: We are debating widows in this case. Some widows and some widowers are carers, but that is a different aspect of the changes. We will no doubt welcome many other aspects of the benefit changes that the Government have promised but that perhaps have not yet been introduced. We are talking specifically about widows on this occasion.

Ms Keeble: If the hon. Gentleman thinks that we should talk only about matters that relate to widows, why has he included higher-value properties in the motion? What does that have to do specifically with widows?

Mr. Rendel: I assure the hon. Lady that there is a specific reason for including higher-value properties. It is largely widows who live in such properties. As I was about to explain to the House, I intend to leave that aspect of the motion to my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb), who will talk about that and two other aspects in a moment.

The aspects on which I will not take the time of the House at this stage are the abolition of the bereavement tax allowance, the abolition of dividend tax credits and the restriction of council tax benefit on higher-value properties. As the hon. Lady has referred to it, I shall explain further. It is often people who are left living alone in large properties when their families have moved out who are hit by that cut. That is sadly often widows.

What else is wrong with the Government's policies? The two aspects of our motion on which I intend to concentrate are the replacement of widows pensions by a bereavement allowance and the state earnings-related pension scheme. Government figures in answer to written questions show that the first will mean a long-term cut of £600 million to widows, compared with the £100 million cost of all the things that we have supported and welcomed. The long-term net saving to the Government—the net cut in benefits to widows—from all the changes amounts to £500 million. That is what the Government are taking from widows in the long term.

The Government have told us all along that they intend to cut the welfare bill but, instead of going for the areas where we would expect them to make savings, such as fraud, they are targeting some of the most vulnerable groups, including widows. All those who were expecting to get widows pensions believe that they have been paid for out of national insurance contributions; they are a contributory benefit. The spouses of people whose widows pensions are being removed have paid contributions to them and have expected during all their working lives that their widows would receive the pensions.

The wives of some people who are at the end of their working lives, or who are approaching that point, are much younger than they are. I have a constituent of 65 whose wife is only 50. If he dies before she reaches retirement age, she will get not the widow's pension but only the small bereavement allowance, which lasts for only six months. Because he has already reached retirement age, he has no means of setting aside extra savings to make up for what he had expected her to get. As with the SERPS change, there is a strong case for saying that, were the Government to play fair with such people, they would at least delay the introduction of the new scheme to allow those who could still make up the difference to put aside extra savings. That would reduce the risk of there being people who cannot make it up because they have already reached retirement age.

A more important argument against targeting widows by removing their pensions is that the bereavement allowance that will replace them is available for far too short a time. The Government propose that it should last only six months. Most hon. Members will have had people write to them to say that six months is far too short a time to expect a widow to get back on her feet after bereavement. Bereavement is traumatic and takes time to get over. Many widows may have been out of work for some time if they have been staying at home looking after families or ailing spouses before their deaths. If they are not well trained in modern skills for modern jobs, things may be difficult for them. They may need time to retrain before they can get back into work. As we all know, it takes some time to find a job.

To suggest that one should be able to go straight back to work within a month or two is absurd in the modern age. Even if one has completed a period of training, it may still take some time to get back into employment. In effect, the Government are telling people, who may have been out of work for some years, that, the day after their husbands die, they should walk into the nearest jobcentre and say, "I want a job. I am available, I am trained and I can work within a few months." That is absurd.

Some cases of bereavement are even more traumatic; many Members will have heard of such cases. I quote from the response of the National Association of Widows and the Widows Advisory Trust to the document, "A New Contract for Welfare: Support in Bereavement", in which those proposals were originally outlined. The response states:

"To pay this benefit for 6 months makes a mockery of the title, 'Support in Bereavement'."

I also quote the words of Patricia Thomas of Survivors of Bereavement by Suicide—I am sure that we can all understand that to lose a spouse through suicide is an even more traumatic event, and one that it is likely to take even longer to overcome. Patricia Thomas writes:

"Unfortunately I am well qualified to comment, having been widowed when my husband committed suicide 5 years ago. I was 45 and left not only with the responsibility of supporting two teenage sons and an eight year old daughter, but also having to face the fact that I had to make provision for my old age, as my husband's private pension could not be inherited by myself."

She makes the same point that I made about getting back into full-time work. She writes:

"I discovered how difficult it is to find full-time work. Both ageism and employers' worries about the conflicting demands on mothers with school age children appear to be significant factors . . . I have had poorly paid posts of 20 and 24 hours per week, both of which have ended in redundancy."

That is the real situation for widows in our society today; it is not one that is met at all by the Government's proposals.

Given those difficulties, the Government should consider at least two new measures. First, there should, at the very least, be a longer lead time before the introduction of those proposals. Secondly, the bereavement allowance should be paid for much longer than the six months that the Government propose. It could be paid for up to five years and the Government would still achieve a net saving on their proposals. To pay the allowance for six months would give them £500 million net savings; they could easily afford to pay it for up to five years and there would still be a net saving.

The second part of our motion relates to the SERPS changes. That problem originated with the previous Conservative Government; no one should blame the current Labour Government for the fiasco of the initial failure to warn people about the change initiated by the Conservative Government in 1986. That Government introduced a policy of halving the additional pension, based on SERPS, paid to women after their husbands die. That halving is due to take place from 5 April next year. In one sense, people were given considerable warning—unlike the changes to which I referred earlier, for which we ask for a longer lead time—because the previous Government allowed a long lead time from 1986. However, although there was a long lead time, no one knew about it, because the previous Government failed to tell people what they were doing. It was worse than that; they continued to send out leaflets and letters from the Department of Social Security making it clear that the full SERPS entitlement would transfer. They made no mention whatever of the fact that it would make a difference when the male partner died.

Unfortunately, the present Government cannot be absolved of all blame. Having come to power in 1997, they continued to issue wrong information through the Department. The leaflets, which had been corrected by then, made some mention of the change, but people who wrote to the Department were often given the wrong information. We have considerable evidence to the effect that letters were sent out late last year giving people the wrong information.

Mr. Pickles: I apologise for stopping the hon. Gentleman in mid flow, but I must point out that letters giving the wrong information were sent out this year.

Mr. Rendel: The hon. Gentleman just got in before me: I was about to come to that point. There is evidence that, as recently as April this year, one or two inaccurate letters crept through the system and were sent out—even after the Government had explicitly told the Benefits Agency to clarify the position.

I asked the Minister by way of an oral question whether he planned to introduce some sort of compensation for people who had been misled by his Department. He promised me on 8 March this year that there would be a compensation scheme: he did not say what it would be, but he said that he would at least consider it. That is welcome news so far as it goes. However, more than three months later, we have been given no details of what compensation scheme is expected. People are worried about what will happen. They took the wrong decision, based on false information from the Government, and they do not know what will happen to their wives when they die. Some such people may be aware that they are nearing the ends of their lives and they do not know in what state their widows will be left.

I am happy to say that, as a result of efforts by me, my hon. Friends and other hon. Members, the parliamentary ombudsman has decided to examine the issue. I hope that he will advise the Government not only that they should introduce some sort of compensatory scheme for those who can prove that they were misled and that their financial situation has been damaged as a result, but that the whole scheme should be delayed. The introduction of the scheme should be put off until beyond next year. The ombudsman has promised that he will inform us of his advice to the Government well in advance of the provisional implementation date of 5 April next year. I hope that we will get his advice soon. I hope also that the Government will not wait for the ombudsman's advice before making up their own mind as to what sort of compensation scheme should be introduced. The Government must move ahead: three months is quite long enough to work up a decent scheme.

There is widespread fury about what has happened among those who have been misled. I am sure that all hon. Members have received letters from all over the country from people who are angry about what has occurred. Mr. W. K. Bennett wrote to say:

"I could not believe that such an important change to the income of so many people had not received more publicity (from either the Government, politicians or the media)."

Mrs. Betty Tilford wrote:

"perhaps we should all kill off our husbands before the 6th April deadline".

In saying that, she picked up on the comments of the present Leader of the House when she spoke to the original legislation in 1986. She said:

"I advise anyone who is married to a man who is lingering on 5 April quickly to shove a pillow over his face, because it will halve the pension entitlement if the husband dies on the following day. It is extraordinary that the Government should place people in such a position . . . They will be taking away rights that have been earned."—[Official Report, Standing Committee B, 27 February 1986; c. 470.]

There is a further aspect to the campaign to get the Government to change their mind—

Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough): I trust that my hon. Friend is not proposing such draconian ways of dealing with the situation. Does he not find it bizarre that, a few months ago, the House debated the mis-selling of private pensions in the second-tier phase, and that the Government ran television advertisements alerting people to the fact that they may have been mis-sold second-tier pensions, yet there has not been a single television advertisement or press release and no campaign to alert people to a measure that could have an immense effect on their lives?

Mr. Rendel: My hon. Friend is entirely right. It seems unbelievably hypocritical that the Government should force the private pension industry to do what they are unwilling to do themselves. It is disgraceful. If the private section of the insurance industry is to be forced to write to people to ask whether they feel that they may have been given bad information, surely the Government should do likewise with regard to SERPS.

The Minister of State, Department of Social Security (Mr. Stephen Timms): I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving way. I do not want him to give the House the wrong impression. Can he confirm that he strongly supports, as I hope that he does, the action that the Government have taken to deal with the mis-selling scandal that we inherited from the previous Government?

[Mr. Stephen Timms]

Mr. Rendel: I certainly support that. The very fact that I support it means that I would support the Government acting in the same way about their own mis-selling scandal. If the Minister is so keen for us to support his action in relation to the private pension industry, that implies that he should be doing exactly the same with regard to the mis-selling of SERPS. Perhaps he will intervene again and tell me now whether he is keen to take the same sort of action in the public case as he has demanded that the private sector should take. It seems that the Minister is unwilling to intervene again.

There is a further aspect that proves how widespread is the public's fury. Hon. Members may have noticed that one of the rare occasions on which I obtained a full-page spread in The Sun came a few days ago, as a result of my presentation to the Prime Minister of the petition run by that newspaper, asking for the Government to reconsider what they had done and to introduce proper compensation. The petition was widely supported and demonstrates the importance of the issue and the widespread anger aroused by it.

What should be done? I admit that the Government are in an extremely difficult position. I have made it known to the Minister that he has my sympathy for that. It is difficult to see how to overcome the problem. There is only one fair way for the Government to do so. From the time when the information begins to flow, the introduction of the change should be put off for at least the length of time that people were originally given by way of warning. That means, in effect, that the change should not be fully implemented for another 10 years or so.

That will be expensive, but it is the only fair way of dealing with the problem, and I emphasise again to the Minister that that is what the Government have demanded of the private sector. If the private sector must provide compensation, the Government should do the same.

Compensation should be paid to those who can show that they were misled. The difficulty with the compensation scheme arises because the Government are demanding full evidence not only that people have been misled, but that, as a result of being misled, they changed the decisions that they otherwise would have taken. The House can see how difficult that will be.

People must be able to show that they have been misled. What if, 10 years ago, they telephoned the Department or their local Benefits Agency office and received the wrong advice? How can they now prove that, 10 years ago, they had a telephone conversation in which they were given the wrong advice? They may have something in writing from 10 years ago, but how many of us have kept all the paperwork for the past 10 years, which we may at some point need, if it gave advice that we followed? To prove that a person has been misled is difficult.

The Government are asking people to prove not only that they have been misled, but that they have changed their decision as a result of that false information. They may have decided to do nothing, because they thought that the full additional widows pension that the Government were offering was sufficient. If they left it at that and did not change their mind, how could they prove that they would have changed their mind had they been given the correct information? I suggest that that is almost impossible.

If we are to have a compensation scheme, there must be no quibbling about the evidence, and it must be full and fair to people who claim that they would have made a decision even though they cannot prove it.

Mr. Derek Twigg (Halton): I apologise to the hon. Gentleman for missing the beginning of his speech. What would the compensation scheme cost the Exchequer based on what he has told us?

Mr. Rendel: I would love to be able to ask the Government what it would cost, but it is impossible to cost a compensation scheme because we have no idea how many cases are involved as the Government have failed to find that out. We cannot possibly cost such a scheme until the Government have done their job properly.

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster (Hastings and Rye): If the hon. Gentleman cannot answer that question, can he tell us what it would cost if the measure were postponed for 10 years, which was his other proposal?

Mr. Rendel: I do not have the figures with me, but they were given in a written answer to a parliamentary question that I tabled, so they are available to the hon. Gentleman. It would be expensive: it would cost billions of pounds. It would cost more depending on how long it were delayed. The cost would reduce over the years, because the man and the widow would eventually die. If I remember correctly—perhaps the Minister has the figures—it would be about £10 billion over the next 10 years. I have admitted that it would be expensive, but it is the only completely fair way of going about it.

Mr. Timms: I am happy to help the hon. Gentleman by giving the figures. It would cost about £5.5 billion cumulatively over the first 10 years, and £1 billion a year thereafter, although that figure would diminish. It is a substantial sum.

Mr. Rendel: I am grateful to the Minister for giving that information. I had already elicited it from him in a written answer. It is slightly less than I said, so that is good.

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): Does my hon. Friend agree with me that the scale of the loss to the Government if the deferral took place shows the loss to those who would benefit if his compensation scheme were implemented? Does not that strongly underline the sleight of hand that has been performed on widows, the impact of which will last for decades?

Mr. Rendel: My hon. Friend is right. Any money paid out by the Government is money that they have saved by failing to give the correct information in the past. It is fair to those concerned to pay out this money. I have said all along that the only way in which the Government can make the situation fair once again is by putting off the introduction of this halving of the addition pension for another 10 years or so.

Mr. Derek Twigg: Where would this money come from? Would it be from 3p on income tax or from cuts in education or the health service?

Mr. Rendel: I am happy to say that it would be up to the Government to find the money, not up to me. The point is that it is money that was, in effect, taken from these widows as a result of the false information that was given. If society as a whole is to play fair by those people, society as a whole must pay its dues. It is unfair to expect widows to pay to reduce taxation for the mass of taxpayers.

Let me say a bit more about the cost to the individual. Mr. Michael Davies of Kidderminster has written a letter saying that an annuity to compensate for the amount that would be lost as a result of the change would cost £47,000. That is the amount that he has been quoted. It is relevant to what was said by my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell), and gives some idea of the real cost to people who have lost out as a result of the change.

It is hardly surprising that the overall cost to the Government of providing proper compensation for the misinformation that has been handed out will be considerable, but they must answer this question: is it fair for the individuals concerned to have to pay the whole cost, rather than its being paid by society as a whole? I suggest that it is not fair.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): If the Government were to prejudge such cases, it is possible that people would not be adequately compensated. The ombudsman's inquiry will facilitate a proper investigation.

Mr. Rendel: I hope that, if the ombudsman comes up with a solution similar to mine, the Government will accept it. I agree with the hon. Gentleman that the ombudsman's inquiry will provide a good indication of what an objective observer might consider a fair response to the Government's difficulty—a difficulty which, as I have said, originates from what was done by the last Government. But, whatever the ombudsman comes up with, if the Government can guarantee us now that they will follow his recommendations, many people will be much happier.

What have the Government done to widows? In effect, they have dealt widows a quintuple whammy. They have changed the widows' bereavement allowance, abolished dividend tax credits, restricted council tax benefit for higher-value properties, removed widows' pensions, and refused to give proper compensation to those who have been damaged by the change to SERPS.

A great many people who voted for a Labour Government in 1997 have become disillusioned. Those people had great hopes of this Labour Government, and believed that, for once, the poorest and most vulnerable would be supported. Harold Wilson once said, "The Labour party is a crusade, or it is nothing." What crusade have we seen? During the past two years, we have seen a crusade against lone parents, and a crusade against those on incapacity benefit; now we are seeing a crusade against widows.

This is not the sort of Government people hoped that they were electing in 1997. This is a Government who did not deserve to give the people of this country the hope that they had when the Government were elected. This is a Government who have failed those who deserve most.

1.59 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Social Security (Mr. Stephen Timms): I beg to move, To leave out from "House" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof:

'supports the Government's proposals to reform bereavement benefits, including the Bereavement Payment, which will provide a tax-free lump sum of £2,000—double the value of the current Widow's Payment; welcomes the additional help given to the children of widowers, who will qualify for the new Widowed Parent's Allowance, which will replace the Widowed Mother's Allowance; welcomes the protection given to widows over 55, who might otherwise have no practical alternative to relying on Income Support; and welcomes the wide range of policies which are designed to assist women to play a full and active part in the community.'.

I am delighted that we have the opportunity to debate the Government's policy on bereavement benefits. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) for pointing out an error in the drafting of the motion, which is indeed incomprehensible in the form in which it appears on the Order Paper. I must say, having seen his correction to it, it is still a pretty ill-focused, ramshackle and loosely connected collection of topics—but at least now it makes grammatical sense. [Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman said that it was the fault of the Liberal Democrats Whips that the motion appeared in that form initially—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. There have been far too many sedentary interventions throughout the debate. If hon. Members wish to speak, they must wait and do so in the appropriate way.

Mr. Timms: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The speech by the hon. Member for Newbury was one with which, at least in outline, we had already become familiar in the Committee's proceedings on the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. Essentially, he welcomes the Government's measures that involve spending more money; objects to measures that involve spending less; and then goes on to call for a very long list of even more spending measures. His speech bore absolutely no relation to reality. One should expect from someone aspiring to leadership of his party a greater sense of the real choices facing a party in government.

The central feature of our changes to bereavement benefits is their extension to men. It is the first time that men will receive the benefit, which is a very big step forward. Our action has been widely welcomed, even—albeit in passing—by the hon. Member for Newbury. The change was long campaigned for, but bitterly resisted by Conservative Members when they were in government. At long last, the current Government are putting the matter right.

The current system—the one that we inherited—is based on the view that each married couple comprises one independent man, who is the breadwinner, and a woman who depends on him. Over 50 years ago, in his report, Beveridge simply assumed that married women would stay at home. That view, which underlies the current system, simply does not reflect the real position in which we now find ourselves. Like so many other parts of the benefits system, that part needs to be modernised.

[Mr. Timms]

It is right that the benefits system should reflect the changes that have occurred in society. I understand the attractions of arguments that we should leave things as they are, and appreciate that some people believe that that would be in the best interests of those who depend on the benefits system. However, if we continue paying benefits when real needs have moved elsewhere, it will sap confidence in the system and undermine it. In the long run, those who depend on the system are those who will lose from such an approach.

Thus, for those who believe in the benefits system—as the Government do—modernisation is so important.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Gentleman mentioned those who are dependent on the system. In the debate on the Report stage of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, he said that those who were on contributory benefits were part of dependency. Does he stand by that statement?

Mr. Timms: I recall making no such statement, but if the hon. Gentleman will remind me of the context in which he thinks I made it, I shall most emphatically stand by it. If he will give me the reference, I shall be glad to do just that.

For those who believe in the benefits system, as we do, and in the potential of publicly delivered welfare to improve people's circumstances in a decent and dignified manner, modernisation is vital. Things do not stand still, and it does absolutely no favours to those who depend on the benefits system to behave as if nothing had changed. If we are spending benefits cash to meet yesterday's needs rather than today's, we are weakening the system and damaging the interests of those who look to the system for support. If we insisted on dealing only with yesterday's needs, we would be unable to meet today's needs, let alone tomorrow's.

Mr. Rendel: Is the Minister telling us that no one today is widowed, not in a job and unlikely to find one for some time, or traumatically affected by bereavement?

Mr. Timms: I am saying that the circumstances in our society are radically different from those that prevailed when the existing system was introduced. We need to bring the system up to date to reflect the huge changes that have occurred over the past 50 years.

There are big new demands on the welfare system that must be addressed, such as the needs of bereaved fathers who were dependent on the income of their partners. We shall make sure that the necessary capacity is available so that we do not let people down.

Mr. Rendel: I thank the Minister for giving way again so quickly. Is he seriously saying that he needs to make £600 million worth of cuts in order to pay for £100 million worth of enhancement?

Mr. Timms: I shall come in a moment to the financial consequences of the changes that we are making, but it is a feature of the changes to bereavement benefits that there will be additional spending in the early years to meet the new needs that we are addressing. The savings to which the hon. Gentleman referred will take a long time to materialise, so, on that front, his point is misleading. There will be an additional £140 million in the first year and about £100 million extra in the following year. So there will be substantial extra spending in the early years to meet the new additional needs that will be picked up.

The benefits system needs to reflect the changes in our society. If it does not, the system will be weakened and people who depend on it to provide security will be the losers. We will not allow that to happen. We are absolutely determined to rebuild our welfare system, and to restore public confidence in it and public support for it. That is our goal and we will achieve it.

Society has changed but the system has not. It ignores the fact that married women are far more likely to be financially independent and that flourishing public-private partnerships have developed in this area of welfare provision. Two thirds of working-age women are in work, as are seven out of 10 married women. That is nearly as large a proportion as the proportion of married men in work. The picture is therefore completely different from when the existing system was originally designed. Today, 47 per cent. of widows have occupational pension income. It is a condition of contracting out from SERPS that the SERPS element of an occupational pension offers a 50 per cent. survivor's pension. The system needs to be modernised accordingly.

The current scheme fails on a range of fronts. First, and above all, it gives no help to bereaved husbands, even when they have children to care for. That is a scandal and we are putting it right. Secondly, it no longer provides enough help with the immediate costs of bereavement. It continues to provide most help to those least likely to be in need of it. Currently, 75 per cent. of expenditure on widows benefit goes to the more numerous widows without dependants, while 35,000 widows receive nothing at all because their income support is reduced, pound for pound, by the amount of widows benefit that they receive.

The system does not recognise the enormous changes that have taken place in welfare provision. Many families now make their own provision for bereavement through occupational pension schemes and life insurance policies.

Our reformed system will for the first time treat men and women equally and will focus resources where they are needed most. We are not simply extending the old system of widows benefits to widowers. We have re-examined it in the light of our principles for reform and made improvements to bring it up to date.

Mr. Steve Webb (Northavon): The hon. Gentleman is right to say that things have changed, but widowhood is still a dreadful experience and the time that it takes to recover from it has not changed in the past 50 years. The six-month limit is crucial. The hon. Member for Croydon, North (Mr. Wicks), who is Chairman of the Education Sub-Committee, challenged the Minister on that limit in the early hours of the morning during Report stage of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. Is the Minister saying that widows can now cope better with bereavement? Surely the situation has not changed and widows should not be forced back into the labour market so soon.

Mr. Timms: I shall come to that point in a moment. It is a question of balance and we believe that we have made the right judgment. I urge the hon. Gentleman to be cautious, because the bereavement benefit system is not to do with the scale of someone's shock and their difficulty in coming to terms with bereavement or the undoubtedly enormous trauma involved. It is about giving people a breathing space after they lose income from someone on whom they were dependent. We have decided that six months is the right period to give that opportunity.

We will give immediate support on bereavement by introducing the bereavement payment—a tax-free lump sum of £2,000. That is double the value of the current widows payment. Some 15,000 men widowed every year will benefit from that for the first time and 40,000 new widows every year will get £1,000 more than they receive under the existing system.

We also intend to introduce two new contributory, non-means-tested benefits: widowed parents allowance and bereavement allowance. They will also be available to both widowers and widows. Widowed parents allowance will follow the rules that currently apply to widowed mothers allowance and will be calculated in the same way, but it will also be paid to widowed fathers, who are unfairly excluded at present. The new benefit will apply not only to new widows and widowers, but also to fathers who have already been widowed, if they meet the qualifying conditions. In total, around 25,000 widowers will benefit in the first year. That is a substantial improvement that has been widely welcomed. Bereavement allowance will be paid for six months following a bereavement, at the rate of the current widows pension.

I stress again that the benefits are contributory, not means-tested—there has been some mischief and misinformation about that—but they are time-limited. It would not be right to go on paying a widows pension for life to those who could be earning a decent living or who have large alternative forms of income. I shall deal in a moment with the period for which they will last.

Financial support is important in the period immediately after the loss of a husband or wife.

Mr. Pickles: I am curious about what the hon. Gentleman has just said. He said that widows benefits should not be paid for life. Can he tell me a time in our history when they were paid for life, assuming the beneficiary did not die suddenly and tragically before retirement age?

Mr. Timms: It has always been paid up to retirement. We are saying that that is no longer appropriate and does not reflect the reality of people's circumstances now.

Financial support is important in the period immediately after bereavement. Bereavement allowance will provide support in those vital six months. It will give people the breathing space that they need before they are in a position to support themselves by returning to work or through other income. That important breathing space allows people to come to terms with the emotional and practical financial upheaval caused by the loss of a spouse. However, we do not think that it would be right for younger widows and widowers, many of whom will already have regular employment, to assume a lifetime of dependency.

Another aspect of the current situation that I have not mentioned is that 98 per cent. of married women have had a job. Even if they are not currently employed, they have a history of work. Our comprehensive welfare-to-work programme offers a range of support, including advice on employment, training and benefits, to aid a person's return to work. It must be right and beneficial to ensure that a person can be put in touch with that support at the earlier stage of six months rather than delaying it for a year or more.

It is often in people's interests to get back into the labour market as soon as possible. We want men and women to be financially independent while they are of working age and in retirement. We are committed to removing the barriers to work and ensuring that work pays. Our reforms will refocus expenditure, concentrating the help that is available where and when it is most needed. That means meeting immediate needs at the point of bereavement and focusing on children and families. We want to balance sensitivity to the needs of people who have been recently bereaved with a recognition that, after a period of readjustment, those who are able to support themselves should do so.

It has been suggested that bereavement allowance should be paid for a significantly longer period, with the cost offset against the expected savings. However, the savings of £500 million that we have published are for the long term—they are expected in 2020. We shall be spending around £100 million extra in each of the first couple of years following the introduction of the new scheme. Paying bereavement allowance for a longer period would add substantially to those costs. It would not be a responsible use of resources to pay a long-term benefit to widows and widowers—without dependent children—who could be earning a decent living or who may well have a substantial income from an occupational pension.

I want to underline again the fact that, as we have always said, existing widows will not be affected by the new arrangements. We shall ensure that the existing arrangements continue to apply to all who are currently entitled to widows benefits. The new scheme will ensure that help is focused on those with the greatest need at the time of that need, with a weekly benefit for widowed fathers and widowed mothers giving long-term help with the extra costs of bringing up children, and a transitional benefit for widowed people over 45 and without dependent children, to permit a breathing space to help them to adjust to their new circumstances.

The hon. Member for Newbury spent a considerable amount of his speech expressing concerns about the change to the amount of SERPS that can be inherited from a spouse. That change was brought in by the previous Government in 1986. The change was designed to bring SERPS into line with occupational pension schemes, in which it has been the norm to pay a widow only half the spouse's pension rights.

That change was not published before 1996. A great deal of concern has been expressed to me here and in letters by hon. Members on both sides who want to know why. I wish I knew. The then Minister told the Standing Committee in 1986 that there would be a major publicity campaign about the changes. Not only was there no publicity campaign; the Benefits Agency leaflets did not refer to the changes for 10 years, until 1996. That should clearly not have happened. As in so many other areas, we are having to clear up the mess that we have inherited.

[Mr. Timms]

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): What was the position of the then official Opposition on the measure when it was introduced?

Mr. Timms: The measure was opposed in 1986, 14 years ago. We are now considering how to deal with the enormous difficulties that we have picked up as a result of those changes not being publicised at the time they should have been. As the then Minister said, there should have been a major publicity campaign at the time to make people aware of them. That was not done, and it led to the problems that we now face.

I have said that anyone who can show that they have been mis-advised and, as a consequence, have taken action to their own financial detriment, will be entitled to compensation. A large number of people may be affected and we are considering carefully how best to resolve the matter. The ombudsman is also considering a sample of cases. We will make an announcement in due course, in good time for April next year when the change is due to take effect.

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): The Minister said that, where it could be shown that someone had taken action, he would be entitled to compensation. My hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) pointed out that it is people who have not taken action who have been lulled into a false sense of security. Can the Minister give some assurance that those people, the real victims, will be compensated?

Mr. Timms: If, for example, people have received advice by telephone, we shall take that into account. If what the hon. Gentleman is putting to me is that people may have received advice—for example, over the telephone—on the basis of which they decided not to do something that they would otherwise have done, then they, too, will have a case for compensation. However, this is an exceedingly complex and large issue which requires careful consideration by the Government. That consideration is currently being given and we shall make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Derek Twigg: I am reassured by what my hon. Friend says. I, like other hon. Members, have received letters from constituents on the subject. It is obviously a serious issue. However, are not the Government dealing with the matter in a more responsible way than the Liberal Democrats? When I asked how they would pay for a 10-year delay, they said that it was up to the Government to sort that out. But this is the same party that wants to put 1p on income tax to fund its education priorities. That seems like double standards to me.

Mr. Timms: My hon. Friend is being kind. I do not know about double standards—I would say treble or quadruple standards.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Angela Eagle): Quintuple standards.

Mr. Timms: Indeed.

My hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg) is right to say that the Liberal Democrats' proposals are entirely free of any sense of responsibility.

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: In view of the Liberal Democrats' interest today in the fact that the matter has not been mentioned since 1986, does my hon. Friend know whether the Liberal Democrats have mentioned it since 1986?

Mr. Timms: No, my impression is that they have not mentioned it until these last few months. My hon. Friend makes a telling point.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Gentleman has been his customary courteous self today. One has become accustomed in debates such as this for Ministers to read their brief, not make important announcements. Today, however, the Minister has made an important announcement about telephone claims. How much proof will be required? Will an applicant's word that he telephoned in 1987 or 1988 be sufficient, or will a telephone bill have to be produced?

Mr. Timms: I advise the hon. Gentleman to be patient. As I have said, we shall make a fuller announcement on these matters in due course and as soon as we can.

Mr. Rendel: The hon. Gentleman seemed to make a double announcement, one of which was referred to by the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles), concerning the proof that would be needed that a telephone call had been made. That is an interesting concept. I imagine that almost everyone involved could say that they had made a telephone call and it would be difficult to prove otherwise. But what happens if people say that they did not take any action? Most people, if they were reassured, will not have taken any action. Will they all receive compensation?

Mr. Timms: My advice to the hon. Gentleman is the same as to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar—to wait for the announcement that we will make as soon as we are in a position to do so. The hon. Gentleman's point may well provide him with an explanation of why it is necessary to take some time over the details of the matter to ensure, as we will, that we get it right.

It is right, in meeting the needs of bereaved men for the first time, and in making a priority, as we are doing right across government, of the needs of children—in this case through the widowed parents allowance—that we should also take the opportunity to bring bereavement benefits up to date and modernise the circumstances in which they are paid. That is what we are doing, and I urge the House to support the proposals that are in the Bill.

2.26 pm

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): It is a great pleasure to speak in this debate. I commiserate with the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on the mistake in the drafting of the motion. He blamed the Whips Office, but if any trade union operates in this building it is that of the Whips. I shall watch for the number of times that the hon. Gentleman is slipped over the next few months.

It is also a great pleasure to follow the Minister. He spoke fluently and, in commemoration of the day and in honour of the Liberal Democrats, he is wearing a yellow tie. I also commend him on his bravery. His announcement concerning telephone calls is important. For him to say that, if people did nothing, they may well have a claim is an important announcement.

Mr. Derek Twigg: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Pickles: In a moment.

Not many hon. Members, save the Chancellor, have the opportunity to commit the Government to a potential £5 billion of expenditure. I congratulate the Minister on doing so. That shows real courage. I hope that he has a peaceful weekend in consequence, particularly as the hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), who is seeking to intervene, criticised the Liberal Democrats for suggesting such a thing. I trust that he will now apologise to the hon. Member for Newbury.

Mr. Twigg: When will the hon. Gentleman apologise for the current debacle? Will he apologise now on behalf of the Conservative party when it was in government?

Mr. Pickles: I have apologised from the Dispatch Box on a couple of occasions. Hon. Members should accept responsibility for what happens. The fact that the publicity campaign did not take place is a disgrace. I do not think for one moment that Ministers in the Department of Social Security prevented that from happening; nor do I suppose for a moment that the Minister would issue inaccurate information. At the beginning of this year, the Department issued a memo on pensions dated 12 January. It contains no instruction to give people the right information. That is an interesting date, because I received a letter on the same day giving inaccurate information.

Too often in politics, people are not prepared to accept responsibility. This situation arose when I was chairman of education for Bradford metropolitan district council and before the Minister entered the House, but I accept responsibility, as must we all. We must all find ways to deal with such matters. The Minister, in the undertaking that he has just given, and in terms of the ombudsman's report, will go some way towards doing so. I look forward to the Chancellor honouring the hon. Gentleman's pledge today. I hope that he will support him in that. It is a brave thing to come before one's Back Benchers and defy their wishes.

The Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, which largely dealt with these matters, is now in another place. We spent many hours debating the Bill in Committee and on the Floor of the House. We hoped to receive some explanation of why the Government are abandoning a proportion of widows, but we have received no explanation in Committee, on Report or today. The Government have deliberately picked on a group of women who are unaware of their fate. The great advantage for the Government is that no one can identify the victims. The women are unaware—they are currently in a marriage, and they have a reasonable expectation of a long and happy marriage. Sadly, fate will deny them that. From a spin point of view, that is marvellous. There is no opposition, because no one can point out that they will lose from it. However, those women will have to face not only the loss of a spouse, but the sudden realisation that their Government will abandon them at their time of greatest need.

The proposal offers the veneer of change under the cover of sexual equality. The Government are right to say that times are changing. Widows pensions were introduced in 1925 when the man was the main breadwinner. In 1999, things are changing—but they are not changing that fast. I welcome the fact that there are more women in the work force, and their increasing role, but these are early days.

The hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott) put it well on Report when she said:

"It will not do for Ministers to wrap it up in spurious feminism, claiming that the world has changed, women have moved on, women all work and they do not need the present provision. The world has not changed that much and the majority of women, particularly working-class women, still earn less than the majority of men."

The hon. Lady was absolutely right about "spurious feminism". The Government put on a veneer of sexual equality. They are using widows as the battering ram of social change, rather than as a reflection of social change. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts), from a sedentary position, does not show sufficient compassion. Surely it makes sense to carry out such a measure once matters have changed, rather than to use it as a battering ram to make the change.

Nobody is fooled by the veneer, which is entirely transparent. The hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) said in the same debate:

"Many women who will be affected by the changes will not have had jobs, will not have qualifications and will find it impossible to find employment."

Unlike other matters in the welfare budget generally, the number of widows is falling. It fell by 30 per cent. between 1983 and 1997. This is simply a cost-cutting measure to save £600 million of money which, as the hon. Member for Newbury said, husbands have paid in over many years in the reasonable expectation that the Government would honour their pledges. This £600 million will force widows on to means-tested benefits.

Kali Mountford (Colne Valley): The hon. Gentleman is as gracious as ever, and I am enjoying his flamboyant use of language. Does he accept that focusing resources on families with children will do far more socially than anything that he is now suggesting?

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady cannot get away from the fact that what she voted for the other week was the abandonment of widows at their most difficult time. It will ensure that women who perhaps have nursed a husband for many years will suffer. People who have lost a husband by suicide will suffer. In addition, someone who loses a sole child will suffer because of this when they are at their most vulnerable. The Minister is right to say that this is not about compensation for bereavement. It is about giving a breathing space, or providing the thing that the state can offer in those times—a little bit of money to allow women to make sensible decisions.

The Minister said that those on contributory benefits are part of the dependency culture—a point that he repeated on Report. He asked for the reference—it is column 810. That proposal goes to the heart of the Government. I do not believe that the Minister is an uncaring man, but he does not understand the difference between means-tested and contributory benefits, and the effect of pushing more of society on to means-tested benefits.

[Mr. Pickles]

I accept that the Minister may not want to take my view on this, so I will simply repeat some of the speeches that have been made by Labour Back Benchers. This matter concerns the famous "something-for-nothing society" speech made by the Prime Minister. The Government believe that widows receiving benefits that their husbands have paid for are getting something for nothing. The right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) put this well in the debate on 17 May:

"Given that it is the Prime Minister's wish for welfare to be based on something for something, it is difficult to justify the Government's changes in the provision for widows. We are taking away benefits—contributions towards which may have been made for 30 years—and substituting nothing, which is the exact opposite of what he says he is about."

Kali Mountford: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that life on benefits is no fun at all, and that people in employment are significantly better off? Does he accept that those who are willing and able to work will find that the opportunity to work gives them far better opportunities in life than languishing on any benefit, whether contributory or otherwise?

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady is absolutely right, but those who receive contributory benefits are getting back money that they have paid in. The widows pension has enabled a number of women to receive a sum of money as of right, which has often enabled them to get back to the workplace. That is why only 17 per cent. of widows currently get means-tested benefits. After these proposals are brought in, a great deal more will be forced on to such benefits.

Mr. Rendel: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Pickles: I will in a moment. Distinguished as the hon. Member for Newbury is—and as I aspire to be—I fear that we are not going to impress the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford). Let us look instead at what the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) said. She said:

"The vast majority of working women are in jobs that pay less than the male average wage. Some have been on very low pay . . . Some will not have been working at all while raising their families. A woman's family might have left the nest only recently, leaving her on her own." —[Official Report, 17 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 777-92.]

Mr. Rendel: Even if it is true that living on benefits is less worth while than having a job, is it not also true that living on no benefits at all when one cannot get work is the worst of all possible situations? Taking away the bereavement allowance after six months does not provide an opportunity for work; that opportunity exists anyway.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Gentleman is entirely right. Widows will be forced further and further down the income scale and will have to sell their property and personal possessions until they qualify for income support. That will add to the amount being paid to people through means-tested benefits.

There is one vital question: why six months? What is so magical about the figure of six months? We have received much evidence and many statements from various organisations, all saying that six months is wholly inadequate. I recall a very moving speech by the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington about the loss of her mother, and I spoke in Committee and on Report about the loss of my mother. I know that one's judgment has not returned six months after that loss, so how much more difficult must it be for someone who has lost a life partner, someone to whom one may have been married for 20, 30 or 40 years?

The Minister said that it is all a question of balance. What is the balance? What are the ingredients of this magical balance? We know that part of the balance is that, if the widow remarries within the six-month period, she loses the bereavement benefit. Who marries within six months of a bereavement? It is odd to put such a provision in primary legislation.

We know of one famous marriage within six months: that of Hamlet's mother, Queen Gertrude.

Angela Eagle: A dysfunctional family.

Mr. Pickles: I suppose that it is fair to say that the king and queen of Denmark and their eldest son were indeed a dysfunctional family, but why is an entire piece of legislation being put together on the basis of such families? Not all families are the Simpsons or Hamlet's family. You are very well read, Mr. Deputy Speaker, so you will recall that Hamlet talked about thrift. He said:

"Thrift, thrift, Horatio! The funeral baked meats Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables."

One might need the provision if it were a matter of 15 years' potential pension—but 26 weeks? Now we know what the balance is that the Minister wants to achieve. At one end of the scale is Queen Gertrude of Denmark and at the other is the spurious feminism referred to by the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington—a balance between Denmark and Hackney.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): My hon. Friend may know that I am part Danish. I have recently joined the Anglo-Danish society. On behalf of all my compatriots, I hope that he is not arguing that all Danish families are dysfunctional; I am sure that that was not his intention.

Mr. Pickles: I wish my hon. Friend a long and happy marriage. Much as I love and admire her, she should be reassured that I will not be on the waiting list should anything unforeseen happen.

Mr. Stunell: May I bring the hon. Gentleman back to this country? Labour peers have tabled an amendment that would increase the bereavement payment period from six months to 12. Does he agree that it would be good if the Minister could announce that the Government were prepared to accept that amendment?

Mr. Pickles: It would be marvellous. The Minister has had his chance, but I will gladly give way to him if he wants to make that announcement. Various formulae could be available to extend the period, but we have still not received an explanation of why the period should be six months. On this matter and on the bereavement tax allowance, to which the hon. Member for Newbury referred, we need to know where the Government stand.

Let us consider the plight of war widows. The Government appear to have a cynical attitude to widows. This is a small matter, but I think that it speaks volumes about the Government's attitude. For the purposes of housing benefit, £10 is disregarded from war widows pensions and from war disablement pensions. Some local authorities use their discretion and waive more, or the entire amount. That is as one would expect for the widows of the generation of heroes who gave their lives for their country. It is right that local authorities should act with compassion, but a few stick rigidly to the £10. It is unfair that widows living only a few miles from one another should be treated differently.

The hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), to whom I pay tribute, asked the Prime Minister to review the matter and consider how to achieve some uniformity among local authorities. The Prime Minister said:

"I am certainly happy to consider it, but my hon. Friend will know that discussions about the problem have been going on for a considerable time. It is for local authorities ultimately to make their own decisions, but we shall continue to keep the matter under review and under discussion."—[Official Report, 20 March 1998; Vol. 312, c. 950.]

When I heard that commitment, I thought that it was marvellous and I looked forward to some action. I felt that it would be a good test of the Government's and the Prime Minister's sincerity. It is a small matter with small cost implications, and a promise was made to the House from the Dispatch Box.

A year passed and nothing happened. I asked why that was, and the Prime Minister's reply was very different in tone and content to what he had said to the hon. Member for Thurrock. The Prime Minister said:

"We have explained constantly that the problem is cost, but I point out to the hon. Gentleman that he supported a Government who were in power for 18 years and never did that. I appreciate that we now have the responsibility"— that is a good thing in a Prime Minister—

"for those decisions. We have said that we will look at it, and we will do that, but the problem is simply one of cost."—[Official Report, 12 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 315.]

I have checked Hansard carefully, but I could see no reference in the intervening period to any Minister saying that it was a matter of cost. I cannot understand how the Prime Minister can say that the Government have consistently said that cost was the issue. I concede that the previous Government did not increase the disregard, but a promise is a promise.

I tried twice more. I asked the Leader of the House about the issue at business questions on 13 May and I asked the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 24 May. He told me that it was a matter for the discretion of local authorities. I already knew that. Indeed, the Prime Minister told the hon. Member for Thurrock that a year ago. What happened to the review of the situation? I submitted a written question, which was answered by the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security who is in her place. I asked her:

"how many local authorities (a) do and (b) do not disregard the whole amount of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions".

I also asked what the total cost would be. She replied:

"The additional cost to central Government of a full disregard is estimated to be in the region of £70 million".—[Official Report, 20 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 429-30.]

She also said that information on the use of discretion by local authorities could not be provided because of the "disproportionate cost".

The sum of £70 million is a full £10 million less than the Government spend annually on publicity. They could find £70 million by reducing the number of leaflets that they produce. [Interruption.] The Government Whip appears to look favourably on that idea. The sad fact is that the number qualifying for the benefit falls every year, because many of them are in their 60s, 70s or 80s so the Exchequer would not have to make a large commitment.

The Under-Secretary did not know which local authorities used their discretion. How then can the Prime Minister say it is a matter of cost? He does not know what the cost would be. However, for the cost of a telephone call, I have been able to obtain that information, courtesy of the British Legion. Only 10 authorities stick rigidly to the £10 disregard. I shall list them for the Under-Secretary's information—Chester-le-Street district council, Easington district council, Gateshead metropolitan borough council, Manchester city council, North Tyneside metropolitan borough council, Norwich city council, Redcar and Cleveland borough council, South Tyneside metropolitan borough council, the City of Sunderland metropolitan district council and Wear Valley district council. They are all Labour authorities. Another 31 authorities apply less than a 100 per cent. disregard. If that is the sum total of the problem, the figure of £70 million might be a smidgen on the high side.

The Prime Minister made a promise and then forgot about it. He stonewalled a year ago and Ministers have stonewalled since, and we are no further on. If the Government are not prepared to concede on an issue so small and insignificant, what chance have we of extracting any concessions in the House of Lords?

What will happen next? I can find no better way to express that than to use the words of the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara). In a final appeal to the Government to change their mind he said:

"I appeal to them once again—in friendship and fraternity—to stop attacking that group"—

widows—

"and, when they have an opportunity in the future, to find some way of being more generous to them."—[Official Report, 17 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 784.]

What an appalling indictment of the Government that a Labour Back Bencher has to urge them to stop attacking widows. If Conservative Members can make a speech on an issue based on criticisms from disgruntled Back Benchers and squirming Ministers, the Government's policy must be deeply flawed. They should reverse that policy and, in the words of the hon. Member for Knowsley, South "stop attacking" widows.

2.56 pm

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster (Hastings and Rye): The Government's proposals to ensure that widows and widowers receive significant help when they most need it is to be applauded. The present provision that we inherited failed to provide the right amount of help at the right time. It is the time shortly after a bereavement, when distress is coupled with extra cost, that needs are at their peak and when help is required. I therefore support the Government's proposal for a doubling of the immediate help through the bereavement payment because that will be of great assistance at the time when it is most needed. Also important is the fact that it will be paid to widowers as well as widows.

[Mr. Michael Jabez Foster]

However, neither the present provision nor the Government's proposals deal with the small group of widows who face perilous financial loss at a time when the enormity of their situation is at its worst. I speak of those recent widows who receive the support of widowed mothers allowance and then lose their child.

The current provisions rightly provide significant support for young mothers—those under 45—who have children to support at the time of their husband's death. Such support continues until the child ends full-time education and then, depending on the age of the widow, a widows pension may be claimed or, if the widow is under 45, the provision ends. However, the changes can be planned for, as there is some certainty about when the child will leave the nest.

There are some widows, however—no doubt, a very small number—who suffer grievous financial and personal loss when they suffer not only the loss of a spouse but the subsequent death of a child. Such a tragedy befell my constituent, Mrs. Norma Haigh.

Mrs. Haigh was just 40 when her husband died and she was granted widowed mothers allowance. Up until earlier this year, with a part-time job from which she brought in £136 per week and the widowed mothers allowance amounting to £103 and child benefit of £11, she was able to support herself and her 16-year-old daughter, Rachel, albeit not to the same standard as if her husband had lived. Mrs. Haigh had an older son in the family who had completed full-time education but who unfortunately was out of work. He at least had the stability of a home in which to live following the death of his father.

On 1 January, Rachel was rushed to hospital and died in the operating theatre in tragic circumstances. No one could have expected that otherwise healthy child to have died in that way. My constituent was distraught following the death of her husband and that second tragedy and was too ill to return to work full time. She did manage to work for 15 hours a week, but, in consequence, her income was reduced to £54. Her widowed mothers allowance of £103 and child benefit of £11 ceased on the very day of her daughter's death. Having had an income of more than £250 a week, she was thus reduced at the time of her greatest need to an income of just £54. There was no provision for the funeral expenses or for the extra help needed at such a time. The previous Government's provisions did not cover that tragic circumstance. I am not suggesting that the previous Government intended to deny help to this small minority of needy individuals, but I am absolutely sure that the present Government would not wish for that small but needy group to be left without support.

I am asking not for compensation for bereavement but for practical and immediate help in such tragic circumstances. In particular, I have two requests to put to my hon. Friend the Minister. First, will he ensure that, when such situations arise—when either a mother or, now, a father is left with a double bereavement such as I have described—there should be an immediate bereavement payment, such as is paid under the new provisions, to assist with the funeral expenses? Secondly, will he ensure that there is a period of protection of perhaps six months from the loss of the widowed parents allowance to help overcome the immediate trauma?

A period of six months would probably be sufficient, as people's circumstances change while they adjust to bereavement. Because of the rarity of the situation, the costs to the Exchequer would be minimal; but, to the affected parent, the assistance may just make life worth living.

It is too late to help Mrs. Haigh, but I look forward to receiving my hon. Friend's assurance that my requests will be taken seriously and that proposals will be made to help others in such tragic circumstances in the future.

3.1 pm

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): I shall make a brief contribution to what has been an interesting debate. I commend my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) for the way in which he introduced the debate and ensured that it covered a wide spectrum of issues.

We are not holding the Government to account for one specific action in relation to widows, but we are worried about the cumulative effect of many different aspects of Government policy. When taken together, they make life very difficult for a particular group of people who often are not best equipped, either financially or emotionally after a bereavement, to make good the loss.

We do not damn the Government's intentions. The Government, when formulating social security policy, probably do not intend to be discriminatory against widows or any other group. Nor do we wish to damn all the Government's initiatives in that regard. We support many of them, and the extension of existing provision to include widowers is especially welcome, although we might quibble about its precise terms. We also welcome the promised additional support for carers although, given that the arrangements are not yet in place, it is stretching the point somewhat to claim that that is evidence of the Government's generous support for widows. We are entitled to wait until those arrangements are implemented before we hang out the flags.

The Government seem to have a blind spot in this matter, which is why the debate is so important. We must make it clear to those of our constituents who are widows or widowers that they are not forgotten, and that they are an important group whom we shall support in our arguments today.

It is rare for me to agree with the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles), and spurious feminism is the last thing in the world of which the Conservative party could be accused. However, the hon. Gentleman had a case when he identified some wishful thinking in the Government's policy of social evolution rather than revolution. That evolution is under way, but it is not complete. The present sociological and demographic position is that many widows are not given the independent means and employment prospects that we want them to have. The truth is that they have often been placed at a disadvantage throughout their lives by the social conditions in which they have lived, and that they are disadvantaged now by the arrangements governing what happens after the death of a spouse.

I wish to concentrate on the changes to SERPS and the undoubted mis-selling of pensions using terms that were anything but precise. That is a Government responsibility and a matter of enormous consequence to constituents. I have received very many letters on that subject. I shall not read them out, but I will name some of my correspondents. They include Mr. Deasington of Queen Camel, Mr. Michael of Bower Hinton, Mr. Smith of Milborne Port, Mr. Brosnan of Frome, Mrs. Stonell of Frome and Mr. Cochran of Henstridge.

The people who wrote used almost exactly the same terms, and it is interesting that most of them are men—husbands worried about what will happen to their wives after they die. The letters share one of two emotions: either devastation at the unpicking, through no fault of their own, of what the writers had arranged on their spouses' behalf; or anger at the degree to which they had been misled, right up to a few weeks ago, by the advice that they had received.

People often make SERPS contributions over a lifetime. The men who wrote to me expected that those contributions would mean that, after their demise, the arrangements for their spouses would be satisfactory. That expectation has now been dashed. They feel that the Government have reneged on what amounted to a genuine contract.

I feel sympathy for Ministers, because clearly this matter is not of their doing. The fault lies with the previous Government, who should have made the appropriate dispositions at the time and should have maintained them in the intervening years. However, that does not alter the facts facing the people who write to hon. Members of all parties. They are not interested in where the fault lies. Their problem is that, through no fault of their own, they have been left in an impossible position. They made the simple mistake of trusting the Government, and assuming that advice from the Department of Social Security was good. That advice was not good.

The problem of SERPS for widows is especially difficult. The demographic information shows that widows are among the poorest pensioners, as the relevant statistics prove. Many widows do not take up their income support entitlement. We may wish that they did and that the mechanisms were better at encouraging them to do so, but the fact is that they do not. Women tend, in general, to have lower pension entitlements than men—another example of the disadvantage that widows suffer. In addition, people who work under the SERPS system tend to have lower lifetime earnings and are therefore the least able to cope with the financial shock that has been described.

I intervened on the Minister of State's speech to ask about the position of the Labour party in 1986, when it was in opposition. I was not trying to make some clever debating point. I do not expect nothing to have changed over such a period, nor that members of the Government should adopt exactly the same position on every matter as they did in 1986. However, I would have thought that, when the Government came to power, Ministers would have talked to civil servants in the Department of Social Security about that Department's prospects. I should have expected them to realise that a measure that they had opposed in opposition—and opposed virulently, as the contemporary remarks of the Leader of the House show—was still waiting to be implemented. If Ministers did not realise that when they came into government, civil servants certainly should have known it and should have included it in the hand-over brief. They should carefully have flagged up the fact that a provision yet to be implemented had been opposed, giving Ministers a chance to reconsider it.

Of course, nothing happened. There was no decision to reverse the policy, which may have been impracticable in any event. More importantly, it was not drawn to Ministers' attention that no publicity had been given to the proposal. It is absurd that people were incorrectly advised. The mistake, far from being rectified, was amplified after the Government came into office.

Mr. Rendel: Perhaps when she winds up the debate, the Minister will tell us when her departmental team was told that incorrect information had been given.

Mr. Heath: My hon. Friend makes an important point. Either Ministers were told and were negligent, or the civil service has made an appalling error of judgment. The Government have ended up implementing a measure to which they were strongly opposed, and it would be a dereliction of duty in the civil service if that fact had not been brought to Ministers' attention.

All that is history, and we must deal with what is happening now. People have been placed in a difficult financial position. The Minister made the perverse suggestion that people who have suffered real hardship must establish that they were misled, and that they consequently made the wrong decision. I do not know what will happen to those who were misled, but took the right decision. Is the test cumulative or single? The test is perverse. Anyone who was wrongly informed by a Department of Government has been misled. It matters not what process of mind people went through. If they were told something wrong, they were misled, and the Department should be big enough to say so.

The Minister has put a gloss on the situation by saying that a phone call is sufficient evidence of someone's having been misled, even where there is no documentary proof. Inaction is just as adequate as action as a proof of wrong action. A person need merely say that he was telephoned, and did nothing more. That will be enough proof to win compensation. That is nonsense, and if the Minister does not realise on reflection that it is nonsense, someone else will realise it for him.

It would be far better to deal with problems at source, and fairest to take proper measures to extend the period of introduction to mitigate them. If that is not done, both the Department's culpability and the size of damages will have to be established, and it might cost the Government more to act in that way than to extend the period. Alternatively, a clear system must be developed to identify cases in which people were let down. Leaving it to the ombudsman would be another dereliction of duty. The Government appear to feel that it is all too difficult for them, so someone else must decide. "See you in court," they seem to be saying. A responsible Government dealing with people who have taken decisions on the best available advice would surely think it right to pre-empt the ombudsman and the courts by doing the right thing from the start.

[Mr. Heath]

I question the difference between the approach taken to this issue and that taken on the mis-selling of private pensions. There is a cost to the Exchequer, and I have the greatest of sympathy for Ministers. However, they must take this matter seriously. To the suggestion that the Liberal Democrats should somehow have warned people, I can say only that had we been running the Department of Social Security, we would have done so. It so happens that that responsibility fell to the Conservatives for a long time and has fallen for the past couple of years to Labour Ministers.

We achieve nothing by laying blame. We must do right by widows who are suffering and by husbands who are worried sick about the provision that they thought that they had made, and that they must now make again. It is cruel that elderly gentlemen have been left not knowing which way to turn. I implore the Government to take this matter seriously, and to do all that they can to mitigate a mistake that is not their own, but that they have not yet sought to repair.

The Minister of State is a decent chap—I often travel home with him on the tube, and I know that he would not intend widows to suffer. I hope that he will back his intentions with the right action.

3.17 pm

Kali Mountford (Colne Valley): I apologise to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) for missing his speech. He and I have exchanged views during the course of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, so I have had the benefit in the past of the full range of his views.

The hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) gave us a vision of a widow, wrapped in her weeds, covered in a black shawl, shuffling about and unable to raise her head for want of self-esteem or dignity. The hon. Gentleman should know that times have moved on. The picture that he painted did no credit to him or to widows. We ought to recognise that widows have reached a dreadful time of life—I can imagine few things more terrible than the loss of a spouse—but the point is that it is the loss of the spouse that causes deep grief, not just the loss of a husband.

The hon. Gentleman might have recognised that benefits should be extended to men as well as women, not out of some spurious feminism and not even out of simple fairness, but because both men and women grieve. I do not know how men have carried on until now. Those who have managed to set aside grief to go off to work have done so because they had to. I have never seen a difference in the ability of men or women to cope with grief, which is equally deep, whether the deceased is a husband, a wife or a child. The quality of grief does not vary according to gender.

To suggest that extending benefits to men is spurious feminism is both wrong and unfair, particularly to fathers who must support their children. Many fathers choose to continue to work, but others do not. Mothers make similar choices in the interests of their families. The Government are right to restructure benefits to help families at a time of great need.

I cannot imagine that anyone could offer me a sum of money—even £50,000 a week—that would ameliorate my grief. There is no cost to grief, but there is a cost to living. The argument is why a period of six months has been chosen rather than a year or two years, but we have to look at everything on balance. We do not argue that, after six months, the grief will suddenly end.

Eight years ago, I lost a grandchild. I grieve for him still. I imagine that I shall grieve for the rest of my life, but I am not incapable of working and never have been. Nor is my daughter, who returned to work fairly quickly after the terrible, grievous loss of her first child. We cannot put a defined time limit on grief, but benefits are not about compensating for grief. They are about giving a period of sanctuary, but then life goes on and it must go on. It is right for Governments to consider how they can best help people through a period of distress in their life. I know from my family, friends and neighbours, and my own life that dignity comes from work and that it can provide a way of returning to life.

I do not argue that every woman or man is capable of going back to work instantly after the grievous loss of their spouse. They may still be grieving and their grief may cause them mental ill health, for which they will receive support. Even Liberal Democrat Members have failed to recognise that, if the bereaved person does not have children, when the allowance comes to an end, a range of other benefits will be available. They are available to all people who are ill or seek to retrain for work. People are not left unsupported in British society today.

I am glad to see the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar back in his seat. I hope that he will read my remarks about widows and recognise that they are not the women wrapped up in shawls whom he seemed to describe. I am glad to have the chance to put that point directly to him. I am grateful to him for recognising the terrible mistake of the Government whom he supported. Much has been made by Members on both Opposition Benches of what happened with SERPS in 1986. It was gracious of the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar to accept responsibility, even though he was not a Member of the House at that time. It makes a pleasant change.

The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) made the point that we had to look at the situation that we were now in, not the one that we would have wished to be in or imagined that we were in. We inherited the most appalling mess, and that is why I am grateful for the apology. That appalling mess is such that the ombudsman is investigating it. It would be foolish and wrong for any Government to come in and say, "Here we are. We are going to save the day without looking closely at the detail." The detail is so complex that it may take a little while to sort out. It would be a grave mistake to rush it.

It occurred to me during the debate that people might say that they telephoned and were given advice. If they telephoned from a telephone box, I have no idea how they can prove that they made the call. The mess will be difficult to unpick. I do not seek to cast blame here, there and everywhere; that would not help the situation. The fact is that the matter has to be put right. I have no idea what the ombudsman's report will look like; I await it with interest. People feel let down by what has happened to them. People have made plans according to the advice that they were given. It behoves the Government to look closely at how that can be put right. To pretend that we can come along 14 years later with an instant solution would do no one any service.

Simply to say, "We do not blame you because you were not in government then, but you have to put it right and therefore it is your fault," does not take us any further forward. The way forward is what the Government are doing—namely, examining closely what happened and seeing whether there are lessons for the future and what, if anything, can properly be proposed to people who have lost out as a result of a mistake that was made 14 years ago in not giving out information.

Some comments were made about letters written in January to the Department about someone's entitlement on a particular day. My experience of Government Departments is that, when they consider a potential claim, they consider the day on which that claim might be made, which is the day on which it is proposed. Someone's entitlement may be six months down the line.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady is courteous in giving way. I saw her name on the Annunciator screen so I came in to listen to her. She is doing well, but we are talking about 12 January. Information had gone out, instructions had gone out, everyone knew that there was a problem, and hon. Members were holding debates on the matter, but still the information had not got through to the Department. I cannot believe that we can run a Department on the basis of reading newspapers, but anyone who read a newspaper would have known. It is an indictment that the information was not passed down and that, on 12 June when a memorandum had gone out, it still had not told people in the Department to correct the mistakes.

Kali Mountford: I am flattered that the hon. Gentleman was so interested in what I had to say, but I would be more impressed if he did not try to use a tiny fig leaf to cover his embarrassment. It is extraordinary to pretend that the mistake is the responsibility of this Government when his Government introduced the procedures and I am surprised that he even attempted to do so.

Time is pressing, so I will simply say that the process that is in place now is the only one that can possibly work. The hon. Gentleman smiles at that, but I think that the process is right. I hope that lessons are learned for the future and that pensioners who feel aggrieved will have their concerns met by this Government.

3.27 pm

Mr. Steve Webb (North): The hon. Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford) has made a thoughtful speech in this important debate on an important issue, but she misses the point about what happens after six months. We are not saying that all financial support stops then. The significance of the six-month threshold is that it is when pressure starts to be applied to a widow. After six months, she ceases to be entitled unconditionally to what was previously the widows pension and will become the bereavement allowance. At that point, she receives only benefits conditional on actively seeking work and walking through the infamous single gateway. In other words, from the day of bereavement, a clock starts ticking and the widow knows that, six months down the line, pressure will be applied.

Widows will vary in their experience and circumstances of bereavement. A balance has to be struck, but we have been given no justification for the six-month threshold. It is another arbitrary assertion. I dare say that the pressure for the six-month threshold came not from Richmond house but from the Treasury 30 yd over the road. The balance that had to be struck was between what the Chancellor would let the DSS get away with and the needs of widows.What research has been done into the experiences and needs of widows and when they feel ready to look for work? I would love to know what evidence there is. Or is it just arbitrary or Treasury pressure?

The phrase "By their deeds ye shall know them" will be well known to hon. Members. New Labour has reconstructed the division between the deserving and the undeserving poor. The deserving poor are elderly or poor pensioners and the severely disabled. None of us would query that. Who are the undeserving? The Government have attacked lone parents and the incapacitated, but who would ever have thought that widows would constitute the undeserving poor? That is the group from whom they are now taking half a billion pounds. What is the great crime that widows have committed that the Government need to take half a billion pounds from them? It is that they have lost their husbands. That makes them undeserving under new Labour.

Much mention has been made of what the Government are doing for pensioners and carers. We have heard mention of the so-called minimum income guarantee. I offer my hon. Friends a guide to new Labour-speak. When a new name is given to something, it always means precisely the opposite. Therefore, the Bill to clamp down on information getting out is known as the Freedom of Information Bill, and the Bill to abolish legal aid is called the Access to Justice Bill; and the money to which 500,000 people are entitled but which they will not get is called a guaranteed minimum income. The Government's fig leaf is that they will help poor people through the guaranteed minimum income but, unlike the contributory benefits that they are cutting, the means-tested benefits are not guaranteed and will miss many of the most vulnerable. They have no defence.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) spoke passionately about the attack on widows through the cuts in SERPS. My hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) pointed out some of the absurdities of the Government's approach. That highlighted an interesting benefits policy issue. Many elderly men are distressed about what will happen because, next April, the widows pension will not be phased down but slashed. It will fall by half, overnight.

While it is Government policy to phase the increased retirement age for women by six months at a time over a decade, this cut is keenly felt—Ministers do not realise this—because, although there is allegedly 15 years' notice, the 50 per cent. pensions cut will happen with dramatic suddenness. There was no notice and people were never told, so they feel angry about the sudden halving of their widows' prospective income. None of us would accept the threat of such a prospect. That is why there is anger and why we need action.

We have touched often on the Government's benefit changes that are an attack on widows, but several other things in our motion have not been touched on. The first is an acute problem for widows: the restriction of council tax benefit. The Conservatives propose that someone who lives in a property above band E—a big house or a house in London—should get only as much council tax benefit as they would if they lived in a band E property. The Conservatives proposed that for everyone. The Government backed down on their proposal following pressure from the Liberal Democrats and others. [Interruption.] Labour Members snort; I am not sure whether that is parliamentary. I and my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury sat on the Committee that considered the regulation that would have introduced their proposal. We opposed it and voted against it. London Labour Members expressed their concern. The Government forced it through with their loyal Back Benchers but, after that debate, the Government rightly gave in to our pressure. That is a statement of fact.

[Mr. Steve Webb]

The Government have protected existing recipients but new widows—widowhood can strike at any time—who live in properties above band E will find that council tax will be paid only up to band E equivalent. Why does that matter? Take a married couple who live in a large house and whose two or three children leave home for university and are no longer part of the benefit unit. The couple still live in a large or high-value home. If the husband dies, the widow, as well as coping with everything else, will find that the Government are saying that she lives in too big a house. That is the implication of the restriction to band E. The Government are saying that such people should trade down. They will only pay band E benefit because those people should not be living in such a big house. That is an extraordinary thing to say to people who have just been widowed. Not only are they being told that in six months they will have to get on their bikes and look for jobs, but, from now, day 1, they are to be told that they are living in too big a house. If they are on income support, they will have to find the shortfall in the council tax bill out of their basic income support—the poverty line that is supposed to be for food and clothing. How can that be acceptable?

I asked the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), a written question last week about how many people had been affected so far, because the measure came in only this April. The answer was that the Government do not know. They will know next January. They do not know the effects of their policy on widows. Every widow affected by this—there will be many in London and the south-east where high-value properties are not necessarily huge; we are not talking mansions—will have to make up their council tax out of their basic income support. Because of what the Government have done to local government funding, council tax is rising faster than inflation. It is a serious burden. It is part of the Government's attack on widows.

The amount that the Government are saving through their measures is pathetically small given the scale of Government spending, but it will matter to widows who have to find £2 or £3 a week out of a pension of, say, £60. That is a substantial figure and the Government should reconsider.

It is not just the council tax. What about bereavement tax allowances? That allows widows to keep the tax allowance to which husbands were entitled through marriage in the immediate aftermath of bereavement. The Chancellor abolished that in the Budget but we did not hear about it in the Budget speech. We had to rifle through the Budget press releases. When someone untrustworthy has been to a house, it is necessary to count the silver after they have gone. When the Chancellor has not mentioned something in his Budget speech, we have to check the press releases to ensure that he has not abolished it. That is the precedent that he has set.

When we found the press release, it was wrong. As the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) said, it said that the Government were abolishing the allowance but were doubling the widows payment from £1,000 to £2,000 so that they would all be protected, but that applies only to widows under pension age. Widows above pension age have no offsetting protection. That is another Government attack on widows buried in the small print but it is real money to real people in real need.

It is not only the bereavement tax allowance. What about the dividend tax credit? That is the tax that non-taxpayers have to pay on their share dividends that they would previously have got back. Some 300,000 pensioners who do not pay tax, by definition poorer pensioners, will now pay tax on their dividends. Imagine a couple where the husband has put together a small share portfolio precisely because he wants to provide for his widow should the need arise. The Government say that it has been passed to her, so she must pay tax on it despite her not being well enough off to pay tax. That people are below the tax threshold and that it would cost only a few tens of millions to do something about it does not matter to the Government. In doctrinaire fashion, they will not make any concession because, if they make one, they might have to make another, so widows have to pay.

Mr. Timms: A few tens of millions?

Mr. Webb: My hearing is better than the Minister expected. He says that as though the Liberal Democrats are always spending such sums. Given the chance, we probably would. But, in forecasting its expenditure each year, his Department does not get it right to within £10 million or £100 million but has trouble getting it right to within £1 billion. In that context, £10 million to protect widows is small beer.

I may be mistaken, but my previous professional career reminds me that one of the Government's worst forecasting errors in recent years was in respect of war widows pensions. The Department of Social Security got its forecast wrong on a matter that one would have thought that it was not hard to forecast. If they can say that being a billion out does not matter because they will find the money from somewhere, the tens of millions that do not matter to Government but matter hugely to widows are not chicken feed. The Government need to act.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster) has gone because he raised the important problem of widows who suffer further the bereavement of losing a child. That is a dreadful situation that one would wish on no one. He seemed to be unaware that the Government's proposal not only fails to deal with the situation, but makes it worse. Previously, a widow who lost a dependent child would move from widowed mothers allowance to widows pension. [Interruption.] The Minister rightly indicates from a sedentary position that it would depend on age. However, there will be no widows pension if the child dies more than six months after the first bereavement. The hon. Member for Hastings and Rye was pointing to a deserving situation that his Government have made worse. He asked for reassurances from the Minister that it would be tackled but I look forward to them with little anticipation of a satisfactory answer.

We talked about widowers. Understandably, the Minister focused at length on widowers, as I would have in his situation. Denuded of anything to say on widows, I would have talked about widowers at some length—that is perfectly legitimate. However, some months ago, when the announcement was made in the House about widows and widowers, I challenged the Secretary of State on that matter. Although I welcomed the fact that the benefit will go to existing widowers and not only to new widowers, I asked why we have to wait until 2001.

I have had to ask the local rotary club to bale out two widowers in my constituency in order to provide a much-needed holiday after their bereavement or to help with child care costs. I told those widowers that the Government—with their arm behind their back—will be bringing in additional benefits for widowers, but that widowers would have to wait, not until the start of the next financial year, but until 2001. They asked me why—I could give them no answer. As constituency Members of Parliament, we are having to turn to the voluntary sector—to rotary clubs, for goodness sake—to find financial support for that group of people, because the Government say that they cannot do anything until 2001.

The Government's amendment to our motion is abject—for want of a better word. What does it do? It supports the Government's bereavement payment, and the doubling of the value of the widows payment—so did the Liberal Democrat motion. It welcomes the additional help given to the children of widowers—as did our motion—so none of that part of the amendment was necessary. What else does the amendment do? It welcomes

"the protection given to widows over 55, who might otherwise have no practical alternative to relying on Income Support."

Hang on—why might they otherwise have no practical alternative? Because the Government have just abolished their benefits. That is extraordinary. The amendment welcomes the fact that the Government have only been fairly nasty. For tomorrow's 55-year-olds, the Government will be very nasty, but for today's they will not.

We have already gone through half of the Government's amendment. The first two parts agree with our motion; and the next part states that we should applaud them for not being as nasty as they might have been. Then, in the last sentence, they give the reason that we should reject the motion: the amendment

"welcomes the wide range of policies"—

none of which are listed—

"which are designed to assist women to play a full and active part in the community."

So that is all right. We can take £500 million away from widows—the undeserving poor—because we are allowing women to play a full part in the community. I am sure that that makes widows feel very warm inside.

The Minister of State told us that the fact that the Government were slashing £500 million from widows was not important, because, over the first couple of years, they would be giving £100 million to widowers. That is bizarre logic. At the risk of insulting the hon. Gentleman, that is very un-new Labour. The new Labour thing to do is not to talk about what the Government are doing this year, but to add together the next three years—or, given half the chance, to add together the next 30. However, the case of widows is different: to make a cut a few years down the line does not matter, the Government count only the money that is being spent this year. They are disregarding cuts down the track of £500 million for widows to focus only on this year.

The Minister spoke to representatives of Help the Aged yesterday. I saw the press release issued by the Department of Social Security. Its headline claimed that the Government were spending £4 billion extra on pensioners. [Interruption.] As the Minister says, it would be very good if they were. The question is: over what period is that £4 billion to be spent? Probably, it is three years because, in new-Labour-speak, numbers are usually tripled, so that would give an amount of £1.3 billion. Inflation is usually included, so that would knock off about £500 million. In effect, the Government will probably be spending an average of £800 million extra a year on pensioners—as indeed they are through income support. We welcome that. However, that amount is only one fifth of the amount that was claimed.

The Minister tells us that the cuts of £500 million for widows are unimportant because they are a few years down the track. To those people who will be widows at that time, the cuts will be as important then as if they had been made now. It is truly extraordinary that the only defence that the Minister can offer is that the cuts will take a few years to come through. However, the benefits will not be paid now; as I pointed out, widowers will have to wait until 2001.

I want to clarify and confirm the concession that the Minister made in the debate, because it is probably the most expensive concession that any of us have ever heard. As I understand it, people who were wrongly advised about SERPS—because they phoned the DSS in 1986 and were not told that their SERPS widows benefits would be cut—and who, on the strength of that bad advice, stayed in SERPS when they might have been better advised to opt out, will be compensated for that mistake.

I think that the record will show that that is what the Minister said. I am more than happy for those who read our proceedings to confirm that that is what he said. My hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell), who is leaving the Chamber at the moment, questioned the Minister on that point and is obviously running off to tell his local newspaper to report the concession that he wrought from the Government.

The Government must take action on the matter; Governments—in the sense that government is continuous—have failed to give citizens the right information. Let us face the fact that none of us really understand pensions.

Angela Eagle: Except the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Webb: Present company included. I am grateful to the hon. Lady for suggesting that I might understand pensions, but even I would not claim that.

The complexity of these matters is such that Governments must be proactive. If they make a complex change to a complex system, they must tell people about it. If they fail to tell people, they must take responsibility for that failure. The Government failed to tell people about the SERPS changes, therefore, they have a responsibility to pay compensation.

[Mr. Webb]

The Minister said that an announcement would be made in due course. I think that those were the words he used. Three months ago, he told my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury that there would be compensation. Time is running out, because the ombudsman promised to give us a decision by next April, when this cut is implemented. Is the Minister in dialogue with the ombudsman? Is he waiting for the ombudsman to come to a conclusion? Will he undertake to implement whatever the ombudsman decides? Will he pre-empt the ombudsman? What if the ombudsman makes an announcement next March? Will we have to wait? It is not clear.

It is not good enough for the Government to say that there will be an announcement in due course. Elderly gentlemen—for it is they who are writing to us on these matters—who believe that they have made financial preparations in the event of their death, are distraught at what successive Governments have done to them. I accept the Government's admission that, in 1986, Labour voted against those measures, but, as with so many things, they are now in favour of them and will implement them. If they are going to implement them, they must compensate those people who were misled by successive Governments.

There has been a sustained assault on widows. A litany of measures have taken hundreds of millions of pounds out of the pockets of widows, who, by no stretch of the imagination, could be regarded as the undeserving poor. We have heard no convincing defence from the Minister; there is nothing in the Government's amendment that represents a defence. The case is proven and I urge the House to back our motion.

3.47 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Angela Eagle): We have had an interesting debate. It has ranged from an interpretation of Hamlet from the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) that was rather odd in places to a whole range of issues, some of which were sweeping in their scale and some of which were extremely detailed. In the remaining time for the debate, I shall try to deal with some of those issues.

Before I respond, I emphasise that our reforms will modernise an outdated scheme for those people who are bereaved. In considering widows benefit and the extension of the scheme for compensating widows, we would do well to remember the original purpose of such benefits. That was referred to in the extremely good speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford). In the Beveridge reforms, the original purpose of the benefit was to compensate for the loss of a sole breadwinner; it was not to compensate for the pain of bereavement itself. Many of us have had painful experiences of bereavement, but, in considering the redesign of this benefit, we must focus on its original purpose.

The society of the 1940s was different from today's society. We are also talking about 2020 and many more years in the future, when I assume that society will continue to evolve and change. Our society is not set in aspic, preserved like a museum piece. Nor should our welfare system be preserved like a museum piece. In the 1940s, when the widows benefit system was created, only one in eight married women worked. Now, seven in 10 married women work. In the 1940s, the opportunities available to women to support themselves through employment were much more limited than they are today. For example, in teaching—a profession in which women are always well represented—women were required to give up their jobs when they married. They were not expected to continue in employment. No such expectations exist now, thank goodness, and opportunities for women in the labour market continue to improve—although I would not say that they are entirely equal.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady referred to the 1940s—the time of the second world war. Is she in a position to tell us what happened to the Prime Minister's review of war widows pensions? When did the review body meet, what were its deliberations and what was the outcome?

Angela Eagle: I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his ingenuity in raising the issue of war widows pensions. However, he will know that the war pensions scheme is entirely separate and different and does not come within the purview of this review. If he reads the Prime Minister's words, the hon. Gentleman will see that the Prime Minister said that that situation, like all Government policy, will be kept under review.

Women's opportunities in the labour market continue to improve. I am an optimist in this regard. I think that they will improve still further in the future. In the 1950s, only 100,000 women had access to occupational pensions—and that was through the pensions of their husbands. Today, 1.6 million women have such access. The society that was reliant on the single male bread winner, around whom the original welfare state was built, has disappeared. Women are now far more likely to be in work and accruing their own pension entitlements.

Our new scheme recognises that fact: it refocuses assistance by providing a weekly benefit for both widows and widowers with dependent children. Widowed parents allowance will have the same entitlement conditions and be paid at the same rate as the existing widowed mothers allowance, but will be available equally to mothers and fathers. William Beveridge would never have countenanced that—indeed, he ruled it out explicitly when considering bereavement provisions. About 40,000 new widows and 15,000 new widowers each year will gain from the new bereavement payment, which, at £2,000, will be double the existing widows payment.

We have recognised the needs of older widows and widowers through the new bereavement allowance. There has been little focus today on the transitional scheme for widows aged over 55. We recognise that women of that age are more likely to have been out of the labour market for long periods so they will not be asked to make themselves available for work. Our transitional scheme will passport those women on to retirement pensions by giving them an amount of money that is exactly the same as widows benefit. Women aged 55 at the time of the change will be passported into retirement and will lose nothing. Older generations of women—who were not long in the labour market or did not expect to work—will have extra protection. There has been no mention of that scheme in the debate, and it would have been nice if hon. Members had conceded that point.

We have heard much talk about annuities and all sorts of pension rights. However, there has not been much criticism of the existing system, which fails to support poorer women as well as it supports those on higher incomes. The current system takes away benefit, pound for pound, from women on income support – who end up no better off, despite their widows payments. Therefore, we have introduced in legislation a £10 disregard on income support for women in that situation and a £15 disregard on both housing benefit and the working families tax credit in order to provide a little extra help. That is another positive measure introduced by the Government that was not mentioned in the debate.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) welcomed the extension of these benefits to widowers. However, he did so rather churlishly, claiming that the Government had acted under pressure from the courts. In fact, we introduced the measure because we believe that people should have equal access to benefit and not be discriminated against on the ground of gender. The hon. Gentleman welcomed the doubling of the bereavement payment but seemed to want to extend the entire scheme to those above pension age. That has never happened before.

To return to my initial comments, the payments for widows – which are now being extended – are designed to compensate for the loss of a breadwinner's income. There is no breadwinner in retirement, so that factor is not relevant. Payments have never been made to women over retirement age who lose their husbands. The hon. Gentleman wants to change the system and extend bereavement payments to men and women in retirement. That would cost £400 million a year, which presumably must be added to the £10 billion that the Liberal Democrats spent when telling us what we should do about SERPS and to the dozens of other spending commitments that littered Liberal Democrat contributions to the debate.

We are considering how we can ensure that the welfare system is modernised properly so as to retain the support into the future of both the taxpaying public and those on benefit. Therefore, we must take a little notice of how much proposed measures will cost. One quickly learns that, in terms of welfare reform and the Department of Social Security, billions of pounds of public expenditure can be dispensed with in the twitch of an eye. We must ensure that the expenditure is in proportion with the problem.

Mr. Rendel: The Minister must accept that the additional £10 billion – the Minister of State mentioned £5 billion in the case of SERPS – must be paid for by somebody. It will be paid for either by the widows, in which case each widow must pay rather a lot, or by the taxpayers, who would pay rather less. Is the hon. Lady suggesting that, in order to retain the support of the taxpaying public, she will take all of that money from widows?

Angela Eagle: The money is not available in the way that the hon. Gentleman suggests. I suspect that that is why the previous Government decided to restrict SERPS to half of the payable pension. However, they did it so incompetently that – as I think all hon. Members have admitted today – they landed the present Government with enormous potential costs. That says it all about the standards that we expected, and became used to, from the previous Government.

The hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar went on about how the contributory principle had been badly affected by the changes. No one has recognised the fact that we have extended that principle through these changes: widowers will benefit from the contributions of their wives.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady must recognise that men will be disadvantaged because of the low level of women's contributions. Women have lower incomes, as the Minister of State conceded, so there will be no equality.

Angela Eagle: The hon. Gentleman should get his facts straight. First, women's contributions are rapidly catching up with those of men. Secondly, the contribution rates for qualifying for benefits are quite modest over a lifetime of earnings.

The hon. Gentleman announced at the end of his peroration that he wanted the Government to "reverse this policy" – they were his exact words. Therefore, I assume that he opposes all the changes, including the doubling of bereavement payments and the extension of payments to widowers, upon which the previous Government utterly and resolutely refused to legislate during 18 years in office. I presume that the hon. Gentleman will go to the country at the next election and tell the beneficiaries of that payment that he is against it.

Mr. Pickles: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Angela Eagle: No, I do not have much time.

On the question of when the changes should be introduced, the Conservative spokesman suggested that we should put off the changes to widows benefit until some unspecified time in the future. The hon. Member for Newbury also said that but, in his winding up speech, the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) suggested that we should bring forward the introduction of the changes.

One part of the Liberal party and the Conservative party say that we should put off the changes, but the hon. Member for Northavon says the opposite. The Opposition do not know which way they are facing. It is difficult to listen to their arguments, when there is no coherence or consistency in their position.

The existing scheme is outdated. It was devised for a time when few married women worked and very few had insurance or a private pension. The death of the family breadwinner clearly had a huge impact on family finances, and the widow was dependent on support from the state.

However, widowed men with dependent children were usually expected to continue to work following their wife's death. Beveridge maintained that "very few men's wages are sufficient to cover at least two adults and one child."

Today the situation is entirely different. It is the norm in many two-parent families for both parents to work.

Our reformed scheme will reflect today's society by making bereavement benefits available equally to men and women. It will also take account of the increasing number of married women in work, and the much higher number of people who are protected by life insurance and occupational pensions.

[Angela Eagle]

Our reforms will refocus expenditure, concentrating the help available from the state by focusing on immediate needs. The bereavement payment will give a tax-free lump sum of £2,000—double the current payment. Bereavement allowance will give older widows and widowers without dependent children the support that they need for the six months following bereavement. The help will focus on children and families.

Just as society cannot be preserved in aspic, neither can our welfare state be so preserved. It is our duty to keep the system relevant to modern society, not for ever stuck in the past. We believe that our proposed changes will do just that.

Question put, That the original words stand part of the Question.—

The House divided: Ayes 37, Noes 274.

Division No. 219] [4.2 pm

AYES

Allan, Richard
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Baker, Norman
Beggs, Roy
Beith, Rt Hon A J
Bell, Martin (Tatton)
Bottomley, Peter (Worthing W)
Brake, Tom
Breed, Colin
Burstow, Paul
Cable, Dr Vincent
Campbell, Rt Hon Menzies (NE Fife)
Cotter, Brian
Davey, Edward (Kingston)
Fearn, Ronnie
Forsythe, Clifford
George, Andrew (St Ives)
Harris, Dr Evan
Harvey, Nick
Heath, David (Somerton & Frome)
Jones, Nigel (Cheltenham)
Kirkwood, Archy
Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
Michie, Mrs Ray (Argyll & Bute)
Moore, Michael
Opik, Lembit
Rendel, David
Ross, William (E Lond'y)
Russell, Bob (Colchester)
Sanders, Adrian
Smyth, Rev Martin (Belfast S)
Stunell, Andrew
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thompson, William
Tonge, Dr Jenny
Tyler, Paul
Webb, Steve

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Phil Willis and
Sir Robert Smith.

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Mrs Irene (Paisley N)
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, Douglas
Allen, Graham
Anderson, Janet (Rossendale)
Armstrong, Rt Hon Ms Hilary
Ashton, Joe
Atherton, Ms Candy
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, John
Barnes, Harry
Beard, Nigel
Beckett, Rt Hon Mrs Margaret
Bell, Stuart (Middlesbrough)
Benn, Rt Hon Tony (Chesterfield)
Bennett, Andrew F
Benton, Joe
Berry, Roger Best, Harold Betts, Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blizzard, Bob
Blunkett, Rt Hon David
Boateng, Paul
Borrow, David
Bradley, Peter (The Wrekin)
Bradshaw, Ben
Brinton, Mrs Helen
Browne, Desmond
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Butler, Mrs Christine
Cabom, Rt Hon Richard
Campbell, Alan (Tynemouth)
Campbell, Mrs Anne (C'bridge)
Campbell, Ronnie (Blyth V)
Casale, Roger
Caton, Martin
Cawsey, Ian
Chapman, Ben (Wirral S)
Chaytor, David
Clapham, Michael
Clark, Rt Hon Dr David (S Shields)
Clark, Dr Lynda (Edinburgh Pentlands)
Clark, Paul (Gillingham)
Clarke, Rt Hon Tom (Coatbridge)
Clarke, Tony (Northampton S)
Clelland, David
Coaker, Vernon
Coffey, Ms Ann
Cohen, Harry Coleman, Iain
Colman, Tony
Connarty, Michael Corbyn, Jeremy Cousins, Jim
Cranston, Ross
Cryer, John (Hornchurch)
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Jim (Cov'try S)
Curtis-Thomas, Mrs Claire
Dalyell, Tam
Darvill, Keith
Davey, Valerie (Bristol W)
Davidson, Ian
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Geraint (Croydon C)
Dawson, Hilton
Dean, Mrs Janet
Denham, John
Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Donohoe, Brian H
Doran, Frank
Dowd, Jim
Drew, David
Drown, Ms Julia
Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Eagle, Angela (Wallasey)
Edwards, Huw
Ellman, Mrs Louise
Ennis, Jeff
Field, Rt Hon Frank
Fisher, Mark
Flint, Caroline
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Rt Hon Derek
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings)
Foster, Michael J (Worcester)
Foulkes, George
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, Bruce (Walsall S)
Gerrard, Neil
Gibson, Dr Ian
Godman, Dr Norman A
Godsiff, Roger Goggins, Paul
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Mrs Eileen
Griffiths, Jane (Reading E)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Gunnell, John
Hall, Mike (Weaver Vale)
Hall, Patrick (Bedford)
Hanson, David
Heal, Mrs Sylvia
Healey, John
Henderson, Doug (Newcastle N)
Henderson, Ivan (Harwich)
Hepburn, Stephen
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, Ms Patricia
Hill, Keith
Hinchliffe, David
Hodge, Ms Margaret
Hoey, Kate
Hood, Jimmy
Hoon, Geoffrey
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, Alan (Newport E)
Hughes, Ms Beverley (Stretford)
Hughes, Kevin (Doncaster N)
Humble, Mrs Joan
Hurst, Alan
Iddon, Dr Brian
Illsley, Eric
Jackson, Helen (Hillsborough)
Jenkins, Brian
Johnson, Alan (Hull W & Hessle)
Johnson, Miss Melanie (Welwyn Hatfield)
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Helen (Warrington N)
Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keen, Alan (Feltham & Heston)
Kennedy, Jane (Wavertree)
Khabra, Piara S
Kidney, David
Kilfoyle, Peter
King, Andy (Rugby & Kenilworth)
King, Ms Oona (Bethnal Green)
Kumar, Dr Ashok
Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Lawrence, Ms Jackie
Lepper, David
Lewis, Ivan (Bury S)
Linton, Martin
Livingstone, Ken
Lock, David
Love, Andrew
McAvoy, Thomas
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFall, John
McIsaac, Shona
McNulty, Tony
Mactaggart, Fiona
McWalter, Tony
McWilliam, John
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Mallaber, Judy
Mandelson, Rt Hon Peter
Marsden, Gordon (Blackpool S)
Marsden, Paul (Shrewsbury)
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Merron, Gillian
Michie, Bill (Sheff'd Heeley)
Milburn, Rt Hon Alan
Moffatt, Laura
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Moran, Ms Margaret
Morgan, Ms Julie (Cardiff N)
Morley, Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Denis (Wansbeck)
Murphy, Jim (Eastwood)
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, Bill (Normanton)
Olner, Bill
O'Neill, Martin
Organ, Mrs Diana
Osborne, Ms Sandra
Pearson, Ian
Pendry, Tom
Perham, Ms Linda
Pickthall, Colin
Pike, Peter L
Plaskitt, James
Pollard, Kerry
Pond, Chris

Pope, Greg Pound, Stephen
Powell, Sir Raymond
Prentice, Ms Bridget (Lewisham E)
Prentice, Gordon (Pendle)
Primarolo, Dawn
Purchase, Ken
Quinn, Lawrie
Radice, Giles
Reed, Andrew (Loughborough)
Reid, Rt Hon Dr John (Hamilton N)
Robinson, Geoffrey (Cov'try NW)
Roche, Mrs Barbara
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Roy, Frank
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Ms Christine (Chester)
Ryan, Ms Joan
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mohammad
Savidge, Malcolm
Sawford, Phil
Sedgemore, Brian
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Barry
Shipley, Ms Debra
Simpson, Alan (Nottingham S)
Singh, Marsha
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Rt Hon Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, Angela (Basildon)
Smith, John (Glamorgan)
Smith, Llew (Blaenau Gwent)
Snape, Peter
Southworth, Ms Helen
Spellar, John
Squire, Ms Rachel
Steinberg, Gerry
Stewart, Ian (Eccles)
Stinchcombe, Paul
Stoate, Dr Howard
Stott, Roger
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Taylor, Rt Hon Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Ms Dari (Stockton S)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thomas, Gareth (Clwyd W)
Thomas, Gareth R (Harrow W)
Timms, Stephen
Tipping, Paddy
Todd, Mark
Touhig, Don
Trickett, Jon
Turner, Dennis (Wolverh'ton SE)
Turner, Dr Desmond (Kemptown)
Turner, Dr George (NW Norfolk)
Twigg, Derek (Halton)
Twigg, Stephen (Enfield)
Walley, Ms Joan
Watts, David
White, Brian
Whitehead, Dr Alan
Wicks, Malcolm
Williams, Rt Hon Alan (Swansea W)
Williams, Alan W (E Carmarthen)
Wills, Michael
Winnick, David
Winterton, Ms Rosie (Doncaster C)
Wise, Audrey
Wood, Mike
Worthington, Tony
Wray, James
Wright, Anthony D (Gt Yarmouth)
Wright, Dr Tony (Cannock)
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Robert Ainsworth and
Mr. David Jamieson.

Question accordingly negatived.

Question, That the proposed words be there added, put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 31 (Questions on amendments), and agreed to.

MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER forthwith declared the main Question, as amended, to be agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House supports the Government's proposals to reform bereavement benefits, including the Bereavement Payment, which will provide a tax-free lump sum of £2,000—double the value of the current Widow's Payment; welcomes the additional help given to the children of widowers, who will qualify for the new Widowed Parent's Allowance, which will replace the Widowed Mother's Allowance; welcomes the protection given to widows over 55, who might otherwise have no practical alternative to relying on Income Support; and welcomes the wide range of policies which are designed to assist women to play a full and active part in the community.

Supermarkets

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): I remind the House that Madam Speaker has selected the amendment in the name of the Prime Minister.

4.14 pm

Mr. Matthew Taylor (Truro and St. Austell): I beg to move,

That this House notes that the rapid expansion of out-of-town superstores under the Conservatives and the concentration of local market share has hit traditional town centres; notes that supermarket purchasing and pricing policies have hit farmers but not led to lower prices for consumers and are now under investigation by the Competition Commission as a result; further notes that a new wave of larger superstore developments and predatory pricing to gain market dominance, and a squeeze of local producers and traditional retailers, is threatened by Wal-Mart's acquisition of ASDA; therefore calls on the Government to reaffirm its commitment to preventing further out-of-town greenfield development, and to tackle urgently anti-competitive, anti-producer and anti-consumer practices by the major food retailers; and calls on the Prime Minister to put on record in the House the substantive contents of his meeting earlier this year with the Chief Executive of Wal-Mart and to clarify exactly what flexibility in planning regulation was offered in respect of any future superstore development.

The motion relates to food and supermarkets, and especially to developments in the food retailing business in past decades and to the potential for great change given the takeover of Asda by the giant American corporation Wal-Mart—the world's largest company. Consumers have welcomed the supermarket revolution that has taken place over several decades, because it has offered convenience shopping and greater choice. In towns in my constituency, supermarkets have submitted planning applications, saying that they will create so many hundred jobs, and often claiming that they will cut prices.

As the 1980s rolled on and we came into the 1990s, the general public became increasingly aware of the problems that that revolution caused many communities. All parties in the House recognised that problem in the early 1990s, as planning guidance was changed. The problems were clear. That change was not free: it came on the backs of traditional food retailers and other retailers, particularly in town centres, which have had to close. It has comprehensively been shown that jobs have been lost and weaker town centres have been destroyed.

In January 1998, Boots sponsored a report for the national retail planning forum, which shows how great the impact on jobs can be. It said that the impact of out-of-centre food superstores on local retail employment was substantial job losses. That is contrary to the claims that the supermarkets have made. The report examined the 15 km catchment areas of 93 superstores that had opened between 1991 and 1995. It found that the supermarkets had created 10,500 full-time equivalent jobs, but that 25,000 jobs had been lost in local specialist food retailers, which is a net loss of 15,000, and another 10,000 jobs had been lost in non-food retailers. That is an average loss of 276 full-time jobs for every store.

In September 1998, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions published its own research, which confirmed that town centre market share of food trade had been cut by 13 to 50 per cent., and that there was an overall cut in employment and an overall increase in car use. It also confirmed that—as we know from my own part of the world in Cornwall and from other rural areas with small market towns—the supermarkets, having pretty comprehensively covered the larger towns and cities, are now aggressively targeting new development in small towns that still have a reasonably successful parade of shops but feel under real threat. Perranporth in my constituency is one such small town. That report recommended that all edge or outside-centre applications over 1,000 sq m should have a combined retail economic and traffic evaluation.

[Mr. Matthew Taylor]

There are, beyond any doubt, real problems of job losses. Supermarkets have an impact not only on traditional town centres, but on the environment. The town centre sites—the brown-field sites—that the Government say that they want to be developed are often not available. The sequential test leads supermarkets to push for development on the edge or even outside the town centre. Nothing in the sequential test says no to that. The larger the store for which they are seeking permission, the less likely it is that there will be a suitable in-town site.

Such development encourages traffic growth at a time when the Government are struggling to cut traffic and congestion. It leads to the dereliction of town centres in commercial terms with the loss of shops, and the loss of shops leads to the death of the town centre and to the increase in the dereliction of the community and, ultimately, in crime. From the environmental point of view, it leads to unnecessary food miles.

The supermarkets claim that there are price benefits, but they dominate the local market, which gives them real power over suppliers and customers. Farmers and other suppliers have reeled from the blows to agriculture. No one in this country can be unaware of the problems that farming has faced in the past few years, but what makes many farmers and, indeed, ordinary customers angry is the fact that the prices of supermarket goods have not fallen. We are also seeing some extraordinary anti-competitive practices, which are now subject to investigation by competition authorities.

Farmers who supply, for instance, brussels sprouts to major retailers have told me that they are required to buy their bags from a particular manufacturer, and that those bags are more expensive than the ones that they formerly obtained from their own sources. Why does the supermarket chain involved insist that those farmers buy expensive bags, when they could obtain bags more cheaply? The answer must be the link between the manufacturer of the bags and the supermarket. There have been negotiations which, supposedly, concerned an entirely different matter; but it has been alleged to me that the supermarkets get a kickback from the suppliers of the bags, while the farmers bear the cost.

We are also seeing sole agreements. Very little is given to farmers in the case of such agreements. Only rarely is there a guarantee of price, or even of purchase; but the price is squeezed, year by year by year. If the farmer finally goes out of business, that is not a problem: the business is simply transferred elsewhere. From the point of view of the rural community, money is being squeezed out. Similarly, because profits go elsewhere, supermarkets take money that might otherwise have stayed in the community. Local shops supplying meat and vegetables tend to buy within the local community, but supermarkets contract across the country, which means that food travels for long distances.

As for the producers, we often hear about promotions and cut-price sales; but the cut-price sales are often loss leaders, and the price of other goods in the supermarket often compares unfavourably with that of goods in local shops. Certain targeted items are sold very cheaply. The farmers who supply those items say that they are asked to bear the cost of promotion, so the supermarkets do not suffer in that respect either.

Customers, who are supposedly the big gainers, often find that they are nothing of the kind. Local and regional market dominance often means that prices are nowhere near as low as one might expect. We see loss leaders, but mostly high margins. We see returns for British supermarket chains that are several times higher than those of supermarket chains in France, and well above the average in Europe and America. As the town centre is lost, the 20 or 25 per cent. of the community who have no access to cars find that they can no longer get to the shops so easily.

I do not say any of this on the basis that the parties disagree. Certainly, they do not disagree publicly.

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): Is it now Liberal policy to oppose supermarkets? The hon. Gentleman has said nothing in their favour.

Mr. Taylor: I was about to say something about the policy developed by the last Government and the present Government, which we have supported. I refer to the process of constraining the development of supermarkets, especially out-of-town supermarkets. We want changes in the rating system to help small shops, which pay high rates compared with the rates paid by supermarkets. The Government have done nothing about that.

I do not want to give the false impression that there is a huge division between the parties. There are key questions about where we are to go from here and what is happening in Government, and I shall deal with those shortly.

The policy that has been observed since 1993 relating to the sequential test—town centre, edge of centre, outer centre—is an important development, which was updated in 1996. There were two elements in that. The first was the sequential test. I do not think that anyone would disagree with the suggestion that it is important to look for the town-centre site first. They might have in the past, but I think that we are all agreed now. However, there is a second element. Once the sequential test has been exhausted, a supermarket chain may say that the only place where it can go is out of town. That will lead to an argument that boils down to this: should we allow more competition among supermarkets, thus allowing the development of new supermarkets that can compete with existing ones? Is that more important than preserving town centres, existing communities and environment? The test does not provide an answer to that question. It says that there should be a decision based on need, but we have yet to find out exactly where the Government stand.

A report published last year by the Environment and Science Research Council states:

"Since the mid-1990s, when the revised planning guidelines were introduced, the major food retailers increased floor space by nearly 2.5 million square feet a year, much the same as in earlier years."

The theory is great, but, in practice, not much has changed, partly because of existing permissions. That is why we are now reaching a stage at which the test will be much stronger. As the existing permissions are used up, new sites will be sought. Asda has clearly said that it wants to do that in the south. Permissions will also be sought for the expansion of existing sites.

Ms Sally Keeble (Northampton, North): Is the hon. Gentleman opposed to supermarkets per se, or is he just opposed to out-of-town retail centres? There is a difference. A well-placed supermarket can provide an anchor for a town centre.

Mr. Taylor: I am opposed to bad sites, generally out of town, and also to the growth of larger hypermarkets which, increasingly, sell not only food but other goods. They will knock out competition, and, indeed, have been designed to do so.

The last year of the Conservative Government and the first year of the Labour Government saw similar levels of supermarket development, but I think that we face a real issue now.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): The hon. Gentleman has made an important point about existing planning permissions. I cannot specify the exact period, but it was always known that a considerable number of years of extant supermarket permissions would have to be gone through before the policy could change. Surely that is the crux of the problem.

Mr. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman is entirely right. He may recall, as he was present for some of our debates on protecting green fields, that we argued that, while the Government were going through a process of review of planning guidance and planning law, they should put a hold on the development of some of those very large sites.

The hon. Gentleman is not right in suggesting that only extant permissions are involved. In north-west Coventry, for instance, inspectors have overturned local opposition to allow development of sites that they themselves have described as not ideal, and local authorities have given permission for major increases in the size of retailing facilities.

Mr. Tony McNulty (Harrow, East): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Taylor: Not yet. I have already given way several times.

Last autumn, at the annual convention of "Action for Market Towns", the Minister made some helpful and positive comments. He was right to draw attention to the problem to which I have drawn attention today. He said:

"Many superstores now offer services like banking and pharmacies, and can effectively take over the traditional role of the town centre. They also create fewer not more jobs in the local area."

Earlier this year, a report by the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs said that the Government should

"forbid future out-of-town or edge-of-town shopping centres or other developments which generate large amounts of private car travel".

That is not the existing policy; it is quite a large change in policy. So far, the Government say that they want a period of stability, rather than to change the policy.

My first worry is that the existing policy is not as strong as it has been presented to be. Neither the sequential test nor the test of need answer that point. The real issue is: will these developments be allowed, or are we going to take the line suggested by the Select Committee and say no to such developments in normal circumstances?

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): Why have so many of the planning permissions that have been granted for huge out-of-town shopping centres been granted by Liberal Democrat-controlled councils? East Hampshire and Harrogate have done so, and my own North Wiltshire district council gave permission for a Sainsbury and a Safeway outside Chippenham, which have wrecked Chippenham high street.

Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough): There is not one in Harrogate.

Mr. Taylor: Yes; so the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) may be wrong about that. Moreover, he knows as well as I do that councillors, of whichever party, are obliged to follow the Government's planning guidance, and are at risk financially if they do not. They cannot refuse permission simply because the local community is against granting it, but may do so only on planning grounds. If planning guidance does not enable them to refuse permission, they cannot refuse it.

Rather more extraordinarily, the former Secretary of State—

The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning (Mr. Richard Caborn): What waffle.

Mr. Taylor: How does the Minister explain the fact that councillors in my own area are facing surcharges precisely because they allegedly did not follow Government guidance? Councillors are clearly obliged to follow guidance and can be surcharged if they do not.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Caborn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Taylor: I shall give way to the Minister in a moment, but shall first answer the question of the hon. Member for North Wiltshire.

The former Secretary of State for the Environment, the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), often argued against the previous Government's policy on supermarket development. I spoke to him today on the issue, and he supported the Liberal Democrats' position on it. Yet, when he was Secretary of State, he overturned the recommendation—not only of the local community, but of the inspector—that an out-of-town supermarket should not be built just up the road from my constituency.

Although we could all throw brickbats on the issue, we have made some progress on it, to put it most mildly. Now, the issue is how we shall address current issues. I should like to mention specific issues facing the Government, on which their action does not match their briefings.

[Mr. Taylor]

Mr. McNulty: The hon. Gentleman said that the Government should block extant planning permissions. From what he has said, clearly, he is a planning expert. Will he therefore tell us how they are to block those extant permissions?

Mr. Taylor: The policy position that we articulated in previous debates is that the Government should place a moratorium on granting further development permissions. If I said anything unclear in making that point, I hope that that will have clarified it. We have debated the issue at length in the House.

Mr. McNulty: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman has to let me make some progress.

The Government's position has much support. However, I should like to know whether the debate within Government in contrast to the Government's stated position—that current planning guidance will provide protection—will protect traditional town centres, as the Minister has said that it will.

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): When Labour Members think that there are no possibilities of Government intervention, they should remember that the Secretary of State overturned an existing planning permission in my constituency that is now the subject of a court case between the council and the Secretary of State.

Mr. Taylor: I should like to deal with a couple of points before addressing the main issue in our motion. The first is that the Government have vacillated in their position on out-of-town supermarkets, between the need to restrain developments and the need to encourage competition between them.

In May 1996, for example, when Chris Davies—the former Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth, who is now a Member of the European Parliament—initiated a debate on the subject, that day's newspaper headlines proclaimed that the Government were to implement out-of-centre parking charges. Within hours, in an official statement, the possibility of such charges was rebutted, and it was said that they were no longer on the agenda.

The issue was raised again in debates on the transport White Paper, when the Government said that there would be parking charges on out-of-town supermarkets. We then heard the Deputy Prime Minister's fury in attacking the teeny-boppers at No. 10 Downing street for ruling out such charges after a meeting between supermarkets and No. 10 Downing street.

Similarly, Ministers at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions—I give the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning credit for this—undoubtedly believe, and have argued very strongly, that major new out-of-town supermarkets should not be developed, and that the issue is not competition but protection of the countryside. Nevertheless, there have been regular briefings from the Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry, saying that they believe that competition is the higher priority, and that planning requirements should be softened.

Mr. Willis: I should be grateful if my hon. Friend—and the Minister, who represents a Sheffield constituency—will address one crucial issue: differential support in rating valuations for supermarkets and town-centre shopping. Differential rating valuations between, particularly, small town centres and out-of-town shopping centres is making competition terribly unfair. Until we restore the balance between the two, we shall never solve the specific problem about which we are so concerned.

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend is absolutely right, and Liberal Democrats have made that argument many times in the House.

Mr. Gray: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that point?

Mr. Taylor: No.

Now, we come to the key issue facing the Government: the purchase of Asda by Wal-Mart, the American retailer. The purchase should, in itself, ring alarms. Wal-Mart is an enormous company, with global sales totalling one tenth the United Kingdom's gross domestic product. It is also the world's largest private employer, and well connected—Hillary Clinton is a former board member.

One of Wal-Mart's tactics is to squeeze its suppliers but, as I said, British farmers are already suffering from such squeezing. Its basic tactic is to compete aggressively with other supermarkets. It moves in and opens more centres—contrary to the Government's policy and the views held on both sides of the House—which is exactly what Asda would like to do in southern England.

Wal-Mart would like to have much larger centres, selling a much larger range of goods—posing a correspondingly larger threat to traditional town centres, and entirely contrary to the Government's articulated position. It is therefore little wonder that there is great concern about Wal-Mart's potential impact on traditional town centres and traditional suppliers.

All those concerns are exacerbated by the fact that the process seems to have been started at a meeting, on 25 February, between the Prime Minister and Bobby Martin, Wal-Mart's chief executive. We might not be concerned about that meeting if we were given some clear answers about what happened at it, but we are not receiving clear answers. Off the record, newspapers have been briefed that there was no discussion of the planning issue. On the record, however, in parliamentary answers, we are told, "Nothing at all will be said about the meeting."

The most extraordinary feature of the Government's amendment to our motion is that they fail to address the key issue of Wal-Mart, which is mentioned in our motion. Was the planning issue raised? If not, why does the Prime Minister not say so in a parliamentary answer? As we all know, the difference between an official briefing to the newspapers by some unknown official and the Prime Minister replying on the record is that the Prime Minister can be held to account for his answer if it proves inaccurate.

If the newspapers were not briefed by the Prime Minister's office—I assume that they were not—they must have been briefed by Wal-Mart.

Mr. Martlew: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Taylor: I shall be happy to give way in a moment, but I want to make progress on this point.

The Mail on Sunday stated on 20 June:

"The PM had used the meeting to further his aim to bring down prices in British supermarkets by giving the Americans the go-ahead to enter Britain. In his desire to do this, he is said to have offered to relax planning curbs which could let Wal-Mart build huge US-style hypermarkets on greenfield sites in Britain.

Mr. Blair was not alone at the meeting. At his side was his own Mr. Fix-It, personal economics adviser Geoff Norris . . . Mr. Norris was in a bitter row a year ago when he vetoed plans by Deputy Prime Minister John Prescott to curb car use to improve the environment. Mr. Prescott hit out at 'teenyboppers' at No. 10 . . . and said his remarks were aimed at Mr. Norris."

The official line was that it was a courtesy visit. Since when has a Prime Minister received courtesy visits from the bosses of one of the world's biggest companies when it does not even operate in Britain? Are we seriously being asked to believe that there was no discussion about the potential for Wal-Mart to enter this country or the consequences of that?

Clearly, The Sunday Telegraph was also briefed on the subject. It said:

"Earlier this year, Wal-Mart executives"

—[Interruption.] Perhaps Labour Members can tell me who the briefings were from. They were either from Wal-Mart or Asda, or from the Prime Minister's office. Either way, somebody within the industry believes that Wal-Mart was given the green light for those developments.

The article said that Wal-Mart executives

"shared a glass of sherry with Tony Blair at Number 10 Downing Street. They wanted to know whether their company would be welcome in Britain and were warmly received."

—[Interruption.] Labour Members may not like it, but that is what we were told. Perhaps they should ask the Prime Minister's office—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must have silence in the Chamber except from the hon. Member who is speaking.

Mr. Taylor: The article returned to the key issue:

"To achieve real competition, Wal-Mart needs a substantial relaxation in the planning laws to allow it to build its vast stores in favoured locations. The odds on that look long since the environmental lobby is growing ever stronger, but observers still believe that Wal-Mart will get what it wants."

Why else would Wal-Mart be moving into Britain? Its strategy is to achieve profits and growth by building new larger stores to take on and beat the existing ones. Yet Asda, which has very little presence in the south, is in no position to do that unless it can acquire new sites and in a way that the Government claim to be against. There is no logic to the takeover if that cannot be achieved, because Asda has made it clear that it intends to squeeze down the margins as a way of gaining competitive advantage.

Mr. Martlew: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that point?

Mr. Taylor: In a moment.

The Guardian, a paper with a very different political view, said in an article on 16 June:

"The Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry have been keen to open up retail competition. A report last year for the Treasury by consultants McKinsey concluded that planning rules should be relaxed to allow more supermarkets."

The McKinsey report was commissioned by the Treasury and is now part of the competition inquiry into supermarkets that is now taking place. Is it any indication of the direction in which the Government are going?

The article includes a direct quote from an unnamed source at the DTI, which incidentally comes just after a reference to one of the Ministers. It states:

"The DTI source said: 'We want competition. Where there are barriers to competition, we need a good explanation. A particular concern is that national benefits such as lower food prices are properly taken into account, as well as local disbenefits from new developments.'"

As a result of today's debate, Asda has issued a press release stating that it intends to adjust its policies within the current planning requirements. However, Allar Leighton, chief executive of Asda, said this week:

"If we were in the south, prices would be lower. You have got to believe there should be a softening in planning to allow the leading players to develop leading formats."

There in no question about what Asda wants or what Wal-Mart must want. The real question is: Why was it after a meeting with the Prime Minister that Wal-Mart felt able to come in? If we get clarification from the Government on that, today's debate will have served a genuine and useful purpose.

Mr. Martlew: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way. I realise that it is his job to probe the issue and I am sure that the Minister will answer his question. He has mentioned Wal-Mart bringing down prices. Is it Liberal Democrat policy to oppose Wal-Mart's takeover of Asda?

Mr. Taylor: On prices, the hon. Gentleman may not be aware that one reason why the Office of Fair Trading inquiry took place was that my hon. Friend the Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) prepared a report on overpricing in the industry. Those issues, the anti-competitive practices and the bad treatment of suppliers can be addressed without Wal-Mart coming to Britain. If Wal-Mart is coming here on the basis of new development, we are opposed to it. The issue is not whether or not Wal-Mart is involved, but whether there will be new development. However, we must ask why Wal-Mart is coming here given that we know its policy. Why did it buy Asda, which supports the same policy of much bigger retailing units—indeed, it already has plans for 10 hypermarkets—and wishes to move into the south even though the sites are not available? Asda must be looking for new sites—indeed, it has already made that clear. Asda, unlike the other major food retailers, is specifically targeting similar operations to Wal-Mart and plans to move into non-food retailing, which has a greater impact on town centres. All the newspaper reports say the same thing. The information must be coming from somewhere.

Mr. Gray: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Taylor: In a moment.

[Mr. Taylor]

It is obvious where the information is from, as the newspapers make that clear. The Mail on Sunday said:

"An Industry Department source said: 'We must do everything we can to encourage competition. The vital importance of achieving lower food prices must be taken into account alongside environmental arguments involving proposed new developments.' Wal-Mart has made no public comment about wanting to build bigger stores in Britain."

However, Asda has.

It is pretty obvious that The Guardian has it exactly right when it says that there is a struggle with those who believe that the primary issue is lower prices, which can be achieved only by the development of more and bigger supermarkets in tighter competition. That is a perfectly legitimate view, but it is not the view of DETR Ministers or the majority of right hon. and hon. Members. There are other ways to tackle the issue without raping the countryside and our town centres.

Mr. Gray: In an intervention, the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) said that there was no out-of-town supermarket in Harrogate. I am sorry that he is no longer in his place. He has made his intervention, issued his press release and shoved off some place else. Liberal Democrat-controlled Harrogate council gave planning permission to Morrisons and Sainsbury to build supermarkets on green-field sites.

Mr. Beith: Where?

Mr. Gray: Just outside Harrogate. Does the hon. Gentleman believe that Liberal Democrat-controlled Harrogate will give permission for Wal-Mart—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman's intervention is too long.

Mr. Taylor: My colleagues tell me that the hon. Gentleman is inaccurate, but I am not in a position to answer for my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis). The hon. Gentleman can pursue him on another occasion.

I do not know whether those on the Conservative Front Bench support our concerns. I know that the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal, a former Secretary of State for the Environment, strongly supports them and went on the television to say so. We shall find out soon whether there is division among the Conservatives.

I want to quote one last time from the newspapers. The Sunday Telegraph said:

"Given Wal-Mart's relentless attention to detail there is no doubt that it has already drawn up a blueprint for Asda, one that it is reluctant to share with outsiders."

Wal-Mart has refused to comment. The report continued:

"It is almost certain to be based on the vision of transforming Asda into Britain's dominant retail business within the next few years, through a mixture of aggressive store openings and prices low enough to put rivals out of business."

We know that Asda is pursuing that strategy and that Wal-Mart's acquisition makes commercial sense only if it is allowed to do that. We need to know whether the Government are going to stand up to that strategy.

The Government must clarify their policy. On 17 June, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions issued a response to the report in The Guardian. It said:

"This is wrong. The Government has no intention of changing the policy on retail development which is directed to promoting the viability of our town and city centres."

That is reassuring, but the press release goes on to refer only to the sequential approach, and so does not clarify whether it will allow large, out-of-town retail development. The approach says only that the first choice is for in-town development, but, if there are no in-town or edge-of-town sites, the need should be examined. All the evidence is that the debate in the Government about whether the need for greater competition should allow out-of-town developments in the circumstances that I have described or whether they should hold the line is still lively and, at best, undecided.

The McKinsey report recommended a change to give competition priority over the environment. We know that Asda is pursuing those developments. We know that Wal-Mart's acquisition makes sense only on that basis. If the Government want to reassure us, they should stop refusing to say anything on the record about what happened at that meeting. They need to be clearer about what happens after the sequential approach is exhausted and what they believe about need, competition and the development of new and much larger superstores around our towns, cities and smaller country towns. That is the issue. I hope that the House will agree with us, but nothing in the takeover and the Government's response so far holds out any reassurance.

4.52 pm

The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning (Mr. Richard Caborn): I beg to move, To leave out from "House" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof:

welcomes the Government's planning policy on town centres and retail development, which promotes the development of food retailing in existing centres; endorses its attempts to maintain vital, viable competitive town, district and neighbourhood centres, which provide a broad range of retail services accessible to the whole population regardless of whether they have access to a car; welcomes the benefits which supermarkets have brought to consumers; notes the concerns over the level of supermarket profits and approves the investigation of grocery retailing being carried out by the Competition Commission; welcomes the recently agreed re-shaping of the CAP and the establishment of the second pillar of the CAP—an integrated rural development policy; and welcomes the Government's commitment to rural communities, its efforts to increase collaborative marketing among farmers and encourage diversification, and its support for regional, speciality and traditional food producers.

We do not often congratulate an Opposition party on tabling a motion opposing the Government, but I welcome the debate because it gives us an opportunity to set out our position on out-of-town shopping and supermarkets. It is good of the Liberal Democrats to use half their Supply day to give me that opportunity. The hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) gave us one of the best examples that I have heard of a speech based on joined-up press releases and press cuttings. There was not a great deal of new substance to it. I shall try to clarify what has happened over the past 10 days and at some of the recent meetings.

I must make my apologies to the House, because unfortunately—or fortunately—I have a speaking engagement elsewhere and I shall not be here for the vote.

if there is one. I shall deal with the Government's planning policy for supermarkets and my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will deal with the food issues that the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell has raised.

I welcome the opportunity to make the Government's position clear. Soon after we came to office, we published our response to the report of the Environment Committee on shopping centres. We made it clear that we were firmly committed to the objectives of the planning policy guidance note on town centres and retail development—PPG6.

Everyone knows that PPG6 seeks to sustain and enhance the vitality and viability of existing city, town and district centres to make them the focus for retail investment, so as to provide everyone with easy access to a wide range of facilities and services by a choice of means of transport. I remind hon. Members that nearly a third of households still do not have a car. Such investment is essential to the regeneration and enhancement of the attractiveness of our towns and cities.

What does that mean? We want local planning authorities to establish the need—a point raised by the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell—for new retail facilities in their plans, and we want them to apply the sequential approach to identifying sites where this can be accommodated. That should be in existing centres. Developers who propose schemes that do not conform to that will have to demonstrate clearly that there is a need for the scheme.

I refer the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell to a written answer on 11 February, when I cleared up the whole question of need—a point on which the hon. Gentleman dwelt and on which, I think, he accused the Government of being inconsistent. What does "need" mean? In that written answer, I said that, first, would-be developers must demonstrate that need does not mean simply an assertion by the developer that there is a market demand. It means that the local planning authority must consider the wider needs of the community as well as the market demand for a plan before it accepts the development plan. If the local authority is satisfied that a need exists, it must also be satisfied that the sequential test has been applied in selecting the site. Even then—[Interruption.] The hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell said that he wants answers to his questions, so I hope he will do me the courtesy of listening while I give him those answers.

Even then, the local authority must also consider whether there will be an adverse impact on the existing centre before it allows the proposal to go forward. That was a clear definition of the word "need".

Mr. Matthew Taylor: The Minister's comments are helpful. As I said, I believe that the Minister and his team at the Department share my concerns on this. However, can the Minister clarify whether, if it is believed that there will be an adverse impact either on the community or the town centre, that in itself could always be taken as grounds by councillors for refusing permission?

Mr. Caborn: We actually have devolved government and the planning authority is the local authority. Because of certain cases before the courts, we have tried to clarify the word "need". It will be for the local planning authority to make the decisions. If people believe that local authorities have acted outside their rights and responsibilities, there are many mechanisms by which they can be challenged. But we cannot and will not be as prescriptive as to say that everything can be determined from the centre. On the contrary, we believe that devolving government to local authorities is important.

It is difficult in a narrow debate such as this to talk about the wider impact of the planning regime. I think that the hon. Gentleman will accept that, since we came to power, we have looked at modernising land use and transport planning. We have now instituted for the first time at the regional level an examination in public, in an attempt to change planning regimes from being reactive to proactive. The first hearing in public took place in the eastern region. I believe that it has been successful. SERPLAN, the south-east regional planning conference, is going through that process now, and all the regions will go through it this year and the early part of next.

So the context is one of the right to make decisions strategically at the regional level, translating that into the local or unitary development plan, and the planning authority, in turn, translating that. That gives local authorities every opportunity to plan in the most positive way for their communities.

Mr. Taylor: There is nothing in that with which we would disagree. However, the Minister knows that what Ministers say in this House helps to influence what happens, particularly in inspectors' inquiries when they try to interpret the Government's intentions. In the past, councillors have often looked to refuse permission for out-of-town or edge-of-town retail superstores on the basis that they would harm the existing community. However, councillors have not been successful because, while that condition may be taken into account, it is not sufficient in itself.

Is the Minister saying that the policy now is that, if there will be a detrimental impact on an existing town centre, that should be taken as sufficient in itself by an inspector, should it go to appeal, to uphold the refusal by the local council?

Mr. Caborn: I will repeat what I said on 11 February, and I advise the hon. Gentleman to read my response of that date. Following the court case, we believed that the word "need" needed to be clarified, and we did that. If the local authority is satisfied that the need exists, it must be satisfied also that the sequential test has been applied in selecting a site. Even then, it must consider whether there will be an adverse impact on existing centres by allowing the proposal.

All that we can do is to give that type of guidance. When we do that, it can be cited in courts and at the various planning inquiries. Coupling that with what we are trying to do to bring more certainty to the planning system through other actions will mean that local planning authorities will be able to carry through their plans for their communities.

As I was saying, developers will have to demonstrate that there is a need for their scheme; that they could not find a more central site; and that there would be no significant impact on existing centres. I want to reaffirm that that is still our policy and that we have no plans to change it. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has confirmed that.

[Mr. Caborn]

Let me put the record straight about the rumours concerning my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's meeting with Wal-Mart. My right hon. Friend has put it on record that he has given no assurances to Wal-Mart about relaxing planning policy. Indeed, planning issues were not discussed.

I am pleased to say that our policy has widespread support in this House, from the general public and within the industry. However, there are some exceptions. For example, Asda's chief executive is reported to have told the BBC's "The Money Programme" that the only way forward is to loosen planning restrictions.

It is interesting to note that the Asda chairman, the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Mr. Norman), told the House as recently as 3 February 1999 that "it is important to recognise that the supermarket industry has, for the most part, welcomed the tightening of the planning restrictions, which is good for the industry and for the community." [Official Report, 3 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 1030.]

I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman maintains that view when he has been so publicly associated with the takeover proposal by Wal-Mart.

I picked up a copy of an Asda press release when I came to the House. It says:

"Following today's report in the Financial Times Asda wishes to clarify that following the proposed acquisition by Wal-Mart, it plans to continue to trade in the UK under the Asda banner.

We will continue to back British farmers, favour small British suppliers and crusade for value for British consumers.

It will remain Asda's policy to adapt its store development plans to meet the intention and spirit of today's planning regulations and to work closely with local communities to meet local environmental and transport needs.

As far as Asda is concerned, rumours to the effect that there has been any understanding, formal or informal, with the Government on relaxation of planning requirements are complete nonsense."

Asda is all over the shop, with its chief executive saying one thing and its chairman saying another. However, we welcome that statement.

We are determined to maintain a firm and consistent application of the policy. That is more important than scoring a few points about press releases, and would be expected of us by all the stakeholders. Indeed, in the past two years we have clarified and tightened up the policy in PPG6, closing some loopholes; we have called in a large number of applications to ensure the consistent application of the policy; we have refused a high proportion of appeal and call-in cases, allowing only those in or on the edge of town centres; and we have successfully defended our policy in the courts.

I would characterise our policy stance on supermarkets as tough but fair. We have tried to keep the policy up to date; to ensure that it is applied firmly and consistently, without fear or favour; and to ensure a level playing field for all players in the industry. All the letters that we have received support our policy. Nobody from whom the Department has received representations wants us to relax it. Everyone wants to be reassured that we will maintain and uphold the policy, and I give the assurance that we will.

Mr. Brian Cotter (Weston-super-Mare): The Minister talked about a fair policy on supermarkets. What about business rates, which cost supermarkets only 5 per cent. of their turnover, whereas small shops pay anything from 12 to 15 per cent? That is not exactly fair.

Mr. Caborn: We are prepared to debate anything that the Opposition table in a motion, but I was not asked to respond on that subject today.

We inherited a situation in which the number of superstores had increased nearly tenfold since 1980. Very many of them were built outside existing centres, and there were still out-of-town stores coming off the production line when we came to power. The legacy of the previous Government was a deluge of out-of-town stores. They left a trail of disaster and absolutely let the market rip. A combination of permissive planning policy and a property boom in the late 1980s meant that half the current out-of-town retail floor space was built in only five years, from 1986 to 1991. Another boom following the recession of the early 1990s brought another surge of out-of-town development. The situation was totally unmanageable.

Mr. Gray: Does the Minister agree that there was a significant change in policy at about the time when my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), for whom I worked as a special adviser in the Department of the Environment, entered that Department? From then on, there was a significant shift in the number of permissions given for out-of-town centres. Does he agree that some tribute should be paid to the previous Government?

Mr. Caborn: I have acknowledged on many occasions that the previous Government introduced PPG6, and we welcome that, but that does not alter the fact that they were responsible for the massive expansion of out-of-town shopping in such a short period that has done so much damage to our town and city centres. We are only now beginning to reap the benefit of the change in policy to which the hon. Gentleman referred and, in the meantime, the boom has had a devastating effect on many of our local centres. It has been a very damaging and wasteful process, effectively playing Russian roulette with the future of our towns and communities. It is a process that we cannot afford to repeat. We will not do so, which is why this debate is very timely indeed.

We are determined to take a tough line. We realise that we must capture new retail investment for our town and city centres. We must ensure that supermarkets are developed in existing centres, to help to make them attractive and competitive. That is particularly true of smaller towns and district centres where we need to have stores of the right size.

Our independent research, conducted by Hillier Parker, on the impact of large stores on market towns and district centres showed that locating stores outside such centres can be very damaging. It showed that large food stores outside towns or district centres have in some cases cut the market share of the principal food retailers in such centres by up to 50 per cent.

As the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell will be only too aware, the opening of superstores on the edge of town in many areas in the south-west has had a devastating effect on the town centres. Penzance, Helston and Falmouth illustrate that all too well. Small towns in East Anglia and small centres in our larger towns show similar results.

The research provides strong support for the tough line we are taking, and we need to capture that "inward investment" to revitalise our town centres. We cannot afford to allow new out-of-town schemes that undermine rather than reinforce the vitality and viability of existing centres.

If we are to regenerate our town, district and local centres, we will have to adopt a positive, plan-led approach. Our policy advice urges local planning authorities to adopt a much more proactive approach to the task. For example, they should say where new retail development is needed, and where it will be encouraged, and identify sites and, if need be, help to assemble those sites. We need to capture new investment for town centres. That means taking a positive approach to planning for new food stores, to help to bring about our wider aim of an urban renaissance, and using them to anchor the regeneration of district and local centres.

There are some encouraging signs that the message is getting through. Some companies have developed new formats, such as the Tesco Metro and Sainsbury's Local. The convenience store could be the format of the future for our local communities. Our retail policy is all part of our strategy for bringing about an urban renaissance.

Lord Rogers, who has headed the urban task force, will present his report and recommendations to the Government next week. We hope that his report will form the basis of the urban White Paper—and the rural White Paper—that we will publish later this year. Those White Papers will address the wider issues. The subject of our debate today will form part of that urban renaissance and should be seen in that context. If we are to make our towns and cities, and our local neighbourhoods, places where people choose to live, then we must make sure that we can offer them the quality of life that we all expect for ourselves.

Mr. Hilton Dawson (Lancaster and Wyre): Does my right hon. Friend agree that, in pursuing the worthy objective of an urban renaissance, we should encourage distinctive urban centres, so that we do not end up with the uniformity of development that we have seen in the past? We should celebrate diversity and regional and local differences in our town centres.

Mr. Caborn: I could not agree more, and that is what we are trying to do. We are trying to change the whole concept of the planning regimes in this country and we want local authorities to be proactive, not reactive. Many initiatives are emerging in our city and town centres. I recently visited Manchester to open some flats that had been developed from an old broken-down warehouse. All those flats had been sold before the conversion had taken place. When designers and architects use their imagination, there is a market for the result. If professional people can be persuaded to stay in towns and cities, their disposable income starts to have an effect on the type of restaurants and shops in the area, and a virtuous circle develops.

We also want to develop the individual character of our towns and cities. We have some beautiful cities that can be said to be European, and there is no reason why we cannot develop some of those cities, as has been done in Barcelona. Shops and supermarkets are beginning to accept their responsibilities as part of the urban renaissance. That approach to planning and investment in the inner cities has brought out creative talent instead of letting the market rip, which produced the situation that we inherited. Even the Conservatives accepted that before they left office, and introduced PPG6, which we welcomed.

The new approach to regenerating smaller centres and building them up to meet a wide range of everyday needs is part of our approach to tackling social exclusion. We want to ensure that everyone has good access to shops, especially food shops, and that will often mean ensuring that appropriately sized supermarkets are opened in local centres.

Our objective is to promote competitive and vibrant town centres. We want retailers to compete on the same terms in the same market place: the town centre. The planning system provides a level playing field for all players, regardless of size or ownership. We are not trying to protect one firm against competition from another. Our policy is fair, clear and consistent with our overarching aim of revitalising our towns and cities. We intend to keep it that way.

5.15 pm

Mr. Nick Gibb (Bognor Regis and Littlehampton): This is an important debate. A number of concerns have arisen in recent years about the food retailing industry. The growth of large supermarkets in out-of-town locations has been a fact of life for 20 or 25 years, and has taken place in Europe and the United States as well as in the United Kingdom.

The reasons for that growth are many, but unclear. They include social changes: people lead increasingly busy and demanding lives, and want to do their shopping in one trip once a week, at stores with easy parking. Other factors include increased pedestrianisation in many town centres, and the success of supermarkets in improving quality, choice and variety and in bringing down prices.

The motion tabled by the Liberal Democrats mentions

"the rapid expansion of out-of-town superstores under the Conservatives"

Like the Minister's speech, that is a facile and juvenile approach to a complex issue. It does no credit to the Liberal Democrats, or to the Minister. However, although it was one-sided and simplistic, the Minister's speech was slightly less polemical than the motion and will contradict many speeches made by Liberal Democrats in constituencies around the country.

The growth of out-of-town supermarkets has had a damaging effect on smaller retailers and town centres, as I know only too well from what has happened in Bognor Regis and Littlehampton. Moreover, despite the gains in efficiency and economies of scale that supermarkets achieve, the prices that they charge are considerably higher than in similar enterprises in the United States. An effective campaign has been run by The Sunday Times to expose such price differentials.

There may be many reasons for those differentials, as no doubt the Competition Commission will report. Transport costs are higher in this country, especially after the Government's huge hike in diesel prices. [Interruption.] In total, the Government have increased the escalator from 5 to 6 per cent., and there has been more than one increase in any given year. The result is that diesel prices are 21 per cent. higher than when the Government came to power. The escalator is higher and faster than it used to be. It should be ended, because it is making the problems worse.

[Mr. Nick Gibb]

Mr. Martlew: If the cost of DERV has gone up so much, why have supermarket prices risen by only 1.5 per cent. since the Government came into power?

Mr. Gibb: One cannot have one's cake and eat it too. Either there is a problem, or there is not. In this case, there is a problem. One of the key contributors to it is the high price of diesel, as we shall see when the commission reports.

The second problem is the price of land. We live in a crowded island where planning guidance is very strict, for worthwhile reasons. The result of the two problems that I have set out—high prices for diesel and for land—is that the prices charged by the supermarkets are also high. A more important factor still is the absence of fierce competition between the large, multiple retailers.

The third element that needs to be highlighted is that the British farmers who supply supermarkets do not receive a fair price for their produce. That is especially apparent in the fact that falling livestock prices have not been passed on to the consumer. The price of pork provides a stark example. There has been a catastrophic fall in pig prices over the past couple of years.

Dr. Howard Stoate (Dartford): The hon. Gentleman makes a valid point about farm prices. A farmer in my constituency tells me that the price of his cabbages has not gone up for seven years. He receives 15p a cabbage now, and he got 15p a cabbage then. Supermarkets put their prices up year after year, so why is the poor old farmer receiving exactly the same price he was paid all that time ago?

Mr. Gibb: The hon. Gentleman makes a fair point, although I am keen to get away from the consensus that appears to be developing.

Lack of competition among supermarkets affects consumers, but it affects suppliers too. There is concern that the supermarkets have almost monopsonistic purchasing power over their suppliers, and that that position is being abused. Supermarkets set high environmental, hygiene and quality standards for farmers and suppliers, and strict employee welfare conditions are required; yet, if the price or quality is better overseas, they are happy to switch to suppliers who do not enforce those conditions.

The environment is my fourth concern. It is suggested that out-of-town developments eat up the fast-diminishing stock of our countryside and that more such shopping means more car journeys.

All four of those concerns are real. The multiples supplied 86 per cent. of the United Kingdom grocery market in 1998, and are expected to account for 32.5 per cent. of all UK retail sales by 2004. However, the issues are also complex—no simple answers exist. Competing and contradictory interest groups represent concerns on either side of the argument.

It is all very well for Liberal Democrats Members to represent one set of interests in the House while Liberal Democrats locally represent different interest groups with contradictory policies, but the official Opposition, like the Government, require a joined-up policy. Commentators on these matters—the Liberal Democrats in particular—suffer from a lack of intellectual honesty or consistency that verges on the hypocritical. On the one hand, they are concerned that prices charged by supermarkets are too high in comparison with those of Europe and the United States; on the other, any suggestion that a new entrant to the market might force prices down raises concern about damage to town centres and smaller retailers.

If the supermarkets charge prices that do not drive out smaller stores, they will make larger profits which the Labour Government will deem too great. If they cut their prices, they will be accused of being predators. We need a balanced approach to enable competition to flourish, to allow the economies of scale enjoyed by the supermarkets to be passed on to the consumer and to enable farmers to be paid a decent price for their produce. We also need policies that enable our town centres to maintain a critical mass of viable shops and that protect an ever-dwindling stock of unspoilt countryside.

There are two pairs of competing policy objectives. One pair—lower prices for consumers and better rewards for farmers—benefits from greater competition. The other pair—protection of our town centres and rural areas—may be harmed by competition. How can the different political parties handle that dilemma? Labour, with its deep-rooted misunderstanding of capitalism and the free market, is subjecting the supermarkets to a battering because of what the Government regard as unacceptable profits. A commission, taking evidence in public, will judge the supermarket industry's profits, effectively returning us to the prices and incomes policies of the 1970s and sending the industry a signal not to be too profitable, innovative or efficient.

Meanwhile, Labour also let it be known that deals can be done behind the scenes to assist particular companies. A sherry party will be held for Wal-Mart, or a meeting with Formula One. That must never become the way in which the British Government do, or are seen to do, business. The Minister says that no planning guarantees were given and that planning was not even discussed at that meeting, but the mystery still remains. If planning was not discussed, what was discussed? As the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) says, such meetings are unusual. In order to set minds at rest, will the Minister set out precisely what was discussed at the meeting? Only if he does that can we be sure that the Prime Minister is not just hiding behind careful words.

Mr. Dawson: Will the hon. Gentleman please take this comment from me with the seriousness with which I make it? It is galling and hugely irritating to sit across from him and hear a lecture about trivial issues. My experience of the city of Lancaster is that the Conservative Government wreaked absolute havoc. That is a situation from which we are desperately struggling to recover. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will address the serious issues rather than nonsense about sherry parties.

Mr. Gibb: The hon. Gentleman does me an injustice. I have said that this is not the simplistic debate that the Liberal spokesman tried to present it as. There are competing concerns. Consumers want low prices and choice in supermarkets. Delivering that often means damage to the environment from the construction of out-of-town shopping centres. The competition provided by the supermarkets damages small retailers in the town centres. It is a question of balance. There is not a simple answer.

Mr. Caborn: Will the hon. Gentleman explain to the House why out-of-town food shopping increased by 50 per cent. in five years but we still have high prices in the supermarkets? The policy of the free market was given a fair wind. The market was let rip. Planning was ripped up. We allowed the supermarkets to do exactly what they wanted, yet we still had higher prices than on the continent when the Conservatives left office.

Mr. Gibb: It is worrying when Ministers have such a simplistic understanding. The Minister is confusing the comparison between prices in large out-of-town supermarkets in Europe and America and in Britain with the comparison between prices in out-of-town supermarkets and prices in town centres. If supermarkets had not been allowed to develop, there would not have been the huge falls in prices that have occurred in the past 20 to 25 years. That is a fact. [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] Yes it is. Everyone knows that supermarkets have delivered lower prices and greater choice. That is their great attraction. That is why they make money and why they have displaced many of our independent smaller retailers in town centres. People do not go to out-of-town shopping centres to pay higher prices. The question is whether the falls in prices that the supermarkets have delivered are big enough. Have prices fallen sufficiently, compared to Europe and the United States? The Minister should understand that question.

Mr. Gray: Perhaps I can take my hon. Friend back to the famous sherry party at No. 10 Downing street. He will know that there are only two kinds of meeting in Government circles. One is an official meeting at which civil servants take minutes, and the other is a political meeting at which difficult political decisions are taken, no civil servants are present and there are no minutes. It might be interesting to know whether the meeting was political or non-political. If it was official, why can we not see a copy of the minutes?

Mr. Gibb: My hon. Friend makes a valid point. The problem is that we are prising from the Government the truth about the meeting on a piecemeal basis—a briefing to the press, a statement in a debate on a Liberal Opposition day. We need a categorical statement of precisely what happened. It would be better if it were delivered by the Prime Minister himself in this Chamber but, if we cannot have that, will the Minister say what precisely was discussed at the meeting and whether it was official and minutes were taken? If minutes were taken, can they be published?

Mr. Matthew Taylor: We will not disagree on the last point, but will the hon. Gentleman clarify whether he prefers maintenance of the town centres and the environment to developing competition? He said that it was a complex issue and that there was a balance to be struck. Asda, or at least someone in Asda, has argued that it could cut prices if it were allowed to develop superstores in competition with local monopolies in the south. Is it Conservative policy to protect the town centre and the environment and say no, or to say that competition to reduce prices is the priority so such developments should be allowed?

Mr. Gibb: Our policy is clearly set out in planning policy guidance 6. It is to help small business. That was our policy, and it remains our policy. The Liberal Democrats try to resolve the policy dilemma that I set out in their time-honoured fashion by saying one thing to one constituency and the opposite to another. They tell consumer groups that they want more competition to reduce prices, and the rural lobby that they want fewer supermarkets and less competition. They tell environmentalists that they oppose new supermarket developments, but to consumers in Yeovil the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) will say nothing against a new supermarket development. That is Liberal policy in a nutshell.

Mr. McNulty: Can the hon. Gentleman say whether that will remain his policy? I ask only because he said of another policy:

> "We believe that we are right in our view, but we may not be. We are not arrogant, and if we are proved to be categorically wrong, we shall change our policy. It is irrelevant whether one person in society believes that we are wrong. What matters is whether we are wrong." [Official Report, Standing Committee B, 17 June 1999; c. 659.]

Will the policy change? Do those remarks represent the thrust of his policy formulation?

Mr. Gibb: We are not an arrogant party. We have a firm view about the euro, if I may digress. Our position at the next general election is that we will not take Britain into the single currency. Our policy for the general election after that will be decided nearer the time. That is a sensible, pragmatic approach to policy.

Neither the Labour nor the Liberal approach is acceptable in dealing with these difficult issues. Our approach, as it was in government, is one of balance. We want more competition to bring down prices and increase choice, and so that supermarkets have to compete with one another in their relationships with suppliers and farmers. However, as Conservatives, we understand that we live on a small and crowded island and that ever-more building and development are not sustainable ad infinitum. That is why the previous Government introduced PPG6 to slow the growth of out-of-town shopping development and ease pressure on the environment and town centres. That should remain the policy of the British Government, with no added codicils of ex-statutory, intramural deals for favoured companies. That balance is the right approach. I hope that no one will take any notice of the Liberal Democrats, whose disingenuous approach lacks integrity and damages the body politic as much as it damages them.

5.33 pm

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): I have been a critic of supermarkets for 10 years. On 9 December, I laid out my reasons in a poorly attended Adjournment debate. The hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) confused me because he seemed to say that we should not refer the problem of price rigging in supermarkets to what is now called the Competition Commission because that would interfere with the free market. However, we have a cartel of the four biggest supermarkets and his Government were to blame for that situation. One of the heads of the cartel is a Conservative Member, so we can understand why the Conservatives do not want the supermarkets to be examined by the Competition Commission. If I am wrong, he can intervene.

[Mr. Eric Martlew]

The growth in the power of the supermarkets has come at the expense of everyone else. We have heard the argument about small shops, which is difficult. My constituency had the sense to ensure that its centre was in a good state of repair before the out-of-town supermarkets came on the scene, so we still have a thriving city centre. That did not happen in some cities.

The British public love the supermarket—let us not kid ourselves about that; that is why I asked the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) whether the Liberals were in favour of supermarkets. One has only to go round supermarkets to see that people look on going to supermarkets as a day out. That is not my view, although I do go to supermarkets. Indeed, on Sunday, I shall be opening the celebrations for the 100th anniversary of Morrisons at my local store in Carlisle—unless of course the staff read this speech. The reality is that the British public like supermarkets and politicians have to accept that. The Government's planning policies are strong enough to preserve what is left of our city centres, although devastation has taken place, as my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) pointed out.

Some of the information that is sent to Members of Parliament worries me. In March, we all received a briefing from the British Retail Consortium; it was called "Supermarkets' Prices and Profits—Myth and Reality", but most of it was myth. We were asked to phone the consortium if we had any queries. I pointed out that some of the figures in the briefing on competition with continental supermarkets were not quite right, because there is no VAT on food in the United Kingdom, but there is in France, Germany or wherever. I asked for some figures. The reply was, "Yes, of course." I waited for three months until June and rang the consortium again to ask for the figures, but was told, "We are very sorry, we don't have the resources." The British Retail Consortium does not have the resources to provide my answer. I was told that I should get my civil servants to find the information.

I pay credit to The Sunday Times for its work on supermarkets, and for exposing the fact that we are paying too much for our food. The idea that, if supermarkets charged less, the farmers would be paid less is nonsense. Supermarkets push down payments to suppliers as far as they can to increase their profits. Supermarket profits are extremely high, so I have no fear that the supplier would be paid less.

Dr. Stoate: Not only do purchasers force down prices, but they have told farmers in my constituency that, if they do not like the prices that they are offered, the purchasers will buy produce from abroad. They do not care about the deprivation and difficulty caused by their forcing down of farm prices for my constituents.

Mr. Martlew: I can give another example. Ten years ago, 68 per cent. of the price of a pint of milk in the supermarket—now it would probably be a litre—went to the farmer. Today, it is only 56 per cent. and the price has probably dropped in real terms. Supermarkets are screwing the suppliers and taking advantage of a monopoly.

Mr. Andrew Love (Edmonton): They are screwing the consumers.

Mr. Martlew: As my hon. Friend says, they are screwing the consumer as well. Considering how much the average family spends in supermarkets, if we can get supermarket pricing policy right, it would be the equivalent of a penny or tuppence off income tax. We should be doing that.

Mr. Gray: If the hon. Gentleman feels that way about milk marketing, why has his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry taken so long to release the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Milk Marque?

Mr. Martlew: I was one of those Members of Parliament who opposed the breaking up of the milk marketing boards under the Conservative Government. That Government are to blame for the current situation.

Wal-Mart concerns me. It may be necessary to bring in someone from abroad to break up the cartel, but I have worries about Wal-Mart. It has more than 2,000 stores in America; not one of them is unionised. In fact, some people have been sacked because they tried to form trade unions. I understand that Wal-Mart went to the courts in America to ask for exemption from the minimum wage. I am sure that, in his reply to the debate, my hon. Friend the Minister of State will tell us that, if the company were to try to do that in this country, the Government would not accept it.

Asda is part of the cartel, but it has a good record with its employees. I hope that, in the event of a takeover, Wal-Mart will maintain that good relationship, retain the terms and conditions of the work force and continue to co-operate with the GMB—I know that the union is prepared to work with Wal-Mart. We will not tolerate in this country the sorts of practices that Wal-Mart has followed in the United States.

There is a major problem with supermarkets that Parliament has not yet addressed. Many of our constituents use supermarkets and they are being exploited. We must break the cartel because, if we do not, it will continue to advance. It is not a question of allowing the supermarkets to have a particular market share; if we do not put the brakes on, we will find that, in four or five years, the growth in supermarkets will have continued, competition will be less and the suppliers and the public will be worse off.

5.41 pm

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): I am pleased to participate in this important debate. The Liberal Democrat tradition in Supply day debates is to choose the least significant subject imaginable in which no one else is even slightly interested. However, the issue of supermarkets, the food in supermarkets and the future of food retailing is centrally important to us all.

Regardless of what one may say about town centres, village shops and the detrimental effects of the supermarket revolution, the truth is that we all use supermarkets. I challenge hon. Members who are present in the Chamber to say that they do not visit supermarkets—or perhaps it is a wife, a husband or a servant in some cases. [Interruption.] There is not a single person in this nation who does not use supermarkets.

For example, 88,000 people in the town of Chippenham go through supermarket checkouts every month—and Chippenham has a population of 30,000. It has three supermarkets, yet 88,000 people visit Safeway alone. Sainsbury and Somerfield presumably have a similar number of customers. [Interruption.] I am glad that I have been able to give the rather dull faces on the Government Benches a little innocent amusement. In order to set the record straight, I make it absolutely clear that I shop at Safeway and Sainsbury in my constituency.

Mr. Drew: Not your servant.

Mr. Gray: That is precisely my point.

When it comes to environmental issues—the same argument applies to supermarkets as to the use and building of motorways, the cost of road building and traffic congestion—the more self-righteous among us, whom we often find come from the Liberal Democrat Benches, love to claim the moral high ground. They say, "We believe in village shops and we believe in preserving the high street. We decry what has happened with regard to supermarkets across the nation, we decry the motorways that allow people to get to the supermarkets and the construction of parking facilities. We are into bicycles, bobble hats and high streets." The truth is that the Liberal Democrats use supermarkets as much as the rest of us, and they use motorways to get there just like we do. Pretending that, somehow or other, they are cleaner than clean and that we are the bad guys for using those facilities demonstrates how two-faced the Liberal Democrats are.

The truth is that hon. Members on both sides of the House are absolutely determined to do what we can to support our rural areas and village shops—and they are thriving in every village in my constituency that has them. The communities are vibrant and living, and villages that have lost their small shops are poorer as a result. We are all determined to do what we can to support the high streets—or what is left of them. We are doing an enormous amount in Malmesbury in my constituency to ensure that the vibrant high street remains. It would be foolish to suggest that any Member of Parliament from any political party is not committed to that useful aim.

However, that does not mean—as several luddite speeches have suggested—that supermarket shopping is somehow a bad thing. It plainly is not, and the people who voted for us use supermarkets an enormous amount.

As we heard earlier, 86 per cent. of all food shopping is done in supermarkets. The average weekly shop in the United Kingdom is six supermarket bags weighing 84 lb. That represents a significant change in the way in which we run our lives, and to try to ignore it or to argue that it is a bad thing gives the wrong impression to those who will read our debate later.

Mr. Gibb: Does my hon. Friend think it odd that the leader of the Liberal party did not oppose the development of a supermarket in his constituency on a site that was of particular interest because it was mentioned in a Thomas Hardy book, yet his spokesman in the Chamber today is antagonistic to all supermarket development?

Mr. Gray: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He points out a curious anomaly in the attitudes of Liberal Democrats across the nation. Earlier, I had occasion to mention the fact that it was Liberal Democrat district councils that allowed superstore developments. The Liberal Democrats are proud of how many district councils they control, and those are the very councils—for example, in my constituency—that allow out-of-town shopping centres, but at the same time give lip service to supporting the high street.

It is interesting to note that although in Newbury the Liberal Democrat district council turned down the application by Vodafone, the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) apparently supports it. The Liberal Democrats are all over the place.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I should like to place it on record that not only do I not wear a bobble hat, but the Liberal Democrat-controlled council in my constituency has opposed two major supermarket developments recently because of worries about damage to Richmond town centre. One of those applications was won on appeal—the Government opposed the council's decision.

Mr. Gray: I apologise, of course, if I slurred the hon. Lady by suggesting that she might wear a bobble hat, a smock or open-toed sandals. I am happy to accept her assurance that she wears none of those things.

The hon. Lady was not in the Chamber earlier when we spoke about Harrogate. The hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis), from her own Benches, denied that an out-of-town shopping centre had been built on a green-field site in Harrogate. Liberal Democrat-controlled Harrogate district council gave planning permission for a Sainsbury supermarket in Rippon and a Morrisons superstore on a green-field site in Harrogate.

In Chippenham, the Liberal Democrat-controlled district council gave planning permission for a Sainsbury and a Safeway. There was no question of going to appeal or of turning down the application and leaving it to the Secretary of State to allow it; the district council was delighted and welcomed the development. However, the Liberal Democrat spokesman in the Chamber bad-mouths supermarkets as though we all hate them. That is not the truth.

The opening remarks from the Liberal Democrats went no way at all to addressing the problems that our town centres face. My experience in my area is that Liberal Democrat policies are responsible for killing off town centres. For example, just outside my constituency in Bath, the Liberal Democrats have introduced sky-high parking charges, which have led directly to a 7 per cent. slump in trade in Bath. That is an example of Liberal Democrat concern for our town centres.

[Mr. Gray]

In Chippenham, a small market town with a few town-centre shops, we have free parking for an hour. I welcome that, as it brings people in from the countryside to shop in the high street. The Liberal Democrats apparently propose to introduce parking charges in Chippenham and suggest that we might have a park-and-ride scheme in a town of 30,000 people. It is all very self-righteous, politically correct Liberal Democratism, but it will kill the high street in Chippenham. I challenge them to say what they would do to support the high streets.

This is an important debate, but so far it has not been characterised by a real desire to address the problems facing us in planning, transport and the other issues associated with supermarkets. The debate has been characterised by attempts to achieve the moral high ground and in a luddite way to express dislike of supermarkets. The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, who is sadly not in his place any more, made some outspoken remarks against supermarkets. I should be interested to know, when the Minister of State, Agriculture, Fisheries and Food winds up, whether he uses a supermarket, whether it is an out-of-town supermarket and how he gets there. I would lay pretty good money that he or his wife do use a supermarket. The important thing is not to make party political points, but to deal with the marked change in taste that has occurred across the nation over the past 20 years or so.

When I was a child growing up in Scotland, my mother went down the high street with her shopping bag. She went into two or three different retailers and bought a loaf here and a lump of meat there. My grandfather was a butcher in Coatbridge: he was a small retailer and people went to his shop to buy meat. They do not do so today. They go to the supermarket and buy their 80 lb of shopping in six bags.

We must address these issues, and central to them is the subject of transport. It is not just a question of where to put supermarkets. I suspect that the market is nearing saturation point because of the large number that were built when we were in power – saturation may not be the right word. Most towns are served by supermarkets. A bigger issue is transport. The average customer at Tesco picks up six bags weighing 80 lbs. The only way in which people can shop at a supermarket is by motor car. It is nonsense to suggest that they go by bicycle, as Liberal Democrats would, or by bus.

My constituents who shop in Safeway and Sainsbury all use the car—or have done so up to now. It is apparently the Government's policy to make it more and more difficult for my rural constituents to use their car to go to the supermarket. They have put up petrol prices, which have gone through the roof. More than anyone else, that affects the less well off, the low-wage earners in rural areas, old people and the disabled. The Government are now talking about congestion charging. That would be helpful for a fat cat or a two-Jag Prescott, who would not mind congestion charging because such people could afford the £5 a day to get into central London. However, it would matter to an old person in my constituency who has to get to the supermarket.

Incidentally, I do not know why we need congestion charging if new Labour VIPs are allowed to use bus lanes to get into the city in their Jaguars. That is what road charging and doing away with supermarkets is all about – getting other people off the road so that they can drive quickly through, as the Prime Minister did the other day in the bus lane on the M4. That is the truth about these people who pay lip service to environmental benefits. They want to continue their way of life and what they are doing, and do not want other people to get in the way while they do it.

We are told that the congestion charge may be £5 a day in London, and £1,000 a year for workplace parking in London. A fat cat in a Jaguar will be happy to pay £5 a day to get the plebs off the road and £1,000 a year for parking, but people on a low wage living in my constituency need their cars to get to the supermarket.

Most of the debate has ignored the realities of modern life in modern Britain, which requires people to use their motor cars to get to the supermarket. We have also failed to recognise the good bits about supermarkets. Almost everyone who has spoken has had a go at supermarkets. They suggest that they are bad and that they are pariahs. They say that they are awful, that they do not like them and that they like high streets. Of course we like high streets, but there is a huge amount that is good about supermarkets, such as the quality and choice of food. We demand strawberries on Christmas day and exotic fruits from the tropics not as a special treat, but as an everyday part of modern living. We buy pre-packed salads—we do not wash lettuce any more. We demand high-quality food in beautiful condition.

Mr. Love: I have listened carefully to the hon. Gentleman's speech in support of supermarkets. What attitude will he strike when the next application for the development of a supermarket in his constituency comes along and his constituents are opposed to it?

Mr. Gray: The hon. Gentleman brings me on to my next point, which addresses that question. In the past 20 or so years, the number of out-of-town supermarkets has significantly increased. I welcome that to a large degree, because they have brought in their wake a great many other benefits, such as new roads, new housing and new schools. However, we are now nearing the point at which we have the right number of supermarkets supplying the right number of people.

In the town of Malmesbury in my constituency, a site is available on which Tesco is trying to get permission to build a new supermarket. Malmesbury is five miles from Chippenham, which already has two gigantic superstores, and three miles from Tetbury. There is a huge Tesco store just outside Tetbury. The people of Malmesbury, where there is a vibrant high street, would be much better off without a new supermarket. [Laughter.] I do not know why Liberal Democrats find that funny. I am simply saying that my constituency has a worthwhile supply of supermarkets. My constituents use them, but we do not want any more, because of the environmental damage that would be caused and also because, if we allowed too much competition, at least one of the supermarkets involved would probably go out of business. We would then face the problem of what to do with the site.

So far, this has been a one-sided debate. The planning issue should be about balance. It should be about supplying what all our constituents want, while also preserving the countryside, preserving the high street and preserving the village store. The careful and subtle balance contained in planning policy guidance note 6, introduced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) when I was a special adviser to him, is precisely what we want in planning terms.

We want to supply the British people with the shopping experience that they now want. Incidentally, I heard on the radio this morning that there is talk of shoppers' actually paying to go shopping. My instinct would be to pay not to have to go shopping, but apparently that is the shopping experience that people want. On the one hand, we must give people what they want and need; on the other hand, we must have a balanced planning policy that protects our environment, saves our high streets and preserves our village stores.

I welcome what my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal did with PPG6. I also welcome the assurance that the Government have given today and in earlier debates that they will continue the carefully balanced policy introduced by my right hon. Friend in considering future supermarket developments.

5.57 pm

Mr. David Lepper (Brighton, Pavilion): I welcome the Liberal Democrats' choice of subject. Let me say at the outset that I have absolutely no interest in knocking the Liberal Democrats. In my constituency, Labour came first in the European elections; the Liberal Democrats came fourth, just about managing to beat the United Kingdom Independence party. I am afraid that any of my colleagues who are expecting to hear criticism of the Liberal Democrats should wait to hear another speaker.

In the past, I have hesitated to speak in debates on planning issues. Until last month, my wife chaired the Brighton and Hove council planning committee, and I thought it wise for just one member of the family to speak on such issues. My wife has now taken another role locally, and I am freed from that constraint.

It is certainly time that the Competition Commission investigated the whole question of grocery retailing and supermarket prices. We need an investigation, and I think that we need international league tables as well. Such tables would show us how much goods bought in this country would cost us in similar stores around the world, and would demonstrate the extent to which British shoppers are or are not being ripped off.

Having said that, let me make it clear that I do not wish to criticise either Liberal Democrats or supermarkets. In an intervention, my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) made an important point about the need to distinguish between supermarkets and superstores.

The motion, the Government amendment and, indeed, comments that we have heard from Conservative Members today have a common theme: the need to ensure that development policies are consistent, especially in regard to out-of-town development. I welcome the assurance that the Minister gave me in reply to a question—last November, I think—that he had no plans to revise PPG 6 on town centres and retail development, and I welcome the further assurance that we have been given this afternoon. I was therefore surprised at the story published recently by The Guardian about relaxation of the rules. Until I heard the speech by the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor), with its patchwork of press cuttings, I had—in my ignorance—no idea of the extent to which the story had permeated. None the less, the story in The Guardian surprised me, although it should not have done. From the reassurances that we have been given today, the story proves to have been yet another of The Guardian's own-goals in stirring up tales of U-turns by the Government.

I have the honour of being chairman of the all-party group on town centre management issues. The group has more than 200 members, comprised of Members of this place and of the other place, and of all political parties. In membership numbers, it is rivalled only by the parliamentary beer group—as we now have to call it, rather than beer club.

The support enjoyed by the all-party group on town centre management demonstrates the genuine concern felt by hon. Members on both sides of the House about the future of our town centres, not only as places in which to shop and work, but in which to live and enjoy our leisure time. Moreover, the concern is not only for major cities or conurbations—such as Brighton and Hove, part of which I represent, with a population of a quarter of a million people—but about our smaller market towns.

I therefore welcome the initiative taken by my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley)—who is not in the Chamber—which led to a recent report by the urban and economic development group on revitalising four small towns in his Shropshire constituency. I am sure that there are other examples of hon. Members, on both sides of the House, taking similar initiatives.

As the Minister said, next week, Lord Rogers will unveil the urban task force's report on regenerating our town and city centres. I am sure that we all eagerly await the report, to see what ideas it has on reversing the drift to the suburbs, to the edges of towns, and on to green-field sites—which, unfortunately, characterises so much of what happened, in the 1980s, under the previous Government.

I do not know what Lord Rogers's report will say about those issues, but know that, earlier this year, his summary of responses to the urban task force's prospectus stated:

"a number of respondents agreed with the House of Commons Environment Select Committee proposals for sequential tests, where developers are required to demonstrate that they have exhaustively examined the possibilities of developing any available brownfield land before being allowed to go ahead with greenfield development."

I hope that all of us will endorse that position, on which the Minister has given us reassurances.

Mr. McNulty: Does my hon. Friend agree that the attempt to rubbish the sequential test in PPG 6 by the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) owed more to his ignorance about planning than any lack of integrity in the test?

Mr. Lepper: I thank my hon. Friend for his intervention, but I have already described my own humility in planning debates, although my wife was able to advise me on the issues. We should perhaps avoid lurching into addressing issues—[Interruption.] I do not criticise my hon. Friend—when we do not fully understand all of them.

[Mr. Lepper]

I should like to deal with the issue of the difference between superstores and supermarkets. We have to acknowledge the important role that food retailers, with supermarkets, are able to play as partners in regenerating our town centres. They have played an important role in many of the important town management schemes, not only by helping to enhance the appeal of centres—in which they are already located, and to which they decide to locate—and creating jobs, but by ensuring that they very often act as a lever for other funding sources to help to regenerate those town centres. Sainsbury, for example, claims that its active involvement in, and support for, town management schemes has helped local authorities across the country to lever in more than £300 million of additional funding from central Government, Europe and private investors.

I have no particular remit for Sainsbury. In fact I actively opposed its plans for a 38,000 sq ft supermarket on a brown-field site as it was a completely inappropriate development. I am glad to say that the inspectors upheld the decision of the local council to oppose that application. While acknowledging that the proprietors of supermarkets can play an important role as private partners in regenerating our town centres, we must be aware of some of the concerns that have been raised this afternoon.

There is a genuine fear that the entry of Wal-Mart into Britain might well be followed by yet another huge retailer. Will K-Mart be next? Will we have the same experience that I have not seen at first hand, but have heard about from visitors from the United States where some small towns have Wal-Mart at one end of what was once the main street, K-Mart at the other and absolutely no retail development in between? The assurances from my right hon. Friend the Minister that the Government do not want the same situation to develop here lead us to be optimistic.

Finally, I welcome the proposals in the Government's modernising planning documents to which the Minister referred and the pilot schemes in Bexley and elsewhere for one-stop shops providing assistance to developers submitting applications. I also welcome the proposals for mediation in the planning process to avoid the confrontation which often results from planning applications. I particularly welcome the underlying theme of the Government's modernising planning agenda for local development-led plans initiating the planning process in certain areas, rather than planning being a reactive process, as has often been the case in the past. Although there will be changes in the planning process—and not before time—we can all be assured that the Government are determined to stand by PPG6 and the safeguards that it provides.

6.8 pm

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): I am pleased to follow my near neighbour the hon. Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper) who spoke largely in support of the Liberal Democrat motion. I very much hope that he will join us in the Lobby this evening. I note that the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning is abstaining tonight, so the Government obviously have some sympathy with our motion.

Let me pick up on one point. There was considerable approval among Labour Members for what the Minister said and he gave us some welcome assurances. I want to be clear in my mind that his speech reflects the view of the entire Government. My hon. Friend the Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) said that there were two ways of looking at the issue. The part of the Government that seeks to protect the environment puts that foremost, whereas another part of the Government says that lower prices, competition and letting the market rip may be a good thing. That view is epitomised by the DTI. The Government need to make it clear which line they are taking.

That is the case not just on this issue. On genetically modified foods, the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Minister for the Environment are cautious, while the Minister for the Cabinet Office and the Prime Minister are carefree and keen to push GM technology as fast as possible. The Deputy Prime Minister introduces bus lanes and the Prime Minister drives down them in his car. There are differences in the Government. We need clarification that the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning was speaking on behalf not just of his Ministry, but of the whole Government, including the Department of Trade and Industry and the Prime Minister. Perhaps the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will give us that assurance.

The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Jeff Rooker): If it enables the hon. Gentleman to get on to the important part of his speech, I am happy to assure him that every Minister who speaks at the Dispatch Box speaks on behalf of the Government, unless they say that they are speaking for themselves.

Mr. Baker: I am grateful for that clarification. The important aspect of the debate is to tie the Government down, so I am glad to have heard that.

The hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) said that people love their supermarkets and want to shop at them. People also want their corner shop to remain open. Finding the balance is important. The hon. Gentleman rather spoilt his case about supermarkets being wonderful by then saying that Chippenham high street had to be protected and he did not want a supermarket in his constituency. Never mind. We can gloss over that inconsistency.

Supermarkets bring benefits to the consumer, including lower prices—in some respects—ease of shopping and one-stop shopping. We know about those benefits, but there are disbenefits as well. The Government must ensure balance and should regulate when appropriate. Supermarkets have reduced the competition, particularly for groceries. The Conservatives mentioned a figure of 86 per cent. Village shops have closed around the country as a consequence of competition from supermarkets. That has happened in my constituency in villages such as Kingston. The effect of the concentration of ownership is like a cartel.

The Conservatives are also inconsistent in opposing any investigation into supermarkets and then complaining that farmers are not getting a fair deal as a consequence of the prices that supermarkets pay for their produce. That is why we support an investigation into supermarkets. I commend the good work done by my hon. Friend the Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) on that.

Supermarkets can be ruthless. A Sainsbury store opened in Newhaven three or four years ago. It is a very popular and well-frequented addition to the area that people welcome. When it opened, there was a petrol station, which was already struggling, within sight. The petrol station opened 24 hours a day to try to make a living. The supermarket then opened its petrol station 24 hours a day and put up a big hoarding opposite to attract customers. The independent petrol station went out of business and, lo and behold, the supermarket reverted to its normal hours for petrol sales. Supermarkets are ruthless. They are interested not in serving the public, but in boosting their profits. Governments should always remember the down sides of supermarkets as well as their benefits when they are regulating.

Supermarkets are extending their range of wares, not just in food, which was always their central reason for existing, but in other areas of retail. Supermarkets in my constituency now have chemists and sell clothes, toys and videos. All that attacks independent retailers elsewhere in the high street to the detriment of the whole high street.

Lewes has a successful and vibrant town centre. Many people come into the town to work and there is a big work force at county hall, the police headquarters and the health authority. People go to the town centre to do their shopping at lunch time. Yet even in such a successful town centre, there is nowhere outside the supermarket that sells half a pound of butter. If the supermarkets expand to sell clothes, toys and products that chemists sell, I wonder how long the independent retailers will exist.

I hope that the Government will follow through their planning policy and see what they can do to protect smaller shops. The point made earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Cotter) about business rates is important, and I am sorry that the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning rather skated over that. The Government's amendment refers to the viability of town centres, so it was a legitimate point to raise. The Government should obtain the right balance by tipping it slightly in favour of smaller and independent shops, perhaps more than has been the case so far.

I was opposed for many reasons to the extension of Sunday trading. One consequence of that has been that the one day a week when small independent shops were able to make some money without competition from supermarkets has now been eroded. Many of them took more money on Sunday than the rest of the week put together and have now lost that opportunity. I regret that.

I should like the Government to consider car park charging for out-of-town shopping. That was referred to earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Truro and St. Austell and is something that I support. The DETR was considering that as part of its transport White Paper until No. 10 stopped it in its tracks. Many people, quite erroneously, decide to shop where parking is free. They object to paying 20p to park in a town centre but they will drive 25 miles to an out-of-town supermarket where parking is free. [Interruption.] I can give the hon. Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) examples of that from my constituency. My constituents write to me and say that they will shop in Uckfield, for example, which is 10 miles away, rather than pay 20p to shop in Lewes. Therefore, people do make such decisions, however illogical they may be.

It is time that we reflected the environmental costs of out-of-town shopping with car park charging, and I should like the Government to consider that carefully. It is not Liberal Democrat policy, but I would go further by making it difficult for supermarkets and other out-of-town stores to refund that parking ticket other than by lower prices, so that people are aware that they are making an environmental contribution by buying that ticket.

I do not want to be all negative about supermarkets because, as the hon. Member for North Wiltshire and others have said, they have benefits and we need a balanced debate. One function of supermarkets is as a last resort to help the consumer when the Government of the day have failed the consumer, and to articulate public opinion in the way that the Government sometimes do not do. It was supermarkets which led the campaign, following pressure from their customers, for dolphin-friendly tuna some years ago. The Government did not intend to do anything about that in a free market, but the supermarkets traced that back and tuna in supermarkets is now almost exclusively dolphin friendly.

The supermarkets are now doing the same thing with regard to GM foods. In the words of the Minister, GM foods are not necessary, as he told the Environmental Audit Committee. Those words were echoed by the Minister for the Environment. The public at large are not interested in GM foods. They do not want to buy them. But the Government largely stand on the sidelines—not in the driving seat, to use the Minister's words—and rely on the supermarkets to deal with the problem. Therefore, supermarkets are having to respond to their customers. They have to trace back the ingredients because the World Trade Organisation, the Government and the EU have failed to require the segregation of supplies of, for example, soya. The supermarkets are having to take it upon themselves to fill the gap left by the Government.

I hope that, as a consequence of the debate, the Government will stick to their planning policies and make it clear that there is no further room for out-of-town shopping, which will be to the detriment of the environment if it goes ahead; will make sure that they introduce measures to help smaller stores and high streets, and will resist any measures from the Conservatives or anybody else to let the market rip in the way that we saw during the 18 to 20 years of Conservative Government.

6.19 pm

Mr. Hilton Dawson (Lancaster and Wyre): I am delighted to take part in this debate because I like shopping and I like food. I go to a very large supermarket at least once a week, and it is highly convenient for loading up the car with tins of beans and getting the shopping in as quickly as possible. There is a certain quality and range of food, and shops are alongside the supermarket. Visiting the chemist, optician or travel agent, or getting money out of the cash machine, is easy.

The problem is that it is all so boring. The supermarket is in a large shed and, although there is an enormous variety of food and other wares, it is all pre-packed, dressed up and bland. I can have strawberries at Christmas if I want—which I do not—and food from all around the world, including green beans from Kenya. Frankly, who wants all that?

[Mr. Hilton Dawson]

In contrast, when I go to the glorious city of Lancaster and walk its historic and beautiful streets, I can go into the shops and have a unique experience. In the marvellous market town of Garstang, I can buy local cheese, local sausage and local fish, and it is a world removed from my local supermarket. In the marvellous town of Poulton-le-Fylde, I can buy local produce from long-standing traders who know their customers and the niches in which they operate. It is a wholly different experience from bashing round the supermarket with a loaded trolley.

Supermarkets have their place, and that will continue. However, we must reverse the devastation that supermarkets have induced in some of our glorious market towns.

There is no easy way out of the problem, but we must find one. I reject absolutely some of the dreadful complacency of Conservative Members. This is an urgent issue of concern about the quality of life in our country, our local economies and, particularly, the rural economy. The previous Government's desperate attention to letting the market rip failed to reflect the importance of local producers, and let them down. When local producers abroad work co-operatively to develop local marketing strategies, they are able to gain power and influence in the market place that can redress the balance with supermarkets. We need to achieve balance. We must market excellent local produce well and attract people into market towns to buy the unique products that are there. We must help producers to work together to compete more effectively.

The Government's tightening of planning restrictions has had a tangible effect in my constituency. In Poulton-le-Fylde, we have been able to see off two separate applications for supermarkets that would have devastated an important town centre, and we have our fingers crossed for the future.

Fiscal issues are also important. I agree that we should impose a parking levy on supermarkets. If we want to cut down on commuter parking by charging large employers for their car parks, we should put the same pressure on out-of-town supermarkets. We should also consider changes in business rates.

We must try to work in partnership with the supermarkets. They should give much more commitment to town-centre development and recognise their responsibilities. I reject the idea of some Conservative Members that we should all get in our cars, get on the motorway and get round the supermarket as quickly as possible. There may sometimes be a place for doing that, but we need to attract people into town centres and we cannot do that by letting the motor car rip in historic cities, because that would devastate our city centres and dramatically reduce the quality of people's experience there.

I have heard nothing today about internet or local delivery services, which are starting to develop. We must attract people into city centres via public transport. At the height of the rush hour in Lancaster—which is especially bad on a Friday afternoon, with very congested streets—I took a train, accompanied by only six people, on a 10-minute journey that would have taken three quarters of an hour by car. We need greatly to improve the prospects for public transport.

Many hon. Members will, like me, be involved in initiatives with business, the farming community and local newspapers. In my constituency, we have developed the Wyre brunch and celebrated marvellous roast beef, glorious pies and wonderful fish and cheese. We did not have any beans. We need to move way beyond local initiatives and niche marketing to get more on a par with our friends and competitors in Europe.

Producers in Europe play a much bigger part in the marketplace, and European city centres are vibrant and celebratory places where people live. We need a different emphasis to the way that we shop in, and experience, our city centres. We also need to change the way that we use our supermarkets. They are an important part of life, but they cannot form the whole of shopping. I hope that the investigation by the Competition Commission will encourage the break-up of the dominant position of supermarkets, give more people a chance to compete and ensure that town centres take their grand place in the future urban renaissance.

6.30 pm

Mr. Stephen Day (Cheadle): I shall make some brief remarks about out-of-town shopping and its effects on my constituency. Some of the comments that I have heard this afternoon—I shall not identify individuals—have been silly party political points. The problem has been around for a while, although I recognise that the Conservative Government, in their early years, were responsible for planning permissions for many out-of-town shopping facilities, including two shopping developments just outside the Cheadle constituency. There is one at Handforth Dean, with Marks and Spencer and Tesco, and one at Cheadle Royal, with the John Lewis Partnership and—I forget the other store.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): Sainsbury.

Mr. Day: The hon. Gentleman has obviously shopped there, which raises another problem that the shopping centres have caused and which I shall address in a moment.

It is silly to start casting blame. I do not disagree with this Government's policy or their recognition of the problems that out-of-town shopping brings, and I am pleased to hear Ministers making such points. However, we should recognise that that policy change was brought about by my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), although it unfortunately came too late for my constituency and many other parts of the country. When he was Secretary of State for the Environment, my right hon. Friend visited the main centre in Cheadle to meet local traders. He made a genuine effort to bring publicity to the area to try to help the traders, and we should address practical issues such as that.

The out-of-town centres have had a devastating impact on shopping facilities in the villages of Cheadle, Cheadle Hulme and Bramhall. They have affected the trade and brought massive traffic movements into the area. Six months ago, I spoke at a ladies luncheon club in Liverpool and I was amazed when the lady in charge of the event, who sat next to me at lunch, told me that she knew my constituency well. I asked her whether she had friends there, and she said, "No, I come to shop at Marks and Spencer." She came all the way from Merseyside, and she said that many of her friends did, too. I told her that that explained why my local roads are jammed.

It was projected at the time of the public inquiry that the Cheadle Royal site alone would produce 20,000 extra car movements a day by 2000, but we passed that figure some 18 months ago, according to the most recent survey. It is an horrendous experience for the people living in the villages. A lot of traffic passes through village centres that have already been hit by the competition from the big superstores, and that makes those little village centres even more unattractive to shoppers, because they get stuck in traffic jams.

Mistakes were made in planning—I battled against the developments from the word go—but we must face the reality. It is all very well to say what the Conservative Government did or did not do, but we now have a Labour Government. People in my constituency look to the Government to solve their problems, and I ask the Government to do so.

The previous Government's road scheme retained a bypass system to cope with the traffic movements that I have described. One of the first actions of this Government was to cancel it. My constituency is an even worse mess as a direct consequence.

Mr. Bennett: Proposing more road works will not solve the problem. When I was first elected to represent Stockport, one of the worst problems was the so-called Cheadle crawl. A motorway was constructed to solve that problem, but the crawl has returned. More roads simply increase traffic and make problems worse. What should have happened is that the John Lewis group should have put its shop in the centre of Stockport.

Mr. Day: I do not disagree with the hon. Gentleman on that, but a third of the bypass scheme has been built. It attracts more traffic, much of which goes to the airport.

To solve the problems suffered by people and shops in villages as a result of the arrival of out-of-town shopping developments, the roads need to be finished. The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning said earlier that he wanted to help small village centres. I hope that his colleagues in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will hear this message: if they want to help the people of Bramhall, Woodford, Cheadle Hulme, Healds Green and all the other places similarly affected, they must give us our bypass back.

6.37 pm

Mr. Colin Breed (South–East Cornwall): Although the Conservative spokesman, the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb), made it clear earlier that he wanted to get away from consensus, a thread of consensus is evident in the contributions from hon. Members of all parties. That shows that how we got to the present situation is less important than where we go from here. The problem has been brought into sharp focus by the Wal-Mart bid, which has made us realise that certain matters must be tackled to ensure that the issue that we have been debating is more controlled in the future than it has been in the past.

The history of the problem goes back about 30 years. It is only fairly recently that we have woken up to the creeping dominance—the stealth dominance—of the out-of-town supermarkets. The public interest has largely been pushed aside, but it is the only justification for Governments getting involved in the question of competition.

Companies have a duty to their shareholders to make profits. It is not for the Government to undertake to protect businesses, small or otherwise, but neither should they allow businesses to run riot against the perceived public interest.

The public interest was served by the benefits associated with the growth of supermarkets, which is why they became so successful. They provided a variety of products and were cheap, clean, efficient and convenient. They enabled people to switch their shopping habits, and they were pleased to do so.

However, that is now regarded as a slightly false perception. Supermarket prices are not as low as they should be, and high street prices are often comparable. As for choice, the number of shops has fallen after the many closures that have occurred in the high street. In fact, choice in shops is not as large as it is perceived to be. We tend to find only a brand leader and an own-brand product. Most second liners have disappeared off the shelves because manufacturers unable to compete go out of business or become a supermarket's own-brand supplier.

Supermarkets are convenient for many people, but they are becoming less convenient for more people as village stores disappear and as corner shops vanish from housing estates and the suburbs. People without access to a vehicle find it increasingly difficult to get to them.

Relationships with suppliers are changing, threatening the survival of small manufacturers who used to provide materials for all sorts of hardware shops but cannot fulfil a contract for, say, 200,000 buckets. Farmers face problems too. Only this week, one in Cornwall wrote to me, astounded that, having received only £20 per tonne for his potatoes, he found them in his local supermarket, washed and in a plastic bag, on sale for the equivalent of £484 a tonne. We have all heard about calves on sale for 29p.

I was pleased by the Minister's strident support for PPG6, but I hope that it can be strengthened, because the larger supermarkets are exploiting some weaknesses. We should move away from so-called planning gain, when supermarket development is allowed if new roads or leisure facilities come with it. The guidance is muddled, and it should be much clearer on planning gain, which must not bring a short-term gain in return for a long-term loss.

We have heard of the damage to our high streets and our villages. In the past 10 years, 50,000 businesses have ceased to be. The loss of the village shop—once a social centre and not just the place where people bought their groceries—strikes at the very heart of a small community. Supermarkets have also dominated buying, tending to be able to purchase all the top-grade fruit and vegetables and leaving smaller operations unable to buy the best quality produce. The ability to buy goods produced locally has virtually disappeared. Small operators that used to supply local shops are denied that opportunity by the disappearance of small shops, but they cannot put together the large quantities of produce required to win supermarket contracts.

Mr. Drew: I agree with what the hon. Gentleman has said about planning gain. Does he agree that the sequential test can be most valuable in that area, allowing us to measure the true costs and benefits of opening a supermarket on a green-field site against the loss to a town centre and smaller shops?

[Mr. Drew]

Mr. Breed: I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman. In the past, not all relevant matters have been taken into account, and some subjective points have not been properly valued.

I do not believe that most people appreciate how big Wal-Mart is. The company serves 90 million customers a week in 3,600 stores, employing nearly 1 million people. With an annual turnover of £90 billion, Wal-Mart is truly a giant. It is already in Germany, and it has approached several British firms, including the furniture retailer MFI. Wal-Mart provides both an opportunity and a threat. It could kick some real competition into our supermarkets, but it would be threatening if it acted as it does elsewhere. If our planning regulations are not strong enough to meet the threat, they should be made stronger.

As several hon. Members have suggested, this is a complex issue. It is a prime example of a matter on which the Government should demonstrate joined-up government thinking.

The issue of food and supermarkets cuts across many areas of policy, including competition, environment, transport and social policy. All those policies need to be truly joined up. The Government must ensure that there is no rift between those who support an outright competition policy to reduce prices to their minimum—without any regard for the environmental and social consequences—and those who want environmental issues to drive our businesses.

The definition of the public interest has to be widened and better understood. The public interest is not served only by the lowest possible price of a tin of baked beans. Predatory pricing legislation also needs to be re-examined. We need to understand that, in trying to create the balance that everyone wants, policies need to be considered in conjunction with one another.

Planning policy is certainly important. Perhaps we could take a leaf out of other people's notebooks. The European cities often ensure that the floor space of large supermarket developments has some relevance to the size of the closest town. We should think about extensions to supermarkets. We may well think that Asda, or Wal-Mart, as it may well become, will go into a lot of new sites, but what about extensions to existing stores? Will we say that, because there is already a supermarket in a certain place, a precedent has been created so the company can build whatever size extension it likes? I hope that we shall ensure that extensions of, say, more than 10 per cent. of the existing floor space are subject to all the same impact studies as a brand new store. Existing stores should not be used as Trojan horses to defeat planning policy guidance.

We have talked about rate relief for small stores and parking charges. We need to support our smaller suppliers and small-scale agriculture and horticulture. I know that the Minister will say that the Government are already doing that, but we need to do more to provide opportunities for local traders. They should not be threatened with closure by trading standards officers, for example, because they have not quite got something right on a label. Perhaps supermarkets ought to be encouraged to use some of their car parks to allow people with local produce to sell on a Saturday morning. That would not dent their profits very much, and it might give people the opportunity to buy local produce.

Public transport must be made available to all stores. Any new store must demonstrate that public transport to it is available, either because the company will subsidise it or because existing services will be enhanced. Local councils must be given greater powers to restrict hours of trading, especially 24-hour trading. As my hon. Friend the Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) said, Sunday trading has had a major impact on small shops on high streets in small towns.

It was once said many years ago that Britain was a nation of shopkeepers. We have rather sleepwalked into the current situation. There is a real threat that, if we do not get hold of it now, or in the not-too-distant future, and if the likes of Wal-Mart come in and have their way, we could soon have just one shopkeeper to the whole nation.

6.48 pm

The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Jeff Rooker): I will do my best to respond to the points raised by hon. Members. It has been an interesting debate. The supermarkets feel very unloved at the moment. They probably feel less loved, having listened to some of the speeches in the Chamber, than they did before.

The hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) said that everyone in the Chamber probably shopped in supermarkets. I plead guilty, if that is the issue. I do not use any of the loyalty cards. I did not have them before the election and after the election I made it clear that I did not want to be involved.

Mr. Baker: Just the pledge card.

Mr. Rooker: I carry the pledge card, but not loyalty cards. I am not in the business of giving publicity but I have used all the supermarkets at one time or another. The one I tend to use at present is not in the big four and is probably the nearest thing to a worker's co-operative in this country.

We have heard some interesting speeches. I shall long remember the matter of fact way in which the hon. Member for North Wiltshire explained his shopping arrangements. If he or his wife could not do the shopping, the servant would do it. Perhaps the servant does it when there are six bags weighing 84 lb.

This is not to criticise anyone's contribution, but it was worth coming to the debate to hear my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson). At first, I wondered where he was going, but he took us on a heritage trail of the market towns in his constituency and the fine local produce sold there. The one thing that is hard to get in supermarkets is local produce, because of the nature of the food distribution network. Food is moved around the country in lorries that do not carry full weight because they are carrying gas-filled plastic containers to keep food from central distribution centres fresh. The chance of getting local produce is therefore much diminished. If people want local produce, it is better to do what my hon. Friend said and go down the heritage trail of local market towns.

I shall not repeat what my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning said earlier about planning. The position has been made abundantly clear. I understand from some of the interventions of Liberal Democrat Members that they appreciated the firmness with which the policy was set out. There are no changes. Some of the press reporting has been typically inaccurate.

The pattern of food retailing is consumer driven. Supermarkets have responded to demand. They are changing in some ways. They are trying to go back into the city centres that people accuse them of helping to destroy. Developments took place without the need for planning permission in some early enterprise zones. Those developments mean that families can go for a whole day out that does not encompass just the buying of food. My worry is that they buy food that needs to be kept chilled, load up the car, leave it out in the sunshine so that the temperature gets up nicely, and spend the rest of the day at the leisure facilities with children. They then take the food home, put it in the fridge, use it the next day and wonder why they got food poisoning. There is a problem with such expeditions.

The sourcing of produce and the grip of the supermarkets on the supply chain have been mentioned. In some ways, that grip can be used to our advantage. Information and traceability in respect of food safety for modern processed foods and ready prepared meals are crucial. Laboratories and traceability, and the technologists whom supermarkets employ, are all important. That is something that big organisations can provide.

The grip of the system encompasses, for example, supermarkets' contracts with suppliers. I shall not offer any clues as to the produce involved. The supermarket is happy with the price and finds out where the supplier obtains packaging, and then approaches the packaging supplier with a demand for a penny for every tray supplied to the supermarket. I was told of one case in which the number of trays used in a year was 300 million—at a penny a tray, that is £3 million for nothing. Alternatively, the first supplier would be told not to go to that packaging supplier. I hope that the Competition Commission will examine such practices because, in certain circumstances, they might be an abuse of market power. I do not say that that is always the case, but it seemed to be so in the example that I was given.

Contrary to the comments of the Conservative Front-Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb), the Government played no role in the referral to the Competition Commission. Anyone would think that the commission had only just been invented, but it used to be the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The referral was from the Director General of Fair Trading. We await with interest the results of that study of the big four. The commission will examine such matters as barriers on entry to the market, including the availability of land, and the way that supermarkets exert their buying power over farmers and their other suppliers.

Mr. Bennett rose—

Mr. Matthew Taylor rose—

Mr. Rooker: I am trapped now. I give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Bennett: Does my hon. Friend agree that, although that referral may be welcome, it was sad that it included a criticism of the planning system by someone who appears not to have a clue about it?

Mr. Rooker: The Government are not getting involved; it is a matter for the competition authorities. The commission was set up to do a job that it was asked to do by this House, under statute. It would not be helpful for me to make any comments other than those that I have made already. I am now duty bound to give way to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Tayor).

Mr. Taylor: I appreciate the Minister's giving way. Not everyone would be so fair.

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) expressed a concern about the competition report. That is why we hope that Ministers will confirm that, whatever the report concludes, the Government are determined to protect land and town centres. I hope that the Minister will also take the opportunity to dissociate the Government from anything that appears to have been said to newspapers on this subject by officials in at least one Department—the Department of Trade and Industry. I am sure that they did not speak on behalf of the Government but, understandably, they fed the rumours that led to this debate.

Mr. Rooker: I am unable to say more than my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning said when he opened the debate. He spoke for the Government, collectively; he set the position out clearly. There will be no attempt by the Government to interfere with that inquiry.

In relation to food, last year, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food set up a small group to consider the food chain initiative; it brought together farmers, manufacturers and retailers. We want food producers to exert more control over a larger part of the food supply chain. I realise of course that someone will say, "Look what happened when they did it with Milk Marque." We await, with interest, the results of the inquiry and the decision. That is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, MAFF has encouraged collaborative marketing. Compared with some of our European friends, partners and competitors, we do not have a history of such marketing, but it should be possible for farmers and food producers to talk to their neighbours without worrying about competition. It is in everyone's interest that there should be greater collaboration in marketing, food production and food supply.

Some producers worry about that, because they think that we want to force them into co-operative arrangements. That is not our intention. We want them to collaborate so that they can supply and control a larger part of the food chain. That will return added value to the producer. It is what happens in continental Europe and it is wholly to be applauded. Under such a system, there would be a greater chance of achieving wider distribution for some of this country's speciality foods, although there can never be a national supply of speciality, regional foods. However, that is why the initiatives that we have undertaken to try to get our local and regional brand names sanctified and codified in Europe are important to protect those names—

It being Seven o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. We must now move on to motion No. 3.

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was on my feet, about to put the Question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid that the hon. Gentleman was clearly too late. I am absolutely certain that the time had lapsed before I heard any call that the Question be now put. Therefore, I am afraid that the matter must lapse.

Prevention and Suppression of Terrorism

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): I call Mr. Straw.

7.2 pm

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I wish to raise a matter that has been put to the Speaker's Office, the Clerk and to the Home Secretary relating to the constitutional implications of today's debate. I make no comment about the merit of the order, which closes a loophole in the Prevention of Terrorism Act. Parliament can legislate to do what it likes, subject to two considerations which I put before you now. The first is that, under the Bill of Rights, the courts cannot question what we do. Secondly, we have a long tradition under the sub judice rule of not intervening in matters that are before the courts.

It so happens that the order pre-empts a matter that will come to the House of Lords in its judicial capacity on 19 July: whether the order and the Prevention of Terrorism Act are a contravention of the European convention on human rights to which we are bound by the Human Rights Act 1998. That was the view of the court of first instance and it was endorsed by the divisional court. The Lord Chief Justice said:

"It seems to me that on the face of it both sections undermine in a blatant and obvious way, the presumption of innocence."

That is the law of the land until the House of Lords considers the matter and issues its judgment. Yesterday, obviously acting on advice, the Home Secretary said:

"The Government believe that these provisions, in their current form, are not incompatible with the ECHR". [Official Report, 23 June 1999; Vol. 333, c. 1172.]

The House is being asked today—this is why I raise the matter as a point of order and not on its merits—to disregard the Lord Chief Justice's judgment. The issue goes even wider than that, because the European Court might hear a case regarding the matter. This is new territory for the House of Commons: we have always respected our relations with the courts, but now there is a new court.

I appreciate that this is a difficult point. I simply suggest that there is a case for adjourning the debate until after 19 July to give Madam Speaker an opportunity to consider the constitutional implications of reaching a view about an order when it is contrary to the law of the land, subject to a House of Lords decision that has not yet been reached. I am grateful to you for listening to me, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is an important question and I hope that you will consider my request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Madam Speaker is grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for giving notice of his intention to raise a point of order at this juncture. I have listened carefully to his comments. From his experience, he may recall that, so far as sub judice is concerned, our rule is that it does not apply to debates on legislation, including subordinate legislation. Therefore, we cannot be prevented from creating new legislation if that is the wish of the House.

As to the constitutionality, that must be a matter for debate rather than determination by the Chair. The House may wish to consider that issue in the course of the debate and decide accordingly.

7.4 pm

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Jack Straw): I beg to move,

That the draft Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order 1999, which was laid before this House on 23rd June, be approved.

I shall be as speedy as I can. When I wind up the debate, I shall try to respond to any points that I have not covered in my opening remarks. Yesterday, I explained the circumstances in which, regrettably, due to an error in the drafting of the 1998 and 1999 continuation orders, parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 had not been in force since 22 March 1998. Today, I am seeking to revive those provisions but only from the day when the order becomes operative, not retrospectively.

Yesterday, I was asked a number of questions by, among others, the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) and the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) about the chronology of events that had taken place since the article first came to our attention. It may be helpful to the right hon. Gentleman, the right hon. and learned Gentleman and the House if I provide more detail.

The article was published in issue 19 of Criminal Law Week on 24 May. It was brought to my attention via a faxed copy of the article sent to us by the Attorney-General's office on 26 May. Advice on the argument in the article was sought initially from officials and legal advisers within the Home Office, and then from the Law Officers on 1 June.

I know that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General gave the matter extremely careful and detailed consideration. The final advice arrived from the Law Officers in the Home Office on 17 June. Officials provided me with detailed advice on 18 June, and the draft order reviving the provisions was laid yesterday, 23 June.

The matter may now seem straightforward—it turned out that part of the Prevention of Terrorism Act was inoperative—but it by no means seemed to be straightforward when the issue was first raised. Obviously, it was important to ascertain from the best legal advice available that what was suggested in one article in one law journal was likely to turn out to be an authoritative position.

I still do not know the author of the article, but plenty of articles that appear in law journals turn out not to be accurate. The right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe is smiling. It is probably just as well that not all articles are authoritative, especially if one is the Home Secretary.

That is the chronology of events. We wanted to be sure about the position before seeking the approval of the House. Coming to the House yesterday, we were clear that the Act had been inoperative in respect of those parts, and we came to the House to remedy the matter.

The second issue that right hon. and hon. Members raised was whether I should have used the urgency procedures in section 27(7)(b) of the PTA in respect of reviving the provisions and immediately revived them, without coming before the House to seek retrospective approval. Of course I considered the matter carefully and took advice on the use of the urgency procedures, but those are used principally to deal with the need to revive provisions urgently because of a pending terrorist threat.

The view that I took on advice was that it was difficult to argue that the present situation was the one anticipated by Parliament when it agreed to provide a Secretary of State with such urgency provisions. For that reason, I judged that the best approach was to come as quickly as possible to the House to make the position clear and to seek the House's co-operation in getting the changes through as quickly as possible.

I am extremely grateful to the right hon. Members for Bridgwater, for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe for their suggestions about how we might deal with the matter speedily. We hope that it will go through this place speedily tonight and also through the other place tonight. If that happens, the order can become law tomorrow.

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I understand that Parliament has a perfect right to put the order through as speedily as we intend to do it, but I do not understand the need for it, given that the two subsections are not much used, that there is an appeal pending on 19 July and that the Lord Chief Justice has made clear his view that

"Both sections undermine in a blatant and obvious way the presumption of innocence."

Mr. Straw: I shall give my hon. Friend the best answer that I can. We are seeking to recreate the status quo ante without making the legislation retrospective. If this technical drafting error had not come to light—and therefore made this part of the Act inoperative until, we hope, tomorrow—the appeal would have proceeded in the normal way. There is no suggestion that a provision of primary legislation should be withdrawn merely by virtue of the fact that a divisional court has held a particular part of an Act to be incompatible with the provisions of the European convention. It is my judgment that we need to put this provision back on to the statute book as quickly as possible because it was, after all, Parliament's intention that it should never have been off the statute book.

Although my hon. Friend is right to say that these provisions are not used that frequently—certainly in terms of charges, and I shall come on to the numbers in a moment—they are important provisions. One never knows, particularly in this area of law, how many offences are being deterred by such provisions. It is impossible to tell, but we believe that some are being deterred. The converse is more certain to be the case.

The other point that I should like to make to my hon. Friend is the important constitutional point about the sovereignty of Parliament. The whole issue of the European convention arose acutely when we debated what became the Human Rights Act 1998. We could have approached the introduction of a Human Rights Bill into our constitution in two ways. One was to follow the procedures that some Commonwealth countries have followed, by which a supreme court is able to override the will of Parliament. The other approach, which has been adopted by other Commonwealth countries, is the reverse of that, whereby the supreme court is allowed to exercise an opinion about whether legislation is incompatible with some basic law, but whether any action is taken is a matter for Parliament to decide, not the courts.

[Mr. Straw]

I happen to believe strongly in the sovereignty of Parliament, and I know that that view is shared by many right hon. and hon. Members on both sides. We decided very clearly that, under the scheme that we set down for the Human Rights Act 1998, it should never be possible for the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords to make a judgment overriding the decisions of this House and the other place in their legislative capacity. That would have transferred the sovereignty of decision making from Parliament to a supreme court. That arrangement applies in some constitutions—most notably in the United States—but it does not apply here.

The scheme that we adopted, which is set out in section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998, is that it is open to the courts at any stage to declare primary legislation—which this is, by the way—incompatible with the convention, but what action is then taken is a matter for this House and the other place. Two alternative courses of action can be taken. A decision can be taken to legislate for the change either by the urgency procedures in the 1998 Act or in normal time. Alternatively, Parliament can decide not to change the legislation, and a final decision would rightly and properly be made on appeal by the injured party to the Strasbourg Court and the matter would again come back to Parliament.

That was clearly the opinion of Parliament, so if we were to take any other decision today, we would be acting against the clear wishes of Parliament as set out in the Human Rights Act 1998. I should add a technical but important detail. Section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998, although passed, is not yet in force.

Mr. Tony Benn: I am grateful to the Home Secretary for the way in which he is tackling the matter, but may I put one or two points to him? The consequences of the loophole are threefold. Because there was a loophole, we had, as my right hon. Friend quite properly said, the unusual circumstances in which the Lord Chief Justice was able to make a declaration of law that this provision was incompatible with the European convention, even if it has not come into effect, and was a denial of the presumption of innocence, which does not depend just on the European court but is embedded in many centuries of British legal practice.

Secondly, I think that my right hon. Friend is right to suggest that, although such action is contrary to the European convention, the Government will want to proceed with it, because I am a great believer in the sovereignty of Parliament; but yesterday—this can be found in column 1172 of Hansard—he said that the Government's view was that such action was not incompatible with the convention.

My right hon. Friend must make up his mind. If the Lord Chief Justice says that such action is incompatible with the convention and he says that it is not, he is saying not that it is incompatible but that he does not care. This is a very important point, which will arise time and again as the convention comes into effect following the implementation of the Human Rights Act 1998. I hope that my right hon. Friend will take my arguments seriously. They relate not to the merit of the case, but to the clarity of Parliament's approach to legislation of this importance.

Mr. Straw: My right hon. Friend is right in saying that I asserted yesterday that the Government consider that sections 16A and 16B of the Prevention of Terrorism Act are not incompatible with the convention. I still believe that. I also made it clear beyond peradventure that, as it happens, the Lord Chief Justice takes a different view, and that view is clearly set out.

I drew the House's attention to the proceedings yesterday. We do not know what decision the Appellate Committee will reach. It may decide to share the view of the Lord Chief Justice in the divisional court, which is not the final Court of Appeal in regard to matters of this kind, or it may reach a different view. As I said yesterday, the Government have already made it clear to the other parties that we will argue strongly that sections 16A and 16B are compatible with the convention. Given that position, I do not believe for a moment that it would be appropriate for us, because of the chance that a particular part of the Act will turn out to be inoperative for 15 months, to allow those sections to remain inoperative for a further period. Moreover, that would set a constitutional precedent that I do not think my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) would approve in any other context.

Mr. Paul Stinchcombe (Wellingborough): My right hon. Friend has described, accurately and helpfully, the procedures that will follow implementation of the Human Rights Act; but is he not pre-empting those procedures, and preventing them from being followed? Instead of waiting for the House of Lords to adjudicate on the legal matter, he is simply saying, "I disagree with the Lord Chief Justice."

Mr. Straw: No. The position is quite the reverse. Another section of the Act—I have had to refresh my memory about each section—makes it absolutely clear that a declaration of incompatibility does not affect the operability, or remaining in force, of any primary legislation.

The Act is not yet in force, and will not be in force until late next year, but let us work on the basis of its operation. Section 4(6) clearly states—this was Parliament's explicit will—

"A declaration under this section ('a declaration of incompatibility') . . . does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of the provision in respect of which it is given; and . . . is not binding on the parties to the proceedings in which it is made."

That could not be clearer—and it was made clear in order to preserve the sovereignty of Parliament.

Mr. Stinchcombe: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Straw: Just one more time.

Mr. Stinchcombe: My point is this: all that would follow if my right hon. Friend accepted the court's judgment that the legislation was incompatible with the convention, but he is simply saying that he disagrees and preventing the House from passing legislation in the light of a determination of incompatibility.

Mr. Straw: My hon. Friend is making the most extraordinary point. No declaration of incompatibility has yet been made by the highest court in the land—leaving aside the fact that the Act is not yet in force, which is a subsidiary and quite important issue in the proceedings, as one of the points that we shall be asserting is that the courts have anticipated implementation of an Act.

Any party to proceedings is entitled, particularly pending appeal, to seek to preserve the status quo. In the specific proceedings, I am entitled to assert—on the best advice and my best judgment—that section 16A and section 16B are compatible with the convention, and I have done. However, even if the Appellate Committee were to decide that the provisions were incompatible with the convention, it would not render the provisions invalid or undermine their continuing operation. Other action may have to follow, and judgments would have to be made, but such a decision would not affect that.

By way of reassurance, I should say that, in his decision in the divisional court, although the Lord Chief Justice was very clear in his own mind that sections 16A and 16B were incompatible with the provisions of the European convention, he did not say that they should not be operated. He went on to say that the Director of Public Prosecutions should have to bear in mind questions of compatibility in bringing prosecutions—which is a rather more subtle conclusion to the argument.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Straw: If I may first make some progress, I shall give way.

Mr. Corbyn: It is on this point.

Mr. Straw: Then I shall give way.

Mr. Corbyn: I thank the Home Secretary for giving way now; obviously it would be helpful if we could deal with the issues as they arise.

As I understand it, the Law Lords will be considering the matter on 19 July. Will the Home Secretary explain why it is necessary for us to legislate now? Would it not be more appropriate, in normal constitutional terms, to leave the issue until after 19 July, when it may not be necessary for the House to debate the legislation at all?

Mr. Straw: As I sought to explain in answering the question of my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), Parliament's will was that the provisions should be in force. They are not used all that often in prosecutions—although they have been used on one more occasion than I had thought that they were yesterday; I shall explain that to the House in a moment—but they are regarded as important. I therefore thought that it was important to bring them before the House as quickly as possible.

If the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords was the United Kingdom supreme court and its power overrode Parliament, the assumption made by my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe) would be a correct one. We would then be in a situation in which a constitutional court had declared that Parliament should not have done something that we had done and that the provision was inoperative for the future. However, that is not case.

I cannot pre-empt the Appellate Committee's judgment, or any decision made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and other Ministers, if the Appellate Committee decides that sections 16A and 16B are outwith the convention. However, as I said, one possibility—it is only a possibility—is that the Government may decide that we continue to believe that the sections are compatible and that we wish to argue it out before the court in Strasbourg. Even then, the matter would not be settled, and it could be some years before there was a decision by the institutions of the Council of Europe and any jurisprudential clarity on whether the sections were compatible with the convention.

Meanwhile, it has always been accepted by all signatories to the European convention that domestic law should remain operative, for reasons that the whole House will understand: simply the prospect of a final declaration by the Strasbourg Court could render inoperative all sorts of legislation that each domestic jurisdiction needs.

Mr. Tony Benn: The matter boils down to one question. Does the House know what it is doing today? The Home Secretary might say, "The measure is incompatible. The Lord Chief Justice says that it is incompatible and so does the appellate court, but I do not care because it is in the national interest." If he did, the House would know what it was doing. Alternatively, he could say that there was no issue of incompatibility. If he did, he would be going against the current law of the land as the Lord Chief Justice lays down the law until it is reversed.

The House is entitled to know the basis of the vote that my right hon. Friend asks us for tonight. Is he saying that the measure is incompatible and therefore there is no problem, or that it is not incompatible and he does not think that it matters? At least we ought to know what we are being asked to do.

Mr. Straw: I have sought to explain the matter. Without labouring the point, right hon. and hon. Members are being asked to approve or not to approve the draft order that I have laid before the House, which brings in parts IVA and IVB of the 1989 Act. They are being asked to do that and nothing else.

Although the issue of compatibility or incompatibility is relevant to the debate, it is not directly relevant to the judgment as to whether the order should or should not become law. I have tried to explain that to the best of my ability. I have never said to my right hon. Friend that I do not care whether or not the measure is incompatible. Of course I care whether law is compatible with the Human Rights Act 1998—I expect that the entire House does, but as I was the Minister who brought the Human Rights Act before the House, I care profoundly about it. The alternatives that my right hon. Friend put forward—that it is either compatible or incompatible and that I do not care—are not the only options. I do care about it and, with respect to the Lord Chief Justice and his colleagues in the divisional court, I take a different view. On the best legal advice, the Government take a different view and that will be argued before the Appellate Committee. Although that is related to the order, it is separate from it.

[Mr. Straw]

I have spoken at greater length than I had anticipated but I should like to place one or two additional points on the record. Yesterday, I said that my information was that six people had been charged with offences under sections 16A and 16B. Central records on these matters are not kept, but I now understand from the police that the total is in fact seven. The seventh case also related to international terrorism and was dropped before it came to court. It remains the case, as I said yesterday, that there have been no convictions so far under sections 16A or 16B.

I also explained that the individual whose indictment was quashed had been in custody for some months and that we could therefore expect to receive a claim for compensation. In one other of the total of seven cases charged under sections 16A and 16B, a man whose alleged offence was committed after 22 March 1998 spent some months in custody before proceedings were discontinued. It may well be that he, too, will claim compensation.

Let me deal briefly with the content of sections 16A and 16B of the PTA. Section 16A makes it unlawful to be in possession of articles in circumstances which give rise to suspicion that they are intended for terrorist purposes. It is a defence to prove that the articles concerned were not held for terrorist purposes. Section 16B makes it an offence to collect or record information that is likely to be of use to terrorists without lawful authority or reasonable excuse for doing so.

Although the provisions have not been used very much, I understand that experience of the equivalent provisions in Northern Ireland has been positive. Both Lord Lloyd in his inquiry into legislation against terrorism and John Rowe in his annual reports have commented on the usefulness of these provisions and recommended that they should be retained. The Government's consultation paper on permanent counter-terrorist legislation agrees.

Mr. Tom King (Bridgwater): May I clear up one point? The Leader of the House told us last night that there were plenty of other powers and measures and these were not needed.

Mr. Straw: I fully understand and appreciate the right hon. Gentleman's anxiety, but, with the greatest respect, I did not take that to be the case from reading the Hansard report of the comments of my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House. Other provisions are available for similar conduct, including conspiracy. They do not completely overlap or there would be no point in these provisions. One reason why the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe introduced the Act was the difficulty of charging with conspiracy in some cases.

I have dealt with the appeal at length. Section 16C and schedule 6A give the police, subject to authorisation at superintendent level or above, the power to cordon off areas and restrict access in connection with a terrorist investigation and make it an offence not to obey police instructions. As I told the House yesterday, central records are not kept, but our information is that the Metropolitan police have used the powers 86 times since March 1998. The police have certain common law powers to impose cordons, on which they rely in non-terrorist cases, but section 16C provides a firm statutory basis for their actions.

Section 16D gives the police power to impose temporary parking restrictions on roads in response to a general threat to vulnerable targets such as Government buildings or financial centres. The police have some powers in that respect under common law, but the provision gives the reassurance of statutory underpinning. Lord Lloyd and John Rowe agreed that the powers under sections 16C and 16D were valuable and should be retained.

I apologised to the House yesterday for what has happened and I do so again. I am grateful to the Conservatives and the Liberal Democrats for their co-operation in bringing the order before the House. I hope that I have explained the circumstances, including the important aspect of the appeal to the Appellate Committee and the question of the convention, to the House's satisfaction. I shall respond to any other points when I wind up the debate.

7.32 pm

Miss Ann Widdecombe (Maidstone and The Weald): As I said yesterday, the Opposition will support the Government in their proposal to remedy the defects that they allowed to be created in March 1998. We also hope that we can maintain the position that the provisions of sections 16A and 16B are compatible with the Human Rights Act 1998.

I found the Home Secretary's explanation of the gap between 24 May, when the lacuna was first noticed—it was drawn to his attention two days later—and yesterday, when he did not show the most amazing urgency to put things right, wholly unacceptable given the seriousness of the legislation and some of the offences that might have been caught under the provisions. I do not want to labour the point because we dwelt on it at length yesterday, but I was hoping to hear a more satisfying explanation for the delay. There was a lamentable lack of urgency in the Home Office and on the part of Ministers in bringing the issue before the House and getting it sorted out. Given that it has now been brought before the House, I hope that we shall finally sort the issue out tonight.

I was going to refer to some of the points that have been made by Labour Members, not because I disagree with the Home Secretary's assessment of compatibility, but to test it. It is clearly in the interests of the House to be able to be confident in the assertions that Ministers make when we pass legislation. The Home Secretary has asserted continually tonight, as he did yesterday, that, in his view, the provisions were not incompatible with the Human Rights Act 1998. Although I have heard much assertion, I have heard little argument. For example, I have not heard the Home Secretary's reasons for the reverse in the burden of proof.

It is significant that, in opposition in 1994, the Labour party opposed sections 16A and 16B, and that the noble Lord Williams of Mostyn, now Minister of State, Home Office, and a former chairman of the Bar, gave as his reason for opposition at that time his assessment that the provisions of sections 16A and 16B violated ECHR considerations. I am not saying that I agree with that assessment—clearly, we did not at the time—but I should like the Home Secretary to put on the record, so that we may have some authoritative statement rather than assertion, why he considers that those contentions are not valid.

Last night, we were clearly told—I admire an interpretation of Hansard that could come to another view—that there was no urgency because other measures were on the statute book which would protect us should an offence arise under the provisions. The Home Secretary should now be frank with the House and say that what we were told was wrong, because he would not be here reintroducing the provisions if he believed that he already had adequate coverage under other parts of the Act.

We will support the Government in putting right the mess that they have made. It is not the first time that inattention to detail has resulted in problems for the right hon. Gentleman. It is not so long since a report was issued in which nobody had apparently noticed that the names of sensitive witnesses were still included. I would ask him, as a general question, although not without some sympathy, what he is doing to get a grip on the way that detail is handled in his Department.

7.37 pm

Mr. Paul Stinchcombe (Wellingborough): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for allowing me to make a short contribution in this important debate. I declare at the outset an interest as a barrister who practised in human rights law before the election. I spoke in support of the renewal of the prevention of terrorism measures after my election, and on Second Reading of the Human Rights Act 1998.

When I spoke in the first of those debates, I had missed entirely two points that give rise to these proceedings today. I had not anticipated that any provisions had not been renewed and I certainly had not anticipated that it was arguable that those provisions were in breach of the ECHR and, therefore, in breach, in certain limited respects at least, of the Human Rights Act which we would shortly be introducing.

It is now clear that those provisions are arguably in breach of the ECHR, and it is also clear that the arguments are far from idle ones. They command the support of the Lord Chief Justice and, not just in muted terms, but in firm terms, he says that the provisions blatantly and obviously undermine the presumption of innocence. In so saying, he relies not just on his own judgment, but on authorities from abroad, including an authority from the Chief Justice of Canada and from a judge of the South African constitutional court.

Whether the Lord Chief Justice be right or wrong, in the face of that judgment, I find myself uncomfortable in coming to the House today and being asked to support the reintroduction of exactly the same provisions. I say that for these reasons. First, I have simply not had the benefit of the argument that the Lord Chief Justice had when he came to the conclusion that this was blatantly and obviously undermining the presumption of innocence. Secondly, an appeal is imminently to be heard in any event. Thirdly—a point that I raised by way of intervention—my right hon. Friend is today, before the appeal, coming to the House. He is not saying that he accepts that his measure is incompatible with the ECHR and asking us to legislate in any event. Rather, he is simply saying that he has heard a judge say that it is incompatible and that he disagrees. That is not the way forward and not the way that the Human Rights Act anticipated would be the way forward.

We could wait and avoid that situation. That would enable the Home Secretary to come to the House in a few weeks and say, "I was right all along. Our highest domestic court agrees with me." Alternatively, he could say, "I disagree with the highest court, but we have enacted to protect the sovereignty of Parliament by the Human Rights Act." As matters stand, I would find those positions infinitely more comfortable than the position I am in today.

7.40 pm

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): The reason why my right hon. and hon. Friends and I feel that this matter could be brought before the House with a sense of urgency today is that Parliament's intention was frustrated by an error, and Parliament ought to have an immediate opportunity to restore the law to what it thought it had passed, without prejudice to the continuing argument over the compatibility of part of what we are passing tonight with the European convention on human rights.

I say "part of" what we are passing, because no one has challenged sections 16C and 16D in terms of their compatibility with the European convention. If the justification for action was an error, it would be slightly perverse not to restore the error as a whole. By restoring only part of it, on the grounds that certain provisions were in dispute in the courts in terms of their compatibility with the convention—although others were not—we would be selecting that part of the draftsman's error we were prepared to correct. That would not be a logical way of proceeding.

I say that without prejudice, in every sense of the words. It is without prejudice legally and, in more general layman's terms, without prejudice to the ultimate resolution of the question of compatibility by the case that is now proceeding in the courts. The Home Secretary did not complete the picture when he suggested what would happen if the Government continued to disagree on compatibility. After the issue has gone to Strasbourg, and if it is still found to be incompatible, there will then be created an obligation on Parliament not merely to consider defying Strasbourg by saying, "We do not like this and, in the national interest, we will not do it", but to pass legislation that becomes compliant. The end of this road is not potential defiance—we must seek compliance—but to follow a Strasbourg Court decision.

Those of us who are keen supporters of ECHR legislation hope that it will not often have to come to that. We hope that this House, on the basis of its initial consideration of proposed legislation, will not pass things that are not compliant, and that things that are found to be non-compliant will be changed fairly quickly. I shall refer to how we deal with that point in due course.

I raised with the Home Secretary yesterday a formal question, to which he gave an affirmative answer, about whether he would furnish a certificate of compatibility—as he would be obliged to do if this were primary legislation—if required to do so. He said that he would. I am bound to wonder what quality of advisers the right hon. Gentleman has if they can give that advice, when the

[Mr. A. J. Beith]

Lord Chief Justice has said otherwise in relation to the two sections. However, the Home Secretary seems persuaded and—as the legal proceedings are not over—he and the Government are entitled to put their case. We shall be interested to see what that is.

This point raises the question of what we shall do with the certificates, when Ministers issue them for future Bills, if they come out in a form that is already in dispute with what the Lord Chief Justice thinks of the law. The Lord Chief Justice's opinion is not final, but he is obviously a high-powered legal adviser. The fact that the Home Office thinks differently gives me cause for concern. Tonight, we are trying to put the law back to where Parliament thought it had left it in terms of the court case to resolve the compatibility question.

The procedures tonight call to mind the high risk of error. The Home Secretary misunderstood my question to him yesterday. He thought that I was implying that this error had resulted from the hasty way in which some of the proposed legislation had been treated. That was not my point. My point was that we have so often legislated in this area with unseemly haste that we run a high risk of errors of this kind. If we can do that on occasions when legislation has been dealt with properly and at greater length, the risk of doing so when we legislate in a hurry must be high indeed.

I call to mind the 1996 measures that created the cordon provisions, which were rushed through in a day or so, and the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998, which was rushed through in a matter of days, even though its provisions extended far beyond the purposes of terrorism. In fact, they have created an area of law which is subject to annual review. As far as I am aware, the Home Secretary still has not announced a reviewing mechanism for those parts of the Act that are not terrorist related. That illustrates the danger of rushing into legislation.

Usually, there are powers that can be used, as the Home Secretary said, but the legislation being introduced is intended to provide the police and other authorities with a readier instrument to deal with a difficult situation. In my experience, the sense of urgency has not usually proved justified, but the powers have often proved useful.

The use of the cordon power on more than 80 occasions by the Metropolitan police suggests that there was some purpose in enacting it, and the difficulty that they were having with the possession of materials intended for terrorist purposes, scattered around lock-up garages in various outskirts of the capital, shows that there was a need for some of the other powers.

The right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King), whom I greatly respect and with whom I have often worked, is pushing the argument a bit far in suggesting that the Government were wholly irresponsible for allowing some days to pass while they sorted matters out. There were provisions on the statute book that could be used. Indeed, they were on the statute book for most of the time that the previous Government were in office, when they did not consider it necessary to introduce provisions in this precise form.

It is appropriate to restore the law to what it was, partly because of the usefulness of the provisions and partly because Parliament thought that they were there all along. If there were no means of challenging a possible incompatibility, I would not advise my right hon. and hon. Friends to support the motion, but there is a court procedure to be followed and the whole of the legislation is, rightly, under review.

Temporary provisions and occasional "recess Acts", enacted either on the very eve of a recess or in a recall, have had to be reviewed. They have been the subject of a consultative paper, in response to which there have been criticisms of sections 16A and 16B, which I hope that the Government are considering. I would like the Government to make it clear that the consultative process, the proposal phase of which was completed in March this year, will come to reasonably early fruition.

What we enact tonight will be on the statute book only until next March. When we are presented with a renewal decision at that time, we should know where we stand on the review and the enactment of permanent legislation.

Because of an error of which Parliament was unaware—I take some satisfaction from the fact that all the lawyers on all the Front Benches in both Houses failed to spot it—there has not been on the statute book a provision that Parliament thought that it had made. The problem that some of it is being contested in the courts for its compatibility with the European convention would not be resolved by our choosing not to correct a part of the error. I would rather that the powers remained in place and the legal challenge continued, with the review process proceeding apace, so that we can have carefully drafted permanent legislation at the earliest opportunity.

7.48 pm

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I share the discomfort expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe) about the provisions. I entirely accept the Government's right to do what they are doing, but it runs against the spirit of the human rights legislation that we are in the process of enacting and gives an inauspicious signal for the future, especially when the Lord Chief Justice is opposed.

Others are also opposed. The right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) mentioned the Home Office Minister, Lord Williams of Mostyn, who is a distinguished Queen's Counsel. In his previous incarnation as Labour home affairs spokesman in the House of Lords, he was very outspoken on this subject. He said that sections 16A and 16B were "far too harsh and draconian"

and said:

"If we condemn our citizens to the possibility of 10 years' imprisonment on the basis of reasonable suspicion . . . we are in serious danger of giving terrorism a victory that it would not otherwise achieve."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 7 June 1994; Vol. 555, c. 1208-09.]

So it is not only the views of the Lord Chief Justice that we have to take into account, but those of someone who is now a Minister of State at the Home Office. Even if we do not take the Lord Chief Justice seriously, we should take Home Office Ministers seriously.

We should bear in mind the strong criticisms that have been made when we review this legislation. As the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) said, an overall review is being carried out and that may provide the opportunity to put it right. I feel very uneasy, as I know many others do, about doing away with the presumption of innocence, and I am unconvinced that it is necessary in the cause of fighting terrorism. I am as keen on catching terrorists as anyone else, and I have had better luck in finding them than some of those whose job it is, but I do not believe that 16A and 16B will do much to help. Finally, for the record, I ask the Home Secretary to confirm that, when the Government appeals on 19 July against the ruling by the Lord Chief Justice, they will appeal against both 16A and 16B.

7.51 pm

Mr. Tom King (Bridgwater): The title of the order—the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order—describes accurately the bizarre situation we are in. In case it is thought that I am being ungracious to the Home Secretary, I point out that I applaud the fact that we are here tonight. The action that we are taking is correct. It is very important that the order is approved, and I hope that it will be. I am also grateful to the Home Secretary for responding to the request that I made last night that we should give a timetable of events since the information first became available to the Government, and I shall have some questions to ask about that.

I shall not enter into the argument, which the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) made, about whether we need the powers, because the Home Secretary has answered that, and we have the benefit of the report by Mr. Rowe to the Home Secretary as recently as February 1999, which made clear his views that the powers should be retained. Unfortunately, the comments made by the Leader of the House—in what I recognise was a difficult situation for her—did not do the House much credit, because this is a serious matter. Her answers were not especially helpful. The information that I have from the police is that the powers are important, for precisely the reason that the Home Secretary gave this evening.

The issue is not only how many people were charged and convicted, but how many were arrested under the power and what deterrent effect it has had. The Home Secretary is a lucky man, because those 86 cordons that were illegally imposed might have led to some difficult situations. There will be a bill to be paid in respect of those unlawfully detained, but it could have been much higher.

I listened carefully to the Home Secretary's comments about the timetable of events. I would be grateful if, when he winds up, he would clarify some points. The Home Office heard about the problem from the Law Officers' Department, which faxed a copy of the article to the Home Office on 26 May. When did the Law Officers first read that article? It took five days to decide to ask the Law Officers' advice and a further 16 to 17 days to get that advice.

I do not know whether the Law Officers regarded it as a serious matter or simply as part of the daily dross of their usual responsibilities, such as clearing up Home Office mistakes or clarifying problems in drafting. Perhaps they thought that that would work on it when they had the opportunity. However, we are entitled to an explanation as to why it took so long for them to do so.

We understand that the Home Office and parliamentary draftsmen will always be with us, and that, from time to time, they will make some pretty big howlers. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) has had to face some of the consequences of that possibility. One of the most important requirements of Ministers is to have good antennae and a good sense of smell, so that they can detect problems before they happen. I thought that the Home Secretary was the one Minister in this Government to have those qualities, so I am all the more surprised by what has happened.

I think back on my experience in government, under Margaret Thatcher. If I had had to tell her that we had forgotten to include two key elements in the prevention of terrorism legislation, and that, for a month, I had not wanted to press the Law Officers too hard because they had a lot on their plate, I can imagine her reaction only too easily. No Home Secretary under Margaret Thatcher would have survived it.

To avoid misrepresentation, I assure the Home Secretary that I am not calling for his resignation. However, I find the situation that has arisen absolutely incredible. I have had no satisfactory explanation as to why requirements considered essential by Parliament were accidentally omitted. The right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) said that Parliament had wanted those requirements included in the legislation because they were a necessary bulwark against terrorism, but nothing was done for a month after their omission became known.

The Law Officers are not present just now. Perhaps they are seeking advice—a wise precaution, if I may say so. I fail to understand their response. Surely any responsible Minister would have sought urgent advice from them and would have expected it on his desk the following morning. The Home Secretary knows well both the House and the attitude of all opposition parties with regard to prevention of terrorism, but, last night, the Leader of the House suggested that it was possible that the opposition parties would have considered it an affront to Parliament if the Home Secretary had remedied the mistake at the earliest possible moment.

The Home Secretary discovered the answer to that proposition as soon as he made his statement yesterday. It was that the mistake had to be rectified straight away. In his statement today, the Home Secretary has failed to explain how what I have called "this dereliction of duty" occurred.

The Home Secretary is a very lucky man. The police regard the two powers involved as important instruments in the fight against terrorism. What would have happened if incidents such as those that occurred in Manchester or Warrington had taken place again? What would have happened if there had been another terrorist outrage in this country?

For example, some time ago, there was an attempt, involving many people, to close down the power system in the City of London by attacking electricity substations. Let us suppose that a similar case arose, and that people had been arrested on a strong suspicion of being on their way to commit that terrorist offence, given that they were in possession of material and articles appropriate to the act. Even in such circumstances, the Home Secretary would have been required to tell the House that those people had been released because of a recently discovered omission in the law whose rectification was still being considered. I suggest that such an admission would have had to be accompanied by his resignation.

[Mr. Tom King]

Mr. Beith: The right hon. Gentleman goes a little over the top by implying that the police would have sat back, saying that there was nothing that they could do. The police would have used existing powers, albeit with the weakness of a lower chance of ultimate conviction and the likelihood of a lower sentence on conviction. However, the right hon. Gentleman is wrong to imply that the police would have done nothing if they had been in possession of the facts that he has outlined.

Mr. King: The right hon. Gentleman may take his answer from my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and from the Home Secretary who said—as he implicitly did earlier—that the powers are necessary. With my experience of those matters, I know the difficulties of finding sufficient grounds for arrest, or of establishing charges against terrorists, and I know that the right hon. Gentleman understands the problems.

It is remarkable that we should have remained without the powers—accidentally but for a long time at first, and subsequently because of a failure to correct the error. The right hon. Gentleman earlier paid me a nice compliment, and I can return it by saying that he is honourable and genuine. He knows that, if there had been a major terrorist incident while the Home Office was aware that the powers were faulty, but while nothing had been done, there would have been a major political scandal.

I do not seek such scandal. I am too committed to fighting terrorism from any quarter. Democracy faces many difficulties in that fight, and we must be properly equipped. I am seriously worried by the way in which this matter has been handled. Whether the error lies with Ministers or with the Law Officers, it lies with the Government. We are owed an adequate explanation.

8.3 pm

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): My right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) made several powerful points, with which I agree and which I shall not repeat. The Home Secretary told the House last night that the provisions are a serious part of the armoury against terrorism. As I was responsible for their introduction, the House will be unsurprised to hear that I agree. I welcome their restoration to the statute book, and I thank the Home Secretary for responding to my express invitation to reconsider the timetable that he had originally had in mind for putting the powers back where they belong and where they represent a serious weapon against terrorism.

I have one point to make about timing, which my right hon. Friend analysed in detail. I intend no excessive loyalty to my former Department in saying that, in the timetable provided by the Home Secretary, the 17 days that it took the Law Officers to respond to the Home Office request for advice shriek for our attention. That is an astonishing period, and I hope that the Home Secretary will discuss that point in his reply.

I listened with great interest to the points put to the Home Secretary by his right hon. and hon. Friends. Indeed, when he made a point of referring with some emphasis to the official Opposition, I was not at all sure whether he was using that term to distinguish us from the Liberal Democrats or from those behind him. Those points and the response that the Home Secretary made to them illustrate the constitutional mess that one gets into if one introduces the kind of legislation that the Home Secretary has introduced in the form of the Human Rights Act 1998. I regret to say that I believe that the country as a whole, and perhaps even the Government, will live to regret the day when they decided to put that legislation before the House.

Yesterday, I expressed some sympathy for the Home Secretary's predicament. I express further sympathy with him today for the disputes that have arisen between him and the judiciary. My sympathy will not do him any good at all, but he will understand that I very much feel for him as he makes his way. The Lord Chief Justice has ruled against him. He is now in the process of appealing to a higher court. It all has an incredibly familiar ring about it, but I am on the Home Secretary's side. It will not do him any good at all, but I wish him well in all those battles.

Audrey Wise (Preston): I know that the right hon. and learned Gentleman is enjoying this enormously, but it might do no harm to remind him that some of us on the Labour Benches remember the considerable difficulties that he got into with the law on lots of occasions as Home Secretary. So, a little humility would not come amiss.

Mr. Howard: I rather thought that that was the point that I was making. I am sorry if it escaped the hon. Lady.

I welcome what the Home Secretary has done tonight. I welcome the fact that he has brought the legislation to the House. As he said last night, it is an important part of our armoury against terrorism. It is needed in the fight against terrorism, and vigilance continues to be necessary in the face of the threat of terrorism. That is why the House should pass the measure that the Home Secretary has brought before us.

8.7 pm

Mr. Peter Brooke (Cities of London and Westminster): I shall not rise to the level of my right hon. Friends who have preceded me in speaking from the Opposition Benches, but I will say a brief word. I can certainly declare an interest. For ministerial sins of omission and commission, I have never come remotely near being a member of the Home Secretary's club, although I have some vicarious experience. I remember my father's experiences and I certainly feel sympathy for the Home Secretary in the predicament in which he has found himself.

These are serious matters. There was a trivial example in yesterday's proceedings of how a slip of the tongue can get us into difficulties. The Home Secretary, in response to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), said of the 1996 Act:

"That Act introduced changes in respect of sections 16C and 16D in part IVB of the Act, as opposed to part IVA, which relates to cordons and parking restrictions."—[Official Report, 23 June 1999; Vol. 333, c. 1174.]

He clearly meant part IVB of the Act, which relates to cordons and parking restrictions, as opposed to part IVA, but the wording that he used eluded the eye of whichever member of his private office was sent to check the record. Therefore; we are left with a thing that is mildly misleading in the record.

In terms of sections 16A and 16B, I have a question about the police powers on the statute book that would have protected us during the period since 22 March 1998. I have searched both what the Home Secretary said yesterday and what the Leader of the House said yesterday evening and I cannot detect any precise reference. I realise that lawyers who have participated in the debate may know precisely what powers would have been substituted for sections 16A and 16B, but it would be helpful for the purposes of historians to have on the record what they would have been.

On sections 16C and 16D, there was an exchange at column 217 on 2 April 1996 in discussing the Prevention of Terrorism (Additional Powers) Act 1996 in which my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) acknowledged to the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley) that there were powers under common law on cordons and parking restrictions, and that the legislation that we were passing was simply intended to strengthen them.

I have an incidental question that seems relevant, given that the powers that we are reviving provide for 14 days initially, with a power for a 14-day extension for cordons and, I think, parking restrictions. It would be interesting to know the longest period for which the powers were required on the 86 occasions that the legislation has been used since 22 March.

I have a minor complaint that is not remotely worthy of a point of order. Events such as those with which we have been dealing in the past 24 hours highlight the utility of the library immediately behind me in the No Lobby, which contains Hansards and Bills. I make no complaint, and I do not know who has offended by removing them, but all the Bills for 1996 are absent from the No Lobby. I understand that the sessional index for 1996-97 has not yet been printed but those for 1994-95 and 1995-96 are absent. Although they are available in other parts of the Palace, it slows things down if we cannot make use of them in trying to research something in a short space of time. It is because of their absence that I ask the Home Secretary one remaining question on sections 16C and 16D, which are now Part IVB.

The hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), at the time of the 1996 Act, asked about the royal parks police. Section 5 of the 1996 Act, which we are renewing today, specifies that the ranks that can trigger a cordon as "any police officer of or above the rank of commander of the metropolitan police, as respects the metropolitan police district".

The same provision is made in respect of the City of London police and it also specifies

"any police officer of or above the rank of assistant chief constable of a force maintained for any other police area".

Those powers can be renewed by an officer ranked as a superintendent or higher. What rank in the royal parks police is necessary? Such parks are exactly the sort of place where such a cordon or parking restrictions might be required.

8.13 pm

Mr. Straw: I will seek to answer the points that have been raised as best I can. I am grateful to the right hon. Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke) for pointing out what appears to be a drafting subtlety in the Hansard record where A and B were transposed. That was a mocking point against myself, given the original description of the error that has led us here.

I shall go through the main points. First, the right hon. Members for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and for Bridgwater (Mr. King) asked about the time taken to bring the matter before the House. It is obviously a serious matter and we dealt with it as quickly as we could. Many articles make assertions. In the journal in question, the author of the article hit the bull's-eye but it is not a learned journal with the highest reputation. It is not avidly read on a wide scale, even by criminal law practitioners, so much so that the lawyers for the defendants in the case never took that point at all. Had they done so, the matter would probably have been resolved by the courts, rather than by this place.

Mr. Howard: Did the Home Secretary take the elementary precaution of checking that the editor of the publication is not one of his constituents?

Mr. Straw: I can guarantee that. I know all my constituents; they are engaged in higher occupations.

Many articles make many assertions. This article was drawn to the attention of the Law Officers; the member of that Department who read it made the judgment that it raised a serious point. It then came to the Home Office and my officials considered it with care. It was then considered by the Law Officers with great care. The right hon. Member for Bridgwater asked for details. For reasons that he will fully understand, such detail is not normally given about the work of the Law Officers. However, such was the care taken that the Law Officers consulted not one experienced counsel, but two separate counsel about the matter, because they—and we—wanted to be as certain as possible that the opinion that those parts of the Act were inoperative was accurate.

When issues arise, the Law Officers and departmental legal advisers may take an initial view and the matter goes to counsel for careful opinion. They might then arrive at a view that is different from that which was taken originally. There would then be nothing to bring before the House. That could easily have been true in this case. We had to achieve a balance—I think that the balance was right, but I understand the anxiety of the right hon. Member for Bridgwater—between dealing with the matter as quickly as possible and not dealing with it in haste and arriving at a judgment that turned out to be inaccurate. The House would not have thanked us if, on the basis of that article, we had rushed in with an inadequate consideration of what may be a very discrete issue, but one that is also rather complicated. It might have turned out that we had wasted everyone's time because we had acted on poor advice. I wanted to be certain that the advice that we received was robust. Having received that advice, we did everything necessary in order to come back to the House as quickly as possible.

Although I could have dealt with the matter in a written question, I was clear that it was of such importance that I should make an announcement to the House. The other factor that we had to take into account—it was a matter of one or two days—was ensuring that we were clear as to the decisions of the Director of Public Prosecutions in the case of the prosecution that would then be rendered otiose.

[Mr. Straw]

My hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe) and other hon. Members asked about the position of the European convention on human rights. The right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald asked me why we took a view that was different from that of the Lord Chief Justice.

Mr. Tom King: The Home Secretary has gone to some trouble to respond to my point and it is only courteous to say so. However, I do not think that I am the only Member of the House who finds his explanation quite unconvincing. It does not seem to advance us at all. Is it not correct that the point was that the renewal and the continuance related to parts I to V inclusive? However, when part II was deleted, the fact had to be mentioned that it was parts I, III, IV and V, but parts IVA and IVB also had to be mentioned. It was as complicated as that; I cannot understand why it took 16 days to work it out.

Mr. Straw: I am sorry that the right hon. Gentleman does not accept my explanation. I had no interest whatever in delaying the matter. I recognised the urgency of the matter and paid personal attention to it. I wanted the advice as quickly as possible. We received that advice as quickly as the Law Officers could produce it. However, I have also explained that, if it had been an obvious point, some of us might have spotted it. No one spotted it—not even the best legal brains in the House; not the Ministers responsible, including myself. No one spotted it—except the author of the article. I have done my best to satisfy the right hon. Gentleman. I am sorry that I did not succeed. We acted as fast as we could in the circumstances.

In the time available, I shall deal with some other points raised in the debate. One relates to the question of incompatibility and why I have come to my present view. However, before I deal with that point, I must pick up on the comments of the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), who tweaked me about the fact that Home Secretaries occasionally take a different view from that of the courts. I did not particularly want to make this an ad hominem point, but I have the highest regard and respect for the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Bingham—and I am sure that my opinion is shared universally in the House.

The Lord Chief Justice would be the first to say that he is not the supreme court of the land, nor is he the sovereign Parliament. I can think of many occasions when he has come to a view that is different from that of the Secretary of State for the Home Department of the day, and an equal number of occasions when decisions of the court of appeal and the divisional court—in which the then Lord Chief Justice has sat—have been overturned by the Appellate Committee.

I can think of a current extradition case where the view of the divisional court was overturned by the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords, and the Appellate Committee then came to a different view from that of a previous Appellate Committee which heard the matter only a month or so before. These matters are not over until they are over.

I was asked for the reasons why we have come to the view that the provisions are compatible with the European convention on human rights. This should not be viewed by the Appellate Committee of the other place as a skeleton argument that will be advanced there; this is simply my explanation. There are many provisions in our law where the burden of proof is reversed. Article 6.2 of the convention does not prohibit absolutely a reversal of the burden of proof: it requires instead a balancing of the interests of the defendant and those of society. The jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights recognises that, where reasonable and justifiable, the state may impose a burden of proof on the defendant.

I remind all my hon. Friends who have practised in the lower courts that we often had to wrestle with this question when those whom we represented or prosecuted were charged with an offence under section 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act 1953. Those of us who once practised in those courts will remember that section 1(1) of the Act states:

"Any person who without lawful authority or reasonable excuse, the proof whereof shall lie on him, has with him in any public place any offensive weapon shall be guilty of an offence".

That was a decision by Parliament that has stood the test of time. For good reasons—and in rather interesting parallel circumstances—it was decided that the burden of proof would rest with the defendant rather than with the prosecution.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) asked whether, in the matter that will go before the Appellate Committee, section 16B will be appealable as well as section 16A. That has not been determined finally. In any event, the issue before the court amounts to the same thing. In practice, I am advised that it amounts to a distinction without a difference. The divisional court took no issue in respect of sections 16A and 16B.

The right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) asked for some details about when we propose to introduce new legislation. It is likely that the present Prevention of Terrorism Act will have to be renewed next March. We will be very careful to ensure that the renewal orders are in order—although that is almost an invitation to the gods to ensure that they are not. It is probably an unwise promise to make—particularly from this Bench.

Without anticipating the Loyal Address, I have made it clear that it is our intention to lay legislation before the House and the other place to put on the statute book permanent counter-terrorist provisions, which will do away with the difficulties that the right hon. Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke) faced in finding the various bits of legislation.

The right hon. Member for Bridgwater asked what would have happened if terrorist incidents had taken place and the provisions had not been in force. I have never disguised from the House the fact that I regarded the matter as an error with potentially serious consequences. However, it is important to put it into perspective. In the circumstances of a major terrorist incident, such as the right hon. Gentleman described, charges under sections 16A and B would be unlikely to arise. The charges would relate to causing explosions, conspiracy to cause explosions and so on.

With regard to the cordon powers, a point raised by other right hon. and hon. Members, until those powers were taken in the Prevention of Terrorism (Additional Powers) Act 1996, the police used certain common law powers, as I made clear yesterday, and they would have used those powers again.

With one exception—the issue of the royal parks police—I believe that I have answered each of the questions raised by right hon. and hon. Members. The police do not have powers under section 16D. Anti-terrorist police provision is provided by the Metropolitan police throughout the London parks. The royal parks are not a cordon-free zone. That was anticipated by the draftsmen.

Mr. Howard: I am puzzled by one of the Home Secretary's answers, but the fault may be mine. He said that other powers were available to the police during the period when, as we now know, the powers that we are debating this evening were not available to them, but surely the police thought that those powers were available to them? Therefore the police would have used not the other powers—less satisfactory, but available—but the powers in question.

If there had been the threat of a major terrorist attack or plans for such an attack, in the course of which the police would normally use these powers, and if the powers had been used in good faith by the police, not knowing that they were not valid, those planning the major terrorist attack would have had to be released. That is the point made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King).

Mr. Straw: I do not disagree with the right hon. and learned Gentleman's point. I was responding to a rather different point that the right hon. Member for Bridgwater had made with regard to major terrorist incidents. I have never disguised the fact that, although the powers are not used often, the omission is serious. That is the reason for the debate. The right hon. and learned Gentleman knows, as the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed pointed out, that there are many other powers on the statute book. This has been a bipartisan debate, but if the powers were essential when we required anti-terrorist legislation, why were they not on the statute book until—

Mr. Howard: There is a simple answer. The powers were put on the statute book because I asked the police whether they needed to have their armoury strengthened in order to counter terrorism more effectively. That is why they were put there.

Mr. Straw: I know that. I remember the debate and I supported the right hon. and learned Gentleman, with the usual active support from the Back Benches.

My last point concerns the Human Rights Act 1998. The debate has been an interesting excursion into the kind of issues that may arise under that Act. The right hon. and learned Gentleman said that the country would live to regret the day that it put the legislation on the statute book. The right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald said the same.

However, that was not the view of the official Opposition when the Act came through the House. On Third Reading, they said:

"Although we have opposed aspects of the Bill"— which were put in proper order as a result of a good Committee and Report stage on the Floor of the House—

"we now wish it well and hope that it will be implemented effectively, to the benefit of the citizenry as a whole."—[Official Report, 21 October 1998; Vol. 317, c. 1362.]

On 21 October 1998, the Opposition wished the Human Rights Act well.

Perhaps that is another change of policy in a matter of a few months, not as a result of a change of leadership of the Conservative party, which as far as I recall has stayed the same, but a change of opinion among members on the Front Bench. We shall live and learn.

I thank the House for the way in which it has dealt with this issue.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That the draft Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order 1999, which was laid before this House on 23rd June, be approved.

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 118(6) (Standing Committees on Delegated Legislation).

Contracting Out

That the draft Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Highway Functions) Order 1999, which was laid before this House on 26th May, be approved.—[Mr. Mike Hall.]

Question agreed to.

Nut Allergies

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Mike Hall.]

8.31 pm

Mr. Edward Davey (Kingston and Surbiton): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise the issue of nut allergies and labelling, which is particularly appropriate given today's debate on food policy.

My attention was first brought to this issue by a constituent, Mrs. Heather Forrester. Her son James has a peanut allergy, and it was due to his story and his mother's concerns about the inadequacies of the current labelling regime that I requested this debate. However, in the short time since this debate was granted, we have witnessed yet another tragedy—the death of the young athlete, Ross Baillie. His funeral today brings added poignancy to tonight's discussion.

I am sure that the Minister will want to join me in sending sincere condolences to the family and friends of Ross Baillie. That talented young man was is in prime physical condition. Last year, he broke the Scottish record for the 100 m hurdles at the Commonwealth games in Kuala Lumpur.

When a fit, gifted young athlete like Ross dies because of a few bites of a chicken sandwich, it is surely our duty to ask whether his death and others like it could have been avoided. We need to ask whether actions that the House has the power to take could help to prevent such tragedies in the future.

Like my constituent, James Forrester, Ross Baillie was aware of his allergy, and was always extremely careful. But, with the seemingly ever-increasing use of nuts in food, even careful, responsible adults can be caught out, sometimes fatally.

I know that the Minister is aware of this issue. He showed his commitment to tackling it by launching the catering awareness campaign in November 1997. He should know that there is much more to be done. Having tried awareness campaigns, it is time to get tough. We must work with manufacturers and retailers, and be realistic about what can work and what will not work. I do not believe that the Minister thinks that enough has been done, and I hope that he will tell us that he intends to go further.

The first and most important issue involves the catering industry—restaurants, cafés and take-aways. At the moment, unpackaged food, most of which is sold by the catering industry, is completely unregulated. As the food is not bought in a package, the labelling regime for pre-packed foods by definition does not apply. There has been little or no attempt to find other ways to provide consumers with the necessary information. The policy problem is clear. How should we convey information about the presence of allergens—nuts and so on—when the food product is unlabelled?

The Government were right to start tackling this problem by raising awareness. Chefs and waiters must understand the severity of the problem. Tiny traces of nuts in a dish can induce life-threatening seizures. Catering staff should be able to inform customers of the ingredients of every menu item. But the question for the Minister is this: does he really think that his awareness campaign has gone far enough? Should we not be doing much more?

I should be fair to the Minister. On 18 May, in a letter to me, he admitted, when assessing the success of his own information campaign, that "we know that many recipients effectively ignored the information and that we did not reach some outlets at all".

Presumably, the Minister believes that we do need to consider other measures, and I want to suggest a few to him this evening.

At present, there are no regulations, or even codes of practice, governing what menus should say about the contents of different dishes with respect to allergens. A few restaurants voluntarily say on their menus that a meal contains nuts, but they are still the exception rather than the rule. Indeed, more restaurants manage to say whether a meal is suitable for vegetarians or vegans. In the case of allergens such as nuts, informing customers can be a matter of life and death. I do not think that we can rely on voluntary action.

How could a code of practice work? I think that the Government should issue strict rules, under food standards and safety laws. Such a code of practice could cover all severe allergies, not just allergies to nuts. The rules could cover menu information, good practice in the kitchen and staff training. The code of practice could include information about how caterers could find out whether their raw materials contained allergens. I should be grateful if the Minister said whether he was prepared to consider introducing such a code of practice; but can he at least assure me that he will begin consultations with the catering industry?

In his letter of 18 May, the Minister suggested that nut-free menus wold be difficult to introduce, because food could become accidentally contaminated. He argued that requiring nut-free labelling would be very difficult unless there were a complete ban on nuts. I understand the point that he was making, but I do not accept his conclusion. Certainly, a code of practice will need to be drawn up carefully to ensure that it is workable, but I cannot believe that it is impossible to produce an effective and practical code. Indeed, I think that the Minister's Department has an obligation to do so, given the importance of the issue.

Some who object to the idea of a code of practice argue that this is a question of individual responsibility, and that it should be up to allergy sufferers to ask about ingredients. Individual responsibility is important, but that approach alone—which has effectively been Government policy so far—has been shown to have its limitations. Our constituents, when going out for a meal, may check with the waiter whether a meal contains nuts; but, unless the staff have been properly trained, allergy sufferers cannot be confident about the replies that they are given. That is borne out by experience.

The latest newsletter of the Anaphylaxis Campaign cites two cases of allergy sufferers who made specific, careful requests of catering staff in regard to ingredients, received assurances that the meals involved were nut free, and then suffered severe allergic reactions. Both those people have taken legal action, and one has been successful in an out-of-court settlement. A successful action for negligence would, however, have been scant comfort if the reaction had resulted in death.

Surely such cases demonstrate the limitations of placing the emphasis solely on the sufferer, and the limitations of awareness programmes. I believe that they also show that a tough approach would be in the interests of the catering industry. A strong code of practice would force the industry to become more aware of the problem, but it could also save individual caterers thousands of pounds in costs and compensation claims. In this instance, Government intervention would help both the consumer and business.

I note that regulations covering the identification of genetically modified foods in restaurants have been introduced quickly. Surely the same should apply to allergens such as nuts.

The second substantive issue on which I should like to press the Minister is the labelling of packaged foods. He will know that the labelling regime is widely criticised because of its failure to deal appropriately with allergens. Although in practice most manufacturers and retailers now go far beyond the requirements of the labelling regime, I hope that he will agree that the regime still needs changing.

The problem is the so-called 25 per cent. rule, which says that manufacturers do not have to list components of compound ingredients in which a component makes up less than 25 per cent. of the food. That might be reasonable for most component ingredients; but when part of the component is an allergen—such as a peanut—to which people may be hypersensitive, the 25 per cent. rule is clearly wrong.

The Minister will know that the European Commission has been seeking views, in a draft proposal, on amending the European Union directive to remove the 25 per cent. rule for allergens; but he will also know that progress has stopped, and that there is unlikely to be further action by the Commission. Will the Minister therefore raise the issue at the next Council of Ministers, so that fresh life might be breathed into the draft proposal? Will he also undertake to write to Ministers in other EU countries to ask for their support to fast-track the draft proposal?

The third issue that I should like to raise is so-called defensive labelling, which is the practice that some food manufacturers and retailers have adopted to protect themselves—of labelling everything as "may contain nuts". In that way, they seek to give themselves a type of insurance policy in relation to allergy sufferers. Such labelling certainly ensures that people are warned about nut ingredients, but it is completely the wrong approach.

For a start, defensive labelling is itself dangerous, as it devalues labelling information. People also soon realise that it is simply an insurance policy, particularly when the food seems very unlikely to contain nuts, so that they begin to lose faith in the labelling regime. Moreover, such a blanket approach is very unfair to allergy sufferers, as it unnecessarily restricts the choice of food available to them. As I said, I know that the Minister shares my concerns, and I should like to pay tribute to him for the way in which he has worked with the industry to try to curb that practice.

It is right to acknowledge the work that has been done by manufacturers and by their various trade bodies, such as the Food and Drink Federation, which has developed guidance for its members setting out minimum good practice standards for the handling of products containing severe allergens. Although I am told that there has been a reduction in the use of defensive labelling strategies, today the question is whether more could be done, with manufacturers and retailers, to make it possible to label more products as nut free.

I appreciate that there are genuine problems in giving such guarantees; not least is the difficulty of cross-contamination, whereby food production lines are used both for foods containing nuts and for those that are nut free. I am told by the industry that it is not economically viable to have dedicated facilities for nut-free products. Yet I am sure that industry could be encouraged to do more, and could be shown that it is profitable to do so. For example, one company—Kinnerton Confectionary—has already recognised the market opportunity and decided to produce children's products on dedicated nut-free lines.

How could the Government help in that? First, I believe that the Government must continue to spread awareness among manufacturers and press for the complete implementation of industry-designed guidelines. However, there is also a role for the Government in spreading best practice, as various manufacturers will be trying new ways to deal with cleansing production equipment, and other firms will have found ways in which different lines can be dedicated to nut-free products without damaging their wider range. Those experiences could be shared, so that more products are available and labelled as nut free.

I have not had time today to deal with many other aspects of the issue—such as the need for better information for allergy sufferers themselves, perhaps in a Government leaflet. We also need more allergy centres, where sufferers can be properly diagnosed and counselled. There is also a need for Epipens to be more widely available, so that, when people are caught out and suffer an allergic reaction, they can be treated quickly.

I hope that today's debate will have helped to focus attention on the need for major improvements in the provision of information on allergens to consumers. I hope that the experiences of my constituent, and the tragic death of Ross Baillie, will spur the Minister to do more, and to build on his record of action so far.

8.45 pm

The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Jeff Rooker): I congratulate the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) on introducing an important subject. I accept that he had obtained tonight's debate before the tragic death of Ross Baillie.

Bearing in mind that this is only a short debate, let me take the unusual step of giving the hon. Gentleman my conclusions before putting some details on the record. I agree with everything he said. There is scope for industry to do more, and I am certainly prepared to consider going beyond guidelines and producing a code of practice.

I take seriously everything that he said about the fact that, with the agreement of the catering industry, we have managed to introduce practical legislation for catering on genetically modified organisms. It will come into force on 19 September, following a couple of rounds of consultation last year and early this year. In my view, if we can legislate for GMOs, we ought to be able to do so for nuts, too. I am not threatening or promising legislation. If it is practical for the industry to inform customers and to train manufacturers to know what ingredients they are using in respect of GMOs, it should be possible in respect of nuts.

I agree with the hon. Gentleman about the 25 per cent. rule. There is a problem that we are seeking to address through international negotiations; that is an exception that we do not consider should apply to nuts. I also agree with him about defensive labelling. I have criticised defensive labelling, which can be seen in most shops. I should like to put on record, however, the contribution of the industry. Some big confectionery manufacturers are operating nut-free lines because they cannot guarantee the complete separation of one product from another.

[Mr. Jeff Rooker]

Since I became Minister with responsibility for food, I have taken a personal interest in the matter. However, the interest did not start under the present Government. When I met Mr. David Reading, I gave him a commitment that I would treat the matter as seriously as my predecessor, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Soames), rightly did. Therefore, I was able to launch with some commitment the campaign for awareness in the catering sector. Although I was sometimes criticised by people who were ignorant of these matters, I recall that, as I went from studio to studio that morning, two individuals—a broadcaster and a sound technician—told me, "Someone in my family is affected by this. It is more widespread than you think." That is absolutely true and we have to take the matter extremely seriously.

There are too many deaths. There is more of the allergy about. We are checking into whether that is due to people's sensitivity or to the wider use of nuts, and we are funding research into the issue. It is not a matter of banning products, but of raising awareness. I have asked myself whether GM technology could remove the genes that cause the allergy, but it is more complicated than that. Technology has been used to good effect in the far east to deal with allergies to rice.

It is a matter not of looking to ban foods, but of looking for a solution through investigation. The Ministry spends just over £1 million on research. Several projects are under way, and there are bids for some new ones under our food standards and safety programme for next year. A number of groups are involved in addition to the Government and the catering industry, and there is more work to be done.

We have to revisit our expenditure on, and commitment to, the campaign, which involved contacting 200,000 establishments. Obviously, some people took the matter seriously, whereas others put the leaflets and posters in the bin and treated them as junk mail. The issue has to be revisited.

About one in 200 young children may be at risk of developing a life-threatening sensitivity to peanuts and nuts. In our population, that is a substantial number of people, so we cannot afford to be complacent. We need effective and practical labelling provisions and other measures. The Department of Health is taking the matter seriously. A few days ago, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health laid regulations, which came into effect on 7 June, designating the allergy as a medical speciality in its own right for the first time, which means that consultants can be appointed. A big contribution can be made in that area.

The catering industry is vastly complex. I have referred to the catering awareness campaign, launched in 1997. We sent out 200,000 information packs. At the annual meeting of the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health later this year, we shall discuss how the campaign has gone and seek ways to promote a "Be allergy aware" message throughout the industry. Some action is planned, and we shall be doing work with the industry and the enforcement officers at the conference in Bournemouth on getting the message across.

We shall also be meeting the anaphylaxis campaign, and the university and college caterers in July. Bearing in mind recent tragedies, we have to reinforce the message to caterers who deal specifically with young people in the further and higher education sector, and get across to them the seriousness of the issue. We also have meetings planned with representatives of large restaurant chains. With people eating out more than ever, it is in their interests to do everything that they can. We have the example of practical rules for GMO information in non-packaged foods, although the measure is not yet in force.

We have to pursue the issue of defensive labelling, which is an unsatisfactory lawyer's response. The British Retail Consortium has produced guidelines setting out good practice. We shall pursue the issue with the Institute of Grocery Distribution labelling group. We want to minimise the "may contain" tendency. Those words are not acceptable. We have to find imaginative ways to work in harmony with the industry to get the message across. It is not in the industry's interests to be seen to be lackadaisical or thought to be not taking the matter seriously.

There are moves in Brussels to amend the 25 per cent. rule for severe allergens. We have done a lot of work in this country on food intolerance, which we are sharing with our European partners. We are encouraging them to understand the seriousness of the issue. The 25 per cent. rule should go as soon as possible. There are problems with food sold loose, food sold at catering establishments and the 25 per cent. rule. We are tackling each of those systematically, in addition to our contribution to research projects.

I agree with the hon. Gentleman's points about getting the message across. I do not want to be over-critical of broadcasters, but they have a role to play. I was interviewed recently when promoting MAFF's research food safety budget for 2000-01, which will be the first year of the Food Standards Agency budget. One of the many projects relates to food intolerance and food allergy. I was criticised by an interviewer on an important daily early-morning food-related programme, who asked why we were spending all that money on an issue that was not serious. I had to point out with care and some force that it is a serious, life-threatening issue and people die. We feel that we can take measures to make the problems avoidable.

The media can help. This is not a food faddist issue, and is not a matter of the nanny state. A serious medical condition has been identified. We do not know all the answers, which is why we are spending money on research. We are not concerned only with nut allergies, although I am dealing with peanuts in particular. There is other food intolerance involving, for example, some dairy products, to which we must attend.

I do not know why such allergies are identified today when they were not 20 or 30 years ago when I was younger. They may have been around, but not been identified. People may have died or suffered serious injury without identification of the cause. With the advantage of biotechnology, we have more knowledge today.

There is no excuse for inadequate labelling where such products are deliberately added. We must ensure that the labelling is clear. I have occasionally made purchases for people with a peanut allergy. One can search shelf after shelf of confectionery, only to find in the small print the words "May contain nuts" or "Contains nuts". Few specialist products are around, so niche markets exist in the food industry.

I freely admit that the resignation of the Commission in Brussels has caused considerable difficulties with regard to the labelling of GM additives and flavourings, GM animal feedstuff labelling and the 25 per cent. rule. Commissioners have reappointed themselves, only to say that they cannot take any major decisions because they are not really the Commission. Now that the European elections are out of the way, we shall be taking action in Brussels via the parliamentary committees to encourage them to put pressure on the Commission. This is not an issue of great moment between parties or political ideologies, and it should not have to await the appointment of the new Commission, which is some months away.

I contacted food manufacturers and retailers after the 1997 food intolerance conference to ask them to improve their quality control procedures, and some have taken action. We want to do more to encourage them to go for nut-free lines, rather than have the present uncertainty about whether lines can be cleaned of all nut traces. Supermarkets should be embarrassed to have on their bread and cake counters—particularly the bread counters—freshly-baked produce from the store which contains no nuts whatever, yet which has labels, usually in scrawly handwriting, saying "May contain nuts". That is slipshod quality control, and it is anti-consumer and anti-choice for the customer; such slipshod supermarkets should be avoided because they are not taking the issue seriously. That is inefficient, anti-consumer, defensive labelling. I deplore that, as I have no doubt does the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Edward Davey: The Minister is being extremely helpful and I thank him for that, but may I press him on one issue on which he touched at the beginning of his remarks? He said that he is not threatening or promising legislation, but does he intend to consult the catering industry on a code of practice and on regulations, and over what timetable?

Mr. Rooker: The short answer is yes. I shall certainly consult on a code of practice and take that forward. Whether that would lead later to regulation, I am not in a position to say. An effective code of practice which will raise awareness, so that the industry takes responsibility, may be sufficient. I can now tell the catering industry and the rest—as I could not in 1997—that we have succeeded in the practical regulation of GMOs, and the industry has gone along with that. We spent a long time consulting on it. The technology means that there is no difference between the tracing and checking of products for GMOs and other products. We shall take the issue forward to see whether a code of practice rather than guidelines would be beneficial and practical, to which we can give impetus.

I am in no way being slipshod or backsliding. I take the matter seriously and I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising it. It is important that I am able to say to the industry, "These matters are being raised in Parliament. They are not fads of MAFF Ministers or officials who are seeking further regulation on the industry. Members of Parliament who represent their constituencies and raise issues in the public interest on the Floor of the House of Commons are raising these issues, and they want answers. At some point, I or other Ministers must come back and account for what we are doing."

In that respect, I can assure the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton that I will keep him and the others who have raised the issue with me fully informed of what we are doing.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Nine o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 25 June 1999

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

Health Products

9.33 am

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): I wish to present a petition on behalf of 77 of my constituents, headed by Susan Walters of Back to Nature, of Cornwalls place, High street, Buckingham, as part of the petition of Consumers for Health Choice, the Health Food Manufacturers Association and the National Association of Health Stores. The petition declares:

We believe that the Government proposals which give the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) virtually unlimited powers to classify safe products as medicines, are wrong. This would mean that the MCA could remove at a stroke products that are vital to the good health of many consumers and are currently sold under the Food Law. This is an abuse of the democratic process and a denial of freedom of choice. We actively seek the creation of a new law appropriate to the special needs of safe, natural health products.

The petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urge the Secretary of State for Health to grant an immediate moratorium from the Government and the MCA that will prevent them from declaring these safe products to be medicines except on the grounds of illegal claims for safety.

To lie upon the Table.

Innovation and Enterprise

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

9.34 am

The Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Ian McCartney): Good morning, Madam Speaker. I welcome the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) to his Front-Bench duties as shadow Department of Trade and Industry spokesman. I look forward to future debates and discussions with him in this forum and during Question Time, and perhaps in Standing Committee. This is the first time that there has been a shadow spokesperson to whom I can speak eyeball to eyeball. If the trend continues, the House may have to provide a couple of high chairs.

Today's debate is on innovation and enterprise. I shall set that in context, in case the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton has forgotten the situation before the last general election, and I shall set out the Government's positive and progressive agenda in partnership with business and the enterprising parts of the economy.

We inherited from the previous Government a boom-and-bust economy, with a company going bust every three minutes of every working day. Interest rates reached 15 per cent. and stayed there for more than a year. We underwent the longest recession in the second half of the century. A million jobs were lost in manufacturing. Unemployment peaked and remained at more than 3 million for a considerable period. More than 1 million home owners were in negative equity. We were a nation with no confidence in our economic future.

Against that background, the Government have spent the past two years developing macro-economic strategies and micro-economic policies to show our commitment to innovation and enterprise in the economy generally, and in British business in particular. I am happy to have an opportunity this morning to set out, together with my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, the Government's robust policies for achieving those goals. Those policies have been developed not by Ministers in isolation, but with industry, on behalf of industry and for industry. Consequently, they will succeed.

The Government believe that only by fostering a strong entrepreneurial business culture can we create the wealth that we need to improve everyone's quality of life. That goal will not be achieved just with words and good intentions. Only by creating wealth can we tackle social exclusion and poverty, solve our social problems, and build and expand public services such as the national health service and our education service.

Governments do not create wealth. Only businesses and the people who work in them can do that. However, business will succeed only if we foster a spirit of enterprise in our society and help those who run or work in businesses to seize their opportunities. We must work in partnership with businesses, higher education, trade unions and local authorities to create a culture of enterprise and innovation.

We have discarded the uncritical laissez-faire philosophy of the previous Conservative Government. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton was proud to wear the badge of the laissez-faire strategy, and I think that he still wears it. We believe that the Government have an important part to play in ensuring that those with the will to succeed have a fair chance. We can do that by creating a supportive and stable economic environment, by helping the academic and business community to exploit knowledge to everyone's advantage, and by helping to promote an entrepreneurial culture in the United Kingdom and across the European Community.

[Mr. Ian McCartney]

The Government's policies to create a stable macro-economic framework are already paying dividends. Inflation and interest rates are at their lowest for more than 20 years. Employment has increased by more than 400,000. Long-term unemployment has fallen by 50 per cent. and youth unemployment has been halved. Industrial harmony is in evidence, with only 23,000 man-days per month lost due to industrial action since the election, compared with 100,000 in the last year of the Conservative Government.

We recognise that the level of the pound is causing some difficulties for exporters, but we must not over-emphasise the issue of sterling. Manufacturers across Europe are struggling as a result of the global downturn. Thankfully the latest survey suggested that things are starting to improve for our manufacturers, and yesterday the pound was at its lowest level for two years against the dollar.

Since coming into office, the Government have moved decisively to encourage both new businesses and the enterprise investment culture. We intend to do more to give all who create wealth a greater stake in the wealth that they generate, which is why we introducing a new programme of shares for all in which employees will be able, for the first time, to buy shares in their own companies from their pre-tax income. Every employer will be able to match, tax free, what the employee buys.

Next year, we will introduce a new enterprise management incentive, which will provide help for smaller companies with potential for rapid growth that are seeking to recruit or retain key personnel by offering them equity remuneration. The scheme will allow tax relief for incentives of up to £100,000—but there is more to supporting business and encouraging innovation and enterprise than tax measures, important though those are.

That is why we will be setting up the Small Business Service in April next year. The new body will have three main functions: improving the quality and coherence of Government support programmes, helping firms to meet the demands of regulation and, most important of all, acting as a strong voice for small business at the heart of Government. Next week, we will be issuing a consultation document setting out our proposals in detail.

I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, who has been the champion of that proposal in the Government, and the co-ordinator across Departments. He knows all about small businesses and being enterprising and successful, and having him on the Front Bench has paid dividends. We are the first Government to bring people from the enterprise culture into government at policy-making level to manage the work of the Government day to day and to promote our strategy on the economy in support of innovation, enterprise and the development of the small and medium-sized enterprise culture.

The Government cannot meet all the needs of small firms, nor should we attempt to try, but we want to ensure that Government support programmes offer a ladder of opportunity for small businesses at all stages of development—from the initial conception of a business idea, through start-up, taking on employees for the first time, and managing growth and movement into new markets. We also need to ensure that business is not constrained by other Government action, especially in relation to regulation.

That is why we announced a tougher approach to regulatory control in the modernisation White Paper in March. For the first time, we are compiling a forward programme of regulatory proposals that will enable Ministers to decide collectively on how to minimise regulatory impacts and burdens, and how to manage and reduce the cumulative impact of regulation. That is being done in partnership, involving the stakeholders at each stage in agreeing on whether regulation is required in the first place, determining whether a regulation is viable, considering what the impact of regulation will be and agreeing on how best to introduce it non-disruptively.

By listening to business, we have become aware that too many small United Kingdom businesses with good ideas have problems finding affordable finance. Small business people are workers without capital. They have intellectual capital—their ideas—but there is a disconnection somewhere and many entrepreneurs are unable to gain access to capital to help them to develop and grow their businesses.

The United Kingdom venture capital industry is the largest in the European Union, and it is growing. However, when we compare this country with the United States, very little venture capital goes into early-stage and technology-based investment. The Government are looking at ways of stimulating venture capital investment in such businesses.

Mr. Alan Duncan (Rutland and Melton): Does the Minister accept that one of the best ways of encouraging small businesses is to reduce the social costs that they face in their infancy? Although assisting them with gaining access to capital would be helpful, the removal of those social costs would achieve far more.

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman is masking his laissez-faire views; he is obviously embarrassed by them. By reducing social costs, he means removing people's right to be paid a national minimum wage and their rights to take paid holidays for the first time, to investment in their skills and to workplace development. He should realise that the small business community does not want to be smeared by the Conservative party as a poor employer; it wants to be, and in the main is, a good employer.

The Government, working together with the small business community, have introduced a national minimum wage in a non-disruptive way. It has become one of the most popular policies with small businesses in Britain because, for the first time in the past 20 years, they can enter the marketplace in the sure and certain knowledge that they are competing on the basis of their ability to produce good-quality goods and services without worrying that some firm down the road is undercutting them by paying workers £1 or £1.20 an hour. That was the hallmark of the previous Conservative Government.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: I thought that that would get someone to their feet.

Mr. Bercow: I am grateful to the Minister of State for giving way. Of one thing we can be sure: he certainly cannot hide the fact that he is the left-wing troglodyte in his Department. Is he aware that the Secretary of State said in his speech to British Chambers of Commerce on 3 June that he intended to make three significant statements on deregulation in June. He regarded that speech as the first; what are the other two?

Mr. McCartney: If the hon. Gentleman had been at the conference, as I was, he would know that my right hon. Friend set out the framework of the Government's strategy on small and medium-sized businesses and the issues surrounding regulation and deregulation. I will outline that strategy in the remainder of my speech. My right hon. Friend's speech was received by the small business community with acclamation; indeed, when Ministers travel across the country to discuss such matters, we are all received with acclamation. Thank God small businesses have a Government who believe in and promote business. Our policy is not to close a business down every three minutes of every working day.

Let me make the hon. Gentleman an offer: next time I attend a business community event, I will look to see whether he is in the audience. I will invite him to join me and co-operate in promoting entrepreneurship in the British business community—

Mr. Bercow: I promise to stand up.

Mr. McCartney: I thought that the hon. Gentleman was already standing up.

Mr. Geraint Davies (Croydon, Central): Before my right hon. Friend was so rudely interrupted, he was talking about venture capital Although our venture capital industry is the most developed in Europe, does not it have some way to go? The vast majority of the venture capital industry in Britain is focused on re-engineering large enterprises through management buy-outs and leverage buy-outs. Its United States counterpart is much more diversified and focuses on new, high-tech small business enterprise growth.

The challenge for the venture capital industry in Britain is to achieve wider diversification to take advantage of the emergent opportunities in a new Europe and the single market. Unless we get our act together, there will be danger of a competitive threat from United States operators.

Mr. McCartney: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. I have been setting out the Government's strategy for turning round the Titanic that is the venture capital industry, successful as it is. The industry needs to play an effective, hands-on role with the small and medium-sized business community. It is also crucial that the Government have strategies for working with the financial community and the small business community, and bringing them together to deal with the equity gap in respect of technology-based investments and other investments which are important in achieving growth in such businesses.

The enterprise fund is a £180 million Government fund designed to increase the availability of finance for SMEs, particularly those caught in equity gap, as my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) said. New funds will be used to lever-in private finance and we will work with the private sector to maximise our resources and expertise. Early discussions have indicated support in principle from several major United Kingdom and European institutions.

We expect the fund to be operational by the end of the year. It will provide four key elements of assistance: continued support through the small firms loan guarantee scheme; support for regional venture capital funds specialising in the provision of small-scale equity to potential businesses, which is the area in which my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central is keen for us to work; a national venture capital scheme to support early-stage, high-technology businesses, for which an additional £20 million was promised in the previous Budget; and flexible support for innovative proposals from the finance industry to meet the needs of fast-growing businesses and ensure that our SMEs have access to the widest possible range of funding options.

I shall now discuss ways in which we can promote an entrepreneurial culture. The Government can also foster a broadly based culture of enterprise so that people of all ages and from all backgrounds have the desire, confidence and skills to exploit an opportunity to turn new ideas into successful products and services—creating a society where people are willing to take risks and are rewarded. The Government will help to do that by supporting a national enterprise campaign led by British Chambers of Commerce. The campaign is designed to ensure that entrepreneurs are valued for the jobs that they provide and the opportunities that they bring, not just envied for the money that they make.

Young people's understanding of business is crucial to the creation and development of businesses in the future. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Government as a whole strongly support the young enterprise programme, which has been very effective in developing that understanding among schoolchildren. So impressed are we by young enterprise's achievements that we want to extend that understanding and the opportunity to development entrepreneurial skills among higher education students. Therefore, from October, 16 universities will participate in a scheme setting up 55 student companies.

Unlike the previous Government, we do not believe this country can compete as a low-wage, low-skill economy. We believe that the way forward is to produce high-value goods and services, but we will do that only if we raise the skills level of all our people—if we can bridge the skills gap and ensure that everyone has a higher level of skills than they previously needed.

Our strategy will not ensure a job for life; it is designed to ensure employment for life. The principle behind our drive is that people should be in a position to be employed for life because of the skills that they possess, their capacity for re-skilling and lifelong learning and their capacity to operate in an ever-changing labour market with companies that must meet constantly changing global demands. We need to be involved in and to develop that process.

[Mr. McCartney]

When the Government came to office, one in three workers in Britain did not receive a single minute of training during their working lives. That is our inheritance from the Conservatives. It is impossible to compete in a global marketplace with such a poor record of investment in the skills development of our nation's greatest asset—its people, the work force. It is important that we bridge that skills gap, and that we do so in a partnership consisting of the primary, secondary, higher and further education sectors, Government and industry.

Mr. Duncan: What appropriate training did the Minister have for his job?

Mr. McCartney: I almost give up when faced with such a silly question, asked by an equally silly person. The hon. Gentleman should know—[Interruption.] Well, if the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) wants to know, I spent a lifetime in work in the public and the private sectors. I was one of the first people in local government to help create a venture capital company. I was the first person to help create a single partnership between the public and private sectors. Mine was the first local authority in Britain to enter the process of inward investment. What more does the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton want to know? When I was the first Minister for inward investment, a record 600 new inward investment projects were attracted into the United Kingdom. Now what more does the hon. Gentleman want to know? I hope that the Prime Minister is listening to the debate. We are in a period when one must impress one's masters, so I thank the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton for that intervention. I ask him to make more during the debate. God almighty! Where do they find them? I got so excited I nearly lost my place, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The intellectual property of our work force has a high value. Under the Conservatives, especially in the 1980s and throughout the 1990s, efforts were made to force a strategy of removing from the labour market a huge number of skilled workers—a million in manufacturing alone. Those people lost their job and their sense of self-worth and value; the economy lost the vast reserve of knowledge that they took with them. We should never, ever allow that to happen again. The combined knowledge of our work force is a strength that we need to build on and facilitate. That is why the culture of change, in providing an infrastructure for lifelong learning opportunities, is crucial to the success of this venture.

In 1997, the university for industry was a commitment in the Labour party's election campaign. By autumn next year, it will be open for business, transforming the availability and accessibility of learning opportunities for everyone. The university for industry will target those without basic skills; those trying to improve their information technology skills; and managers of small businesses, seeking to enhance their firm's performance. We expect that, by the year 2002, more than 2.5 million people a year will be using its range of information services and 600,000 people a year will be pursuing its learning programmes.

We are also conscious of the need to find jobs for those people who have the skills, but cannot find the right initial opening. There are excellent examples throughout the country of initiatives that enhance the employability of individuals and at the same time help businesses improve their competitiveness.

One example, in whose development I have taken a keen interest, run by Liverpool university, has helped create 500 jobs, has helped 2,000 graduates find full-time employment and has helped 1,000 small businesses to become more competitive. Companies large or small will succeed in exploiting knowledge only if they are innovative in the way in which they interact with their employees and others with whom they work. It is therefore crucial that, in local labour markets, skills and knowledge are matched with the needs of local enterprises.

Companies increasingly depend on the knowledge and skills of the people in their business to gain a competitive advantage. The DTI and Department for Education and Employment "Partnerships with People" report found that companies of all sizes, from all sectors of the economy, achieved sustained success by creating shared goals in culture, by continuously improving the skills of their work force and by sharing knowledge and information.

Hewlett Packard is an example of a company that has seen its success grow by this means. Its management style rests on the belief that the contribution of its employees is the most important factor in the company's success. All employees have targets relating to the company's goals, which encourage them to put into practice innovative ideas that will benefit the company. The Government will shortly launch a £5 million partnership campaign to stimulate many more such innovative partnerships at work.

However, Government cannot solve the skills gap by themselves. Upskilling is a challenge for everyone. It has the potential to deliver great benefits. A culture of continuous improvement, in which the contributions of individuals are valued, benefits both individuals and the company. [Interruption.] Does the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) want me to give way? Does he want to make a contribution to the skills gap of Britain?

Mr. David Davis (Haltemprice and Howden): No.

Mr. McCartney: Fair enough. Perhaps he is just talking to himself. No one else would listen to him.

The DTI will shortly publish a best practice guide to help spread learning through business networks. That publication is built on partnership. The business community sat down with Ministers and officials to develop this approach. Business is feeding in ideas, and the ownership of the document will be in business itself, because it is essentially the work of business people, working together to identify best practice, sitting down with the DTI and then developing that best practice and ensuring that every enterprise in Britain has the opportunity to operate those best-practice models to improve, through business networks, opportunities for business investment and jobs growth. We want to encourage more businesses—

Mr. Geraint Davies: I am especially interested in the university for industry because some of the original ideas that gave rise to it were formed before the general election in the Labour finance and industry group, which I chair. Will there be a link between regional development agencies, which will establish regional strategies for specific industrial strengths in each region, and the university for industry, which can guide skills in the direction in which the region is moving industrially, so that training takes place and the pool of skills in a relevant area reflects the industrial strategy for that area?

Mr. McCartney: I can reassure my hon. Friend that the ideas have been the engine room of this change, and that the ideas are on-going in our extensive consultation process with the business community in each region, from which will emerge the piloting areas for each regional development agency. At every step in this regeneration of the United Kingdom's entrepreneurial culture, its business culture, its investment culture, business is working hand in hand with Government to get the maximum benefit from this process of change. It is critical that we provide local development partnerships that can affect areas of competitiveness.

I should like to refer briefly to the Wigan borough partnership. I declare a constituency interest, as a Member of Parliament for Wigan. Hon. Members can tell from the Lancashire accent—the elocution lessons did not go quite as well as I had expected.

Mrs. Angela Browning (Tiverton and Honiton): The Minister needs a bit more training.

Mr. McCartney: Perhaps I could join the lifelong learning process.

Mr. David Davis: A bit of upskilling.

Mr. McCartney: As I understand it, Scotland has many call centres because people like the Scots accent. It has a truthful and honest ring to it. I think that that is true. [Interruption.] Mr. Deputy Speaker knows what I am talking about. Indeed, we sound just like each other. I shall keep my accent, and shall not take up the suggestion of the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden of a bit of upskilling. I shall remain with what I have got and count my mercies.

Wigan borough partnership brings together TECs, chambers of commerce, business links, the careers service and the local authority. The breadth of the partnership has enabled all the stakeholders to establish a common economic vision for the future of the borough, and it adds up to real success on the ground. Through this partnership approach, Wigan borough partnership has taken the competitiveness agenda one stage further, and has made the links between physical development, skills and enterprises.

The European Union is now the UK's major market: it is a home market of more than 200 million people. If we are to make that market work, we must exploit the strengths of Europe and offer something to the global market that others cannot. Europe needs to undergo some fundamental changes in the way in which it treats business and enterprise. We need to encourage entrepreneurship in Europe by developing a European venture capital industry to match that in the United States, and by dealing with unfair taxes that distort real competition. Promoting economic reform must be an essential part of that strategy.

Europe has already come a long way, and we have a sound platform on which to build, but more progress is needed to improve the functioning of Europe's product, labour and capital markets. Europe needs to maintain the momentum of reform so that it has the necessary strength and adaptability to make job creation easier and growth more dynamic.

Building on the investment in our science base, the reach-out fund, launched on 15 June, has been jointly created by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Education and Employment in partnership with the Higher Education Funding Council for England and the Department of Education in Northern Ireland.

The fund is worth around £20 million a year. It is intended to initiate an important third stream of funding for universities, alongside research and teaching funds, to recognise the importance of working with business, and to develop the capability in universities to respond to business needs. That in turn will help to stimulate more informed demand from business for greater innovation and competitiveness. The fund will be open to all universities in England and Northern Ireland, complementing measures in Scotland and Wales.

As today's publication of the 1999 edition of the DTI's research and development scoreboard indicates, we also need to do more to encourage firms to invest in R and D. The scoreboard focuses on the important role that R and D can play as part of a company's innovation process and business strategy.

The scoreboard celebrates the great strengths we have in pharmaceuticals, aerospace and defence. It also provides graphic evidence of the determination of some of our smaller companies in investing considerable amounts in R and D—they will be the Glaxos and Intels of the future. However, it is encouraging that many large United Kingdom companies recognise the crucial part that effective R and D plays in the innovation process.

It is good to see that the UK pharmaceuticals sector still continues to lead the world on R and D investment levels as a proportion of sales. However, it is worrying that many other United Kingdom companies still invest less intensely than their overseas competitors.

The Government are acting to improve UK investment in R and D through a new tax credit to encourage small business investment in this area. That should help more than 3,000 companies to invest in R and D, and help to support at least £700 million of R and D spending among small firms.

Companies can be innovative only if they look to the future. The UK foresight programme helps them to prepare for the challenges that lie ahead by bringing people who know about markets together with people who know about technology.

The DTI is increasing its innovation budget over the next three years to some £230 million. The extra money will be used to drive forward many new and large programmes, and to promote a fundamental change in the UK's climate for innovation. For example, we are increasing the funding of the teaching company scheme. The scheme not only helps to facilitate the transfer of technology and knowledge between the science base and businesses of all sizes, especially SMEs, but provides industry-based training for graduates intending to pursue careers in business.

[Mr. McCartney]

Last year, 77 per cent. of all graduates who completed their two years in a teaching company scheme were offered permanent employment by their host company. Every one of them is likely to have been an agent of innovation and change within those companies.

We shall continue to support Shell's technology enterprise programme, under which 1,600 undergraduates undertake an eight-week project-based work placement. Last year, the student selected as the most enterprising STEP student in 1998 undertook a project in a company manufacturing chemicals and supplying the electronics industry. That important project was carried out by a woman graduate. Her work resulted in alternative materials being used in a process with significantly reduced environmental effects, and achieved recurring savings of at least £30,000 for the enterprise concerned.

To remain truly competitive, UK companies can learn from examples of business practices both at home and abroad. They need to benchmark themselves against leading businesses around the world for new ideas, new technologies and management best practice.

Mr. Bercow: The Minister said that the Government would oppose tax measures that would damage the competitiveness of British businesses. Given that the London eurobond market faces a threat to its competitive pre-eminence and to jobs from the proposed European withholding tax, will he give an unequivocal guarantee that, if that withholding tax remains unamended, the Government will veto it—I repeat, veto it?

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman knows full well that the Government are absolutely committed to ensuring that nothing—but nothing—is proposed that will damage the process of work in the City. We have said that time and again. We are getting weary of Conservative Members wanting Aunt Sallies to knock down because of their anti position on Europe and on all matters relating to Europe.

Mr. Duncan rose—

Mr. McCartney: Just a second. I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman, but I want to finish this point. I knew that Conservative Members would not be able to contain themselves, and that their anti-Europeanism would well up inside them. A few cracks are appearing in their facades and in their view about business succeeding in Europe.

The CBI "Fit for the Future" campaign is critically important to us. It aims to help business to learn about and adopt more efficient and effective business practices used by others in the United Kingdom and beyond. The campaign's mission is to achieve an increase in the number of companies engaged in the transfer of best practice. That will be done by promoting success and linking people with experience with people who want to learn, working through a network of partners and champions, and signposting valuable sources of information and advice. This is a simple and comprehensive approach in the drive towards achieving a step change in UK competitiveness. To date, 35 partner organisations—such as trade associations—and 49 leading business champions have signed up to the campaign.

Mr. Duncan: I know that the Minister is well-equipped to roll over from time to time, but will he answer the question? Does he believe that the withholding tax would or would not harm business?

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman knows that, from the Prime Minister and the Chancellor downwards, this Government will do nothing to allow the European Union, or anyone else, to damage UK business in the City. I cannot be straighter than that. The hon. Gentleman wants to acquiesce in, and agree with, his party's views, and to treat the issue as an Aunt Sally. In fact, over the past 20 years the only giving way in terms of taxation and European issues has been done by a Conservative Government.

Mr. David Davis: My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) will know the position with regard to the withholding tax. Essentially, the Europeans have given the British Chancellor an opportunity to generate proposals that will be in the interests of the financial markets in Europe, and will protect British jobs. We are waiting for our Chancellor to present those proposals. He reserves the right to use the veto if necessary, in order to protect Britain in the endgame. I really do not see the problem that the Labour party is engendering.

Mr. McCartney: The right hon. Gentleman is struggling. There is no evidence, in this or any other context, that the Government are other than four-square committed to the interests of the United Kingdom.

This Government are listened to in Europe. No one listened to the Conservative Government. Even if anyone had wanted to listen, the Conservative Government were never there. They had an empty-chair strategy. They would turn up, sign in and get on to the plane back to Britain. Then they would sit in a huff in their ministerial offices while decisions about Britain's future and a range of other matters were made. They had no positive input at all. We will take no lessons from the Conservatives about the principles of Europe, the strategy of negotiation or how this country's interests are defended in Europe. They scored nought out of 10 each time on all those issues, and so far today they have conveyed no sense of urgency in regard to the development of a policy in opposition.

Mr. Bercow: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman should not dive in too quickly. He has had numerous opportunities to inject at least a smattering of intellectual activity into the debate. I may have to stay around to establish whether there is even a chink of light on the Conservative Benches, and whether the Opposition have any sense of direction. I fear that they have not.

Does the hon. Gentleman still want me to give way?

Mr. Bercow: When I listen to the Minister's speeches, I always feel that he is pricking himself with a needle. It would be much easier if he would answer questions directly, rather than giving a long, roundabout, circumlocutory response to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan). If he will not consent to any tax measure from the European Union that is injurious to British business, will he just confirm that any such injurious measure will be vetoed, vetoed—for the third time—vetoed?

Mr. McCartney: I do not know how many times I have to tell the hon. Gentleman that the Chancellor has already successfully negotiated with our European colleagues on proposals to tackle tax evasion and protect the legitimate interests of the British financial markets. We are ahead of the game. The hon. Gentleman is talking about an old agenda. The agenda has moved on, and, as I keep saying, at last the country has a Government to whom our European colleagues listen with respect. The Chancellor's proposals are moving the agenda further forward, and there is no possibility that our financial interests will be dealt with other than in a rigorously supportive way. The hon. Gentleman has demonstrated again that the Conservatives are not just behind the game, but out of the game. His is an old party with old policies to which no one will listen.

I hope that the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton will give us some inkling of whether the Opposition have learned from their 18 long years in government, during which they dismantled the British economy. Do they recognise that, over that time, tremendous errors were made in macro-economic policy? Do they realise how much social dislocation they caused through their lack of investment in training and research and development, and their failure to involve educational establishments with the business community? Throughout the sphere of innovation and enterprise, the last Government were found wanting.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman should wait a while. He should listen to the debate. He has only been present for about 15 seconds. Well, perhaps 30 seconds. I am prone to exaggeration. [Interruption.] I knew that would get them going. The Conservatives only wake up when we make a joke. When the serious stuff starts, they switch off.

The Department of Trade and Industry has worked closely with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to create the national endowment for science, technology and the arts. NESTA will shortly announce details of its policies and programmes to support talented and enterprising individuals in science and technology, as well as the arts.

During their first two years in office, the Government have gone a long way towards ending the poverty of ambition that was prevalent under the Tories. We have gone a long way towards improving our science base, and giving people both the incentives to take risks and the rewards for taking them. We realise that there is much more to be done if United Kingdom companies are to compete in the new knowledge-driven economy, but I believe that the policies that I have outlined will help our companies to succeed at home and abroad.

This morning we shall hear a bit more of the old Tory boom and bust, but we should always remember one thing: at the next general election, the Tories will be an out-of-Europe, out-of-a-job party. They will lay to rest 3.5 million jobs in Britain because of their policies in respect of the business community. Every worker in Britain should understand that the Government's attitude to Europe and the business community puts at risk all those 3.5 million jobs, and our home market.

The Tory party is an out-of-Europe, out-of-a-job party. Ours is a party that wants to be at the heart of Europe, making decisions and leading Europe into an enterprising and innovative economy: an economy that reduces unemployment, and creates new opportunities for entrepreneurs, new job opportunities, new research and development and new markets, in Europe and elsewhere. This is a Government with a vision and a strategy, and a Government with the tenacity to see it through.

10.18 am

Mr. Alan Duncan (Rutland and Melton): I acknowledge with gratitude the warm welcome extended to me by the Minister. Let me also say on behalf of us all that it is a pleasure to see him fit and well again, and in rumbustious and entertaining form. Long may that continue. The Minister is clearly enjoying his brief, and Conservative Members will enjoy sparring with him over the coming months.

If there is one thing on which the Minister and I agree, it is that the world is really run by those who are under 5 ft 6. I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) will agree with that. I am sorry that I do not have the Minister's mellifluous Scottish accent; I am afraid that my family lost that a generation ago. I shall have to be upskilled to get it back.

I look forward to carrying out my own brief. Perhaps I should adhere to the traditions of the House, and begin by making a full declaration of my interests. They are all registered, but the modern rules are a minefield. I want to make it absolutely clear to the Minister and the House that I shall not speak on matters pertaining to the motor industry, as I retain a shareholding in a Land Rover franchise overseas. I have some interests in oil and telecommunications, also overseas. Although I think that they have no bearing whatever on United Kingdom policy, I shall declare—indeed, over-declare—them as necessary.

I am also a non-executive director of a United Kingdom-based investment fund—a private venture capital fund that will concentrate on high-tech infant companies. In as much as any declaration is required on that, I shall endeavour to comply with the rules of the House to the highest possible standard.

Just a moment ago, I was thinking that it was exactly 20 years ago that I started seeking my first permanent job, on leaving university. I joined Shell, a big and successful—massive—Anglo-Dutch corporate concern. Looking back to 20 years ago, one can but realise that, in the intervening years, much has happened in our economy. I am pleased to say that much has happened in the Labour party, too.

[Mr. Alan Duncan]

In 1979—20 years ago—when the Conservative Government first took over, the United Kingdom was a very sick economy; we were regarded as the sick man of Europe. Quite simply, we were going down the plug-hole. Trade unions were seen to be dominant and overpowerful, and strikes were reported daily in our newspapers and on television. United Kingdom inflation was probably the highest in Europe, touching 27 per cent. Amidst all that macroeconomic disaster, we saw the stifling of enterprise and the crushing of innovation.

The human spirit, however, endured. Now, we realise and appreciate much more clearly that the individual qualities of enterprise and innovation are the engine of prosperity, and that they are the justification of the capitalism that harnesses private endeavour for the public good. It took a Conservative Government more than 18 years to give enterprise and innovation the freedom that they needed to flourish.

I acknowledge, however, that the Labour party has also changed. It has been forced to admit that the previous Government were right, and that it was wrong. Indeed, the Labour party has adopted much of our language—the language of enterprise, innovation and of business. No one can deny that Labour says many of the rights things. At best, however, Labour is only halfway there: although it may have learned its lines, it does not really understand the meaning of the lines it utters.

Increasingly—particularly in the past few weeks—we have seen that, now that it is in government, Labour is schizophrenic and divided. As on other issues—such as proportional representation, Europe and welfare—it is gradually crumbling and dividing into groups composed of the old rebels—[HON. MEMBERS: "Who?"]. I am talking about Labour Members who are in the Chamber, although, on days when the House is fuller, the division between the old rebels and the new robots is much starker.

Some Labour Members actually believe in something, such as socialism, social justice, equality, redistribution, intervention and everything that goes with that.

Mr. Hilton Dawson (Lancaster and Wyre): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Duncan: I shall in a moment.

There are also those Labour Members who—I do not know in which category the hon. Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) falls—slavishly merely follow a Blairite script, with little thought and even less respect.

Mr. Dawson: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that many Labour Members are deeply committed to manufacturing industry? In his eulogy of the Conservative years, will he acknowledge that, in constituencies such as mine, the manufacturing industry was decimated during that time, and that we are still struggling to recover from that problem?

Mr. Duncan: There is no doubt that, in the difficult years of the 1950s and 1960s, the manufacturing base was undermined—so that when reality dawned and hit the United Kingdom economy, there were some very hard times. We are seeing the same process under way, although much more extremely, in the former Soviet Union and in other east European countries. Economic reality in those countries is causing great hardship as the illusion of the past is being shattered.

If the hon. Member for Lancaster and Wyre really believes in manufacturing industry, he should come clean and tell us in which economic climate he believes that manufacturing industry will flourish—I should like to talk about that in the few moments in which I have to speak. We should then, perhaps, be able to see on which side of the Labour party divide he sits. Manufacturing industry is currently having a very hard time, despite the golden economic legacy that we left the Government in 1997.

The fact is that, 20 years ago, innovation and enterprise were words that the Labour party could not even spell. I welcome the progress that Labour Members have made, but ask them to understand more than they do.

Mr. Geraint Davies: Would the hon. Gentleman be interested in knowing that the number of work days lost per month as strike days is now down to 23,000, whereas, in 1996, there were about 100,000 such days? Any suggestion that there was industrial harmony and success under the Conservatives is therefore quite false.

Mr. Duncan: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for demonstrating the extent to which the previous Conservative Government succeeded in bringing the United Kingdom into reality. I am also pleased to say that there is now a climate in which there are fewer strikes. That is our legacy, and long may it continue. I also hope that the hon. Gentleman will realise that, in a climate of increasing global competition, future strikes will cause enormous damage, as will so many of the other burdens that the Government are placing on business.

Mr. Jim Murphy (Eastwood): Will the hon. Gentleman comment on that golden economic legacy in the light of the number of business failures under the previous Government? Only five years ago, there were 20,000 more business failures each year than there are now.

Mr. Duncan: The hon. Gentleman will know very well that the Government inherited a fantastic combination of low inflation, rising tax receipts and other factors, putting us in a perfect position to compete well with our European partners. The Government seem to be doing everything possible to destroy much of that competitive advantage.

This annual debate used to be entitled the "Small Business" debate. Sweeping that subject under the carpet is perhaps an interesting indication of the Government's priorities. They are not a Government who are friendly to small business. However, small businesses are enormously important, employing about 90 per cent. of United Kingdom employees. They are also the main innovators—the seedcorn of future commercial success. In fact, enterprise is usually more about taking that first risky step—as an individual, with an idea and a plan—than about the great corporate plans of larger concerns already present on the commercial map.

The small business is the embryo of a lifetime of commercial success. Microsoft started in a garage, as did Amstrad. Small businesses are the key matter, as they are our future. They are the ones on whom we should be directing so much of our thought and policy.

Despite the language that the Government use, they still do not understand what it takes to run a business and to manage risk. Instead, they look on all business as some great sector that can—or so they think—cough up more money, assume costly social responsibilities and support the Government's continuing collectivist approach to life. Ministers have a lot to learn.

Quite often, at the root of all enterprise and innovation is one simple decision that has to be taken time and again and made at the margin, so that one small Government action might push the decision one way or the other. Often, the decision is very finely balanced, and will make a difference not only to the enterprise and its progress, but to society generally. Which issue must be decided by small businesses? It is, "Should I employ another person?"

The Opposition say that the willingness of one person to employ another is something to be encouraged and admired, and supported by creating a climate in which that is likely to happen. The Government, however, still think that it is something to be milked in the sense that employers are compelled to fulfil a wider series of social and economic obligations, so that the person who wants to take a risk and is prepared to commit his own money becomes obliged to fulfil many responsibilities that should lie elsewhere.

Those who run small businesses have to count their pennies. They have to borrow and struggle. They, perhaps, have to send the wife out to work, or live in a smaller house. Those people really have to put their lives on the line.

The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (Mr. Michael Wills): The hon. Gentleman was talking about the problems that small businesses face when trying to find the right finance, but under the Conservative Government, interest rates rose to 15 per cent. What does he think that did to small businesses?

Mr. Duncan: I admit quite openly that high interest rates did a lot of harm to small businesses and everyone else. I do not want a regime of high interest rates; I welcome the current regime of low interest rates that the Government were fortunate enough to inherit from us.

There is no doubt too that in the past, the industrial sector has been too reliant on interest-variable debt. I welcome the ability to borrow at fixed interest over several years as that is very good for business. It is a welcome development which the free market in capital has delivered over the past few years to the business community. The present Government could not have done that and will never be able to do it in such an effective way.

Mr. Jim Murphy: I listened with interest to quite a revealing insight into modern Conservative thought when the hon. Gentleman said that many small business men send their wives out to work. In my constituency, 36 per cent. of small businesses are owned and run by women. Whom do they send out to work?

Mr. Duncan: I was hoping that the level of debate would be a just little higher than that.

Mr. Geraint Davies: The hon. Gentleman suggested that the reduction in interest rates was somehow a Tory legacy. Does he accept that that is a product of the independence of the Bank of England and that when that decision was made, long-term interest rates went down overnight? Given what he said, can he confirm that, unlike many of his hon. Friends, he is in favour of the independence of the Bank of England?

Mr. Duncan: In its current role, the Bank of England must respond to economic conditions. It is responding to the economic conditions which, I repeat, his Government were fortunate enough to inherit.

The best way to encourage innovation and enterprise is simply to ensure a stable, low tax, low regulation environment for business. The Government speak that language, but deliver the opposite. There has been a massive increase in the tax burden placed on businesses since the Government were elected in 1997. They have done everything that they can to do it by stealth. They gave their promises and pledges in a way that was specifically designed so that they could be circumvented. They said that they would not increase certain rates, but they have slammed business with all sorts of other taxes, not just by stealth but by deceit.

Mr. Ian McCartney: The hon. Gentleman is completely wide of the mark. In each Budget, the Government have consistently reduced taxation. We now have a 10p starting rate for small businesses and a 20p rate of corporation tax—the lowest ever rates—and we are committed to those rates for the rest of this Parliament. We have introduced new potential taxation releases for companies that invest in research and development and capital equipment. Across the board, where taxation impacts on the viability and competitiveness of a company, the Government's strategy is to reduce it, not to increase it.

Mr. Duncan: I fear that the Minister requires some serious upskilling on tax economics. The Government may have reduced some tax rates, but they tend to go for the headline and cheat behind the scenes. A significant number of companies now have to pay their taxes quarterly. Large corporate concerns will have to pay five years' worth of tax in four years. That is a massive burden on cash flow and the financing costs of those big concerns, and represents an increase in their tax burden.

Mr. Bercow: My hon. Friend is right to educate the Minister of State in the distinction between tax rates and the tax burden. Frankly, the Minister ought really to be aware of that distinction. In considering the tax burden, does my hon. Friend agree that we ought properly to take account of the proposed climate change tax, the company car tax, the fuel tax, the vehicle excise tax, the windfall tax, the abolition of the tax credit on dividends and the huge hike in national insurance contributions? The cumulative impact of the Government's imposts is, as Sir Clive Thompson, the president of the CBI recently pointed out, to increase the tax burden on businesses by £20,000 million in the lifetime of this Parliament.

Mr. Duncan: My hon. Friend is absolutely right and proves—as if proof were needed—that he is rather more firmly rooted in real life than the Minister.

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am quite enjoying this debate. I apologise to the hon. Gentleman for failing to mention one tax—the windfall tax. We introduced an increase in tax on the profits of the privatised utilities. It has led to a huge investment in small and medium-sized companies in the private sector to take on new labour. It has enabled us to reduce by half youth unemployment and get more than 100,000 young people, who under the Tories were walking around the streets with their hands in their pockets, into work, giving them a future and a sense of self worth. We have reduced long-term unemployment by 50 per cent. as well, so one taxation increase has produced massive opportunity for the business community in Britain and helped a generation of young people and older workers who the previous Government had abandoned.

[Mr. Ian McCartney]

Mr. Duncan: I apologise to the Minister, because when I say he is not firmly rooted, I should not be so rude to the bonsai tree.

Businesses also have to cope with the national minimum wage, which some estimate will cost firms £8 billion over the lifetime of this Parliament and the working time directive, which could cost more than £6 billion and the loss of up to 200,000 jobs.

Mr. Butterfill: I am anxious not to restrict my hon. Friend's flow of rhetoric as he is making an interesting speech, but before we leave the issue of tax rates, can we look once again at the effect of the changes to advance corporation tax and the timing of the payment of tax? Does my hon. Friend agree that most investment by companies is funded out of retained profits and that, over the next two years, changes in the timing and the payment of tax will have robbed British industry of retained profits to invest? The Government do not seem to understand that.

Mr. Duncan: I am grateful to my hon. Friend as he has put that point much better than I did. He always speaks good sense on these matters and perhaps that will help the Minister upskill himself in a proper understanding of those matters.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Duncan: I must make some progress, as I have been generous in taking interventions. I shall happily take some more in a moment.

One key issue that the Minister did not touch on is the vexed question of compulsory trade union recognition. In many respects it is a litmus test for the Government's conversion. Are they just saying what they feel people want to hear but doing something different behind the scenes, or are they genuine converts to the cause of enterprise and innovation? If they are genuine converts, they will remove the measure that would compel businesses compulsorily to recognise a trade union. Does the Minister share my view that small businesses should not have that requirement thrust upon them?

Mr. Ian McCartney: I put that down not to the hon. Gentleman's anti-trade union views, but to his job. The Employment Relations Bill includes an exclusion from the dispute resolution process which can lead to recognition by a ballot. Companies with 20 or fewer employees are excluded from that process, but they can agree to voluntary recognition. Since the introduction of the Bill, there has been a change in the business climate and many companies are reaching voluntary agreements with trade unions. However, there needs to be a process to deal with the dispute resolution and that is precisely what the Government are providing.

Mr. Duncan: The Minister will know that the matter was the subject of a Government defeat in the Lords. Will that be overturned when the measure returns here?

Mr. McCartney: The matter in the Lords did not relate specifically to the principle of union recognition; it was a technical amendment concerning the process. We are considering whether or not the amendment was effective and in due course the Government will decide whether to change that amendment or to remove it. It was not a defeat on the principle. The hon. Gentleman should realise that the Conservative Opposition did not move an amendment on principle against the concept of union recognition. If they did that and defeated the Government, we would certainly reverse that decision.

Mr. Duncan: We look forward with great interest to seeing what the Government finally decide to do about that.

Mr. Bercow: I am sorry to trouble my hon. Friend further. Is he aware that the Minister was the victor against the forces of modernity in his Department on trade union recognition? For the purposes of the Employment Relations Bill and trade union recognition, there is an exemption for firms of fewer than 20 employees. Does my hon. Friend think it extraordinary that for other purposes, such as the legislation on the late payment of commercial debt, the Government opted to define small firms as those with fewer than 50 employees? Why the inconsistency?

Mr. Duncan: As always, my hon. Friend is well informed and makes the point clearly—a point that the Minister is unready to admit. The Minister is also unready to admit the truth about the withholding tax. He refused to answer questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham and from me about whether that tax would be bad for business and whether he is against it. He equivocated in response to three interventions. He talks of principle and he gives us fudge. Will he give us a clear undertaking that the withholding tax will not be introduced and will he clearly admit that if it were introduced it would be harmful to business? I do not—

Mr. McCartney rose—

Mr. Duncan: Oh, I have caught a fish.

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman has not caught a fish. I have explained the issue until I get to the point of boredom. The Tory Opposition do not have a case. The Government are not only ahead of the game, but four-square in defending the interests of the City in all circumstances. We are also providing leadership in dealing with the issues that are important to the City. As a consequence, European policy has moved towards ours.

I am certain that the Government's position will prevail. Our policy will always be to put the interests of the British business community in the City first.

Mr. Duncan: The Minister has just done for a fourth time what he had already done three times. Would he veto the withholding tax? He will not say. Would it be harmful to business? He will not say. Is he against it? Would he bring it in? He will not say. All that we get is fudge.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas (Harrow, West): On the question of fudge, will the hon. Gentleman clear up where he stands on the independence of the Bank of England? He has written about the need for an independent Bank of England. Will he give us an unequivocal statement that he still supports the independence of the Bank of England? While he is clearing up that issue, will he also tell us whether he intends to campaign within his party in favour of the abolition of the national minimum wage?

Mr. Duncan: I am pleased to say that I support my party's policy in both respects.

The state of the economy is mixed. The Minister declined to admit that manufacturing was having a difficult time. There is a big squeeze on profits and orders. We have a double-headed economy in which some sectors are doing well and others are having a hard time. We are in the middle of a technological revolution. Fifteen years ago, I thought that I was a big shot because I had a car in my phone. [Laughter.] Sorry, a phone in my car. I wanted to check that the Minister was still listening. I was pressing the test button and it worked. That is good.

Mr. McCartney rose—

Mr. Duncan: I shall allow the Minister one waggish witticism as a final salvo.

Mr. McCartney: If it is such a big phone, perhaps in the interests of competitiveness we could share it.

Mr. Duncan: I was clearly wise to give way. I look forward to our many encounters in the months ahead.

Conservative policies over the past 20 years have allowed Britain to keep ahead of many other countries and up with the United States in the fast-developing technologies. The UK has been made attractive for business and investment. Only Conservative policies—to which the Government now seem half committed—have made that possible.

Some of the Government's policies are putting a lot of that at risk. Inland Revenue press release IR35 threatens a crucial part of the progress of high-tech industries. A new pattern of employment is developing, with a dramatic shift away from big manufacturing concerns with lots of unionised employees clocking on at nine and clocking off at five. Big companies now look to little entrepreneurs for crucial support in the development of ideas and software—people with fantastic brains who do not need much plant and can do their work with a computer, a laptop and knowledge. They sell their services at a high price to add significant value to large corporate concerns.

The effect of IR35 is to say to those entrepreneurs, "To hell with that enterprise that you are showing. To hell with your plans and the way you have structured yourself and your energies and the risks you are taking. The advantages that you have derived from a free commercial regime in which you can set yourself up as a limited company, selling your services to a large corporate concern to add value to yourself and to them will be threatened." There is a risk that the hand of Government will reach into those concerns and cut off the life blood of innovation and enterprise that the Minister is pretending to champion. The Inland Revenue directive—or whatever we want to call it—risks doing an enormous amount of harm. I want an assurance from the Minister that it is being fully reviewed, that he will listen to the concerns and that it might be reversed.

Mr. McCartney: It is going out to consultation. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman could tell us whether he is opposed to tax evasion.

Mr. Duncan: Of course I am opposed to tax evasion. I am also opposed to a tax regime that will harm innovation and enterprise and hold back Britain's progress in developing frontier technology and innovative, pioneering companies in today's competitive world.

That is not the only threat to our competitive model. There is also a risk that many of the patterns of commercial activity that we see across the channel in other European countries will be imported to this country to our cost. We have our own model and structure. We have a different sort of economy in many respects. Given the Government's attempts to chum up with their European friends, we are likely to have many costly directives and structures brought into this country in the interests of some specious harmonisation that would lead not to competitiveness, but to uncompetitiveness.

The Institute of Directors speaks for clear-thinking people who understand business. In a recent press release, the institute acknowledged the need for an efficient regulatory framework. We are not talking about people whom the Minister would critically describe as laissez-faire capitalist anarchists.

Mr. McCartney: To be fair, I was talking about the hon. Gentleman, not the Institute of Directors.

Mr. Duncan: I am not one either. The Minister should read my books. He might upskill himself a bit more.

The Institute of Directors identifies several key issues for many companies. The Minister should listen carefully and put the issues on his agenda to ensure that we have innovation and enterprise. The first point in the press release is that "the introduction of fresh legislation or new regulations should be avoided unless all alternatives have first been exhausted."

I wonder whether the Minister can give the House that pledge.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Duncan: I want to go through the press release first. I shall come to the hon. Gentleman afterwards if he wants.

[Mr. Duncan]

The IOD says:

"More time is needed by small firms both to respond to consultation documents and to familiarise themselves with new regulations."

The IOD also calls for sunset clauses. Does the Minister think it sensible that regulations should last for a finite time and not be renewed unless they have been proved to work satisfactorily?

The Minister seems unprepared to consult on this matter, but the IOD still wants an "exemption for firms of fewer than 50 people from the Employment Relations Bill", which is something that the Government should deliver. It wants the the parental leave directive to be scrapped—another burden on business imposed by the Government. It thinks that the "introduction of National Works Councils across Europe must, in particular, be resisted in the UK."

That is quite a shopping list. If the IOD has such a shopping list, the Minister cannot in all good faith stand up and say that the Government are not placing new burdens on business.

Mr. McCartney: I cannot remember the date of the press release, but it is somewhat out of date. On national works councils, our policy in opposition and in Government has been to oppose any directive that would impose works councils on companies that operate wholly within the United Kingdom. We are in favour of the European works council directive, which is being implemented with the support of British industry. The Government's negotiating strategy has led to a position where, so far, there is no proposal for national works councils—a success for the Government, working with business.

On consultation, the Government have set in place a framework of consultation with industry and across all stakeholders in relation to regulations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have been trying to give both Front-Bench spokesmen some leeway, but interventions must be brief, and the Minister's intervention is far too long.

Mr. Duncan: Let me make one thing clear. My hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning), my colleagues and I will do our utmost to scrutinise every regulation that looks as if it is winging its way here. In return, will the Minister guarantee that no EU directive will ever end up tougher than its original form, and that, when incorporated into UK law, it will be no more onerous than its legal form and implementation in competitor countries? Can he give such a guarantee to the House now, or are we condemned to have tougher regulations here than the parallel ones implemented in other EU countries?

Mr. McCartney: It was the previous Conservative Government who failed industry in terms of implementing directives. They refused to negotiate, be involved or even to sit down at the table in the interests of British business. They opted out. This Government have a clear strategic approach to directives. We will judge whether they will create or lose jobs; whether they assist in the free movement of labour; whether they assist the modernisation of the labour market; whether they assist entrepreneurship; whether they assist investment strategies; and whether they assist in a framework of basic minimum standards. If they meet those requirements, we will, working with industry, develop appropriate measures for implementation. Where they do not, we will oppose them.

Mr. Duncan: Some might think that that was a good answer to a completely different question. I was asking about the equity of implementation of a directive. Clearly, I will not get an answer today. When we are in government, the Conservative party will not introduce any regulation without finding another one to abolish.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that, according to the House of Commons Library, the number of regulations imposing costs on business was 223 in 1994, 209 in 1996 and 199 in 1998? If he is such an opponent of regulations that have a cost on business, can he explain why the two years of most regulation were under a Conservative Government?

Mr. Duncan: It may be a three-letter answer—QMV, or qualified majority voting. Anything that achieves less regulation is welcome on this side of the House.

The Minister did not mention the single currency. Those people, including business men, who support a single currency believe genuinely that it will reduce their risk and make for a less risky climate in which they will have to work and sell their products. However, if one locks into a currency, other economic variables will move, and probably move more violently. It could be interest rates, pressure on wages, pressure on labour mobility or capital flows. Big business will be able more readily to adjust to those pressures, at least in some respects.

The key thing about a domestic small business is that it cannot adjust. Therefore, there is a risk to all small businesses of having to face macroeconomic pressures to which they cannot adjust and to which they can only respond. I hope that the Minister will realise that small businesses will be at much greater risk than big businesses if the stringency and inflexibility of the single currency and its effects on the domestic economy come into play.

Mr. Butterfill: I do not know whether my hon. Friend has heard the breaking news this morning. Italian industry is now saying that in order to keep within the constraints of the euro, it may be forced to ask workers to give up their pension rights.

Mr. Duncan: My hon. Friend, as ever, is fully up to date. Even if those people have to suffer a reduction in their pension rights, and not their total abolition, that is a very heavy price to pay and is damaging to the long-term prospects of any employee.

The Labour party often talks about the long term. In opposition, it paraded itself as the champion of the long term. The one thing that Labour hopes for is that the long term is long enough for it not to be found out. Within months of coming into Government, the Labour party damaged the existing savings culture—it has hit pensions with a bill in excess of £5 billion. Individual savings accounts are an inferior savings vehicle to those previously on offer. Labour is attacking the savings culture that was in place before it took over. Labour has not done things for the long term—it has damaged the long term.

Economic lesson No. 2 is savings equals investment. If one attacks savings, one attacks investment.

Mr. Jim Murphy: What was economic lesson No. 1?

Mr. Duncan: Opportunity cost is the answer, and the hon. Gentleman should go away and learn what that really means and work out how Government policies always have an opportunity cost.

The Government talk about enterprise and innovation, but what have we seen in the papers this week? We saw the extraordinary headline in the business section of The Times on Tuesday:

"State-backed bank for PFI gets the go-ahead."

Mr. Wills: What a good idea.

Mr. Duncan: The Minister—and his Parliamentary Private Secretary, the hon. Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett)—both agree. Some of us remember the days of the National Enterprise Board, a not-so-little outfit in the 1970s which was a disaster. We all remember the De Lorean gull-winged motor car; not the greatest commercial success in the history of industry, and the product of a poor decision by a Labour Government. The article says clearly that we are to have a state-backed bank—an announcement made not in the House of Commons, but in a press release to The Times—and states:

"The Government have given the go-ahead to radical plans to create a new state-backed bank, UK Capital—

it even has a name—

"aimed at injecting fresh enthusiasm into the Private Finance Initiative."

Not only does it have a name: it looks as if it has someone to head it. [Interruption.] The Minister clearly agrees. A Mr. Montague, the head of the Treasury-led PFI task force, will head it. The plan is to "inject fresh enthusiasm" into the private finance initiative. How can a private finance initiative still be a private finance initiative if it is to be financed by a state-backed bank? That means that it is not a private finance initiative, but a public finance initiative. The Minister shakes his head, but he will have to explain. He clearly has a clever scheme which, one day, he might have the courtesy to explain to the House.

The money will be off the Government balance sheet, which will help them to fiddle the figures. The subordinated debt will probably rank below private enterprise debt, so the risk is greater for the taxpayer and the state than for the private sector. The last paragraph of the newspaper article is the most telling. It says:

"The plans have caused alarm in the City, where the prospect of public money competing directly with private cash is viewed as unwelcome."

Will the Minister come clean and urge the Secretary of State to give the House a clear statement of what is intended and what will happen to what is said to be £1.2 billion of public money?

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: The hon. Gentleman obviously has something of a selective memory. Does he recall that under the previous Government, about £30 million was spent on consultants' fees for PFI without one scheme coming to fruition?

Mr. Duncan: We launched PFI, which is very successful, and I suppose that that is why the Government are continuing to pursue it in one form or another, even though they said that they would get rid of it.

The Government have mastered the language but not the thinking. They say one thing and do another. I want to attach a permanent health warning to their use of the word "partnership". Beware the Labour word "partnership". It is not what they want people to think it is. It is a cover for collectivism, corporatism and, as we see elsewhere in the Government, cronyism. What really lies behind the use of the word is more Government interference and intervention.

We want small Government, less Government, less intrusive Government, fewer regulations from Government. I look forward to sparring with Ministers in the months ahead and showing that they are not delivering the enterprise and innovation culture that they pretend they are.

11.2 am

Mr. Jim Murphy (Eastwood): I am delighted to take part in this debate—the first Friday morning debate in which I have participated. It is rather cosy and intimate, but that does not disguise the strong differences of opinion on the issue. I am pleased to follow the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan), who made quite a long speech.

Mr. Dawson: Endless.

Mr. Murphy: Fortunately, there was an end; no point, but an end.

I am also pleased to follow a fellow Scot, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, who has now emigrated to Wigan. In a debate on enterprise and innovation, which includes invention, my right hon. Friend should not have been ashamed of his accent, whether it be Glaswegian, Ayrshire or with a hint of north-west England, because it was Scots who invented many of the great modern equipment and techniques and much that we now take for granted, such as the television and electricity.

My right hon. Friend spoke about call centres and Scottish accents. It was a Scot who invented the telephone, without which call centres would not exist. Without Scottish inventions, the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton could not have had a car in his phone and, more than that, if McAdam had not invented tarmac—tarmacadam—he would have had nowhere to drive his telephone with his car in it.

As my right hon. Friend said, we have a Government not only of economic competence, but of innovation. They have introduced a whole raft of policy innovations to deliver economic stability. In week 1, the Bank of England became independent. That was much criticised by the official Opposition, but much welcomed by business and others outside the House.

In the two years that I have been a Member of Parliament, I have not heard a proclamation or even a whisper from the Conservatives on whether they would reverse that policy. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton was invited by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas) to tell us, but he refused. He said that he supported Conservative party policy. What is Conservative party policy on the issue? Is it to reverse the independence of the Bank of England or to stay with the stable environment created by the correct decision taken in the first week or so of the Labour Government?

[Mr. Murphy]

Independence for the Bank of England has helped us to deliver low inflation and provide an economic framework to guarantee long-term investment. Labour is the champion of long-term investment because we know that we must invest in our people and our infrastructure.

Mr. Butterfill: The hon. Gentleman has referred several times to the independence of the Bank of England. There are independent central banks elsewhere in the world, but they are truly independent. There is a big difference between independent banks with an independent system for appointing their governors and the system introduced by the Chancellor, whereby the Governors of the Bank of England are appointed by him. That must call into question, at least to some extent, their true independence.

Mr. Murphy: The Government will decide what is in Britain's best economic interest. There are other models in the world, but I find it slightly odd that Conservative Members should encourage us to mimic European examples, when they are so hostile to much else that is European. The structure of the Monetary Policy Committee and the way in which the Bank operates seem to be very popular among the business community.

Mr. Geraint Davies: Long-term interest rates are at their lowest for 40 years. Long-term interest rates are an expectation on the part of the financial markets of future inflation. The markets are saying that they accept the current structure of the Bank of England as independent of political interference and believe that it will generate stable and low levels of inflation in the long term. That is precisely what the Government and the country want.

Mr. Murphy: My hon. Friend is characteristically accurate, and furthermore, if the Conservatives intend to reverse the Bank's independence if they come to power, it is clear that the business community has faith that they will not come to power, even in the long term.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State talked about the skills gap and upskilling, and Conservative Members talked about downskilling. I was delighted to hear him reaffirming the Government's commitment to the university for industry, and telling us how many people will benefit from it and on what time scale.

We have had the traditional jousting on the one issue in which the Conservatives seem interested in this Parliament: the single European currency. I was pleased to hear again that the Government are committed in principle to joining a successful euro. That is important because it will set the economic framework and give advance notice to those who compete in business, in this country and internationally. We have laid down five economic criteria that will stand the test of time, in contrast with the Opposition, whose only test is time. That is an important difference between us.

My right hon. Friend the Minister eloquently described new Labour's belief that social justice is the natural partner of enterprise and innovation. Social justice is not in competition with enterprise and innovation, although the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton gave the impression that he thought that that was the case when he said that small businesses must have their social costs cut. In his mind, every great social advance that the Government have introduced seemed to be a hindrance to small businesses and the economic competence and innovation of this nation.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: Is my hon. Friend aware that many small businesses campaigned for the introduction of the national minimum wage because they did not wish to be undercut by other employers?

Mr. Murphy: My hon. Friend is right, and I am sure that he talks from his experience in Harrow. In my constituency, it is my experience from the many events that I organise with my local business community that the national minimum wage is indeed popular, with businesses and with the many thousands of people who benefit from it.

Mr. Butterfill: To suggest that small businesses are in favour of the national minimum wage is extraordinary. I would like to know which small businesses the hon. Gentleman means, because the National Federation of Small Businesses is implacably opposed to it and has claimed that it will do its members immense damage.

Mr. Murphy: In tests of opinion, small businesses have shown their support for the national minimum wage. I know from my experience and from talking to hon. Members from both sides of the House that small businesses have been ahead of the game in preparing for the national minimum wage, adapting to it and benefiting from it, because it has given a boost to our economy.

In discussions about the national minimum wage, I am always reminded of a hustings held during the general election campaign in Barrhead in my constituency, at which a security guard said that he was paid less than £1.50 an hour. He was married with a family, but it is not acceptable for anyone to be paid £1.50 an hour. It is not acceptable that the market allows that to happen or that a Government allow that to happen. I hope that the gentleman comes back to the hustings in a couple of years and asks me again what we will do for the low paid. I also hope that he is no longer doing that job and that his economic position has improved, but I will look him in the eye and tell him the truth: we made a commitment to introduce a national minimum wage, and we have done so. What I do not know is what my Conservative opponent at those hustings will say. Will he tell the audience that his party would abolish the national minimum wage, adjust it or leave it alone?

Mr. Dawson: In an earlier exchange, the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) studiously avoided answering that question about the national minimum wage. One of my local employers said that the national minimum wage and the trade union legislation were important because they cut out the cowboys, but the hon. Gentleman seemed to be proposing a cowboy culture in British industry.

Mr. Murphy: My hon. Friend is right. The vast majority of small businesses—the honest, hard-working ones—are eager to compete on an equal footing and to pay quality wages to quality staff. There is no future for those businesses, or for our country, in paying £1.50 an hour to people with families who cannot survive on such wages.

At the hustings in two years' time, I will say that the national minimum wage has been a great success and it has benefited many thousands of people in Scotland and in my constituency. However, I still do not know what my Conservative opponent will say. I will ask the question repeatedly throughout the campaign, but perhaps the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton can give us the answer now. He was asked repeatedly today, and we have asked the Conservatives repeatedly in the past year, what their position now is on the national minimum wage. It is not good enough for the hon. Gentleman to say that he supports the Conservative policy on the issue when no one knows what that is. I invite him to intervene to give us an inkling about that policy. It is not a hard question—would the Conservatives keep the national minimum wage or abolish it?

We have heard much criticism of the national minimum wage because, it was claimed, it would lead to wage inflation and unemployment. I do not know whether Conservative Members have had time to reflect on those predictions of doom and gloom, but we still have low levels of inflation and of unemployment. I accept that unemployment levels are still too high, but we are working to bring them down, and they are at a 20-year low. Will the Conservatives now admit that their gloomy predictions about the national minimum wage were wrong?

The Conservatives also predicted that the new deal would not work and would cause economic disaster, but we heard only this week that 100,000 young people have benefited from it. Youth unemployment has been halved. We had a five-year plan to reduce youth unemployment and to achieve it in two years is a better performance than that of any Government in history. The Government should be given the respect and credit they deserve for that.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: My hon. Friend is right to say that the new deal is helping to combat youth unemployment. He will also be aware that it is beginning to combat the huge skills gap that hinders enterprise and innovation. We need to continue to focus effort on that skills gap, because the 1998 London employer survey revealed that some 83,000 people are considered by their employers to lack skills, especially in computer literacy.

Mr. Murphy: My hon. Friend's point illustrates the difficulties that the Government inherited 100 or so short weeks ago. We are trying to meet the challenge of upskilling and the new deal is achieving that for those who have been vulnerable and neglected in the past. A generation was forgotten and ignored. Many hon. Members have experienced unemployment, and, when I was a teenager, I was unemployed for two years. What was offered to me was a very poor relation—if it was a relation at all—of the new deal. Young people felt alienated from what the Conservative party was offering them as an opportunity. It was not a pathway to a skill to get them out of unemployment.

I know that from first-hand experience. I went to college as a mature student with many people who had been unemployed and they took that route because the schemes offered by the Conservative Government—unlike the new deal—were not worth the investment of their time and energy. Many young people went to college to gain the formal qualifications that they were not able to get the first time. Social justice is the partner of enterprise and innovation, although Conservative Members seem to think that it is their competitor.

I am delighted that the working families tax credit—another aspect of our social justice policy—will benefit 1.5 million working families throughout the UK, increasing the income and support available to 3 million children. Add that to the record increase in child benefit, and we can see how much has been done to help working families.

I do not want to be too party political, but it is incumbent on the Opposition to say whether they will abolish WFTC or whether they will, when they meet working families in their constituencies who used to receive a poor deal, remind those constituents of Conservative opposition to WFTC, which gives an average £24 more to every working family. Will they tell their constituents that they voted against that, and that they think that it a bad idea? I shall certainly remind mine of Labour's view.

Social justice is a cornerstone of domestic enterprise, but our social justice agenda can also help international innovation and enterprise, particularly by helping to write off more than £100 billion of international debt through the G8. We can help to free countries to provide opportunity and to benefit from innovation and enterprise.

I have spoken about the great Scots inventions of the past. We all know, however, that invention is not always as creative or as helpful as it might be. In some cases, Governments or enterprises may even be too supportive of inventors. Governments must support science and innovation, but they must be careful. Some unusual grants have been handed out, and we have all read that the Institute of Food Science and Technology received £200,000—£100,000 of it public money—to investigate why cornflakes become soggy when milk is poured on them. I am not interested in that, even when I am having breakfast, and the grant was perhaps not absolutely sensible.

In comparison with some international examples, however, that project equates in importance to Einstein's theory of relativity. A Scandinavian research grant was given to scientists examining the impact of wet underwear on thermo-regulatory responses and thermal comfort in the cold. Perhaps the Minister can tell me what that was all about. I mean no slight to our Scandinavian counterparts in saying that we should not become involved in aiding such research. The university of Minnesota was given funding to investigate patient preferences for waxed or unwaxed dental floss, another debate that excites me not at all.

Many challenges face enterprise, and much necessary research can be done. We must provide finance and seedcorn support if we are to remain at the cutting edge of world invention. We should learn from international experience. We should seek to turn today's school children and students into the entrepreneurs of tomorrow. Some 50,000 young people set up in business every year, although the proportion of women who run small businesses is lower than it should be, perhaps because support has not existed in the past.

[Mr. Murphy]

Analysis of the attitudes of young people is revealing. More than 40 per cent. are willing to work 60 hours a week, undercutting oft-quoted criticism of the youth of today. Many felt that they were not taken seriously because of age discrimination and the view that young people should work at junior jobs in business rather than owning one.

I pay tribute to the Prince's Youth Business Trust, which provides seedcorn finance and professional support for those aged 18 to 25. In Renfrewshire, more than 300 young people have established businesses with that support. Nor have those businesses proved short-term operations: 83 per cent. of them remain in business after a year, and more than half are still in business after more than three years. The PYBT enables young people to put down lasting roots in the business community. The average age of the people involved in my constituency is 23, and just over a third of them are women. Many people may just have left university at that age, and it is remarkable that they are in successful business.

Before those people received the support of the PYBT, 80 per cent. of them were unemployed. It has provided them with a pathway out of poverty and unemployment into work, but, far more, a pathway towards ownership of their own businesses. Some 20 per cent. of those people had no formal school qualifications, but they have set up and run their own businesses.

The Government are providing, I think, £50 million in matching funding for the Prince's Trust over the next five years to support 30,000 young people who are setting up their own businesses. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities has said that the Prince's Trust is remarkable in providing support for people who had not previously had economic breaks, perhaps coming from families with lower income backgrounds. The Government have undertaken several initiatives in Renfrewshire. Renfrewshire Enterprise is supporting families from poor backgrounds, particularly in Barrhead, a town famous principally for one business—Shanks and Co., the world-renowned producer of toilets. Indeed, when I first mentioned that business in the House, I almost prompted an unprecedented intervention in a maiden speech. Unfortunately, Shanks no longer produces toilets, but we are trying to reignite the entrepreneurial spirit in that industrial town.

Renfrewshire Enterprise is doing much through the Leven Valley Partnership, which is aimed at motivating children about what is possible in the world of business. One of the most interesting initiatives, for me and for people in Barrhead, is the involvement of Watt Nicol as a motivational speaker for those youngsters. Perhaps not everyone would recognise the name, but if I say that she was the successor to Eileen Drewery, the English football team guru, it may seem more relevant. Eileen Drewery was used by Glenn Hoddle in his period of failure as England manager and Kevin Keegan enlisted the support of Watt Nicol. Renfrewshire Enterprise is doing the same. Since the News of the World revealed Watt Nicol as Kevin Keegan's secret weapon, England have not won a match. I hope that my young people are more successful than the England football team.

Mr. Dawson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy: My hon. Friend may say that, but it is not every day that I wish the England football team well. In its current predicament, my best wishes are appropriate.

The Government's White Paper "Targeting Excellence: Modernising Scotland's Schools" identified the need to encourage the involvement of young people in the world of enterprise. It stresses that we must invest in our youngsters to invest in our future. Much is being done, but I believe that more can be done. There are some good examples throughout the country and in my constituency.

The education for work initiative, piloted and supported by East Renfrewshire council and Renfrewshire Enterprise, has provided many opportunities for young people. I would be interested to hear whether hon. Members have had similar success with that initiative in their constituencies. The achievers international initiative is about setting up companies in schools so that young people can experience the spirit and responsibility of enterprise. St. Luke's and St. Ninian's schools are involved. I attended the launch at St. Ninian's. It set up a trading company for jewellery, exporting Charles Rennie Mackintosh jewellery to Nigeria and importing ethnic Nigerian jewellery. It did well and led to a thriving business in the school. Learning from that experience, 11 primary schools in my area have signed up to achievers international next year. I look forward to visiting primary schools to watch, listen and perhaps learn from young children aged 9 to 11 with the responsibility and opportunity to run their own company. That will be a liberating experience.

Under the education for work initiative, all senior pupils will be given a chance of work experience. There will be industry awareness days. Many schools in my constituency have been successful with the young enterprise initiative.

A key factor has been teacher placements in industry. I want continued Government support for that initiative. It is crucial that young people experience industry and enterprise, but it is imperative that teachers and, in some parts of the country, classroom assistants, get first-hand experience—if they do not have it already—of business and enterprise to pass on to pupils. We all pay tribute to the vast majority of teachers, who work diligently and hard. If we expect schools to become involved in the initiative to any great extent, we must support the teachers. I know that, in my authority, that is already happening. We expect nearly 4,000 teachers to be involved over the next three years.

I am keen on the agenda of encouraging young people to become involved in business and I am proud of the Government's efforts so far. The schools enterprise programme in Scotland operates under the banner "From Primary to PLC". Eighty per cent. of primary schools and 60 per cent. of high schools in Scotland are becoming involved. Seven of Scotland's universities offer modules in enterprise and entrepreneurship, regardless of faculty. They are trying to imbue the entrepreneurial ethic into our students. The programme has led to a 35 per cent. increase in the number of people interested in starting their own business in Scotland. It involves not only students with a marketing background, but engineers, social scientists and arts students.

So much is happening within this agenda. There is good news about what young people are doing, when given the opportunity. It is incumbent on any Government, particularly this one, to provide the economic opportunity in the community and the business world by providing a stable economic environment. We have done much to achieve that nationally, but we must also provide support locally in community and youth groups and schools.

We talk about lifelong learning. Rightly, we are turning that slogan into a policy and, beyond that, into a reality. Lifelong learning does not mean only literacy and numeracy. We accept that the weakness has been that we did not encourage young people to become literate and numerate early enough. That is not a controversial point of view, and we are now building on that. If we are to deliver enterprise success in lifelong learning, we have to start early by involving primary and secondary schools and universities.

For me and the new Labour Government, enterprise and opportunity are equal partners with social justice. We deliver economic opportunity simultaneously with the achievement of social justice.

11.37 am

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): The hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) gave us a thoughtful and detailed view of life in his constituency, for which I am sure we thank him.

I am pleased that we are having this debate. We spend much time in this Chamber passionately debating how much or how little we should spend on the great things in our society such as health, education, social support and welfare. Although we can argue at length about how much or how little we should tax and spend, we must first generate the revenue, however. We have to be able to raise taxes. I suggest that taxes should come from highly skilled and highly paid workers, and from highly successful and profitable businesses. There is not much point in arguing about how much, how little or how well we should distribute wealth unless we have first created it.

The Government's role in business is straightforward. It is not to impose the centralist command and control structures that have failed dramatically in other parts of world. Nor is it their role entirely to ignore business by taking a libertarian or laissez-faire view relying totally on market forces. Any Government who are serious about creating wealth must concentrate on the key areas in which they can create the right framework. We could start by looking at the skills gap, and the need for Government to help nourish and nurture the essential seedcorn of human resources. Government must consider investing in research and development, the green shoots of innovation for our industry and commerce. Most importantly, we need to support our growing companies—our small and medium-sized enterprises. We need to develop a climate in which expertise and enterprise can flourish. Only then will we start to reap the benefits of sustainable economic growth; we can then start to improve—perhaps beyond any conceivable measure—the investment that we need in health, education and social services.

As the trade and industry spokesman for the Liberal Democrats, I have the opportunity to meet many company managers in different types of organisation throughout the United Kingdom. There are many shining examples of successful enterprises in our aerospace and pharmaceutical industries—both are world-class industries. However, at the other end of the scale, there are many small firms—often employing fewer than 50 people—tucked away in the corners of industrial estates, creating and producing advanced products. From seemingly small beginnings, those products are capturing world markets. However, the basic problem is that there are not enough of such enterprises to create wealth sufficient to sustain the level of economic growth that will meet the aspirations of the people whom we represent in all the corners of the kingdom.

To date, the Government's macro-economic policy has not been of particular help. In yesterday's Financial Times, it was reported that the United Kingdom's traded goods deficit widened from £1.91 billion in March of this year to £2.18 billion in April. The first quarter of this year is looking pretty disastrous. Further analysis of those figures reveals that, in April, the deficit in our trade with the European Union rose to £812 million. That is double the level at which it stood six months ago, and is the worst figure since August 1990.

In response to those figures, the chief economic adviser to the CBI said that those data highlighted one of the consequences of staying out of monetary union. She stated:

"Exchange rate volatility is the price you pay for being out of the euro."

That is a salient point in our continuing argument as to the benefits of EMU.

Mr. Butterfill: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Chidgey: I thought that that might raise some interest from the Conservative Benches. I am delighted to give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Butterfill: Does the hon. Gentleman think that the euro, which has fallen by about 11 per cent. since it was launched at the beginning of this year, has been an example of successful monetary integration to date, or does EMU still have some progress to make?

Mr. Chidgey: I know the hon. Gentleman well enough to realise that he makes a serious point, so I shall give him a serious answer. On reflection, I am sure that he will acknowledge that, over time, there are significant changes in currency exchange rates—one finds examples of that with the dollar and with sterling, both of which have moved in value by about 50 per cent. over a 20-year period. One has to consider the euro in a longer-term context. Yes, 11 per cent. is a significant change, but that is not a serious problem if we take a long-term view of the fluctuations in exchange rates.

As a further response to the hon. Gentleman's intervention, I point out that, since August 1996, the pound has risen by 23 per cent. on a trade-weighted basis. That has been a disaster for UK exporters. It is no good blaming that problem on the crises in the economies of Asia, Brazil and Russia. It is important to remember that the UK exports more to the Netherlands than to those three trade areas put together.

We should pay close attention to the Treasury's own forecasts of business opportunities for the UK. According to the Treasury's figures, opportunities to get more business for the UK in our key markets overseas are growing at 6 per cent. a year, yet the take-up of those business opportunities by UK businesses is growing at only 0.5 per cent. That is most worrying; it illustrates the problems faced by our business and commerce. We are not grasping the opportunities that exist in our key, strong markets.

[Mr. Chidgey]

The Government have to take some of the blame for allowing the pound to rise to the levels to which it has risen during the past few years, and for the growing trade deficit that we are experiencing this year. However, we must be fair. The problem did not start with the Labour Government; it can also, in quite large measure, be laid at the door of the previous Conservative Administration. Figures produced by the Library in relation to trade deficits over the past 25 years show that, since 1974, our balance of trade has been in surplus for only seven years. That has resulted in a net deficit in trade that is in excess of £80 billion at current prices. If that is merely part of the economic cycle—as we often hear when we discuss trade deficits and surpluses in this place—25 years must be the longest trade cycle recorded in history. That legacy reflects the lack of understanding of previous Administrations, over a long period, of the importance of innovation and enterprise to our economy's ability to achieve sustainable growth. Long-running trade deficits underline the long-term ills of the UK economy, the long-term problems for UK trade and Britain's failure to match our competitors in innovation and enterprise.

In relation to the problem of innovation shortfall, an interesting survey was produced for the European Commission. I am sure that the Minister will have seen it. It is a survey of 12 countries in the European economic area entitled "Eurostat Statistics in Focus, Research and Development, No. 2/99—Community Innovation Survey 1997/98". I am sorry to be so pedantic, but I am sure that the Hansard reporters will want that in detail. The survey shows that the largest proportion of innovative enterprises is in manufacturing. It offers the following definition:

"An innovative enterprise has either introduced new or improved products on the market or introduced new processes during the last three years."

The survey found that large enterprises—those with more than 250 employees—were the most innovative. That illustrates the point that, although we realise that the engine for growth in our economy is the small to medium-sized enterprise—the smaller firm—such firms have huge problems in grasping opportunities to be innovative, to show enterprise and to succeed.

The real point of mentioning the survey is that, in its results, it is apparent that the UK is behaving and performing poorly in relation to our competitor nations in the EU. We came a poor fifth for innovation in both the manufacturing and the service sectors. When it came to spending on innovation—innovation intensity, to use the phrase in the survey—the UK again came fifth in manufacturing. However, there was a ray of light in respect of services where we came first in innovation intensity, so we are getting something right.

Mr. Butterfill: The hon. Gentleman should consider other comparisons with the EU, such as unemployment levels and the rate of growth in the economy. In those matters, the UK appears in a rather better light.

Mr. Chidgey: I do not disagree with that comment for one moment. However, as I develop my speech, I shall illustrate my concern that we shall not be able to achieve growth in our economy unless we grasp the key issue that we must be more innovative and more enterprising. It is important to make comparisons with other nations with which we compete, not just in Europe but elsewhere. I shall come to that as I develop my point.

The survey showed that the key indicator of impact on innovation was the relative share of turnover in new or improved products. In that respect, the UK could manage only eighth place out of 12. That shows the scale of the problem. We in the United Kingdom are chugging along behind most of the European Union in innovation, but even the best in the EU lag far behind Japan. For example, for every 1 million ecu spent on research and development in the EU, Japan files twice as many patents as European industry. That is a measure of the lack of development of innovation in our economy and that of the EU, compared to our major competitors in the world marketplace.

Since 1985, the level of production in Europe has risen by only 10 per cent., whereas in Japan it has risen by 80 per cent. That is a severe handicap to business and employment, especially to the high-tech businesses, as the links between innovation, competitiveness and employment are becoming ever closer.

Finally, the survey confirmed that the companies that invested most in research were the ones that created the most jobs over the past 20 years. There is a pressing need, therefore, to step up innovation in this country.

From research, it is clear that we need to take action in three areas. The first is the promotion of a genuine innovation culture. The second is the establishment of legal, regulatory and financial frameworks that support innovation. The Government have been making noises this morning about how they hope to tackle regulation and set up a Small Business Service. I hope that that will go further than helping small business to understand and unravel the new legislation on the working families tax credit which, as the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry knows, has not exactly been received with rapt enthusiasm in all corners of the House. We need a little more than that if we are to make regulations that help rather than hinder commerce. The third area that the Government must look to is how to gear research more to innovation, products and outcomes.

I shall deal briefly with the UK's business scenario and investment in research and development. The "Today" programme this morning quoted from a report from the Department of Trade and Industry that highlights the problem. If I understood what was being said at that early hour, it was reported that the UK's competitors were investing some 5 per cent. of GDP in research and development, whereas we invest only 2 per cent. of GDP in R and D. Worldwide, a quarter of all investment in research and development is in information technology, but in Britain very little is invested in IT, because we have very few firms that are still active in that sector. That is a cause for major concern.

Statistics provided by the Office for National Statistics "Business Monitor" for 1996 showed that, relatively speaking, only a small proportion of total investment in research and development is made by our smaller firms. That is extremely worrying. For example, 9 per cent. of investment in R and D is made by companies with fewer than 100 employees. For firms with a work force of 1,000 to 5,000, the level of investment is 38 per cent.

That is an interesting difference. We clearly need to take action to nurture small and medium-sized enterprises so that they spend more on research and development. I recognise that the Government's proposals for tax credits will help, but we must do far more.

To Britain's cost, the vital role of science and engineering has been neglected. Within limits, levels of research and development expenditure remain the best overall measure of innovative activity. Figures from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development show that over the past 20 years, at a time when most advanced industrial countries have been increasing their commitment to R and D, in Britain investment has been falling.

The fall in investment is widely based. Government support for academic research in science and engineering fell from 0.4 per cent. to 0.3 per cent. of GDP. The Government's own spending on research and development has been cut, and many departmental research facilities have been closed. Even more damaging, spending on innovation—the take-up and development of new technologies in industry—has been reduced. The DTI's innovation budget has fallen by more than three quarters, from £280 million in the mid-1980s to £66 million at 1996-97 prices.

The biggest failure to invest in research and development lies with industry. Whereas in most industrialised countries there has been an increasing commitment from industry to invest in R and D, the contribution made by British industry has fallen to 0.9 per cent. of GDP, lower than at any time since 1975.

Above all, there has been no clear-cut political strategy for investment in R and D over the years. The previous Administration's attempt in 1992 to provide a strategy through the appointment of a Cabinet Minister responsible for an Office of Science and Technology withered on the vine, apparently amid departmental wrangles. That office has been incorporated into the DTI. Despite the present Government's rhetoric about competitiveness and innovation, we are still not clear where the responsibilities lie and what the strategy is.

Mr. Butterfill: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Chidgey: Just one more time.

Mr. Butterfill: The hon. Gentleman has been extremely generous. Does he agree that, given the Government's rhetoric and their claim to be increasing research funding, it is extraordinary that last year, grants to the research councils were cut massively, to the point where many universities could not take on students taking masters degrees or PhDs in research-based subjects because the research councils' budgets had been cut so savagely?

Mr. Chidgey: I cannot confirm the hon. Gentleman's suggestion that student places have been cut, but I take issue with the Government on the way in which science and research funding has been cut across the board.

Although I welcome the commitment in the comprehensive spending review for an additional £1.4 billion over three years to be spent on research and development in the science base, that sum is not as great as it may seem. The £600 million to be spent on capital projects, of which half is to come from the Wellcome Trust, will begin to make good part of the backlog in re-equipping our universities, but we should not rely on the largesse of the private sector to make good what should be primarily a Government responsibility. Claims that the new money will provide £200 million extra each year for the science budget are wildly exaggerated. Once we adduce the allowance for inflation for the whole budget—approximately £60 million a year—we are left with £140 million of new money in the kitty.

Even after that injection of new money, United Kingdom science is still poorly funded compared with that of our competitors. Moreover, a good part of the money is directed to such schemes as the university challenge scheme, which is aimed not at pure research, but at encouraging industry and university links and other initiatives. I welcome those schemes, which are all good, and I am not criticising them, but I am worried about the fragmentation of effort, and that the process will do little to tackle the fundamental problem of industry's poor research and development performance. I am worried that the Government have yet to show my hon. Friends that they have a perceptive, pragmatic and progressive strategy for science.

I listened to the Minister of State with great interest. Much of what he said is welcome, as his words of enthusiasm often are, but I am still concerned about how far that will take us down the road that we need to take if we are to improve our competitiveness and enterprise. I refer Ministers to the statement made by the Secretary of State in the House on 10 March, in which he set out a raft of measures that would be introduced by the Government. Although I listened carefully to the Minister of State, I had difficulty in discovering whether the list outlined by the Secretary of State was being ticked off three months later—perhaps because of the Minister's accent, of which he is so proud.

Mr. Bercow: Is not part of the problem that, although the Minister of State—sadly, he is not in his place—stuck loyally to the Government line, he displayed not a smidgen of enthusiasm for the cause of deregulation? Does that not differentiate him, at least rhetorically, from the Secretary of State?

Mr. Chidgey: It is not for me to pass judgment on that analysis. I recall that the Minister of State showed great enthusiasm for deregulation, although I do not recall his being too specific about what he will do about it.

I do not want to delay the House for too long, although this is an interesting debate and a welcome opportunity to look at the real issues. For the benefit of the Minister, and if he will tolerate it, I shall outline a checklist. I may have missed something in passing—and if I have, I apologise—but we want to know how far the Government have got with their programme.

We were promised a strategy to encourage

"knowledge transfer"

and

"stimulate the flow of scientists and engineers into industry".—[Official Report, 10 March 1999; Vol. 327, c. 368.]

We are still waiting for that strategy. We were promised a Small Business Service. I shall return to that point, because we have made some progress this morning.

[Mr. Chidgey]

Moving down my list, we were promised a study into international price comparisons, a framework for utility regulation, a modernised merger regime and a consumer strategy, to be published before the summer. We have recently had the longest day of the year, so we can declare that summer is truly with us. The Secretary of State's statement was long on what the Government would do, but we are still rather short of things that have been done. The House deserves a little more information and a progress report on how well the Government are doing.

The Small Business Service is a good idea and I welcome the Government's proposals, but I want more detail—something I can get my teeth into. We need to follow the American model and establish a national network of genuine one-stop shops. An alarming situation was revealed in the community innovation survey, which took in 5,000 firms of different sizes throughout the country. It asked about their involvement—[Interruption.] I hope that the Minister will listen to this point. I know that he has other things to do, but I hope he is taking this on board.

I repeat the point for the Minister's benefit. The survey asked 5,000 firms about their involvement with Government programmes aimed at encouraging innovation. Only 6 per cent. were participating in those programmes. We need a genuine one-stop shop based on the American model, which has 900 small business development centres across America serving more than 500,000 small firms in partnership with federal, state and local government and community and private sector groups. That ensures that small businesses get a fair share of Government contracts and, through working with banks and investment companies, that they have access to affordable finance. We can learn a lot from that practice and I hope that we will see some action from the Government, not merely a shopping list that is yet to be delivered.

There are many key issues with which we need to be concerned in respect of innovation and enterprise, but let me emphasise a few of them. We need to promote a genuine innovation culture. That will call for creativity, an enterprising spirit, a taste for risk-taking and a willingness to be socially and geographically mobile. We need innovation and enterprise in our manufacturing industry.

What action will the Government take to promote best practice, to encourage the development of efficient supply chains, to promote application of new technology and to develop beneficial regional relationships? The Secretary of State spoke of those intentions in March. I want to know how far we have got.

For small and medium-sized enterprises, we need to create a climate of easy mobility for key workers, such as researchers and engineers. Young researchers and engineers must be able to work and gain experience in other countries—initially, perhaps, within the European Union. I welcome the Government's promise of new availability of finance for SMEs, but what SMEs really need are fewer hidden taxes, less regulation and lower business transport costs. In that context, hiking up the national insurance contributions of the self-employed is especially unhelpful.

What can the Government do? They can establish a legal, regulatory and financial framework that is conducive to innovation. They can seek improvements to the European patent system to reduce confusion and to prevent conflicting decisions being taken by different national authorities. The Government must really get their teeth into that.

The Government can extend help to enterprises and to researchers to protect intellectual property and combat counterfeiting. The opening arguments of the Minister of State were going the right way. I also welcome his comments on easier financing of innovation and encouraging venture capital funds to invest in the early stages of investment and innovative projects.

We also need robust information services to help individuals and enterprises to find out about sources of financing. I was horrified to find from the European Commission survey that only 6 per cent. of the firms surveyed in this country were taking part in Government programmes. If that is the best that we can do, what a waste of money and effort.

Finally, and most fundamentally, the Government can gear research to innovation. Too often in this country we develop a good idea, but never get it embodied into a product. The Government must find ways to step up research carried out in business; to encourage the setting up of technology-based businesses; and to intensify co-operative projects involving public research bodies, universities and industry, encouraging spin-off activities locally, regionally and nationally. The Government must address those key factors.

I have been speaking for more than half an hour. That may have become customary in this debate, but I believe that other colleagues would like to contribute, so I shall try to keep my closing remarks fairly short.

The Liberal Democrats have long recognised the importance of science and engineering in promoting competitiveness. In a world of global competition, the development of science-based industries is essential. Continuous adaptation and change are vital. When products quickly become out of date and skills and machinery become obsolete, we must adapt; we must change. The application of science and technology are integral to the search for sustainability. New technologies not only are more often research and energy efficient, but can be harnessed to develop more sustainable processes. We have a chance in this country to take a lead in developing such products and engineering processes.

We all know that high-quality education and training are essential to our competitiveness if we are to be part of the group of knowledge-based economies of the 21st century. However, we must put in the investment. As the Minister said, we must ensure that members of the work force—our human resources—have the skills to provide them with the opportunity to work for life.

We must support academic research as well as the bid-based research that seems so popular at the moment, because leading-edge research is not only the source of new ideas, but a training ground for those who can translate those ideas into innovative products and processes, and a strong science basis is an essential underpinning for the industries of the future. Governments should not shirk their funding responsibilities for science research.

The Government should make a commitment to aim to increase the science budget for the United Kingdom, so that we again invest in science research to the same level as our industrial competitors in other parts of the world. We have sadly fallen behind in the past few years.

The evidence is clear: we are lagging behind in innovation and enterprise, and we have done so for at least the last quarter of the century. We are creating and developing an ever-deepening trade deficit. We need to address the key issues, and to promote genuine innovation in our industrial culture. We need to establish a legal, regulatory and financial framework that helps and does not hinder business. We need to gear research to innovation, so that ideas develop into products.

The Government have promised us action in these areas. Some of their proposals are welcome, but we shall reserve judgment until the promises and proposals are turned into policies that are in place and working to embrace fully the challenge of improving innovation and enterprise. No Government, whatever their political complexion, can afford to ignore that challenge any longer. The Government at least realise that there is a lot more to do. They will be judged on how well they do it.

12.11 pm

Barbara Follett (Stevenage): I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate, but I must apologise because I shall have to leave before its conclusion. A long-standing constituency engagement calls me.

It is not often that the House has the chance to debate issues such as enterprise and innovation, which are more often the subject of academic debate. When I was at university studying economic history, we spent a lot of time learning about enterprise and innovation. Those concepts baffled and fascinated economic historians, who wanted to recreate circumstances similar to those that occurred in this country in the mid-18th century and gave the world its first industrial revolution. At that time, enterprise and innovation came together and were combined with an unusual run of good luck, which for Britain included good weather—highly unusual at any time in this country.

In the 20th century, there has been no lack of innovation in Britain. As my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) reminded us, we owe much of today's technology to the British talent for innovation. Listening to my hon. Friend, one would think that all that talent was confined to the northern part of these islands rather than spread throughout them. In the past 60 years, Britain has given the world the computer and antibiotics, and has pioneered the life-changing work on the DNA helix.

Unfortunately, that innovative genius has not always had sufficient entrepreneurial follow through. That is why Europe's largest pharmaceutical research and development facility, which is situated in my constituency, is not British owned. That is why the huge computer defence and satellite companies, which are also housed in my constituency, are only partially British owned. We are good at innovation, but not very good at creating the climate of enterprise in which innovation can flourish. As the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) emphasised, that is the challenge that we face today.

Only once in this century in Britain have we seen the cluster of circumstances that allows innovation and enterprise to combine to create a British-based boom. That was the boomlet in the 1960s, when innovative young people in the music and fashion industry transformed this country and its capital: it went from being lethargic to swinging. For a brief moment, they made the economy swing. Despite that mini boom, for Britain, the 20th century has been a century of relative decline. The challenge facing us is to reverse that decline by raising the sustainable rate of growth in the economy.

As my right hon. Friend the Minister pointed out, if we are to do that, we must foster innovation and encourage enterprise by creating macro-economic stability and an entrepreneurial culture. That is Government's role. I do not agree with much that is said by the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), but I do not think that, in this instance, Government can do more than provide a stable framework in which that entrepreneurial culture can develop.

So far, the debate has concentrated on what is happening nationally. Let me say a little about the progress that has been made in my region, which is in the east, and which is one of the most prosperous and densely populated parts of the country. Over the past two years, there has been a change in its macro-economic stability. As any economist will confirm, such changes result from a combination of good luck and good management. I believe that we have had the good management, along with a certain amount of good luck.

The economic indicators for the eastern region show the results of both factors. We have the lowest interest rates for the past 22 years, employment is rising steadily and unemployment is continuing to fall. In January 1999, 73,000 people were unemployed in the region. Although that figure is still bad, it is 87 per cent. lower than the figure that obtained at the peak of unemployment under the last Government—573,000. Eighty thousand more people are in jobs than at the end of last year, and 100,000 people have been helped into jobs, work experience or training under the new deal. That is good for my region and particularly good for Stevenage, where unemployment has fallen by 60 per cent. over the past two years.

We must create an entrepreneurial culture. In the eastern region, we have pockets of terrible deprivation, some of which are housed by my constituency. We must give people the opportunity to innovate, and we must make the investment to back that innovation. I join my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood in praising the work of the Prince's Trust; but the new deal has made a huge difference to the mood and the economy of my constituency. In Stevenage, 1,126 young people have already embarked on jobs, work experience or training.

Mr. Bercow: I note what the hon. Lady says about participation in the new deal and, presumably, the benefit derived from that participation. Given that people who take part in the training and education option are twice as likely not to find a job as to find a job, and given that youth unemployment has risen in every quarter since the introduction of the new deal nationally in April 1998, why cannot the hon. Lady admit that this flagship has sunk?

Barbara Follett: Because it has not sunk—particularly in my constituency, where most of those who took advantage of the new deal needed a great deal of training and work experience. Those people were very unlikely to obtain jobs without the new deal; they are now very likely to obtain jobs as a result of it. Indeed, many have already obtained jobs.

[Barbara Follett]

The entrepreneurial culture in the east of England has been greatly helped by several Government initiatives, some of which came from the last Government. The East of England development agency has been particularly helpful in developing a vision of the eastern region as one of the leading knowledge-based areas in Britain. The Business Link in Hertfordshire has helped firms to become internationally orientated, information technology-literate and innovative. That strategy has been developed within the framework of the strategy of the regional development agencies.

In my constituency, the Stevenage business initiative—which was established by Hertfordshire university, Hertfordshire county council and Stevenage borough council—has provided a wealth of information to small businesses. Each year, it helps between 50 and 100 businesses to set up in Stevenage and north Hertfordshire, bringing employment to the region and providing the mentoring that so many entrepreneurs need.

The Stevenage business initiative has also started a business incubation project, in which we are helping—with help and money from the Department of Trade and Industry—small businesses to develop their businesses on premises owned by Stevenage borough council. We are helping people to learn how to manage their businesses. Britain's main failure has been that, although people may be sufficiently innovative to develop a new product, they probably will lack the managerial skills necessary to ensure that the product is manufactured. In Stevenage, we are doing a great deal to counter that.

The Stevenage business initiative also makes annual enterprise awards to businesses that succeed. This year, I was lucky enough to present an award to 30 young people who had succeeded in a variety of businesses, making a difference not only to their lives, but to the life of their communities.

Innovation and enterprise are vital to our country's future. For far too long, we have derided those who have taken risks—taken their lives in their hands—by not only inventing new and wonderful things, but showing the courage to take their products into the marketplace, to try to sell them.

Britain has very few statutes dedicated to entrepreneurs, just as we have very few statutes honouring engineers. I hope that one consequence of the change in our entrepreneurial culture will be an end to some of our stuffy traditions and ways of looking at enterprise, so that we can start to honour some of those who have helped to make Britain great.

12.22 pm

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): It is a pleasure to be called to speak in this debate. I am particularly delighted to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan), whom I should like to congratulate both on his appointment to the shadow Trade and Industry team and on his outstanding opening speech for the Opposition.

My hon. Friend is a formidable and forensic critic of the Government, and an equally formidable exponent of the Conservative case. I think that both Government Front Benchers and Government Back Benchers will discover that, to their cost, in the months ahead. He flayed them this morning. If precedent is anything by which to judge, he will flay them before breakfast, before lunch, before tea, before dinner and before he consumes his cup of Horlicks or Ovaltine before retiring to bed at night. I am also delighted to follow the hon. Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett).

It is essential to put the debate in context, not least for small firms—which is why the presence of the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry is so welcome. We talk about small firms, and everyone says how critical they are, but none of us adequately emphasises their centrality to enterprise and innovation.

Specifically, we should recognise that companies employing fewer than 100 people constitute 99.6 per cent. of British firms, employ 50 per cent. of the private sector work force, and produce two fifths of the nation's output. That is the measure of their centrality within the British economy. They are the key engine of economic growth, the major source of new employment, and the seedcorn of our current and future prosperity.

The second point that needs to be understood about small firms is that they are in difficulty. Lately, there has been an exponential rise in business failures, which must be a source of concern to hon. Members on both sides the House.

The Minister will be aware that in the first quarter of this year, relative to last year, based on the findings of the respected credit information agency Dun and Bradstreet, there has been a 9 per cent. rise in company liquidations. That in itself is a matter for anxiety, but when the House reflects on the fact that for small businesses the increase in liquidations is 32 per cent.—three and a half times the rate of increase in liquidations generally—the serious plight of small companies becomes abundantly clear. On one hand they are important because they employ so many people, are the engine of growth and are crucial to our future prosperity; on the other, they are suffering disproportionately from a general increase in liquidations. Therefore it is important for us to focus not just on what the Government can do to assist small businesses by active measures, but on what they can refrain from doing, and thereby assist the development of small businesses.

I want to focus on one particular aspect of public policy that has been touched on by other hon. Members. I shall elaborate on that feature, namely regulation and the burgeoning over-regulation of British small and medium enterprises.

Conservative Members differ fundamentally and conceptually from Labour Members. The Conservative party takes the view best expressed by my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Lawson of Blaby that the business of government is not the government of business. That is the fundamental distinction.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton so appositely observed, the trouble with Ministers is that they mouth the words, but they do not understand them; they utter the sentiments, but they do not will the means to translate those sentiments into practical policies of benefit to the enterprises on which our prosperity depends. That is the problem. My hon. Friend characteristically, with that self-effacing charm for which he is renowned, understated his case. I have had words with him before about his unfailing tendency to understate his case, to be a little on the modest side and a trifle too generous to Ministers. I hope that I do not have to upbraid him again on this point—I do so now in front of the whole House—but his gentle instincts got the better of him again and he was a bit soft on Ministers.

The problem seems to be that many Labour Members do not believe in anything in respect of enterprise, innovation and small businesses. Some of us entered public life because we have passionate beliefs, intellectual convictions and gut instincts. None of that is evident from Labour Members and that is part of the problem. Because they do not know quite what to do, they tend to go back to what Labour Administrations have always done in the past.

I draw attention to two aspects of regulation: the rhetoric of Ministers and the reality of policy. I should like to dwell on the rhetoric of Labour Ministers. That rhetoric is important; we have to understand it and see whether policy matches up to it or contravenes it.

The first statement to which I draw attention is in the form of a foreword to Labour's business manifesto entitled "Equipping Britain for the Future" and published on 11 April 1997, pretty well at the start of the general election campaign. It was composed or at least signed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), then shadow Chancellor. For the delectation of my hon. Friends, I shall quote him. He said:

"We will not impose burdensome regulations on business, because we understand that successful businesses must keep costs down."

We are grateful for that. The right hon. Gentleman is a sinner who repenteth. He underwent an apostolic conversion, suddenly discovering what the Conservatives had been saying for a long time. We must not be narrow, ungracious or unwilling to recognise the possibility that Labour Members can see the light, change their minds and chart a better course for the future. My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton was ready to acknowledge that and so am I. I took that statement at face value and waited to see whether it was put into effect.

On 7 November 1997, the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), who was then the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry—the predecessor of the hon. Member for North Swindon (Mr. Wills)—said:

"We are moving purposefully and very speedily to bring about simpler government and cut red tape, which is a real barrier to growth for small businesses."—[Official Report, 7 November 1997; Vol. 300, c. 483.]

That was an unexceptional comment that many of us could have made some years earlier, but I welcomed it. The problem is that it was not in accordance with what the Government were doing.

The right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who unfortunately is not favouring the House with his presence, made a similar statement almost 19 months into the term of office of this Administration. In one of his last pronouncements from the Dispatch Box, on 25 November last year, he said:

"we have no intention of introducing any legislation that presents a burden on business and reduces the competitiveness of British firms."—[Official Report, 25 November 1998; Vol. 321, c. 214.]

The trouble is that the Government have been burdening business with additional regulations, costs, legislation and red tape since they came to office. Approximately 2,500 additional regulations have spewed forth from the machinery of government in that time. That is a classic illustration of the point that my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton made earlier that Ministers mouth the words, but do not will the means. Worse than that, they do not merely leave a vacuum, but directly contradict those words.

I would like to be charitable and think that the right hon. Member for Hartlepool was blissfully ignorant of the fact that his words were contradicted by the reality. That would be charitable in one sense, because it would mean that the right hon. Gentleman was innocent of bad motives, but it would be uncharitable—and probably inaccurate—in another respect, because it would imply that he was stupid. There are many sins of which I accuse him, but political stupidity is not one of them. He must have known that what he said was not true and that the Government were implementing measures that directly contradicted the reality.

The second feature of the debate is the reality of the Government's record. My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton dissected the record earlier. I should like to develop that dissection.

The first example is the working time directive, which will cost British businesses approximately £2 billion a year. British businesses received from the right hon. Member for Hartlepool 45 days' notice of the requirement to implement that directive. If that was not a calculated insult to small and medium-sized enterprises in the United Kingdom, it is difficult to know what is—a mere six and a half weeks' notice of implementation, and wholly inadequate consultation on the regulations.

Moreover, the regulations accompanying the measure, and necessary to give effect in British law to the working time directive, took up 71 pages of A4 paper. It is frankly abominable that a Labour Minister should commit that folly in 1999, and then have the chutzpah to talk about believing in the cause of enterprise, innovation and the growth of small businesses.

The second example is the national minimum wage. That will cost British businesses approximately £2.7 billion a year. British businesses were given three weeks' notice of the requirement to implement the national minimum wage. The regulations governing the implementation of that wage took up fully 112 pages of A4 paper. Small businesses were expected to contend with, and give effect to, those regulations with only three weeks' notice. We all know that regulations are disproportionately burdensome for small companies—in terms of compliance with tax regulations, for example.

Mr. Dawson: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that he would advocate strongly with his party that the Conservatives should go into the next election calling for the abolition of the national minimum wage? Does he support the cowboy economy that has been so graphically described to me by one of my business constituents, where people are exploited at work?

Mr. Bercow: No, I do not support exploitation at work. Regrettably, I did not have the pleasure of the company of the hon. Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) during the Committee's consideration of the National Minimum Wage Bill. It would have been a delight to welcome him. Had he been on the Committee—I accept that it was not his fault that he was not—he would have heard me explain at some length how, when I was in the private sector, I took great pains to ensure that a colleague who was wrongly denied a bonus by her employers, and was too cowed to pursue the point, got what she was entitled to receive. Some of my hon. Friends went so far as to suggest that I was a champion of the under-privileged. It is not for me to overstate my case to the House. However, most good employers who can afford to do so pay decent wages and afford their employees decent conditions, and that is right.

[Mr. Bercow]

It was the specific point about the enormously burdensome application of the minimum wage and the poor notice of the imminent burden on which I was focusing. I understand the eagerness of the hon. Member for Lancaster and Wyre, eagerness to know how the Conservative party intends to fight the next election but, with great respect, we are only two years after the last election. The hon. Gentleman is a person of good intentions, but it is a bit rich of him to expect us to provide him with an advance copy of the next Conservative election manifesto. If that is what he is requesting, I am afraid that I must politely decline.

Mr. Wills: We want to know the Conservative party's policy on the national minimum wage. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman knows what he thinks about the national minimum wage. Would he repeal it if the Conservatives ever came back to power?

Mr. Bercow: I am disappointed. I thought that the Under-Secretary had got the point the first time, but he did not. The Conservative Opposition have made it clear that we thought that it was unwise to introduce a national minimum wage of a statutory character. We were joined in that by the Federation of Small Businesses, the Forum of Private Business, the Confederation of British Industry, British Chambers of Commerce and the Institute of Directors. If the Under-Secretary wants to know now what we intend to say at the general election, he is inviting me to do something that it is not reasonable to expect me to do.

We will make clear our intentions at the next election. The Under-Secretary is ordinarily a patient fellow, but I know that there are beads of sweat upon his brow in eager anticipation of discovering what we intend. However, I hasten to assure him that, if he is patient, Pandora's box will be opened in due course. He need not be concerned on that point. We will have a policy, clearly set out, to appeal to the electorate, to business and to all reasonable-minded people who know the cost of what the Government are doing.

The Minister sought to assuage the concerns of the House about works councils by saying that there is no proposal on the table. He and the Under-Secretary ought to know of the enthusiasm of Padraig Flynn and others in the European Commission for introducing proposals for national works councils. It has been variously suggested that such councils would apply to firms with fewer than 50 or even as few as 20 employees.

It is no good the Minister implying that the Government would successfully fight works councils by use of the veto, as I hope that he is sufficiently well informed to know that they do not have a veto, because they foolishly signed up to the social chapter, the opportunity to do which the previous Government wisely eschewed. Much of the legislation arising from the social chapter is determinable by qualified majority voting, so we have no veto.

The first President of the Board of Trade in this Government, now the Leader of the House, told the Select Committee on Trade and Industry that she was opposed to national works councils. She then went into the lions' den and appeared on the BBC's ""On the Record", where she was interviewed, if memory serves me correctly, on 9 November 1997 by Jonathan Dimbleby.

There was a most interesting exchange. Mr. Dimbleby pressed her on works councils and she reiterated her opposition to the plans being mooted in the Commission. He asked what she would do if the Commission pressed ahead and she was outnumbered, given that the matter was determinable by qualified majority voting. It is only right to record for posterity her legendary response. She said, "Well, er, we shall see how things go."

Mr. Wills: The hon. Gentleman has just said that about the national minimum wage.

Mr. Bercow: I thought that my answer was a little more lucid, and it did not include an "er".

The right hon. Lady had no idea what she would do. The concern that my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton raised about works councils remains very real and very worrying for businesses the length and breadth of the United Kingdom.

The administrative regulations relating to the working families tax credit will have a damaging impact on small businesses. Then we have the child care credit, the disabled persons learning credit and the student loan repayment administration regulations. Whatever the intrinsic merits or demerits of those measures as public policy, they all entail a shuffling off of responsibility from Government agencies to beleaguered small businesses.

On top of everything else with which those businesses have to contend—including the macro-economic climate, international trading conditions and local employment markets—they are faced with damaging imposts from a Government who are insensitive to, and usually unconscious of, their needs.

Even if firms do relatively little cross-border trade, they have to comply with the regulations on self-assessment for transfer pricing, and the perverse manner in which the Inland Revenue operates is such that the normal principle that one is innocent until proven guilty does not apply. It is necessary for small firms to demonstrate compliance with the regulations and they are assumed to be guilty unless they are able to demonstrate that they are innocent to the satisfaction of the bureaucrats.

I have mentioned several serious issues and there are many others with which I could favour the House if only there were time to do so.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): Go on!

Mr. Bercow: My hon. Friend is cheekily encouraging me to dilate upon those matters, but that would be unfair. I had an exchange with the hon. Member for Croydon,

Central (Mr. Davies) earlier, and he was perturbed about whether he would have the chance to contribute to the debate. I would like him to do so and I would also like to hear from my senior colleague, my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill), so I will not focus on those other issues.

I have given practical examples of measures that are injurious to small businesses. There is an extraordinary mismatch between what Ministers say in their speeches and the truth about what is happening.

Mr. Gray: I had hoped that my hon. Friend would address a damaging press release—IR 35—put out by the Inland Revenue, which bears down heavily on contractors in the information technology and telecommunications industries. It will put most of them out of business on the assumption that, as contractors, they are merely trying to avoid national insurance. Interestingly, that policy was announced in a press release, not announced by a Minister in a speech. Is that how the other measures that my hon. Friend mentioned were announced?

Mr. Bercow: That is a growing tendency, and Madam Speaker has expressed concern about it on several occasions. I would not seek to take the name of Madam Speaker in vain, because that would be improper, but I do not need to look into a crystal ball when I can read Hansard. Madam Speaker has many times said that it is grossly unsatisfactory that Ministers disclose policy intentions via press conference, written answer or leak to favoured journalists, instead of paying this elected House the respect of announcing policies in the House and subjecting themselves to interrogation on them. That practice is emblematic of the arrogance, the presidentialism and the sneering disdain for alternative viewpoints that is regularly exhibited by Ministers and, not infrequently, by Labour Back Benchers.

Mr. Butterfill: I was until recently a director of the Delphi Group, which is this country's largest placer of information technology contractors, and I can confirm that the damage that is being done to industry is incalculable. The United Kingdom used to be the largest suppliers of IT contractors in the world, apart from the United States of America, and what is happening is driving those people abroad to Europe or the USA. The UK economy is losing an important source of talent, energy and innovation.

Mr. Bercow: My hon. Friend is right to underline how serious the situation is. When Ministers talk, as they regularly do, about encouraging exports, it is horrifying to think that that is what they mean. We want to export products to make money, to keep staff, to increase employment opportunities and to generate wealth to make UK plc more successful and better able to provide the quality of public services that a civilised community is entitled to expect. We do not want to export talent. We do not want a brain drain or to find that businesses cannot operate here and choose instead to go elsewhere. The fact that that is happening on a significant scale in an industry with which my hon. Friend is closely acquainted is very serious and I ask the Minister to guarantee—a simple nod of his head will suffice—that he intends to deal with that point in his reply to the debate.

Mr. Wills indicated assent.

Mr. Bercow: I am grateful to the Minister for that confirmation.

I attempted, as a modest Back-Bench Member, to improve the situation by introducing a ten-minute Bill on regulation on business. I wanted to call it the Lifting Burdens from Small Firms Bill, but was advised by the esteemed officials of the House that that would have been too evaluative a title. Those in a position to advise me suggested that it should be the Regulations on Small Businesses (Reduction) Bill, and I had the great pleasure of introducing it on 27 April.

The Bill was intended to be constructive and reflected many constituency representations. It made six proposals to improve the regulatory situation. First, it requested, for the benefit of enterprising and innovative businesses, that there should be an annual statement to Parliament of the cost of regulation on business and of the Government's plans to reduce the cost in the following year. I was horrified to learn from a written reply from the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office that the Government made no such statement in any form, and had no intention of doing so. I therefore emphasised the first point in my eminently reasonable Bill with particular force. Clearly, we need to know what the costs are, whether or not the Government plan to reduce them, and if they do, by how much.

Secondly, I asked that Parliament should be apprised every six months of the progress of any deregulatory initiatives, the steps taken by the Government and their calculation of the effect of those steps. Thirdly, I requested a review of existing regulation to see where gold-plating of European directives and regulations was taking place and where there might be scope to remove or simplify regulations. Fourthly, I suggested exemption from the most burdensome regulations for the smallest firms.

Fifthly, I proposed a system of sunset regulation under which regulations would automatically expire after a given period—three or five years—if they were not of sufficient merit to be re-enacted by Parliament. That proposal was based on the American model, which applies successfully at state and federal level. I drew the House's attention to the basis of the American model—the Regulatory Flexibility Act 1980 and the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act 1996.

Sixthly, my Bill proposed a minimum of three months' consultation on proposed regulations, and a minimum three months' notice of a requirement to implement them. The proposals were sensible, and I received warm support in my constituency and encouragement from a range of business organisations. Members of the public who had listened to the presentation of the Bill wrote to say that it was good sense and that it should not be a matter of party political dispute. I had addressed a problem and proposed a solution. People hoped that the Government would accept it as a non-partisan solution.

There was no frothing at the mouth in my proposals. The Minister of State regularly portrays my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton and me as right-wing firebrands, but my hon. Friends know that we are consensually minded figures who hold relatively middle-of-the-road views on many matters of public policy. We were simply seeking to identify a problem in detail and propose an effective solution. I hoped that I would get a helpful response.

Regrettably, the signs have been confusing. On 25 March, the Minister wrote to me in response to queries that I put to him in the Employment Relations Bill

[Mr. Bercow]

Committee about the American model. He described it somewhat dismissively as "highly prescriptive", and talked about the importance of rooting British policy in British traditions. That is so vague as to be largely meaningless. He inferred—I put no more strongly—that the Government did not propose to adopt my model.

Mr. Wills: Implied.

Mr. Bercow: I thought that the Minister inferred it, but if he wants to say that he implied it, I am happy to accept that. Moreover, a month later, on 27 April, after the presentation of my Bill, I had a brief chat with him. He said to me, "Right diagnosis, wrong prescription." That was explicit. It seemed obvious then that Ministers did not intend to heed my words or apply the measures recommended in my Bill.

Since then, the situation has become curiouser and curiouser. We have now had pronouncements on this important matter from the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. My Bill was commended to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) and, in the course of a parliamentary exchange, the Secretary of State invited me to send him a copy of my Bill and the speech accompanying its presentation with a view to him considering its proposals. It is now 36 days since I wrote to him and, while I have not yet had a response, I feel sure that one is winging its way to me. I shall soon be put out of my misery and learn whether he was impressed.

We have had some anecdotal evidence in the interim that is important for the future of small and medium-sized enterprises that want to prosper and seek to innovate. To his credit, the Secretary of State has admitted that the Government have not got it right on regulation. He gave an interview to The Daily Telegraph or The Sunday Telegraph on the subject and repeated the point on 20 April to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, of which I happen to be a member. He admitted that the Government have not got it right and would have to do better.

I have still had no response to my letter of 20 May. I then chanced upon the Secretary of State's seminal speech to British Chambers of Commerce on 3 June. Whether it is indicative of a likely improvement in Government policy, we do not yet know. It would be premature to say that Government policy has changed for the better because, although there were encouraging words, they were only words. We do not know whether action to match them will follow. Interestingly, he said that, too often, regulations had been introduced with too little consultation and too little warning. I felt vindicated. A mere Back Bencher discovers that his words are echoed by one of the mightiest men in the land. Suddenly, the Secretary of State says with all the authority of his high office to a large audience at British Chambers of Commerce conference what I have been saying for some time to a not-always-packed House and to other audiences. He went on to say that we had to think small first—I must emphasise that I think that he was referring to small businesses rather than to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) or to me. We had to think of small businesses first.

I was supremely encouraged when he said that he found the idea of sunset regulation attractive. At the meeting of the Trade and Industry Committee on 4 November last year, in response to questioning from me, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), then the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, somewhat pooh-poohed the notion of sunset regulation. Indeed, I am sure that the Under-Secretary will not mind if I point out that, in the first instance, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool did not even know what sunset regulation was. I was astonished. I was flabbergasted. I was under the impression that he knew all about the American model. He talked regularly about his visits to the United States. A few days before his appearance before the Select Committee, he had made a speech in which he talked about US enterprise and dynamism. I asked him about sunset regulation, to which he replied, "By which you mean?" I had to explain to the most illustrious representative of new Labour exactly what sunset regulation meant.

One cannot accuse the present incumbent of such woeful ignorance. The Secretary of State knows what sunset regulation is. In his most recent speech on the subject, he said that he found the idea attractive. That is most confusing, because the Under-Secretary gave the distinct impression—obviously not inadvertently, but deliberately—that the Government did not intend to emulate the American model. There is a split between the Under-Secretary on one hand and the Secretary of State on the other.

Mr. Wills rose—

Mr. Bercow: I readily give way to the Under-Secretary. I can see that he is in a state of some perturbation.

Mr. Wills: I hate to see the hon. Gentleman suffering in this way. Let me try to put him out of his misery. Perhaps that will enable him to move on to something else in his most interesting speech. To clarify the point, I suggested that we were not going to adopt American legislation in this country, for the reasons already cited by the hon. Gentleman. Let me make that quite clear: American legislation in this country—not.

Mr. Bercow: I fear that the hon. Gentleman digs himself deeper in. He is wobbling. The idea that American legislation could be directly implemented in the United Kingdom is patently absurd. We are not talking about the transposition of European Union directives and regulations into British law. The issue was whether we would follow the American model. I counsel the hon. Gentleman—for whom I have considerable affection, because he was immensely courteous during the Committee proceedings of the Employment Relations Bill—to take note of the old adage: better to remain silent and look a fool than speak and remove any lingering doubt. The hon. Gentleman is on weak ground; he knows perfectly well that he was against the American model. The Secretary of State is now making noises that give the impression that he is in favour of that model. What we do not know is whether the words about the American model will be translated into practical reality. That is what we want to know.

The second, potentially fatal, split in the Department of Trade and Industry is between the Secretary of State and his Minister of State. I mean no disrespect to the Under-Secretary when I say that it is one thing for the Secretary of State to have a minor tussle with his junior Minister—I do not suppose that the right hon. Gentleman takes umbrage at that; he probably feels that he can contend with the fact that a junior Minister in his Department holds a different view to his own—but to have as his Minister of State a left-wing troglodyte, who is fundamentally opposed to the deregulatory initiatives that the Secretary of State now claims to support, is grave indeed. It is not clear what progress we can make in those circumstances.

We hear words from some Ministers about enterprise, deregulation and the minimising of burdens. We do not hear those words from other Ministers.

Mr. Geraint Davies: In relation to the minimising of burdens, the hon. Gentleman assured me earlier that he would be brief. So far, he has spoken for more than 40 minutes, so, in respect of burdens, perhaps he would like to bring his comments to a close before we fall asleep.

Mr. Bercow: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. First, I did not say anything of the sort to him. It is characteristic of new Labour to twist and turn and misrepresent in every conceivable fashion. Secondly, although I have the highest regard for the hon. Gentleman, I was not aware that he had yet reached the lofty height of either Speaker or Deputy Speaker. If he will forgive me, I shall take my cue from the Deputy Speaker in the Chair. I am not inclined to be guided by the hon. Gentleman's benevolent counsel about the length or content of my speech.

I am concerned about reducing regulations on businesses. The Government are lacerating small businesses. I and my right hon. and hon. Friends want to liberate small businesses. My ten-minute Bill on 27 April this year was a small step in a positive direction at an opportune time. The Government should have supported it. They should not be dithering. They should be introducing their own practical and detailed proposals.

Are the Government blissfully unaware of the sheer scale of the anger of British businesses about the imposts upon them? Do they not know that, on 3 November last year, the president of the Confederation of British Industry, Sir Clive Thompson, described the regulation flowing forth from the Government as a "creeping paralysis", and that he went on to say that, unless action was taken to arrest and reverse the phenomenon, regulation would be the only growth marker in the British economy in 1999?

Is the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) proud of the fact that the president of the CBI so strongly disapproves of the anti-business, anti-enterprise and anti-profit-making culture that is being spawned by a combination of errors of commission and omission by the Government? If he is proud of it, let him defend that stance in front of his electors.

I am not proud of such a stance. I intend to carry on criticising it. I favour a better stance, a Conservative stance, a deregulatory stance, an enterprise-oriented stance—a stance that offers the prospect that small businesses will continue to be, and increasingly be, the engine of economic growth, increased employment and enhanced prosperity for all our people long into the future. At present, the Government do not offer that prospect; the Opposition assuredly do.

1.7 pm

Mr. Geraint Davies (Croydon, Central): I thank the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) for completing his comments within 45 minutes. He seemed to speak not so much about business as about regulation and deregulation. I shall deal with some of those points.

My background is in multinational business; I then started a number of businesses myself. I mention that in response to some of the Opposition comments about Labour Members not having a business background.

I shall not spend a great deal of time speaking about the general economic environmental benefits that have allowed enormous growth in small and medium-sized enterprises in the British economy since the present Government took power. Hon. Members are aware of the extra 400,000 jobs, the lowest inflation in six or seven years, the lowest long-term interest rates in 40 years and the low short-term interest rates, all of which have come about under this Government. The overall environment of stability and job creation has been extremely successful.

Enterprise is in the mind of the entrepreneur. The Government have taken numerous structural and fiscal steps to encourage entrepreneurial activity in small business. When people leave school or university, they should not ask, "Who will give me a job?" They should be thinking actively about how they might become involved in creating new jobs, products and opportunities, rather than walking into a job. We have not quite cracked that problem, but the Government are moving quickly towards resolving it.

The attitude towards risk in Britain is not as ambitious as in the United States. There, on average, every millionaire has gone bankrupt three times. The Government are rightly encouraging responsible risk-taking, which is what we need. However, people are still reluctant to move from a cushy environment to one in which they are taking risks and creating wealth.

The financial situation for small businesses in Britain has historically been difficult, because they have tended to rely on high street banks, which want the collateral of the business man's house, and pull the rug if anything goes wrong. The banks will not consider orders to be guarantees of future cash flow income and have often forced small businesses into bankruptcy on that basis. That is not the situation in continental Europe, where banks often take equity in small businesses.

Fortunately, the Government have been responding to that agenda by trying to establish and encourage venture capital funds, but the difficulty is that venture capital in Britain tends to be focused on big re-engineering—management buy-outs and the like—and not on small business start-ups, which are seen as irrelevant to getting the big bucks. We need to confront the issue of making that culture change, especially if we are to avoid competition from the United States for venture capital opportunities in the single market.

Mr. Butterfill: I must declare an interest. For many years, I have been an adviser to the British Venture Capital Association. The hon. Gentleman is not exactly correct. Although funds are used predominantly in larger businesses, this country's venture capital industry, which is the second largest in the world, supports a much greater number of small businesses in respect of the number of transactions—that is what should be looked at—and that trend is increasing.

[Mr. Butterfill]

Mr. Davies: My point is that the share of cash invested is biased enormously to the larger transactions and the re-engineering of big corporations. There is a great difference between the situation here and that in the United States. The expertise that has been built up in the venture capital industry to enable start-ups is not as developed as that in the United States, although it is growing and the Government are increasing it. We want that expertise to be targeted regionally on the strategies emerging from the regional development agencies.

It is important that the Government consider getting rid of regulations as well as introducing them, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State rightly made a big play of that in his speech to British Chambers of Commerce. In a sense, regulation is a poll tax on all businesses. Although big businesses such as Asda, which has been mentioned in many of our debates, have been progressive in introducing regulation, which is all well and good for them, the administrative burden is small compared with that for a small operator.

We should all bear that point in mind, because big retail and manufacturing operators often want to get rid of small competitors. One way to do that is to encourage more regulation. Although that sounds peculiar, it is the case.

Mr. Bercow: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Davies: I will take a brief intervention, even though the hon. Gentleman gave us a 45-minute monologue.

Mr. Bercow: The hon. Gentleman should be grateful that the substance of his speech is such that it has inspired an intervention from me. I am listening to him intently. I have two points to make. First, will he confirm that he accepts the calculation that the smallest firms—those employing one to four people for the purposes of compliance with tax legislation—face an annual cost of £288 per employee, whereas the largest firms, with 5,000 or more employees, face a cost per head of only about £5?

Secondly, can the hon. Gentleman clear up a smidgen of confusion resulting from the Minister of State's contribution? Given that the Secretary of State said in his speech to British Chambers of Commerce on 3 June that he intended to make three significant statements on deregulation in June, and that that speech was the first of the three, what were the other two? Have we had them yet, did we miss them or have we a treat awaiting us next week?

Mr. Davies: I must confess that, unfortunately, the Secretary of State has not disclosed his particular intention to me. I am not in a position to answer that question, as the hon. Gentleman may have guessed.

Mr. Wills: Perhaps I can give the House two other examples. First, we have launched a consultation document on the automated payroll service which, as the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) will be aware, will help small firms with one of the most onerous burdens on them—administering a payroll. Secondly, as he will also be aware, next week we are launching the consultation document on the Small Business Service, which is specifically tasked with helping small firms to cope with regulations. Those are but two examples.

Mr. Davies: The Small Business Service, which we are all about to enjoy, is of paramount importance in focusing the eyes of civil servants and others on the needs of small business in terms of the overhead of regulation. I do not want to take too much time because I have criticised the hon. Member for Buckingham for taking a great deal of time, but I want to cite as an example of regulation what happened when I started a tour operating company.

In VAT law, there is something called the tour operators' margin scheme. The tour operator would receive some money from people who were going on holiday. After deducting the cost of flights to leave the gross margin, one would pay VAT on that part of the gross margin associated with accommodation. That was fine. Then, suddenly, it was decided that a company must pay VAT on both the accommodation and the flight element of the gross margin unless it owned an airline. That was unfair to small businesses without an airline. Small business responded to that effect. The advice from Customs and Excise was, "In that case, start up your own airline company."

So, I then had to start another company—an aviation company—which simply bought from the people from whom I was buying flights in the first place. The new company sold to the original one with a margin, then paid back a management fee to equalise the impact on VAT. The costs of that process, and the fact that entrepreneurial and management time is being diverted into that, are ridiculous.

That is a simple example of structures that can come from Europe, or from the Government—that change took place under the previous Government—which can have a very difficult impact on small businesses that are competing internationally against very large operators. Such problems are now well known to Government, which is why the issue has risen to the top of the agenda—hence the statement made by the Secretary of State to British Chambers of Commerce.

Inward investment, which tends to be from larger companies, has a direct spin-off effect on small and medium-sized enterprises servicing them. Recently, I attended a meeting of Japanese industrialists and financiers in Britain. They discussed the prospects for future investment and the fact that, increasingly, they were looking for added value in Britain rather than mechanical assembly work. That emphasises the need, of which the Government are aware, for our focus on education, education, education, to be about adding value to the things that we do in this economy and generating decent wages in a competitive way. We are not competing on a very low skill basis with the developing world, which would be in no one's interests.

Europe and the euro have been alluded to. As is known, the Government's position is that we should move forward as and when the conditions are right for Britain to enter. That is an important point, because although Japanese investors are happy to invest in Britain as a platform into continental Europe, if they thought that we would never join the single currency—which is the view of some people—they would simply move their investment into continental Europe. In the meantime, those people who feel more risk averse about our eventual intentions are hedging their bets, and some of their production is going over to the euro.

A similar process is evident in the financial markets. Institutions such as the Industrial Bank of Japan must decide where to site their administration—Frankfurt, Paris or London. We need to think about that in the context of innovation and enterprise, which cannot simply be about small business. We are talking about enterprise and innovation in large business, and the relationship between large and small business. Investors are attracted by the English language, access to the European markets, and the more flexible and less-regulated market in Britain. To be competitive, we need to preserve that.

Training and added value are key issues. The difficulty for any company in the business culture in the United Kingdom and the United States, which is different from that in Japan, is that people do not stay all their working lives in one company, so it cannot freely invest enormous amounts of money in human capital and productivity in the knowledge that people will stay for life and it will not lose that investment. In Britain, companies invest in management and productivity, but people then go to another company. There is a danger of poaching, which is a disincentive for companies to invest in higher productivity.

We must devise strategies for transferring the training risk. We have already begun to create links between universities and industry so that the risk is shared. More productive people will emerge from that, which will be good for the economy and the Exchequer, and will create additional jobs. That is to be welcomed. I was involved with the university for industry in its infancy, and it is good that the Government have such high ambitions for the success of that idea.

Hon. Members have not mentioned the internet as a means of generating more prosperity for small business. Small businesses, by their very nature, tend to trade in a small area, not internationally. The internet offers a new opportunity for small businesses in Britain to find market niches anywhere in the world. The single currency will make that easier. We have sterling, but there is a single currency in Europe, so there is no need to have many transactions.

Complementary products and compatible markets can be found on the internet. That will enable small businesses to grow. There are new opportunities to generate products by sourcing products from foreign markets. There is an argument for import substitution. People buy products that are exported to Britain and are not produced in this country. Why are they not produced in Britain? Could they be produced here? Do the Government have a role to play in helping to facilitate the production of competitive products? Perhaps the regional development agencies could be involved. I should be interested in the Minister's thoughts on that.

Products emerge in other markets that are not yet prospective imports into this country. If we were quick enough, we could create similar products and establish export businesses in that market. Does the electronic age provide partnership opportunities to enable us to do that?

The Government have created the conditions for success in Britain: a stable environment, stable interest rates, and an increase in the number of people in work. They are committed to containing regulation so that it is not a hindrance to successful business, and are creating an enterprise and innovation culture. As we approach the millennium with new confidence, Britain can be proud to be leading the field.

1.23 pm

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): I shall follow the example of my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) and declare my interests as recorded in the register. I am a partner in a family firm of consultancy on finance, corporate affairs and real estate. I am a director of Miller Non-Marine Ltd., which is one of the leading Lloyds insurance broking companies. I have a residual interest in Curchod and Company, a firm of chartered surveyors of which I was a senior partner before I entered the House. I have for many years been the parliamentary adviser to the British Venture Capital Association. I hope that, in some small way, I have contributed to the growth and success of the venture capital industry.

I have listened with great care to the speeches of Labour Members. Not everything that the Government have done to encourage industry and commerce has been entirely bad—some of their proposals have been helpful in principle. The changes to the capital gains tax regime are a step in the right direction. However, the abolition of indexation and the introduction of a 10-year taper will mean not just that an entrepreneur will be locked in for far longer, but that in most instances he will end up paying more tax. The taper is far too long, and the definition of business assets is far too narrowly drawn. I welcome the principle of a taper for capital gains, but I hope that the Government will look at the length of the taper, because it is not encouraging new investment at present. That is the view of the British Venture Capital Association, and the view of all other serious commentators.

I am worried about the general direction of policy in other respects, and I shall expand on that shortly. First, however, I think it worthwhile to consider the direction in which the country has moved since the last Labour Government. At that time, the British economy was largely a command economy. Huge swathes of industry were nationalised and in public hands. That economy was regarded as the sick man of Europe. Trade unions had massive power, and at the same time we had appalling industrial relations. We had one of the worst strike records among the western economies.

As a result of all that, our economy was steadily going down the tubes. If we had continued with the policies that were being pursued then, we would still be in that sorry state now. Fortunately, even this Labour Government no longer believe in most of those policies, but there are worrying signs that they are turning back in that direction.

The last Conservative Government changed everything. We reformed trade union legislation. We now have the best strike record in Europe, and the lowest levels of unemployment in Europe. We have privatised all those massive state industries. Who would want to return to the days when telephones were obtained from the Post Office? We could have any phone we liked, as long as it was black and had a funny circular dial. Today, we have an industry that is a world leader.

[Mr. John Butterfill]

Who would want to return to the days of the old BEA and BOAC? The service was appalling, and the cost of the subsidy from the taxpayer was massive. Today's modern, dynamic industry boasts not just British Airways—probably the world's leading airline—but plenty of deregulated competitors, such as Virgin Airways, British Midland and easyJet. They have been an enormous success, and they have liberated the British economy.

The last Government's abolition of exchange controls, which was vehemently opposed by the Labour party, was probably the most important deregulatory step that could have been taken. No one would reverse that today. Indeed, all the deregulatory reforms undertaken by the last Government are being earnestly emulated throughout the world, even in the former Soviet bloc countries. In fact, many of those countries are deregulating rather more quickly than we are under the present Government.

I must confess, as a long-time enthusiast for the European Union, that my initial enthusiasm was born of two things. First, I felt that the EU's political objectives were highly desirable, in that they combined the free economies of Europe and would prevent our ever going to war again. The vision of people such as Mr. Schuman was outstanding in that respect. Secondly, during the days of the Labour Government—I have described the position of our economy under that Government—we saw the countries of the European Union, as it is now, as a bastion of free enterprise, innovation and harmonious working relations. We did not have that in this country. One therefore thought that, by joining the European Union, we could perhaps prevent the slide into state socialism that we were experiencing and, by that association, improve our economy.

Sadly, the situation in the European Union has rather changed. In various European countries, profoundly interventionist legislation has followed the election of a succession of socialist Governments. Those countries maintain very large parts of their economy within state control, and regulation has grown and grown. Today, a comparison between the European Union and the United Kingdom is not such an attractive prospect—certainly not the one that it was 20 years ago.

The change is perhaps exemplified by the non-wage costs imposed on employers in the European Union. In the United Kingdom, non-wage costs are 19 per cent. of wages, but, in France, they are 44 per cent.; in Spain, 35 per cent.; and, even in Germany, they are 27 per cent. Such costs are making the economies of those countries increasingly less competitive, which would not be totally disastrous were it not for the regulatory burden being imposed on European Union employers.

Year after year, more regulations are dreamt up by the Commissioners and imposed on industry and commerce across the EU. Now, the United Kingdom has adopted the working time directive, a minimum wage and the parental leave directive; and the Government are increasing trade union rights and enacting their Employment Relations Bill. All those changes are designed to increase the burden on employers, making industries less competitive.

If Labour Members do not believe that that is true, they have only to consider what has happened to United Kingdom inward investment—which has surpassed inward investment to all the other European Union countries combined. Why have we received so much inward investment? It is not because we have an especially low-wage economy, or a particularly attractive climate, but because we offer a business climate that is far more attractive than that of the other EU countries.

Mr. Wills: I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman is aware that, last year, under a new Labour Government, we had the best year ever for inward investment. Is he aware that that shows that those inward investors do not share his concerns?

Mr. Butterfill: No, I am not aware that they do not share those concerns, because many of them say that they do share them, as do many leaders of British industry. Of course we are continuing to receive inward investment. The golden legacy that the Government inherited from the previous Conservative Government has created conditions that still make United Kingdom inward investment extremely attractive. I am concerned that the Government's actions are making it increasingly less attractive to invest here. If they continue down that road, they will achieve the end result of making it very unattractive to invest here—which is not their objective, I hope.

If the Minister doubts that, he has only to consider what has happened in the other countries of the European Union. German manufacturers, for example, are moving their manufacturing progressively out of Germany. Volkswagen is establishing itself in the Czech republic; BMW is investing in the United Kingdom and in the United States; and Mercedes-Benz is creating new plant capacity in the United States. French industries are acquiring British companies in ever growing numbers. Indeed, the French centres of learning such as ENA—Ecole Nationale d'Administration—and Science Po are extremely concerned. In the past, their brightest and best graduates used to go into French industry and commerce, now increasing numbers of them go to work in the United States or the United Kingdom. One has only to look around the City of London to see how many graduates of the prestigious French academic institutions are employed here rather than in France. The French Government are extremely worried about that.

I hope that Labour Members will heed those warning signals, because if they take us ever further down the road that certain people in the Commission, the European Union and certain political leaders in EU countries are advocating, they will achieve their objective of making us all suffer equally the misery suffered by employers in the EU. As a result, we shall become increasingly less competitive and lose the enormous advantage that the previous Conservative Government bequeathed to the country.

One particular measure that is especially worrying is the energy tax that the Labour Government intend to impose on British industry. The climate change levy is unnecessary as Britain has already done more than any other leading economy to reduce emissions. Of course I am sympathetic to the idea that we should continue to reduce emissions worldwide, but not unilaterally or in a way that will damage the British economy.

The United States has no intention of making serious moves in that direction—as was confirmed to me by an American business man only yesterday. Most of our competitors are doing far less than we have already done. We need to look at the burdens that the proposed measure is likely to impose on British industry. According to British Steel, it will mean fuel price increases of 49 per cent. for coal, 40 per cent. for gas and 20 per cent. for electricity.

According to the CBI, the tax will add 8 per cent. to electricity prices for small users and 15 per cent. to gas prices. For larger uses it will add 15 to 20 per cent. to the price of electricity and 40 per cent. to that of gas.

The statistics are enormously worrying because they mean that critical industries such as British Steel, which is going through a difficult time because of world market conditions, will become increasingly and unilaterally less competitive at a time when it needs to be ever more competitive if it is to survive in the current world environment.

Mr. Bercow: I recognise the figures that my hon. Friend has just given to the House. Am I not also right in thinking that British Steel calculates that its costs will increase as a result of this measure by something in the order of £200 million? I believe that that is an annual figure, but perhaps my hon. Friend knows better than I do.

Mr. Butterfill: My hon. Friend, in his customary way, is extremely well informed and accurate. Those are the figures that were quoted by British Steel.

I really do not see how, at this very delicate time for British Steel, the Government can realistically contemplate increasing its costs by £200 million a year. It is enormously difficult to see how the company can make savings in other areas to compensate for that level of imposition. It is not just British Steel, of course. The director of policy at the Engineering Employers Federation is immensely critical and has said:

"This is more than a bit of a scare. If you end up with an asymmetric position on energy taxation you will find that either UK based companies will move their production facilities to other countries or they will simply close down."

That is a fairly apocalyptic prediction from such a person as the director of policy at the Engineering Employers Federation. Can the Government really contemplate that sort of action when they claim that they are particularly supportive of engineering and manufacturing industry? It just does not add up.

There will be odd regional effects. Representatives of Transco and some of its partners in the energy industry in Northern Ireland came to express their concerns to me yesterday. They said that the programme of modernising the energy production industry in Northern Ireland that they are committed to would be severely prejudiced by the measure. The fine margins that they calculated for their investment would be almost entirely eroded. Under the rules that the regulator has to follow they would not be permitted to recover a significant proportion of the cost from their consumers. They estimate that the increased burdens placed on Northern Ireland businesses as a result of the levy would make them increasingly uncompetitive, particularly in comparison with their rivals in the Republic of Ireland.

We are trying to increase prosperity in Northern Ireland. There are sensitive negotiations about the future and economic prosperity is probably the one factor that can help to bind the parties together in a common objective. Destroying that burgeoning prosperity would cause profound damage and may be a considerable contributory factor if the Government's political efforts—which I praise—fail apart.

It is mad to impose a unilateral burden on British industry that will not fall on our competitors. I urge the Government to think again.

1.41 pm

Mr. Hilton Dawson (Lancaster and Wyre): It is good to join in the debate at this late stage. I have very much enjoyed the past four hours of discussion. There have been some worthy contributions from hon. Members on both sides. The hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) has just made a balanced and interesting speech.

In just under 12 hours' time I shall still be out at a rather nice do in Lancaster. When I am celebrating with my constituents, I shall enjoy an extra little frisson at the thought of the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) sitting up in bed with his Ovaltine learning copious amounts of Hansard so that he can quote it back at us on another occasion.

Mr. Bercow rose—

Mr. Dawson: It is only a joke. I shall not give the hon. Gentleman further opportunity to entertain us. He has done so for long enough.

I particularly want to talk about Lancaster and the opportunities for business development of research expertise and ideas from higher education. That is the most important development that the Government are trying to introduce. For decades under successive Governments, British industry has failed to make anything like the most of the opportunities presented by some of the best and most innovative and inventive brains in the world. I greatly welcome the range of Government initiatives, including partnership with the Wellcome trust, increased investment in scientific research, the new round of the foresight programme and the new opportunities for investment created by the provision of capital for small business innovation.

The key concepts of enterprise and innovation, taken with the opportunities presented by the Government, will galvanise Lancaster's economy. We can establish Lancaster as a regional centre at the heart of the north-west, but with potent economic links to the world, to attract business investment to our superb environment. Our communications links to the north and south are important, and those to the west—to Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland—are increasingly important. We have excellent educational resources, particularly—but not solely—the world-class university of Lancaster, the engine for the future of Lancaster.

I profoundly believe that the small and beautiful city of Lancaster has the potential to build a great knowledge-based economy. The university has first-class resources across the board, but the resources in applied science, computing, biochemistry and management are world class. Academics and students are attracted from around the world to study in Lancaster.

I am talking about a knowledge-based and environmentally sustainable economy. Enterprise, innovation, development and investment in our knowledge, expertise and skills could provide a good model on a small scale for the whole country, and could certainly transform the economy of Lancaster, which is important to the north-west, but which needs transforming in many respects.

[Mr. Dawson]

We have heard much today about the golden economic legacy, but I have not seen that in Lancaster over the past 20 years. Lancaster once led the world in the manufacture and production of floor and wall coverings. However, only about 10 per cent. of people in employment in the city are now employed in manufacturing.

Lancaster has pockets of high and endemic unemployment and is being denied the investment that it manifestly needs for its transport infrastructure. The city requires radical measures and major investment to deal with congestion and to develop integrated and sustainable transport. Lancaster has large areas of industrial dereliction.

Frankly, Lancaster was comprehensively failed by the Conservative party which, for 27 years, exerted political dominance in the city and represented it in this House. The Tories took the place for granted and let slip our assisted area status. They had no ambition for the area and allowed it to run down. I believe that, with our resources, our local people's ability to work together and the opportunities provided by the Government, we have a chance to put all that behind us.

Last week, I was at Lancaster royal grammar school to witness innovation and enterprise at first hand. There is unique collaboration between that school, one of the country's best; Lancaster university; British Energy, from Heysham nuclear power station; Linklaser, a software firm; and an extremely bright ex-student, John Fawcett. They are using the national grid for learning and have developed a programme that makes live data about the operation of the power station immediately accessible to schools on the internet.

I quit physics as soon as I could, but even I can see that that could transform science education. The knowledge, experience and skills at Lancaster university and in local colleges, schools, business and the local authority can produce business innovation and enterprise and the skilled well-paid jobs of the future.

At a recent business breakfast, we considered a vast range of Government initiatives to develop science and enterprise and incubate business from higher education research, encouraging investment and innovation in small business. There are plenty of bright ideas that can be transformed into future opportunities. That is the great hope for the city of Lancaster and for the national economy.

I have witnessed the development of robots at Lancaster university and heard of small businesses setting up all along the coast around Morecambe bay, from Lancaster up to Sellafield. There is the embryonic network of a mechatronics coast, linking innovative industry with business and university research and development, developing new applications and pioneering the use of robots under the sea and in hostile industrial environments.

There is a growing initiative in applied sciences, with engineering students being placed in local companies and gaining experience of the real working world. In a few short weeks, there has been a complete revamping of the IT systems of a small local firm, DMS Meters, which from humble beginnings—in someone's shed, I think—is ploughing into worldwide electric metering markets in the middle east and Asia.

My favourite example is of two local farmers, Ken and Colin Newsham, who, with intelligence and courage and through their sheer willingness to engage with people, listen and learn, are linking with one of the best management schools in the country, at Lancaster university, to turn a traditional north Lancashire family farm into a management training centre and a model for sustainable development and diversification in the countryside.

Those are but a few examples of how the university can be the engine of the new economy in Lancaster. That is where our competitive future lies. We are building the knowledge-driven economy and transcending the devastation that was bequeathed to us in the 1980s. That is not an easy process. Although all sides are willing to work together to grasp the many opportunities being provided by the Government, we have a long way to go. The cultural differences between the academic and business worlds can be profound and we need to marry them together to achieve a change. As Professor Richard Davies of Lancaster university has said, we need to put the D firmly back into R and D.

We are also struggling with decades of under-investment. We have not had objective 1, objective 2 or assisted area status to help with technology transfer. We have the land for the business park, the ideas and the enthusiasm for the knowledge-based economy, but we need real resources to push it on. We need time, commitment and people, as well the opportunities to build and develop. The Government are dealing with the big issues of higher education, and we need more students, especially women students, to study technology, science and mathematics. We need more bright people, perhaps from backgrounds without a tradition of further and higher education. In Lancaster, we are developing good access arrangements and we can make progress from there.

We desperately need the Government to sustain their initiative and drive and ensure that all the benefits of their excellent policies make a difference at the grassroots. I have a vision for Lancaster that incorporates ideas, innovation and enterprise into our glorious historic setting and beautiful city, freed from traffic congestion and offering real opportunities to those who have been denied them for so long. We can provide a dynamic setting for research, imagination and enterprise in the heart of the north-west, in green countryside between the dales, the lakes and the sea, and a resource for the world that will draw people in. I am pleased that the Minister is replying to the debate, because we are hoping to draw him to Lancaster soon. We have a good tale to tell, and we would appreciate some special help with innovation and enterprise so that we can grasp the future that is not so very far away.

1.58 pm

The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (Mr. Michael Wills): We have had an interesting debate today on an important subject and I thank all the hon. Members who have taken part. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan), whom I welcome to the Front Bench, gave a fascinating display of ideological zeal. I look forward to hearing more of his interesting visions in the coming months.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) highlighted the importance of the minimum wage and spoke of the need for seedcorn support for R and D. He also spoke passionately about the need to support young entrepreneurs. The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) agreed that the role of the Government was to find a third way between the old-fashioned interventionism of the post-war period and the crude laissez-faire approach that the Conservative party seems still to espouse. He spoke eloquently of the importance of R and D and mentioned the trade deficit. However, he omitted to mention that, in the late 1980s, the deficit was 4 per cent. of gross domestic product and is now down to 1.5 per cent. of GDP, but perhaps that would have ruined his argument. The hon. Gentleman also inquired about various policies and I am delighted to say that they are either on their way already, or they will be shortly. I welcome his support for the Small Business Service, consultation on which will be launched next week.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett) spoke of the British genius for innovation and of the need to continue to combine it with entrepreneurial talent and drive. She gave a compelling picture of how her constituency shows the need to give everyone the opportunity to innovate and to grow a business.

We heard a remarkable 45-minute monologue from the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), who began with effusive congratulations for the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton. I noticed that the hon. Gentleman used no notes, and I congratulate him on that. He gave a sparkling defence of zealotry. He was against the right to a decent minimum wage, against the right to paid holidays, against help for children and against help for child care. He has not yet written his manifesto, but I look forward to reading all that again.

Mr. Bercow: I feel sure that the Minister's misrepresentation of my speech is entirely inadvertent, but I challenge him to identify in Hansard on Monday morning the column at which I object to paid holidays. If he can do so, I shall happily donate £100 to charity. If not, I hope that he will do the same.

Mr. Wills: I had misunderstood the hon. Gentleman, and I now understand that he favours the working time directive.

Mr. Bercow: No.

Mr. Wills: The hon. Gentleman is not in favour of the working time directive. I look forward to continuing this discussion with him.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: The hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) mentioned Hansard on Monday morning, so I would take him up on his bet, because we were not sitting then.

Mr. Wills: I thank my hon. Friend.

The hon. Member for Buckingham spent a lot of time rehearsing the arguments of his ten-minute Bill. I am happy to agree that regulations can be burdensome for business. Indeed, the Government led by the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major), whom the hon. Gentleman supported, added 10,000 regulations in their final three years. With the greatest of respect to the hon. Gentleman, I have to say that his remedies are either mere debating points or already on their way. I shall not delay the House now, but shall happily explain later to the hon. Gentleman which of his remedies fall into which category.

My hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) rightly drew attention to the needs to encourage responsible risk taking and to develop regional venture capital funds, as we are doing. I was pleased to hear him highlight the central importance of new information and communication technologies and the importance of the internet to the growth and prosperity of small businesses.

The hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) offered welcome support for Government policy, and I am pleased that he shared his views on the European Union. He mentioned the climate change levy—the so-called energy tax—on which I should like to reassure him. We are aware of competitiveness issues, but we must take every measure to produce sustainable development and preserve the environment. First, the new levy will entail no overall increase in the burden of tax on business. Secondly, we intend to set significantly lower rates for the energy-intensive sectors. We are in negotiation with the sectors involved, including steel. I hope that the hon. Gentleman can take some comfort from all that.

Mr. Butterfill: The Minister says that there will be no overall increase, and I assume that he is referring to the offset from national insurance changes, but British Steel estimates that only 4 per cent. of its costs will be met by the national insurance reductions.

Mr. Wills: I can only repeat what I have said. There will be no overall increase in the burden of tax on business. To take one company as a negation of that point is to miss the point.

I welcome the support of my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) for Government policy on science, innovation and enterprise. He gave a glowing description of his beautiful constituency. I was interested by his cogent analysis of how what the Government are doing will help his constituency.

The most interesting feature of the debate was the way in which it revealed a stark dividing line between the Government and the Conservatives about how best to promote innovation and enterprise. They are motherhood words; we all accept that they need to be encouraged. The difference is about how to do it. The Conservatives still rest on their record in government. They hanker after a largely mythical 19th century vision of laissez-faire. That was encapsulated in the contemptuous rejection by the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton of the idea of partnership. I was surprised by his scorn for something to which I thought that we could all subscribe. It reveals the extremism rooted in the Conservatives that they can reject partnership as incompatible with their laissez-faire vision.

Mr. Duncan: Does the Minister accept the Conservative view that innovation and enterprise in commerce are predominantly private sector phenomena?

Mr. Wills: I am happy to enlighten the hon. Gentleman about our view of the respective roles of Government and the private sector. We differ on the role of Government. We all agree that business must do what business does best, but we believe that there is a role for Government.

Some Conservative Members mentioned IR35 but they did not mention that it is a measure to tackle tax avoidance. I would have hoped that Conservative Members could have joined us in agreeing that we should try to reduce the scope for tax avoidance—indeed, that is the job of Government. When taxes are levied democratically through this House, we should all agree that people should pay them. Nor did Conservative Members mention that there is nothing in IR35 to stop agency working or individuals setting up service companies, which lies at the root of their objections. I am happy to be corrected, but they appear to be against any Government action to reduce the scope for tax avoidance. That is typical of their dogmatic, extreme approach.

Mr. Duncan rose—

Mr. Wills: If the Conservatives are prepared to support us in trying to reduce the scope for tax avoidance, I shall happily give way.

Mr. Duncan: We are against the Government deeming something to be tax avoidance to make people pay more tax.

Mr. Wills: I am not sure that I am wholly clear about the hon. Gentleman's position on tax avoidance. We will return to the subject in the months ahead.

The fundamental dividing line between us is the role of Government. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton has intervened on that already. We believe that the Government have a clear and necessary role in supporting business and promoting innovation and enterprise. The Government cannot absent themselves from the field. They must underwrite the essential conditions for growth and prosperity and tear down the barriers to growth that inevitably arise in any market. They must help create the conditions in which business can flourish.

The Government must first create the essential platform for innovation and enterprise: a stable and supportive economic environment. Under the Conservatives, Britain was probably the most volatile economy in Europe, as a Lloyds bank survey showed before the last general election. Interest rates rocketed to 15 per cent. in the early 1990s and inflation to 10 per cent. Boom and bust is the worst possible environment for business to plan ahead.

The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton mentioned investment. Between 1990 and 1993, business investment fell by 18 per cent. That is the worst possible environment for innovation and enterprise. This Government have taken the tough action needed to create the stable and supportive environment that business needs.

We have given the Bank of England operational independence to set interest rates. As my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood so cogently pointed out, the Tories still cannot make up their minds whether they support that or whether they will reverse it. Over the past two years, we have reduced public borrowing by £32 billion. As a result of the measures that we have taken, inflation has remained at, or around, the Government's target of 2.5 per cent. for the past 11 months. Base rates are now at 5 per cent.—that is the lowest level for 22 years. Mortgage rates are now at their lowest level for 33 years. Last year, business investment rose by 7 per cent.

We have also acted to give back to business the resources needed for innovation. The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton mentioned tax. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry pointed out, the hon. Gentleman omitted to mention the fact that corporation tax has been cut to 30 per cent.—its lowest ever level. The starting rate for small firms has also been cut to its lowest level ever—10 per cent. The ratio of tax to gross domestic product is lower this year than it was last year; over the next two years, it will be lower than it is this year. The total corporate tax burden on business in this country is lower than in most EU countries.

Of course, Government must do more than that. We must help to create the essential infrastructure of knowledge and skills. The value placed on that by the Conservatives is demonstrated by the fact that, when we came into office, we inherited a science budget—the underpinning for innovation—that was due to fall by 5 per cent. over the following two years. We took the necessary action. We made available for the science base an extra £1 billion over the next three years. By 2001–02, the science budget will be about 15 per cent., in real terms, above its value in 1998–99.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh spoke about DTI support for innovation. I am glad that he raised that issue. We have given a £100 million boost to the smart scheme for small and medium-sized enterprises to undertake research and development and technology development. The research and development tax credit that we are introducing will underwrite almost one third of R and D costs for SMEs. That will give a crucial boost to innovation in a sector that Members on both sides of House will agree is a critical motor for our future economic development.

Mr. Chidgey: I welcome the hon. Gentleman's comments. Does he share my concern that, in our economy, over time, the amount of investment in R and D as a proportion of GDP has fallen compared to the nations with which we compete? Is the Government's policy to try to restore, over time, the level of R and D investment as a proportion of GDP to one that at least equals that in our competitor nations?

Mr. Wills: The hon. Gentleman is right. We inherited a desperate situation when we came into office. I agree with him on that point. We are taking the necessary measures to put right that situation. There is now a Labour Government and we are moving forward—at last. We are investing in the skills of our people—the crucial underpinning for the enterprise economy. We are providing £21 billion new money for education; we are setting up the university for industry to encourage lifelong learning. By 2002, we shall give every school in the country access to the unique learning opportunities afforded by the internet—95 per cent. of those schools will be connected by a high-speed ISDN line. We are using the best technology that is available; we shall carry on doing so for our children's future.

Mr. Bercow: I suspect that the hon. Gentleman's compendium of knowledge on that latter point is not as comprehensive as it might be. Does he think that it is right that Gawcott county first school, a very small school in my Buckingham constituency, should pay the same for line rental, for the purposes of internet access, as a large comprehensive? That is the current position.

Mr. Wills: As always, I am astonished by the hon. Gentleman's knowledge of his constituency. If he gives me details about that school, I shall be happy to look into it.

In relation to the general point about line access, we realise that, if we are to build the essential electronic infrastructure, it is a fundamental goal that we must roll out those technologies as quickly as possible; that means considering the whole question of internet access.

Oftel—the Office of Telecommunications—published a consultation on the matter and is digesting the results. We await Oftel's proposals. I assure the hon. Gentleman that these matters are close to my heart and to that of the Government.

We have launched the £20 million reach-out fund which will help to foster closer links between universities and business. We are also increasing the DTI's innovation budget over the next three years to some £230 million.

We all agree that small firms will be the crucial motor for growth and prosperity in the years ahead. We are launching the Small Business Service to create a ladder of opportunity for all small businesses, to help people move from employment or unemployment into self-employment, to help them over that critical stage in self-employment when they take on their first employee, and all the way up the ladder.

When small firms face critical barriers to growth, the Government will offer help if they want it. We are not thrusting it down their throats. We are leaving them to get on with it, but sometimes businesses need help and support, because markets do not always work perfectly. With his in-depth knowledge, the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton knows that the markets can be lumpy and patchy, and small firms often face particular barriers to growth. The Government will be there to help them if they want.

One of the most onerous administrative burdens that small firms face is administering the payroll. We will help them with the automated payroll service. We will help them with the burden of regulation, in the way that has already been discussed. We will help small firms with access to appropriate finance. There is a critical equity gap for many small firms—

Mr. Chidgey rose—

Mr. Wills: I will make progress, if I may.

We will help small firms with the critical equity gap by rolling out regional venture capital funds, which will help with the smaller packets of venture capital that are so lacking at present. [Interruption.] I know that Opposition Members are talking among themselves and are not very interested in what we do for small firms. They should be more concerned than they are. It is all very well talking the talk now, but when they were in government, they did not walk the walk.

I remind Opposition Members that the average net loss of small businesses in every year of the 1992 to 1997 Government—that is, the surplus of companies closing over companies opening up—was 72,000. In 1992, more than half a million companies closed down. That represents half a million heartbreaks for the people who risked everything, worked hard and were let down by the Government.

By way of contrast, in the first full year of a Labour Government, there was a net gain of 36,000 businesses opening up. That is the difference between us and them. There was a net loss, on average, in every year of the John Major Government, with 72,000 companies closing. Under new Labour, there has been a net gain of 36,000 companies opening.

Mr. Duncan rose—

Mr. Wills: I give way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. Before the hon. Gentleman intervenes, I remind the Minister that he must refer to hon. Members by their constituency.

Mr. Wills: Indeed, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise.

Mr. Duncan: What concerns us is that the Minister's long litany of action that the Government will take—he got quite animated when he was citing it—smacks of Government intervention and Government intrusion. Is he saying that the regional venture capital funds will be state funds, or will they be entirely private enterprise funds?

Mr. Wills: The hon. Gentleman should recognise the difference between intrusion and support. I hope that, as the months unfold, he will grow to learn and appreciate the distinction between them. On regional venture capital funds—

Mr. Chidgey rose—

Mr. Bercow rose—

Mr. Wills: I will deal with that point, if I may, and then give way to the hon. Gentlemen, who are obviously desperate to intervene again.

Regional venture capital funds will be a private-public sector partnership. We are putting in public funds to lever in considerably greater sums of private sector capital. We have been working closely with the private sector on the matter.

Mr. Chidgey: I have listened with great interest as the Minister has expressed enthusiastic support for small business in particular. Will he address a particular issue? A recent survey has shown that there is only 6 per cent. take-up of Government programmes by business. What, precisely, will he and the Government do to improve that?

Mr. Wills: I again make the point that we are there to offer support for business if and when it wants it. We are providing that support and make no secret of it. We intend constantly to improve the quality of that support. We are not thrusting it down the throat of business, as the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton seems to be suggesting, nor should we do so, as the hon. Member for Eastleigh seems to be suggesting. We are providing support for businesses when they want it—the support that they need and deserve.

[Mr. Wills]

Mr. Bercow: In waxing lyrical about the fortunes of small firms under the Government, the Minister exudes alarming complacency. Does he accept the findings of the Dun and Bradstreet survey, which shows in the first quarter of this year a 32 per cent. increase in small company liquidations relative to the same period last year? In particular, does he acknowledge that the percentage increase in his—[Interruption.] I do hope he is attending to the point; it is of the utmost significance. The increase in small company liquidations in his own south-west region is 40 per cent. Does he accept that? Is he worried by it? Will he show a bit of concern? Above all, will he do something about it?

Mr. Wills: I had hoped that the hon. Gentleman knew me well enough by now to know that I am never complacent about anything. Governments can always do better and we will not take things for granted, which is the trap that the previous Government fell into. Businesses, too, can always do better and everything the Government have done shows that we are not complacent.

One reason for rolling out the Small Business Service is that we think that business support can be made better still. We will welcome all views on that, including those of the hon. Member for Buckingham. We want to make sure that mechanisms are in place to provide business with the support that it deserves and needs. If he wants to come up with further suggestions, I can assure him that they will be gratefully received, if not necessarily acted on.

If I may, I shall move on to Europe. Given the visceral instincts of the Conservative party towards the European Union and the European single market, it was perhaps inevitable that a debate about innovation and enterprise would somehow end up on that issue. Labour Members believe that the innovative genius and enterprise of our people could run to waste unless this country is actively engaged with our trading partners to ensure that our companies can sell as easily overseas as they can at home.

We are a great trading people. [Interruption.] Does the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton disagree?

Mr. Duncan: So far, so good.

Mr. Wills: I am delighted that, from a sedentary position, the hon. Gentleman has agreed with that proposition. We are a great trading people and we need to engage actively with our trading partners overseas, so I am unclear why Conservative Members lash out at the EU and at the single market, where we do more than 50 per cent. of our trade. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton disagrees with me that the Conservative party is opposed to the European Union, the European single market and everything that goes with them. Would he like to clarify his position?

Mr. Duncan: I am perfectly happy to confirm that the Minister is wrong when he says that we are opposed to the European Union and the single market.

Mr. Wills: I am grateful for that. The hon. Member for Buckingham said that he deplored politicians who speak rhetoric, but do not deliver the means to deliver on the rhetoric. Perhaps the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton will explain in a little more detail how the constant carping about and sniping at Europe, the constant removal of Conservative Ministers from any discussion on European issues when they were in office, opting out of the social chapter and the contempt that Conservative Members so often show for the policy measures put forward by our European partners will further the integration of the single market.

Mr. Duncan: Because we wish to be in Europe, but not run by Europe, and because we wish to preserve the right to make our own law, we urge the Government to discuss more widely the dangers of the single currency, on which the electorate recently delivered a damning verdict.

Mr. Wills: I wondered when we would get to the soundbites; I have now found out. I believe that the most recent opinion poll suggests that the verdict in the European elections had absolutely nothing to do with anything except the low turnout. The Conservative party managed to mobilise its core support with a rather extreme manifesto based on a misunderstanding of what is going on in Europe, but that is a matter for that party. At the general election, we shall see what verdict the British people place on our respective policies towards Europe.

Mr. Bercow: The hon. Gentleman seems to labour under the misapprehension that he has a strong case on the subject of the European Union. First, it is important that he should not exaggerate the figures and get them wrong. Will he now acknowledge that he was wrong to say that more than 50 per cent. of our trade is conducted with the European Union? That is simply factually wrong; the figure is below 45 per cent. Secondly, will he acknowledge that the share of Britain's trade with the European Union is declining and that the share of Britain's trade with countries outside the European Union is rising? Will the hon. Gentleman conduct an honest debate and stop giving credence to untruths?

Mr. Wills: I am baffled about how the hon. Gentleman thinks that this will advance the argument. Even he must concede that the European Union is a crucial trading partner of this country. The single market is a key part of our economic future.

I still have not received an answer to my basic question. How does the hon. Gentleman think that the co-operation and partnership that are necessary to make that single market work, and to enable our companies and businesses to take advantage of the single market, to be in Europe, to shape Europe and to reform Europe, while not being run by Europe—[Interruption.] No, we are not being run by Europe. How is all that helped by standing on the sidelines and shouting, as the previous Government did, and as the Conservative party is threatening to do, should it ever return to government? If any Conservative Members want to try to illuminate that point, I shall be happy to give way again, but they—

Mr. Bercow: I am obliged to the hon. Gentleman for wanting me to favour the House with my further views on this matter. I should have thought that it was abundantly clear. It is what the late Enoch Powell would have said was a point so obvious that only an extraordinarily clever person could fail to see it. The answer is that we have a conviction about the nature of the relationship that we should enjoy with the European Union, and believe that the policy of the Government should be to fight for being in Europe and not run by Europe, whereas the Labour Government just believe in supine acquiescence and me too-ism. That is the difference. They believe in being told what to do; we believe that if we have self-respect and fight our corner, we have a better relationship with the European Union. That is the distinction between us.

Mr. Wills: I am not absolutely sure that that is the difference between us. The hon. Gentleman talks about having a conviction about the approach to Europe. With the greatest respect to him, I would categorise it differently. I would describe the Conservative position as a visceral antipathy to Europe. I believe that the Conservative party is embarking on a slippery slope towards withdrawal.

One question that the Conservatives have not yet answered in their new European policy—they have had several European policies since 1997; there may be more to come—is what will happen if the European Union does not accept their plans to renegotiate and only to take part in things pertaining to the single market. It is interesting that the Conservatives think that they will be able to confine their activities to that. However, leaving that point aside, what will they do when the rest of the European Union refuses to have anything to do with the fantasies that they are currently promulgating?

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Denbighshire County Council (Funding)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Hanson.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Gareth Thomas (Clwyd, West): Denbighshire county council is one of the smaller unitary authorities in Wales. It is a creature of the Local Government (Wales) Act 1994 and local government reorganisation. Its birth and early years have been particularly difficult as a result of local government reorganisation, and the disastrous legacy of debt that Denbighshire inherited from one of its predecessor authorities, Rhuddlan borough council.

Many of my constituents live within Denbighshire county council's area. It is a diverse county embracing a large rural hinterland, which includes the historic markets towns of Denbigh and Ruthin, the latter being in my constituency. It also has a populous coastal belt centred on the seaside town of Rhyl, so vigorously represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd (Mr. Ruane), who unfortunately cannot be present today. However, I know that he would support fully the case that I propose to put on behalf of Denbighshire county council. My colleague, the Assembly Member for Clwyd, West, Mr. Alun Pugh and Mrs. Ann Jones, the Assembly Member for Vale of Clwyd, would also wholeheartedly support my case, as would the Chairman of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, South (Mr. Jones), part of whose constituency includes an area of Denbighshire.

I am sure that the Minister will know that my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd and I have been actively involved in this vexed issue since we were elected in 1997. He will also know that the Rhuddlan legacy has been the subject of an inquiry by the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs. Minutes of evidence of that inquiry have been published, and the report is awaited. The subject has also been dealt with by the district auditor on a number of occasions. A public interest report has been produced in view of the grave public disquiet about the matter. That report has, itself, been subject to a review.

I have met the Minister several times to discuss this matter. He has given a positive and helpful response to the crisis—I call it a crisis—with which Denbighshire has had to deal. However, a bad position has got markedly worse in recent weeks.

The purpose of this debate is, first, to spell out just how serious Denbighshire county council's financial position now is, especially in the light of fresh evidence of mismanagement of European regional development funds by Rhuddlan borough council.

Secondly, on behalf of my constituents, I shall underline the practical effect this problem has and will have on the services that Denbighshire county council provides, particularly in relation to schools, highways and other essential features of the work of a local council. Thirdly—I suppose that this was my main purpose in raising the issue—I invite the Government, in the form of both the Welsh Office and the Welsh Assembly, to give renewed and urgent attention to the need to devise a long-term solution to the county's problems, so that its finances can be put on a sustainable basis. I emphasise "long-term".

[Mr. Gareth Thomas]

The problem concerns the allocation of capital, rather than revenue. There is concern in Wales about what is described as the formula for allocation of revenue support grant, but I am not concerned with that today. The council has inherited what its chief executive, Mr. Huw Thomas, has rightly described as a "crushing and unexpected" burden of debt.

I am not talking about Denbighshire's position in absolute terms, or its position in the league table of local authority debt that the Minister may have in his possession, which might put a rather less damaging gloss on the situation. I am talking about the position of what, on any view, is a small county with a small capital base: a county that is experiencing serious repayment difficulties. I am just as concerned about the manner in which the debt is expected to be repaid as I am about the size of that debt.

At present, it seems that the debt inherited from the predecessor authority may well be as much as £10.7 million. It is unrealistic to suppose that that will not have a disastrous effect on the council's functions. This is how the debt is made up: Rhuddlan's capital deficit in 1995-96 was £3.9 million, and the carry-over payments for its capital schemes amounted to £3.3 million; Ffrith beach's clawback in regard to the European regional development fund—the amount that is now due—is £0.8 million. A further amount of £0.3 million is likely to be payable on the scheme. According to a report produced by Deloitte and Touche the accountants, at the behest of Denbighshire county council, there is likely to be further ERDF grant clawback totalling £2.3 million. The total inherited debt therefore amounts to £10.7 million.

Those figures should be seen in the context of Denbighshire's basic credit approval and its power to raise and spend capital: about £6 million per annum. However, when ring-fenced elements such as housing revenue accounts and housing improvement grants have been taken into consideration, the general element of the basic credit approval—in other words, what is available to finance capital expenditure—is £3.29 million. That is the starting point.

From that amount, Denbighshire must find money to finance highway repairs, school refurbishments, council house repairs and so forth. Moreover—crucially—it must find money for an increasing array of schemes provided by various grant agencies that are in a position to give the county much-needed capital resources, but only if the council can match the funding. That is an increasing feature of the way in which capital is provided for county councils. A small local authority unit with a modest BCA—on any view, even without inherited problems—would be hard pushed to maintain an adequate capital programme.

I commend to the Under-Secretary the minutes of evidence of the Welsh Affairs Select Committee's inquiry into the Rhuddlan legacy for a fuller account of the funding gap that arose shortly after the reorganisation, when it became apparent that Rhuddlan had overspent to the tune of £3.9 million—which is the first element of the legacy.

About two years ago, after lobbying by my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd and me, the Welsh Office responded to the gap by devising a package through a special credit approval enabling Denbighshire to borrow an extra £2.5 million. The important point is that this money is repayable from Denbighshire's basic credit approval—its core capital and spending power—at the rate of no less than £500,000 per annum for five years, commencing in 2001–02. That is the major concern.

In the light of subsequent events, the repayment schedule is untenable. I ask the Minister, most earnestly, to take on board that fact. I should also add that Denbighshire county council has dealt with the balance of the overspend by recyling housing grants and by other action.

The second element of the legacy is what has been described as the carry-over of excess capital liabilities inherited from Rhuddlan, amounting to £3.3 million, and representing bills due that were incurred by Rhuddlan—which had led Denbighshire officials to believe that they would amount to no more than £400,000. As time wore on, however, the full scale of the carry-over became apparent.

I pay tribute to the officers of Denbighshire county council, particularly its chief executive, Mr. Huw Thomas, and its finance director, Mr. Nigel Thomas. I have no quarrel at all with them, but am entirely supportive of their efforts to do the best of a very bad job. They have sought to regularise Denbighshire county council's accounts, and have taken valiant steps to do so by devising ingenious methods of diverting capital resources, maximising resources and managing payments. The £3.3 million carry-over is being dealt with by such methods. Consequently, however, Denbighshire has had to forgo pursuing many of its objectives, and to concentrate largely on servicing its inherited capital commitments.

The third element of the legacy—as if all that were not serious enough—is the dire problems that have arisen as a result of the gross mismanagement of ERDF funds by the predecessor authority, putting Denbighshire in the invidious position of having to repay moneys to the ERDF by way of grant clawback. In the light of the new circumstances, the real fear is that unless there is a creative package of aid or—quite frankly—debt relief, that grant clawback will have to come out of basic credit approval.

Denbighshire county council needs to be able to repay the clawback from its revenue accounts through a special credit approval, payable not through the BCA over a short period, but over a much longer period, thereby putting its affairs on a much more sustainable basis.

The Minister is well aware of the problems associated with the Ffrith beach development. The council now considers it likely that the full extent of the grant—£1.1 million—will be repayable. I spoke to the chief executive recently and he feels that that is almost inevitable. However, the Deloitte report was referred to in Denbighshire's evidence to the Select Committee. It indicated that further steps would be taken to assess the size and extensiveness of the problem of the mismanagement of EU funds. The report was published last month. It is likely that no fewer than three schemes are not capable of being signed off or certified as conforming with the original grant claims. I refer to the children's village, the Rhyl station gateway and the Rhyl high street pedestrianisation. Consequently, there is a very real prospect that £2.3 million will have to be paid back by way of grant clawback.

In my view and that of the chief executive, this latest development puts the council in a critical position. There are issues as to how the predecessor authority could ever have got itself into a position whereby EU funds and grants from other agencies were mishandled, misspent and abused. I shall not pursue it now, but in my view there is certainly a moral and political case that the Welsh Office should be held liable to Denbighshire because it can reasonably be argued that inadequate control was exercised over the manner in which Rhuddlan and other councils in Wales administered ERDF funds. I may wish to pursue that point at a later stage, but at the moment I am more interested in the way forward.

It is important for the public to know that Denbighshire finds itself in an invidious and difficult position not as a result of its own actions, but as a result of actions taken by the predecessor authority, because in law the successor authority stands in the shoes of the predecessor authority. I am asking the Minister—and the National Assembly—to give the most sympathetic consideration to that point.

The size of the capital debt problem is beyond what is reasonable for an authority to manage alone, especially when it is not responsible for its inheritance. I am not expecting the Minister today to give me any firm indications as to what he or certainly the Welsh Assembly would propose to do. First, I am seeking an indication that the Government realise the exceptional nature of Denbighshire's predicament. As far as I am aware, no other authority in England or Wales has experienced similar problems. Secondly, in due course I hope to have meetings with the First Secretary and other Secretaries of the National Assembly, together with fellow Members of Parliament and Assembly Members representing Denbighshire, to discuss the issue. I seek a way forward to relieve the pressure on Denbighshire's basic credit approval by allowing a flexible package whereby an SCA could be granted to cover the debt, particularly in relation to the clawback.

The original rescue package is totally inadequate in the light of the new evidence. I am making a plea on behalf of my constituents. I have been provided with a long list of capital projects that the county would like realised. It amounts to £26 million of much-needed work. There is an enormous backlog of highway repairs and council house repairs. I am particularly concerned about the state of the fabric of Brynhyfryd school in my constituency. The pressures on its resources are greater because it is a bilingual school. It does excellent work, but the physical environment is disgraceful. Little can be done for the school unless the pressure on Denbighshire's capital budget is relieved. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take that on board and will carry the message to Cardiff and the National Assembly.

2.51 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Jon Owen Jones): I congratulate my hon. Friend on securing the debate. Today was almost his last chance to raise the subject here, because within six days it will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

I recognise the importance of the issue. From the moment that it became evident, after the reorganisation of local government in 1996, that Denbighshire county council would be facing financial difficulties as a result of the capital spending of the former Rhuddlan borough council, the Welsh Office began to work closely with the council. By early 1997 it was clear that the council had inherited a substantial, unanticipated debt, although its precise level is still unclear.

On the basis of the figures that I have looked at, the outstanding loan debt of Denbighshire is in the lowest third of all Welsh unitary authority debts. All Welsh unitary authorities inherited debts. That relative position takes into account the council's relative size. It is difficult to accept that the problem is particularly acute in Denbighshire in an absolute or a relative sense. However, I sympathise with my hon. Friend on the potential and uncertain increase that could confront the authority as a result of possible clawback that may be required by the European Commission owing to the apparent poor control exercised by the former Rhuddlan borough council.

Those problems are highlighted by the fact that the district auditor had considerable difficulty in tracing papers relating to the accounts. Denbighshire was offered a financial package that helped the authority to service its capital debt and to minimise the effect on service provision and the level of council tax. The package allowed the council to use £1 million of supplementary credit approval, originally issued for home renovation grants, for unfinanced capital expenditure. The package also gave the authority an additional SCA of £1.5 million towards unfinanced expenditure. That SCA was issued on the understanding that the authority would repay it by accepting a reduction of £500,000 a year in its basic credit approval over three years, starting in 1998–99.

In August 1997, following the publication by the district auditor of a public interest report, the then Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths), authorised an enhanced financial package, which included a supplementary credit approval of £2.5 million, with a repayment period of five years beginning in this financial year.

Because of the particular circumstances surrounding the financial position of Denbighshire and the public interest that it evoked, the Welsh Affairs Committee has been investigating the problems caused by the inherited debt, and has sought to establish what lessons could be learned for the future. The Committee is expected to issue its report in a few weeks' time.

In giving oral evidence to the Committee, Denbighshire's chief executive took a positive approach, saying that now that the authority has > "brought the Rhuddlan accounts into Denbighshire's and obtained assistance from the Welsh Office, we can actually put this behind us and create something new for Denbighshire."

The district auditor, in summarising his evidence, said:

> "Given Denbighshire's positive approach, the assistance provided by the Secretary of State and the Council's position relative to other Welsh authorities, if further problems do not arise, with careful planning and monitoring, Denbighshire should be able to manage its financial position."

The financial packages had been offered against a background of uncertainty as to the precise extent of the debt. Earlier this year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issued Denbighshire with a further supplementary credit approval to enable the council to complete a review of its capital programmes, and particularly the capital projects that it had inherited from Rhuddlan. This review, conducted by Deloitte and Touche, has recently been completed, and highlighted various matters that needed to be addressed.

[Mr. Jon Owen Jones]

Among those matters—as my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) has indicated—are certain issues concerning four European regional development fund projects sponsored by Rhuddlan borough council. My officials have already held informal discussions with chief officers of Denbighshire about these projects, and are now urgently considering in greater detail the various options that might be open to us to handle the apparent difficulties.

The Commission has also become aware of the review and the possible implications for its ERDF investment, and has been sent a copy of the report. Arrangements have been made for my officials to meet the Commission on Monday to discuss the report and its possible implications.

This is not the only ERDF-related issue facing the authority. In October 1997, the European Commission informed the Welsh Office that it was considering, under article 24 of the co-ordination regulations, reducing, suspending or cancelling assistance to the Ffrith beach project on the basis that there had been a significant modification of the conditions on which the grant was awarded to it.

Having consulted Denbighshire about this approach, the Welsh Office responded to the Commission that, as action by the authority to attract private investment to the site was continuing, it was not unreasonable to expect substantial progress towards meeting the project outputs by 31 December 1999 so action under article 24 was inappropriate.

The Commission does not at this stage appear to be convinced by that response and is currently seeking the repayment of £768,000 of ERDF grant, with the caveat that it is prepared to leave the remaining £357,000 with the authority until 31 December 1999—the programme's closure date. At that point, it will wish to consider whether the original outputs have been achieved. The Commission will decide at that time whether or not to seek repayment of the £357,000 from Denbighshire.

Both we and the authority are continuing to resist the Commission's demands over Ffrith beach, but whether we will ultimately be succesful is impossible to predict. To provide the authority with the wherewithal, if necessary, to make any repayments, we have agreed with Denbighshire that if the Commission reclaims grant, we will reduce the amount of supplementary credit approval that the authority has to repay.

I trust that it will be evident to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West that I fully recognise the gravity of the financial position confronting Denbighshire and that we have done all that is possible and reasonable to assist the authority either to avoid potential repayments or, where those are inescapable, to assist, as far as we can, with the necessary resources to facilitate the repayments. My hon. Friend will realise that the Welsh Office has to be seen to act fairly with Denbighshire, but also with other local authorities.

From next Thursday, these responsibilities will pass to the National Assembly for Wales, which I am sure will continue to work closely with Denbighshire to help it resolve its problems.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 14 June 1999

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Trading Arrangements

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what changes in primary legislation will be required to implement the revised arrangements for wholesale electricity trading; [86880]

(2) what has been the reason for the revised date for the planned completion of the Review of Electricity Trading Arrangements; [86881]

(3) what is the cost of the Review of Electricity Trading Arrangements; [86882]

(4) what estimate he has made of the additional costs which will arise in (a) establishing and (b) running a revised electricity wholesale trading market; and who will bear these costs. [86883]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to introducing legislation to implement new wholesale electricity trading arrangements and will do so as soon as parliamentary time permits. Consequently the earliest feasible date that new trading arrangements could be introduced is October 2000. The purpose of legislation would be to provide the powers to introduce conditions into electricity licences necessary for the implementation of the new electricity trading arrangements.

Offer's 1999–2000 budget for the Review of Electricity Trading Arrangements programme is £11.2 million. Preliminary estimates of annual costs to implement new electricity trading arrangements for each of the first five years are £10-£20 million for the central set-up, £60 million for participants' set-up, and £30 million for participants' operating costs. These implementation costs will be met by market participants. Against this, the Government's overall programme of electricity market reforms is expected to lead to a reduction in wholesale electricity prices of at least 10 per cent. over the medium term.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the (a) amount and (b) percentage of energy consumed in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years that came from renewable sources. [86664]

Mr. Battle: The amount and percentage of energy consumed in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years that came from renewable energy sources is given in the following table. The table also shows the amount and percentage of electricity generated from renewable sources:

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
Total UK use of renewable sources of energy (thousand tonnes of oil equivalent)	2,079	2,142	2,103	2320	2,649
UK use of renewable sources as a percentage of primary inland consumption of energy	0.95%	0.97%	0.90%	1.02%	1.15%
Total UK generation of electricity from renewable sources (GWh)	7,306	7,237	6,053	7,378	9,322
UK generation of electricity from renewable sources as a percentage of total electricity generation	2.25%	2.17%	1.74%	2.14%	2.62%

Source:
Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1999 (to be published on 29 July 1999)

As is said in the discussion paper "New and renewable energy, Prospects for the 21st century", we expect the proportion of electricity from renewable sources to rise to 5 per cent. by 2003. The Government are working towards a target of renewable energy providing 10 per cent. of UK electricity as soon as possible and hope to achieve this by 2010.

City Flyer Express

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce his decision in respect of the proposed acquisition of City Flyer Express Ltd. by British Airways; and if he will make a statement. [86869]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will publish the Competition Commission's report on British Airways' proposed acquisition of City Flyer Express Ltd. as soon as is practicable.

Milk

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to publish his decisions on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report into the supply of milk before the end of June. [86875]

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to announce the date of the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of raw cows' milk in Great Britain. [86974]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will publish the MMC's report as soon as is practicable. He has said in the House that he expects to be able to publish before the House rises for the summer recess.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total amount of financial support for capital investment provided by (i) the United Kingdom Government and (ii) the European Union to

(a) the manufacturing sector, (b) manufacturing companies established by inward investment and (c) the textiles and clothing sector in the last five years. [86861]

Mr. Battle: Financial support for capital investment is provided in various forms, including through grants, guarantees, tax allowances and general industrial support. One of the main programmes is regional selective assistance which over the last five years in Great Britain has provided offers of grant of £1.6 billion to the manufacturing sector as a whole, of which £935 million was offered to foreign-owned companies and £51 million to the textiles and clothing sector.

Many other UK Government and EU programmes provide direct or indirect financial support for capital investment but information on the total is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retail Petrol Market

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many written or verbal complaints were received by his Department and the Office of Fair Trading in each year from 1996 to date about (i) unfair agreement terms being applied by oil companies to operators of retail petrol sites and (ii) the actions taken by the oil companies which did not conform to the agreement signed by the operators. [86710]

Dr. Howells: My Department and the Office of Fair Trading have received a number of complaints about agreements between oil companies and petrol retailers during 1996–99. The cost of providing an accurate breakdown of these on a year-by-year basis would be disproportionate.

The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for investigating complaints about anti-competitive behaviour. He does not however have a locus to intervene in contractual disputes unless these raise competition concerns.

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the review of the petrol undertakings by the Office of Fair Trading will be completed; if he will publish the findings of the review; and if he will make a statement. [86767]

Dr. Howells: The timing of the review is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend and I will receive advice from him when the review is complete. I will announce my decision in due course.

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by number and grade the officials employed full-time in monitoring the UK retail petrol market and the departments to which they belong. [86768]

Dr. Howells: No officials in the Department of Trade and Industry or the Office of Fair Trading have responsibility for monitoring the UK retail petrol market on a permanent full-time basis.

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons the Office of Fair Trading's inquiry into the retail petrol market, published in May 1998, did not include an examination of retail petrol stations located on motorway service areas. [86769]

Dr. Howells: The content of the report is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. The report, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House, examined the supply of petrol by all retail outlets. However, I understand that motorway service areas were not referred to specifically as they were not considered to be in a separate market.

Post Offices

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (i) post offices and (ii) post offices run by sub-postmasters, there were at (a) at the latest available date, (b) in 1997, (c) in 1989 and (d) in 1979. [86930]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of post offices in total and of sub-post offices at the dates requested were as follows:

	Total	Sub-post offices
End April 1999	18,707	18,107
End March 1997	19,251	18,645
End March 1989	21,030	19,537
End March 1979	22,793	21,213

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of post offices, indicating separately those run by sub-postmasters, which operate in rural areas. [86931]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the total number of post offices at the end of April 1999 was 18,707, of which 8,842 were in rural areas and operated by sub-postmasters.

Regional Aid

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to announce his policy on regional aid. [86860]

Mr. Wills: Reviews of the Assisted Areas and Structural Funds maps are currently underway. We will announce the proposals which we will send to the Commission shortly.

Proposals for the re-focusing of the Regional Selective Assistance scheme, as announced in the Competitiveness White Paper, are still under consideration and the changes will be announced in due course.

Trade Union and Employment Law

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Institute of Directors to discuss trade union and employment law reform. [86840]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry met representatives of the Institute of Directors in February, March and May to discuss various matters.

ICL/Pathway Consortium

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the ICL/Pathway consortium will be liable for losses arising from fraud when the Post Office barcode technology is in use. [85859]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The exact details of the contracts between the Post Office and ICL/Pathway are commercially confidential but I understand that there will be penalties built into the contracts for failure to perform.

Horizon Project

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what modifications have to be made to the computer terminals installed in post offices as part of the Horizon project to make them compatible with (a) smart card and (b) barcode technology. [85865]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The system is already fully compatible with both smartcard and barcode technology.

Plutonium Sea Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communications he had with the relevant United States authorities in respect of the relevance of the United States Government's threat assessment to the sea shipment of plutonium prior to concluding the safety and security plan for such shipments from the United Kingdom to Japan. [85822]

Mr. Battle: During preparation of the transport plan, a number of meetings took place between officials from the Governments of Japan, France, the United Kingdom and the United States to discuss all aspects relating to the arrangements for the sea shipment of MOX fuel from Europe to Japan, including safety and security considerations.

Environmental and Social Reporting

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to promote environmental and social reporting by British companies; and if he will make a statement. [86864]

Mr. Battle: There are a number of related issues in this area. For example, the DTI is working with the DETR to meet the objectives of the national Sustainable Development Strategy to develop standards and guidance for environmental reporting and to encourage all UK companies to report publicly on their environmental performance.

In March 1998, the DTI launched a fundamental review of company law which is being taken forward by an independent Steering Group. The Steering Group is considering a wide range of issues concerning the company's relationship with its wider interests, including the potential for company law to promote corporate transparency. The role of non-financial reporting, including on environmental and social issues, forms part of this consideration.

WALES

Refrigerants (NHS)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if hospitals and other NHS facilities in Wales used not-in-kind refrigerants. [86167]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information from which to estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if NHS bodies used not-in-kind refrigerants is not collected centrally.

The Welsh Office is fully supportive of the Government's commitment to running its operations and buildings in accordance with best environmental practice as an integral part of its contribution to the UK's sustainable development strategy.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Disciplinary Procedures

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disciplinary hearings have been heard under Welsh Health Circular WHC(96)22 Disciplinary Procedures for Hospital and Community Medical and Dental Staff; what has been the length of time taken to hear and resolve each of the cases; and how many such cases were discontinued. [86276]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Records of the number of disciplinary hearings held under WHC(90)22 are not held centrally. There is no requirement to notify the Welsh Office of any case unless the proceedings exceed 6 months. The Department has been notified of only one such case, which took over 4½ years to reach a negotiated settlement.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

DEFENCE

Defence Medical Training Organisation

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Defence Medical Training Organisation for 1999–2000. [87142]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the DMTO for financial year 1999–2000 as follows:

Key Target 1—Academic Success (Quality and Quantity)

To achieve the following academic success rates:

	Percentage
Common Core Course (CCC)	94
Specialist Registrars (SpR)	96
Pre Registration Nurses (Pre Reg Nurses)	96

Key Target 2—Academic Success (Timeliness)

The following percentage of trainees achieving academic success to be delivered on time agreed with the customer:

	Percentage
CCC	96[1]
SpR	96
Pre Reg Nurses	98

[1] Remainder within 6 weeks

Key Target 3—Individual Medical Services Training

Establish and agree with customers the baseline requirement for external medical services training by 31 March 2000.

Key Target 4—Agree Annual Training Requirement

To achieve 1.5 per cent. efficiency gain in matching capacity to the Agreed Annual Training Requirement.

Key Target 5—Systems Approach to Training

To ensure comprehensive application of the Systems Approach to Training, to a minimum of 33 per cent. of all appropriate courses.

RAF Signals Engineering Establishment

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the quinquennial review of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment will start. [87143]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Performance Evaluation phase of Quinquennial Review of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment (RAFSEE) started on 17 May 1999 and is expected to be complete by 30 July 1999. This phase will review the performance of the Agency since its launch in November 1994. The forward-looking Options Phase will start today and is expected to be complete by 29 October 1999. The Options Phase will consider RAFSEE's role and core functions against the background of the formation of the Defence Logistics Organisation, of which RAFSEE is now part. This phase will assess whether Agency status remains appropriate for each of the functions undertaken by RAFSEE or whether there are other more cost effective means of delivering RAFSEE's outputs.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in RAFSEE and its work would be welcome and should be sent to, Air Commodore K. J. M. Procter, RAFSEE Review Team, Room G50, Headquarters Logistics Command, RAF Brampton, Huntingdon, Cambridgeshire, PE18 8QL.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 211, on satellite dishes, for what reason there will be a 12-hour delay between transmission and viewing by ships' crews. [86874]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The transmissions are received by RN ships using existing military satellite communications equipment, which was not designed to take video transmissions. The band width required for normal video transmission is considerably greater than that available on our military satellite system. However, recent developments in transmission technology now allow for the broadcast of compressed video transmissions over such systems. The time taken to transit the information in this way is dependent on the available band width. The drawback of this system is that the images cannot be viewed until all the video information has been received. On occasions where there is heavy use of the system for military communications, which have priority, only a reduced band width is available for video transmission. This means that there could be delays of up to 12 hours before one hour of material for viewing can be made available to the ships' crew. The advantage of utilising the military satellite system is that coverage is achieved over sea and land, whereas commercial satellite transmissions are generally directed towards land only. Large satellite dishes can provide limited coverage for vessels at sea, such as cruise ships, but there is no room to fit such dishes on frigates.

Dimming Sun Exercise

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the nuclear weapon exercise Dimming Sun has been postponed; when this exercise is now due to be held; and what costs have been incurred by his Department to date in organising this exercise. [86295]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The decision to postpone the joint UK/US Exercise Dimming Sun was taken in the light of present commitments in the Balkans, including the possibility that civil agencies in Norfolk who will participate in the exercise, might receive refugees from Kosovo. This decision will ensure that key exercise objectives can be met at a later date whilst ensuring that the conduct of the exercise does not interfere with our support to NATO operations in the Balkans. As yet, no new date has been set for the exercise.

As for costs relating to Exercise Dimming Sun, I have nothing to add to my letter of 27 November 1998 to the hon. Member, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Official Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 381, if he will list the meetings which his Special Adviser and the Deputy Chief of Defence Procurement (Support) held with United States Department of Defence officials on 5 March, the location of each meeting, and the names of the US officials at each meeting. [86298]

Mr. George Robertson: The meetings held on 5 March with Department of Defense officials to discuss defence industrial co-operation were both held at The Pentagon in Washington DC. The names of the US officials at each meeting are as follows:

Meeting 0900 hours—1215 hours

Mr. Al Volkman, A/DUSD (International and Commercial Programmes).

Ms Susan Ludlow-MacMurray, D/International Security Programmes.

Mr. Marvin Winkleman, D/Foreign Transfers.

Mr. Vic Ciardello, D/Finance and Economic Analysis.

Cdr Ronald Neubauer, Assoc Deputy Gen Counsel (International Affairs).

Mr. Dominic Cipicchio, Dep Director Foreign Contracting, (D/Defense Procurement).

Captain Richard Lewis, International Programmes Office.

Mr. Bill Leonard, Prin Director Security and Intelligence Office.

Meeting 1215 hours—1415 hours

All above plus:

Dr. Jack Gansler, Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology).

Mr. James Bodner, Under Secretary Defense (Policy).

Mr. Steven Grundman, Acting Deputy Under Secretary of Defense (Industrial Affairs and Installations).

Mr. Harvey Nathan, Deputy General Council of Acquisition and Logistics.

Mr. Paul Gebhard, Assistant Chief of Staff to Dr. Gansler.

Bloody Sunday Inquiry

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent to date by his Department in financing the legal costs of former members of the Parachute Regiment called to give evidence to the Bloody Sunday inquiry; and what forecast he has made of the total cost. [86684]

Mr. George Robertson: The cost to my Department of financing the legal costs of potential military witnesses at the Inquiry as at the end of April 1999 was £1,144,707.61. Due to the way in which legal assistance is being provided, it is not possible to break out the costs relating to former members of the Parachute Regiment. It is also not possible to estimate the likely final cost.

HEALTH

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if hospitals and other NHS facilities used not-in-kind refrigerants. [86168]

Mr. Denham: Information from which to estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if National Health Service bodies used not-in-kind refrigerants is not available centrally.

The Department is fully supportive of the Government's commitment to running its operations and buildings in accordance with best environmental practice as an integral part of its contribution to the United Kingdom's sustainable development strategy.

The NHS is making good progress in achieving the 20 per cent. energy efficiency improvement targets from the 1991–92 base year to March 2000, as set by Green Ministers. Additionally, progress is being achieved against the wider Government objective (agreed as part of the Kyoto Protocol) to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2008–2012, with a domestic target of 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010.

Dental Anaesthesia Services

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional money he plans to make available to health authorities to establish hospital-based dental anaesthesia services for dental general practice. [86160]

Mr. Denham: A review of general anaesthesia and sedation with dental treatment is currently underway under the leadership of the Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Dental Officer. The review is due to report by the end of the summer. When we consider the report we will also consider any funding issues.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the arrangements for dental anaesthesia in dental community services. [86159]

Mr. Denham: Records show that since the General Dental Council's amendment of their ethical guidance last November the Department has received ten letters from hon. Members and seven other letters. There have also been five questions from a Noble Lord about the impact of the General Dental Council's amended guidance.

Hospitals (Sunderland)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the NHS has in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001 to 2003 to (i) reduce the number of hospital beds and (ii) close hospitals in Sunderland; and if he will make a statement. [86279]

Mr. Hutton: In 2000–01 the Ryhope Hospital will close and all services will move to the Sunderland Royal Hospital site as part of the redevelopment of the site. This will reduce the fragmentation of acute services, improving clinical configuration and access to specialist equipment, in high quality purpose-built accommodation. We are committed to modernising the National Health Service and this redevelopment will offer better quality treatment. There is no planned reduction in numbers of patients being cared for, although it will be possible to achieve this in very slightly fewer beds than at present (931 from 942) because of the improved acute bed facilities.

Medical Students

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities that have implemented career start schemes to attract medical students to general practice indicating the (i) start date, (ii) duration, (iii) number of places available and (iv) annual cost of each scheme. [86161]

Mr. Denham: There is no national career start scheme. We are encouraging health authorities to develop schemes which address particular problems with recruitment in their locality.

Junior Doctors

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 136, on junior doctors, when he expects the decision to be made on the extension of Council Directive 93/104/EC relating to junior doctors. [86032]

Mr. Denham: A unanimous decision was made at the European Social Affairs Council on 25 May to propose a thirteen year implementation period for extending the provisions of Council Directive 93/104/EC, the "Working Time Directive", to cover previously excluded groups, including junior hospital doctors. The Council has proposed a transposition period of four years from the date of adoption before new Europe-wide minimum standards apply. These standards will provide a statutory limit to the maximum average working week. There will be a staged period of nine years after transposition, during which interim targets will apply, before the 48 hours limit is reached.

The decision formally to adopt this amendment to the Directive is subject to co-decision between the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament, which is due to re-assemble this autumn.

The Government remains fully committed to implementation of the New Deal on junior doctors' working hours. We have no intention of raising the 56 hour limit which is part of the current agreement.

We need to plan and implement the move to 48 hours carefully over a reasonable period of time, and in such a way that does not jeopardise patient care and the training needs of juniors.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the national report on reviewing radiography equipment will be sent to him; when it will be published; and if he will make a statement; [85694]

(2) if he will list those cancer centres in the UK which do not have two linear accelerators; and if he will make a statement. [85693]

Mr. Hutton: The report of the review of radiotherapy provision will be sent to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State shortly for consideration. Information on the number of linear accelerators in cancer centres has not been collected centrally but will be contained in the review of radiotherapy provision.

The Calman/Hine Report recommended that radiotherapy should normally be confined to cancer centres but in some remote areas a cancer unit could provide radiotherapy services in collaboration with a centre. The radiography equipment in a cancer centre will depend on the population served and the pattern of service available in local cancer units.

NHS Staff (Disciplinary Hearings)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many disciplinary hearings have been heard under existing disciplinary procedures for hospital and community medical and dental staff; what has been the average length of time taken to hear and resolve each case; and how many such cases were discontinued in each of the last 10 years. [86273]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. Disciplinary action is the responsibility of local National Health Service employers.

A and E Departments

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to monitor the number of incidents of patients waiting on trolleys in accident and emergency departments. [86029]

Mr. Denham: Times to admission through accident and emergency departments are already monitored under the Patient's Charter and published quarterly in the National Health Service Magazine.

Reinstated Doctors

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors have been reinstated by the General Medical Council in the last 10 years; and what has been the average length of time between their being struck off and reinstated. [86307]

Mr. Denham: The removal of doctors from the Register of Medical Practitioners and their subsequent reinstatement are matters for the General Medical Council.

Kidderminster Hospital

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the persons and organisations he met when he visited Kidderminster hospital. [86441]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not visited Kidderminster General Hospital in the recent past. When I visited Kidderminster on 28 May, I met the following people:

Mrs. A. Brinton, Chairman, Kidderminster Health Care NHS Trust (KHCT)

Mrs. C. Wells, Chief Executive, KHCT

Mrs. C. Playn, Director of Operations and Nursing, KHCT

Mr. N. Ahmed, Medical Director, KHCT

Mr. C. Tallents, Clinical Director for Surgery, KHCT

Mr. K. Poyntz, Surgery Directorate Manager, KHCT

Mrs. J. Matthews, Nurse Specialty Manager, KHCT

Dr. A. Miller, Clinical Director for Medicine, KHCT

Mrs. C. Jones, Medical Records Manager, KHCT

Sister W. Hayes, KHCT

Mr. N. Kumar, Accident and Emergency Consultant, KHCT

Sister M. Steadman, KHCT

Mr. C. Bexley, Director of Information, KHCT

Dr. J. Ball, Chairman, Health Concern Worcestershire

Dr. R. Taylor, Chairman, Save Kidderminster Hospital Campaign

Mr. F. Baillie, Independent Councillor, Wyre Forest Council

Mr. D. Barton, Independent Councillor, Wyre Forest Council

Ms M. Shineton, Independent Councillor, Bridgnorth Council, South Shropshire.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what notice was given to local interest groups in advance of his recent visit to Kidderminster hospital; [86442]

(2) what assessment he made prior to his visit to Kidderminster of the availability of local interest groups for meetings; [86439]

(3) which (a) persons and (b) organisations representing communities in Shropshire he met when he visited Kidderminster hospital. [86440]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not visited Kidderminster General Hospital in the recent past. The purpose of my visit to Kidderminster on 28 May was twofold: to visit Kidderminster Hospital following a commitment to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest in an adjournment debate and to participate in the national announcement of new funding for accident and emergency services from the modernisation fund.

The visit was organised at short notice due to the latter. Despite this, local interest groups were invited to attend, and I met a delegation including the Chairman of Health Concern, the Chairman of the Save Kidderminster Hospital Campaign and Councillors from Wyre Forest District Council.

I also met Ms M. Shineton, an independent councillor from Bridgnorth council, who represented the community of South Shropshire.

Medicines Control Agency

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how, where pre-publication approval of specific advertisements has been undertaken by the Medicines Control Agency secretariat, the MCA will ensure that pre-approvals by them do not unduly influence decisions by the same officials following a complaint after publication of the advertisement on whether that advertisement is in breach of the Medicines (Advertising) Regulations; [86660]

(2) how, under the new procedures to be adopted by the Medicines Control Agency under the provisions of the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999, he will ensure that the precedents needed to ensure consistency in future advertising decisions are routinely made publicly available; [86659]

(3) under what circumstances a notice, a threat of a notice or a request to cease advertising will be made by Ministers or Medicines Control Agency officials under the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999; and if the Independent Panel will have the right to consider whether such a notice, threat of issue of notice or request has been properly issued; [86658]

(4) what legal advice he has received in connection with the legality under the Human Rights Act 1998 and the European Convention on Human Rights of the new procedures to be adopted by the Medicines Control Agency under the provisions of the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999; and if he will place a copy of that legal advice in the Library; [86661]

(5) if the new procedures to be adopted by the Medicines Control Agency under the provisions of the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999 give a company, to which the Agency issues a notice that it is minded to take action, the right to a full oral hearing before the Independent Review Panel at which all evidence can be challenged and questioned. [86662]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations clarify and strengthen existing procedures in the control of medicines advertising. The Medicines Control Agency undertakes pre-publication assessment of advertising in exceptional circumstances only and has no intention of extending that role. Any opinion given on the suitability of the advertisement for publication is based on the information provided by the company and the current scientific knowledge and is issued without prejudice to any action the MCA may have to take against a future complaint. In the unlikely event that a complaint is received about an advertisement which officials have previously agreed is acceptable for publication the advertisement will be reconsidered taking any new information into account in reaching a decision.

We have clear legal advice that the proposals are compatible with both Community law and the European Convention on Human Rights. To publish the advice itself would break with the long-standing and important principle that legal advice given to Ministers is privileged. This is reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (2nd Edition (1997) para. 4(d) which provides that information covered by legal professional privilege, such as Counsel's Opinion, is exempt from disclosure under the Code.

There are specific circumstances under which notices may be issued to advertisers under the procedures in the amending Regulations. These are:

Under paragraph 1—to request a copy of an advertisement

Under paragraph 3—to advise an advertiser that Health Ministers are "minded to" make a decision that an advertisement is in breach of the Advertising Regulations,

Under paragraph 4—to advise an advertiser that an advertisement would not be in breach, and

Under paragraph 5—to advise an advertiser that, after consideration of the advice of the Independent Review Panel Health Ministers have decided an advertisement is in breach.

Notices under paragraphs 1 or 3 may require an advertiser to cease advertising on an interim basis. At any stage the recipient of a notice can seek judicial review of the decision to issue that notice.

The issue of notices under the Schedule will not be automatic—the MCA will continue, as now, to discuss problems with advertising with the company concerned so as to secure acceptable changes. There is no provision for, or purpose in, threatening to issue a notice. The formal procedures will come into play only when informal negotiation fails to reach an appropriate outcome.

The remit of the Independent Review Panel will be to consider written representations from advertisers who have been issued with a notice under paragraph 3 and advise Health Ministers on the compatibility of the advertisement in question with the Advertising Regulations. The Panel will not consider the issue of notices or other procedural matters. The amending Regulations provide for the making of written representations by the company concerned but do not preclude oral hearings where these are considered appropriate by the Panel. We have no objection to the reports of the Review Panel meetings being made publicly available. Furthermore, the Medicines Control Agency has already established a working group, the Medicines Advertising Liaison Group, to provide a forum for all regulatory and self-regulatory bodies concerned with the advertising of medicines to exchange information and opinions on advertising issues.

Special Hospitals (Advocacy Services)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on establishing independent advocacy services in each of the three English special hospitals; and when he expects the services to be in operation. [86431]

Mr. Hutton: Independent Patients' Advocacy Services are already operating at Ashworth and Rampton Hospitals, and a process has been agreed which will lead to the introduction of a service at Broadmoor Hospital to be operational from September this year.

Ligament Operations (West Country)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the waiting times are for (a) cruciate ligament operations and (b) consultations relating to them (i) in hospitals in Devon and Cornwall and (ii) in the Princess Elizabeth Orthopaedic Hospital in Exeter; and if he will make a statement on the time taken to provide treatment for Mr. Jason Ganney of Buckfastleigh. [86426]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not collect information on individual procedures. The latest information available on inpatient and outpatient orthopaedic waiting times for Devon and Cornwall is shown in the tables:

Waiting time experience before operation of orthopaedic inpatients—Quarter 4 1998–99

		Percentage
National Health Service trust	Total number	0–2 months	3–5 months	6–8 months	9–11 months	12–14 months	15–17 months
South Devon Healthcare	1,260	47	27	16	8	3	0
Plymouth Hospitals	2,080	37	26	16	9	7	4
Royal Cornwall Hospitals	1,453	42	32	14	8	3	1
Royal Devon and Exeter	2,132	45	26	15	9	5	1
Northern Devon Healthcare	581	51	27	12	7	3	0
Exeter and Community	30	87	10	3	0	0	0

Note:
Figures may not be 100 per cent. due to rounding

Waiting time experience before first appointment of orthopaedic outpatients—Quarter 4 1998–99

		Percentage
National Health Service trust	Total number	0–3 weeks	4–12 weeks	13–25 weeks	26 weeks plus
South Devon Healthcare	1,036	15	33	33	19
Plymouth Hospitals	1,065	25	71	1	3
Royal Cornwall Hospitals	1,661	26	31	14	29
Royal Devon and Exeter	1,378	34	36	21	10
Northern Devon Healthcare	494	15	24	32	30
Exeter and Community	160	13	57	17	14
Cornwall Healthcare	42	62	36	2	0

Note:
Figures may not be 100 per cent. due to rounding

A patient's position on the waiting list is determined by their clinical priority.

Details of an individual's treatment are governed by the rules of patient confidentiality.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he has received concerning the future of the Royal Hospital, Haslar; and of these, how many supported its closure, and how many opposed it. [85554]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 June 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence published the Government's proposals for the reorganisation and restructuring of Defence Medical Services in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) on 14 December 1998, Official Report, columns 328–29. The proposals are subject to consultation with the local community and others.

The restructuring of secondary care arrangements is a key component of the Government's proposals. These include the establishment of a new Centre for Defence Medicine as a centre of excellence for research and training, and a new Ministry of Defence Hospital Unit in Portsmouth. It is intended that the Royal Hospital, Haslar should only close once the new arrangements in Portsmouth are in place.

Since December 1998 my office has received an average of four letters per week regarding the future of the Royal Hospital, Haslar. The vast majority were against the proposed closure.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what measures he is planning as part of a general settlement on Kosovo, to guarantee the (i) security and (ii) rights of non-Albanian ethnic groups in the province. [86366]

The Prime Minister: KFOR has been tasked with establishing a safe environment for all people in Kosovo, regardless of their ethnic group. It will be an important task for KFOR to ensure that all communities understand KFOR's role and that they are there to protect them. NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana, made it clear in his statement of 10 June that this is an opportunity for peace and that violence by any party will not be tolerated.

The interim administration under UN auspices will establish and oversee the development of provisional democratic self-governing institutions to ensure conditions for a peaceful and normal life for all inhabitants in Kosovo. Plans for a civilian peace force are also under way.

Echelon System

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what representations the Government have received from European Community institutions regarding the deployment of the Echelon system; and if he will make a statement. [86725]

The Prime Minister: None.

Privy Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what the criteria will be for recommending the appointment of Ministers in the devolved administrations to the Privy Council; and if he will make a statement. [86648]

The Prime Minister: Appointments to the Privy Council will continue to be made in order to ensure that the Queen is suitably and properly advised on all matters which come before her in Council. In future, I expect this to include members of devolved administrations.

Teenage Pregnancies

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to publish the Social Exclusion Unit's report on teenage pregnancies; and if he will make a statement. [87096]

The Prime Minister: Last summer, I asked the Social Exclusion Unit to develop an integrated strategy to cut rates of teenage parenthood, particularly under-aged parenthood, towards the European average and propose better solutions to combat the risk of social exclusion for vulnerable teenagers and their children. I am publishing its report today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The UK has the highest rate of teenage births in Western Europe. Teenage parenthood is a problem that affects every part of the country, but it is far worse in the poorest areas and among the most vulnerable young people whose expectations and aspirations are low. The health and social outcomes for teenage parents and for their children are stark and worrying.

The Social Exclusion Unit has undertaken a rigorous review of the evidence both nationally and internationally. It has found that three key factors contribute to our internationally high rates of teenage conceptions: low expectations of the future among many young people; ignorance about contraception and the reality of life as a parent, and mixed messages from adults about sex and relationships.

The report sets out a national programme with two specific goals: to halve the rate of conceptions among under 18 year olds in England by 2010 and to lessen the risks of young parents suffering the consequences of social exclusion by getting more teenage parents back into education, training or employment. A £60 million package has been put together within existing departmental resources to support the programme for the period of this spending review, and further funding will be considered in the next spending review.

At a national level, a new task force of Ministers, led by the Minister for Public Health, will be responsible for co-ordinating the policy across Government supported by an implementation unit in the Department of Health. There will also be a National Advisory Group to advise Government and monitor the success of the strategy. Locally, every Health Authority and Local Authority will be tasked to work together in preventing pregnancy and in supporting pregnant and parenting teenagers, setting local benchmarks for progress. Areas with high rates will be eligible for resources from a local implementation fund of £26 million.

There will be a national publicity campaign to reinforce the report's key messages. New guidance will be issued to improve sex and relationships education in school with an emphasis on enabling teenagers to resist pressure to have sex too early. There will be better inspection of sex and relationships education and better training for teachers. Parents will be consulted and informed more fully about sex education in schools and given more support in talking to their children about sex and relationships. Special action will be targeted on prevention for the most vulnerable groups including children looked after by a local authority, those excluded from school and young offenders.

The NHS will improve access to contraceptive and sexual health services for teenagers, including young men. New guidelines will set out the counselling that should accompany contraceptive treatment for under 16 year olds and there will be publicity to tell young people that they can talk to health professionals about sex and contraception in confidence.

For those teenagers who do become pregnant we will pilot a new approach to support and childcare—'SureStart Plus' pilots based in areas covered by both SureStart and Health Action Zones. In addition, five pilots outside SureStart will test other ways of providing child care for 16–17 year olds to enable them to return to education or training.

Under 16 year old mothers will be required to return to education. 16 and 17 year olds will be included in the ONE pilots (formerly Single Work Focus Gateways) and will have a personal adviser to look at their options, with the emphasis on a return to education. 16 and 17 year old parents will be able to take part in the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots from September 1999. By 2003 all 16 and 17 year old mothers who cannot live with their parents or a partner will be offered supervised semi-independent housing with support, not a tenancy of their own.

The right to be a parent carries with it the responsibilities of parenthood. The Child Support Agency will vigorously pursue the non-resident parents of children born to teenagers to reinforce the message that, regardless of age, they are financially responsible for their children.

The target the Government have set to reduce teenage pregnancy is ambitious, but it is the least that we should set ourselves if we are to tackle a problem that has been neglected for too long.

Council of Europe/WEU

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the latest Information Bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union covering the period October 1998 to April. [87100]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Correspondence

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to send a substantive reply to the letter dated

11 May from the hon. Member for Aldershot concerning former members of the 1 Battalion, The Parachute Regiment. [86685]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 10 June; and if he will make a statement. [87099]

Mr. Morley: The Fisheries Council met in Luxembourg on 10 June. I represented the UK together with my noble Friend, Lord Sewel, Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Scottish Office.

The Council adopted proposals introducing and allocating in 1999 two new Total Allowable Catches (TACs) for North Sea spurdog and Northern prawn. It also allocated for 1999 two existing TACs for blue whiting fished in Western waters and the Bay of Biscay. The UK secured an 81 per cent. share of the Spurdog TAC and 27 per cent. of the Northern Prawn TAC. On blue whiting we negotiated an increase of 5,000 tonnes in the proposed UK allocation. A further 7,000 tonnes was allocated to the UK under the Bay of Biscay TAC with the option of taking this in Western waters as a linked stock. This makes an effective total allocation of over 42,000 tonnes and gives the UK a 24 per cent. share of the two TACs, the highest of any Member State. The introduction and allocation of these TACs will enhance the conservation of stocks in the North Sea and Western waters.

I drew the attention of the Council to the significance of forthcoming scientific advice sought by the Commission from the International Council from the Exploration of the SEA (ICES) on the need for precautionary restrictions on fishing activity to protect vulnerable seabird populations which depend on sandeels. The Commission promised to work quickly on appropriate measures once the ICES advice was available.

The Commission introduced its second annual report on progress in the EU in following up on the Recommendations of the 1997 Bergen Intermediate Ministerial Conference on the integration of environmental concerns in fisheries management in the North Sea. This report was remitted for further study.

The Commission made an interim report on the cost benefit study it is undertaking of the EU's Third Country Fisheries Agreements and the Council adopted Conclusions urging the Commission to pursue talks with Morocco on co-operation in the fisheries sector following the expiry in November of the present EU-Morocco Fisheries Agreement.

After lengthy discussion, a Presidency compromise on the reform of the structural funds in the fisheries sector failed to secure a Qualified Majority. This issue will fall for further consideration by the Council in October.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71518]

Mr. Morley: The following tables set out the details of Reviews, Task Forces and Advisory Groups established by my Department since 1 May 1997, the costs they have incurred to date and the reports they have published.

Review	Costs incurred to date (£000)	Report published	Date report published
Review of the Milk Development Council	Nil	No formal report published. Announcement made on 29 October 1997	n/a
Review of Bovine Tuberculosis in Cattle and Badgers	289	Bovine Tuberculosis in Cattle and Badgers Report to the right hon. Dr. Cunningham MP	16 December 1997
Review of the Rates and Structure of Aid to Farmers under the Organic Aid Scheme	Nil	Review of the Organic Aid Scheme. A Report by Agriculture Departments	2 April 1998
Review of the Home-Grown Cereals Authority	Nil	Final Report	12 May 1998
Review of the Future Funding of Regulatory Arrangements for Pesticides	Nil	No formal report published. Outcome notified to all interested parties on 1 September 1998	n/a
Review of the Current Rules of Quarantine on Imported Pet Animals	355	Final Report	23 September 1998
Review of Food From Britain	Nil	Food From Britain Efficiency and Effectiveness Review	1 October 1998
Review of Public Analyst Arrangements in England and Wales	5	Final Report	28 October 1998
Review of Raw Cows' Drinking Milk Policy	Nil	No formal report published. Announcement made on 20 January 1999	n/a
Review of Arrangements for Enforcing the Rules on the Welfare of Animals Exported Live to the Continent	Nil	No formal published report. Final outcome of review reported in News Release on 27 September 1997	n/a

Review	Costs incurred to date (£000)	Report published	Date report published
Review of the UK Legislation Controlling the Disposal of Animal Waste	Nil	No formal published report. Consultation paper on the review of the animal by-products legislation issued on 6 October 1997. Consultation paper on a proposed Animal by-Products Order issued on 12 November 1998. Animal By-products Order 1999 Came into force on 1 April 1999.	n/a
Review of the Sugar Beet Research and Education Council	Nil	No formal report published. Consultation document issued on 29 January 1998. Outcome of consultation notified in MAFF News Release 492/98 on 18 December 1998	n/a
Review of Fishing Vessel Licensing	Nil	Review of the Licensing of UK Registered Fishing Vessels: Report of a Joint Departmental/Industry Working Group	March 1999
Review of the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances Scheme	Nil	No formal report published. Consultation document on the new Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances Scheme issued on 23 April 1999.	n/a
Review of Funding Mechanisms for Flood and Costal Defence	Nil	Non-Review ongoing	n/a
Review of the Hill Farming Advisory Committee for England, Wales and Northern Ireland	Nil	Non-Review ongoing	n/a
Review of the Meat Hygiene Appeal Tribunal	Nil	Non-Review ongoing	n/a
Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Review Group	57	Non-Review ongoing	n/a
Review of the Access provisions Under the Agri-Environment Schemes	Nil	Non-Review ongoing	n/a
Review of Nitrate Sensitive Areas Scheme	Nil	None-Currently being prepared for publication	n/a
Review of Environmentally Sensitive areas, Stage IV	Nil	None-Currently being prepared for publication	n/a

	Costs incurred (£000)	Report published	Date report published
Advisory Group
The Independent Scientific Group on Cattle Tuberculosis	134	Interim Report—Towards a sustainable policy to control TB in Cattle—A Scientific Initiative	17 August 1998
Ministers Agricultural Advisory Group		Europe's Agriculture. A Case for Change	18 January 1999
Task Force
Official Group on Organophosphates	Nil	Official Group on OPs—Report to Ministers	25 June 1998

Meat Hygiene Service (Charges)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with abattoirs and their representatives to review the current regime for charging. [85133]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 May 1999]: Since the beginning of this year, my right hon. Friend and I have separately met representatives of the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers (now the British Meat Federation) and jointly met a delegation of small plant operators led by an all party group of hon. Members. I have also had meetings with a representative of turkey producers, the National Farmers Union, Dr. Richard North, and most recently a further meeting with representatives of the all party Parliamentary group. These meetings included discussions on charging, but they were not set up specifically to review the current regime.

In addition all Ministers in the Department have had issues of charging raised with them when attending functions around the country.

Fishing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his decision to discontinue safety grants for fishing vessels applies in Scotland; and what consultations he has held on this with his Scottish counterpart. [85908]

Mr. Morley: The MAFF funded Fishing Vessels (Safety Improvements) (Grants) Scheme 1995 enabled payments to be made in all parts of the United Kingdom. The closure of the scheme to new applications on 21 May 1999 also applies to Scotland. The EU funded Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance (FIFG), which also provided fishing vessel safety grants, was effectively closed in Scotland on 9 April when the Scottish Fisheries Minister announced the final round of awards to the Scottish industry. These EU awards fully committed the balance of FIFG funds available for Scottish projects.

The decisions relating to MAFF expenditure were taken in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) which examined the most effective use of public money across and within all Departments.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is making for the English fishing industry to be consulted on proposals for the Scottish Executive to develop distinctive management measures for Scottish waters. [85907]

Mr. Morley: Issues relating to consultation will be covered in the concordat between the Scottish Executive and MAFF. It will be for the Scottish Executive, in the first instance, to ensure that it consults all interests likely to be affected by proposals for local fisheries conservation measures to be applied in the Scottish zone of British Fishery Limits.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [86095]

Mr. Morley: The introduction of a national minimum wage on 1 April 1999, benefited 569 permanent and 263 casual staff in clerical, typing and support grades in my Department. I have asked Chief Executives of my Department's agencies to reply separately with information on their staff.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question asking how many people employed in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage.

All staff at the VMD were paid above the national minimum wage on 1 April 1999 and its introduction had no effect.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory, to your question concerning the number of staff within the Agency who benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage on 1 April 1999.

I can confirm that one member of staff in CSL benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food requesting information on the number of people who benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage has been passed to me for reply as regards this Executive Agency.

All MHS staff were on salaries above the national minimum wage prior to its introduction on 1 April 1999. No MHS staff therefore benefited from its introduction.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question on the benefits to staff of the introduction of the national minimum wage. I am replying on behalf of the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science (CEFAS).

I can advise you that seven Administrative Assistants benefited from the national minimum wage introduction.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister has asked me to respond to your question about how many people in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage.

All staff in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) were in receipt of a full-time equivalent salary higher than the National Minimum Wage (NMW) before it was introduced. There were, therefore, no staff who benefited from the introduction of NMW at VLA.

Letter from Sarah Nason to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister has asked me to respond, in respect of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA), to your question about the number of people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies who have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage.

The introduction of a national minimum wage on 1 April 1999 benefited one member of staff (a sandwich course student) in FRCA.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 June 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning the number of staff within the Agency who benefited from the introduction of the National Minimum Wage on 1 April 1999.

I can confirm that 22 staff in PSD benefited from the introduction of the National Minimum Wage.

Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total costs of the introduction of the British Cattle Movement Service. [85771]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of setting up the BCMS is provisionally estimated at £21.4 million. The total set up costs have been offset by receipts in EC aid and VAT recovery of around £4.2 million.

Cattle (Ear Tagging)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to propose changes to EU Regulation 820/97 regarding ear tagging of cattle. [85777]

Mr. Rooker: It would be for the European Commission, not the UK, to make formal proposals to change the European legislation on cattle identification (Council Regulation 820/97). I am aware that some—but not all—farmers are suffering high loss rates of plastic cattle eartags. My Department is looking into why this is the case. Such plastic eartags, although relatively new for the UK, have been in use for some time in other European countries.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests have been conducted in the UK on genetically modified (a) soya, (b) maize and (c) tomatoes; when they were held; by whom were they conducted; where they were held, if any were carried out on mammals; and in which scientific journal the results were published. [86422]

Mr. Rooker: Genetically modified (GM) soya, maize and tomatoes were rigorously assessed for safety by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP) under a voluntary scheme, which was in operation prior to the introduction of the Novel Food Regulations in May 1997. The safety assessment for GM soya was conducted in 1994; GM maize was assessed in 1995, 1996 and 1997; and GM tomatoes in 1994, 1995 and 1997. Equivalent bodies in other member states have also assessed these foods.

All the data used in these assessments have been deposited in the British Library and the relevant information to enable this to be consulted together with details of the safety assessments are contained in the respective ACNFP annual reports, copies of which can be found in the Library of the House. In addition, details of the regime operating at that time are contained in the ACNFP Annual Report for 1994. We have no information concerning other places where the data may also be found.

The ACNFP conducts the safety assessment of all novel foods on a case-by-case basis. The Committee require mammalian tests where it judges this is necessary to establish the safety of a particular food. In this context, tests on mammals were reviewed by the ACNFP as part of the safety assessment for GM maize and soya.

Since May 1997, all novel food assessments have been carried out by the ACNFP in accordance with guidance produced by the European Commission's Scientific Committee on Food, which applies to all member states. A copy of this guidance, which does not differ in any significant way from the regime operated under the voluntary scheme, may also be found in the Library of the House.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that all members of the EU are constrained by the same rules and regulations as those in the UK with regard to testing of genetically modified foods. [86423]

Mr. Rooker: All member states are subject to the EC Novel Foods Regulation and are required to conduct safety assessments of all novel, including genetically modified, foods in accordance with the guidance produced by the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Food that supplements this regulation.

Milk (Health Effects)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up an inquiry into the possible link between the growth factor IGF-1 in milk and breast cancer and prostate and colon cancer; and if he will make a statement. [86424]

Mr. Rooker: A Working Group of the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has considered human and animal safety aspects of the use of recombinant bovine somatotropin in dairy cows, including the effects of IGF-1. The Group has completed its task and is reporting its findings to the VPC. The VPC will advise Ministers when it has considered the report and it is our intention to publish the VPC's advice.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has conducted into the effects on human health of using genetically engineered growth hormones to stimulate the production of milk. [86484]

Mr. Rooker: An applicant wishing to obtain authorisation to market such a product must satisfy statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy under veterinary medicines legislation. It is for the applicant to provide the necessary research data to meet these requirements. There is a moratorium in the European Union on the use of recombinant bovine somatotropin (BST), which is to be reconsidered by the end of this year. The moratorium allows member states to carry out limited practical tests to obtain any further scientific data that might be taken into account by the Council of Ministers when taking a final decision. No such tests have been conducted in the UK.

TREASURY

Motorists (Taxation)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was collected in taxation in respect of (a) private motorists and (b) commercial vehicles in the most recent year for which figures are available. [86673]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 June 1999]: The breakdown of taxation into private motorists and commercial vehicles is not possible.

The estimated amount of tax collected in respect of cars, light vans and motorcycles for 1997–98 was £30 billion, and that for other vehicles was £5 billion.

These figures include all excise duties, VAT, Insurance Premium Tax, Vehicle Excise Duty, and Inland Revenue taxes (including National Insurance Contributions).

Housing Finance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the extent of pension mortgage mis-selling; [86936]

(2) what assessment he has made of the number of people in Britain who have (a) endowment mortgages, (b) pension mortgages, (c) ISA mortgages and (d) interest-only mortgages without any repayment vehicle; and if he will make a statement. [86937]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury does not compile statistics on housing finance. However, the Council of Mortgage Lenders' quarterly economics journal No 42 of May 1999 includes the following information on the percentage number of loans granted in 1998 by repayment method type of advance.

	Percentage
Repayment	43
Interest only	56
of which
Endowment	34
PEP	3
Pension	1
Other	19
Other	1

FSA has reported no systematic evidence of mis-selling of pension mortgages.

Vocational Training Relief

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations took place with the UK training industry prior to the decision to remove Vocational Training Relief from April 2000. [86284]

Mr. Milburn: Vocational Training Relief will be abolished in 2000. The incentives announced for Individual Learning Accounts will provide a better means of targeting support from public funds, so that in future more help will go to those who have the greatest need to improve their skills and qualifications.

The Department for Education and Employment has been discussing the details of Individual Learning Accounts with interested parties, including training providers for many months.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the suitability of individual learning accounts as a replacement for Vocational Training Relief. [86285]

Mr. Milburn: Individual Learning Accounts will promote lifelong learning and encourage individuals to take responsibility for their own training and development. The incentives announced for Individual Learning Accounts provide a better means of targeting support from public funds than Vocational Training Relief. In future more help will go to those who have the greatest need to improve their skills and qualifications, rather than subsidising expensive activities which, though they may be vocational for a few, are for the most part undertaken as hobbies.

EU Taxation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made on the repayment by the Italian Government of the tassa per L'Europa; and what assessment he has made of the legality of the tax within the Maastricht framework. [86727]

Ms Hewitt: EUROSTAT decided that the tassa per L'Europa was a new tax and, as such, it was recorded as a receipt reducing the deficit. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has made no representations on the partial repayment of this tax.

Personnel Services Companies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps the Inland Revenue will take to inform recruitment consultancies and clients of personnel services companies if they default on commitments in relation to tax and national insurance; [86462]

(2) what procedures the Inland Revenue and Contributions Agency will follow when a certified personnel service company enters voluntary liquidation or arranges an S.852 dissolution, with particular reference to the informing of agencies and other potential clients; [86463]

(3) if non-certified agencies supplying personnel services will be required by the Inland Revenue to install new software for assessment purposes. [86464]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 286–87.

BCCI

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will (a) make a statement on the publication on the website of the Association of Accountancy and Business Affairs of the Sandstorm report by Price Waterhouse on BCCI and (b) place a copy of the report in the Library. [86322]

Ms Hewitt: No.

Customs and Excise Staff (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff, by post and grade, of HM Customs and Excise have been made redundant in Northern Ireland in 1999. [86709]

Dawn Primarolo: No members of HM Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland have been made redundant in 1999.

Petroleum Product Smuggling (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is responsible for preventing the smuggling of petroleum products into Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [86715]

Ms Hewitt: HM Customs and Excise are responsible for preventing the smuggling of petroleum products into Northern Ireland.

Both the Government and Customs are aware of this problem and recognise that it is serious in revenue terms and, just as importantly, disadvantages legitimate traders. Customs are deploying resources and actively mounting investigations against those involved to counter the threat posed to the revenue and to the Northern Ireland business community.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will exempt Northern Ireland from the climate change levy or energy tax until such time as electricity costs are comparable to average electricity costs in Great Britain. [85896]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are aware of the nature of, and the prices prevailing in the energy market in Northern Ireland. These issues were considered, alongside a number of other factors, in determining the scope and design of the climate change levy.

The introduction of the climate change levy will entail no increase in overall burden of tax on business as a whole, as the revenues from the levy will be fully recycled to business via a 0.5 per cent. reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from an additional £50 million for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, such as solar and wind power.

Landfill

Mr. Colman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under the landfill tax credit scheme, which landfill operators have contributed to environmental bodies; and if he will list those environmental bodies, including contact details, which have received support from landfill operators. [86148]

Ms Hewitt: Information obtained by Customs and Excise from landfill operators about contributions made to environmental bodies under the landfill tax credit scheme is confidential. I regret, therefore, that I cannot disclose such information.

The information requested about which environmental bodies have received contributions is best provided by the Regulator for the environmental bodies credit scheme, ENTRUST Ltd. I have asked ENTRUST to write to my hon. Friend.

Women's National Insurance Entitlements

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conclusions he reached about the quality of information supplied with regard to women who continued to pay reduced National Insurance contributions after 1977 about national insurance entitlements; and what plans he has to assist those affected. [86195]

Dawn Primarolo: There have been two major publicity campaigns about the married women's option; one in the late 1970s and another in the late 1980s. Leaflets CA09 and CA13 were made available at the time from the Benefits Agency locally. I am currently considering whether a further information campaign is necessary.

Public Libraries Act 1850

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Her Majesty's Government have to issue a coin to commemorate the forthcoming 150 anniversary of the Public Libraries Act of 1850. [87113]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Her Majesty The Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation that next year a special design should be adopted for the reverse of the fifty pence in order to mark the 150th anniversary of the Public Libraries Act, 1850. Collector versions of the coin will be available from the beginning of the year and the coin will also be available, later in the year, at face value from banks and post offices.

Pension Transfers

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has concerning the treatment of the pensions of public servants transferring to private sector employers. [87160]

Mr. Milburn: The key principles are that staff transferring to private sector employers under PFI and other PPP deals should continue to have access after the transfer to a good quality occupational pension scheme, under which they can continue to earn pension benefits through future service on a basis which overall is materially at least as good as they had in the public sector; and that they should have the option of transferring their accrued pension benefits to the new employer's pension scheme on terms which give them a full credit for their past service.

I am issuing new guidance to Departments and Agencies today which reinforces these principles and ensures that they will be applied consistently and openly to all transfers of Government staff.

The new guidance will be adopted immediately by Government Departments and Agencies. I hope that other employers in the public sector will also apply its principles to contracting arrangements where staff transfer to the private sector, and the Government will encourage and facilitate that outcome. This does not affect arrangements being made in respect of PFI and other PPPs which are already underway.

Copies of the new guidance, and the associated Statement of Practice by the Government Actuary, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Delayed Operations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has carried out on the cost to his Department of delays to operations in the NHS, with particular reference to the consequent continued payment of benefits. [86427]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Business Taxation

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the UK tax measures currently under examination by the EU Code of Conduct Group (Business Taxation). [84913]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 May 1999]: The work of the Code of Conduct Group is directed at the examination of potentially unfair tax practices across Europe. Such practices can distort competition and artificially attract investment and jobs away from member states such as the UK which have more neutral tax systems. The Code should help British businesses to compete on more even terms, protect UK employment and encourage investment here.

The UK measures which were on the Group's initial list are: International Headquarters Companies; special measures for the film industry; enterprise zones; 100 per cent. first year capital allowances for SMEs in Northern Ireland and roll-over relief for balancing charges arising on the disposal of ships. The current list also includes a measure relating to Independent Investment Managers, which applies to non-residents who carry on a trade of dealing in investments in the UK through an independent agent; 100 per cent. capital allowances for expenditure on Scientific Research and 40 per cent. first year allowances for SMEs.

The Government are clear that none of the measures is harmful and is robustly making that case in the Code Group.

Financial Advice (VAT)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove VAT on fee-based financial advice. [86935]

Ms Hewitt: No. VAT liability depends upon what service is provided and whether it is paid for. Financial advice for which a charge is made is liable to VAT at the standard rate. This is a requirement of European law.

ECOFIN

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the latest agenda of the ECOFIN meeting of 14 June, prior to the meeting. [86832]

Ms Hewitt: There is no meeting of Ecofin today. The next meeting is scheduled for 12 July. The agenda will be made available to the Scrutiny Committees when determined by Coreper, approximately one week before the meeting. Copies of the agenda will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the purpose and location of his meeting with William Kennard of the United States Federal Communications Commission on 16 September 1998. [86287]

Mr. Chris Smith: I met Commissioner Susan Ness and Commissioner Michael Powell of the Federal Communications Commission, not William Kennard. The meeting took place on 17 September at the FCC offices in Washington and discussions centred around the programme for the introduction of digital television and the proposals for the switch off of the analogue system in the United States. Censorship and the V-chip were also discussed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Panel 2000

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those recommendations from Panel 2000 upon which he is planning to implement; and if he will list the costs accrued to date by Panel 2000. [86456]

Mr. Hoon: The Panel makes recommendations aimed at better co-ordination between all organisations whose work affects perceptions of Britain overseas. In terms of Government practice they entail further improvements in the way Departments and official bodies work together in this area, and enhanced co-operation with the private and voluntary sectors. A number of detailed steps have been taken and others are being considered. Panel members receive no remuneration. Panel costs consist of reimbursement of travel costs incurred by members in their Panel duties. These total approximately £2,280.

Modernisation Group

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the five working groups of the Modernisation Group; and if he will deposit copies of their (a) mailings and (b) recommendations in the Library. [84505]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Modernisation Group is an informal group of staff set up at my instigation, to offer an additional perspective on modernisation of the Foreign Office.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disablement Benefit (Backdating)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to remove the three month limit for backdating payments under successful posthumous applications for disablement benefit introduced in the Social Security (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No. 2) Regulations 1997. [85302]

Mr. Bayley: There are no plans to remove the three month backdating limit for posthumous claims to Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit. We will, however, review the backdating rules to this benefit as part of our ongoing commitment to modernise and reform the welfare state.

Year of the Elderly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to be involved in the United Nations 1999 Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement. [86191]

Mr. Timms: The UN Year provides a valuable opportunity to raise awareness and change perceptions about issues surrounding older people. It also provides a vehicle to consult older people themselves. This Department is a member of the UN Year reference group of voluntary organisations and government departments who have planned the UK programme, and a DSS official chairs the supporting facilitation group on Citizenship. I am taking a keen interest in the International Year, and will take part in a number of the events being organised.

As part of the programme, this Department has taken a leading role with Cabinet Office and the UK Secretariat of the International Year of Older Persons to develop a series of ten "listening to older people" events between May and November. The events will be hosted by non-governmental organisations supporting the year, with Ministers from the Ministerial Group for Older People, which I chair, taking part.

These events will provide the Government with valuable information and feedback which will help decide priorities and shape the policies to meet them. I launched the programme at a website "virtual" event organised by Age Resource on 25 May and will be attending the first physical event in Belfast tomorrow.

Payment Cards

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forms of technology he is evaluating as a replacement to the magnetic strip of the benefit payment card, and what the projected savings are. [85862]

Angela Eagle: We will begin replacing the existing paper-based methods of payment with a more modern, efficient and secure method of paying benefits using the existing automated credit transfer system in 2003. In addition to an increase, compared with the benefit payment card, of potential savings from the elimination of fraud associated with paper instruments of payment, this move is expected to provide a significant increase in administration savings.

It is the Post Office's intention to automate its network by the end of 2001 and to enter into commercial arrangements with a number of high street banks so that those people who wish to receive their benefits at post offices should continue to be able do so.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what savings were achieved due to the operation of the benefit swipecard in the 250 post offices where it was operating prior to renegotiation of the BA-Pocl Horizon contract; [86926]

(2) what plans he has to continue operation of the benefit swipecard in the post offices where the system is currently operational. [86927]

Angela Eagle: In the 204 post offices automated as part of the system trial savings from the payment card to April 1999 amounted to £97,000. Over the same period and in the same post offices the Order Book Control Service, which uses bar coded order books to tackle benefit fraud, achieved savings of £1.7 million.

We have decided that the project to automate post offices and benefits payments will no longer include the introduction of the benefit payment card. The vast majority of benefit customers will be unaffected, and those currently using the benefit payment card as part of the system trial, around 30,000 people, will see no interruption of their payments. The cards presently in use will be discontinued and we will be contacting customers to help them change to one of the alternative methods of payment.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of benefit payments are currently made through Automated Credited Transfer into bank accounts; [86924]

(2) what income was generated for post offices as a result of benefit payment transactions in the last year for which figures are available; [86925]

(3) what proportion of benefit claimants do not have a bank account. [86928]

Angela Eagle: As at May 1999, 16 per cent. of benefit payments were made through Automated Credit Transfer into bank accounts.

The transaction fees payable by this Department to the various agents who supply benefit payment services are commercial in confidence and cannot be disclosed.

Estimates of the number of benefit claimants who do not have a bank account vary widely. The various sources of information available suggest the figure to be in the region of 10–20 per cent.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the effect on the benefit of a Jobseeker's Allowance claimant who is participating on a European Social Fund course of training, if the course provider makes payments directly to (a) a childminder and (b) a person providing accommodation in circumstances where the child care or accommodation needs are directly related to participation on the course. [85751]

Angela Eagle: In these circumstances the Jobseeker's Allowance regulations allow for such payments to be ignored.

European Social Fund (Training)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if recipients of (a) Incapacity Benefit and (b) Severe Disablement Allowance can participate on a European Social Fund course of training without loss of benefits. [85756]

Mr. Bayley: People undergoing certain Government training courses for which they receive a training allowance cannot also receive Incapacity Benefit or Severe Disablement Allowance. People who participate in training funded out of the European Social Fund do not receive a training allowance and may therefore continue to receive Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance provided they continue to satisfy the other conditions of entitlement.

However, young people under age 19 cannot get Severe Disablement Allowance if they are undergoing non-advanced education for 21 or more hours a week, not including time spent on a course specifically designed for disabled students.

Pension Legislation

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for reform of the legislation which prevents transfers of protected rights from a contracted-out money purchase pension scheme; and if he will make a statement. [86308]

Mr. Timms: There is no general prohibition on transfers of protected rights from contracted-out money purchase pension schemes. The conditions under which transfers of protected rights may be made are contained in SI 1996/1461 the Protected Rights (Transfer Payment) Regulations 1996.

We have received a number of representations about these rules and will consider whether any changes are needed to this legislation.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress is being made with the introduction of the system of periodic inquiry into entitlement to Disability Living Allowance; and if he will make a statement. [87144]

Mr. Bayley: The new system of periodic inquiry into entitlement to Disability Living Allowance is being developed in close and continuing consultation with organisations of and for disabled people. These discussions have taken particular account of issues such as the appropriateness of the literature to be used, and the treatment of very sensitive cases, where special attention is required to ensure that the process meets the needs of the individual contacted. The consultation has been constructive and I can announce that inquiry action is now starting, with the first inquiries being issued today. Cases involving people with mental health problems and cases made on behalf of children will not be included in the inquiry process until special arrangements have been discussed with relevant organisations and appropriate training delivered to staff. The inquiry process will be closely monitored and initial evaluation will commence after six months of operation, in January 2000.

National Insurance

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking relating to benefit decisions which depend upon national insurance contribution issues; and if he will make a statement. [87145]

Mr. Timms: Two key initiatives are behind the changes we introduce today. The Department's reform of decision making and appeals is the first stage of our modernisation programme, intended to provide real improvements in the service we provide to Social Security and Child Support clients. Similarly the transfer of the Contributions Agency to Inland Revenue is part of extensive work to align the tax and benefits systems more closely.

I am laying regulations to support a flexible and effective dialogue between the Department and the Inland Revenue for the purposes of Social Security decision-making, helping to bring the two organisations closer together in their day-to-day operations. The regulations ensure that where a contribution issue arises in connection with a benefit decision, dispute or appeal, that issue will be decided by Inland Revenue. The provisions protect a client's rights of appeal and ensure we continue to take decisions in the most efficient and effective manner.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to deal with changes in a person's medical condition which effect benefit entitlement; and if he will make a statement. [87146]

Mr. Bayley: An important part of our programme of welfare reform is the need to ensure the amount of benefit paid to claimants is correct and remains correct, and that changes which could affect benefit entitlement are properly taken into account. This means having a system of review which is fair, appropriate and sensitive to the needs of individual claimants.

We have recently made changes to the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations which, from 1 June, introduced a common test of reasonableness for both misrepresentation of, and failure to disclose information about disability-related changes. These changes applied to Disability Living Allowance, Attendance Allowance and benefits for people incapable of work and are intended to protect vulnerable, disabled people from an unfairness in the application of the overpayment recovery rules. They recognise that it is often very difficult for claimants to understand that gradual improvements in their medical condition, or response to new treatment which helps alleviate their problems, might have an effect on benefit. Unless it is considered that the claimant could reasonably have been expected to be aware of a fact or to have reported a change in circumstances, any resultant change in entitlement which has the effect of removing or reducing benefit will not be applied retrospectively.

Today I am laying regulations to ensure that the same provisions to benefit sick and disabled people are carried into the new system for decision making and appeals. In addition they will be extended to cover people claiming Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance.

The regulations also deal with the circumstances in which a decision based on a determination about incapacity for work can be reconsidered. They make it clear that when deciding whether a person continues to be entitled to a benefit awarded on basis that they are still incapable of work, the decision maker may use the findings from carrying out a further All Work Test as grounds to make a new decision. The regulations provide that where the decision maker has clear information from a new medical report provided by the Department's examining doctor, that the person no longer satisfies the conditions for entitlement, the award of benefit can be changed.

This approach is in line with past practice which was called into question by a decision of the Social Security Commissioners. It is not expected that there will be any impact in the outcome of decisions in individual cases.

Habitual Residence Test

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of the habitual residence test. [87147]

Angela Eagle: We have now concluded the review of the habitual residence test and have identified a package of measures to produce a fairer and more efficient test. The test was introduced by the previous Government to tackle the perceived phenomenon of 'benefit tourism'. However, to date the majority of people adversely affected have been UK nationals.

It is right that our Social Security system should be safeguarded from abuse by people with little or no connection to the UK and we will continue to do this. Clearly though it is also important to ensure that income-related benefits are available to UK nationals and other nationals who have strong and legitimate links to this country.

We believe that the package will address these two concerns. We have accepted a recent judgment of the European Court of Justice which has made it clear that people returning to the UK from an EU member state and re-establishing their ties here should be treated as habitually resident immediately upon their return.

However we believe it would be wrong to limit this important principle to people returning from a member state of the EU and have issued guidance to staff administering the test advising them to extend the effect of the judgment to people returning from any country overseas and re-establishing their ties here.

We also propose to legislate to add to the categories of people who are to be treated as habitually resident those people who are brought here from an area of civil unrest or who are deported to the UK. Otherwise, subject to any guidance which may be given by the House of Lords in Nessa v The Chief Adjudication Officer (1) The Secretary of State for Social Security (2), a decision on which is awaited, the habitual residence test will continue to apply to seek to prevent abuse by those who do not have the appropriate ties to this country.

We intend also to reduce the period when habitual residence inquiries are made from five years to two years and to introduce administrative improvements.

We will trial a standard proforma, with a view to national implementation, to facilitate a more consistent approach to information gathering and decision making on cases requiring habitual residence action. We will also monitor the effects of how the test now operates.

Taken together we believe these measures will result in fairer access to income-related benefits and will streamline the administrative process, while ensuring security against possible abuse of the benefits system by those with no real links to the UK.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Accidents

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of (a) road accidents and (b) road accidents involving fatalities occur on country lanes; and in how many such accidents speed was identified as a major contributor factor [86057]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The national reporting system for injury road accidents does not specifically record whether an accident took place on a "country lane". However, in 1997, the most recent year for which figures are available, 5 per cent. of injury road accidents occurred on minor[1], single-carriageway roads with a speed limit greater than 40 mph. Seven per cent. of fatal road accidents occurred on these roads.

Around 1 per cent. of all injury accidents and of fatal road accidents occurred on minor, single-track roads (single-lane with two-way flow) with a speed limit greater than 40 mph.

The contribution of speed to these accidents is not comprehensively recorded. However, it is estimated that speed is a contributory factor in one-third of all road accidents on all roads.

No information is available for damage-only accidents.

[1] For the purposes of this answer minor roads are defined as C roads and unclassified roads.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps will be taken to ensure satisfactory levels of public service in areas where driving test centres have been closed. [86262]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency will monitor local test waiting times and seek to ensure that service standards are delivered.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means the Driving Standards Agency deals with complaints from (a) the general public, (b) approved driving instructors and (c) hon. Members; and for what reasons records are not kept of the nature and numbers of check test complaints from driving instructors. [86256]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency has a service standard that 97 per cent. of written complaints receive a reply within 10 days and the remainder within 15 days. The Agency does not record the number of complaints about ADI check tests such as to indicate individual cases. The overall number of such complaints is small and the Agency has not felt it necessary to keep a consolidated analysis. However, in view of increasing concerns, the Agency plans to review the way complaints about check tests from individual instructors are recorded and monitored.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to re-open previously closed driving test centres. [86248]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no plans to re-open any previously closed driving test centre. The re-opening of a centre in the same locality could be considered if the need arose.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what forecasts the Driving Standards Agency has made of future demand levels. [86246]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Forecast demands for driving tests are published in the Driving Standards Agency's Business Plan. This forecasts nearly 1.4 million applications for practical driving tests and just over 1 million applications for theory tests in the financial year 1999–2000.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on the basis of what factors or criteria the Driving Standards Agency will decide to re-open a previously closed test centre. [86258]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Re-opening a previously closed test centre would be most unlikely, unless it was a temporary closure for operational reasons. In the majority of situations the property would have been re-used by the landlord. The re-opening of a centre in the same locality could be considered if the need arose.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what criteria the guidelines for the maximum distance which a test candidate should have to travel to a test centre are set. [86251]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The guideline distances were based on information from customer surveys and drew on the experience of establishing the theory test centre network.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what opportunities exist for local communities to participate in the consultation process prior to a driving test centre closure. [86259]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are several opportunities for participation as public consultation about a proposed test centre closure involves the local authority, local driving instructors, and the local Member of Parliament. The Driving Standards Agency usually holds a public meeting and notifies the local media when a closure is proposed.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means the Driving Standards Agency intends to improve and expand its consultation processes to ensure information and proposals reach approved driving instructors who do not belong to any of the national associations. [86266]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency publishes a quarterly magazine and sends a copy to all approved driving instructors. This provides briefing on a wide range of matters relating to driver training and testing. Driving instructors have the opportunity to give their views via regular customer satisfaction tracking surveys. Local consultative meetings are held regularly with instructors, and driving examiners responsible for conducting check tests hold weekly surgeries with instructors. The Agency sends copies of relevant consultative documents to local driving instructor associations. Since July 1998, the Driving Standards Agency has posted copies of its consultation papers on a Departmental Internet website, and the Agency plans to open its own website soon.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reform the consultation process for driving test centre closures. [86264]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency has recently improved its procedures to enhance the consultation arrangements. We have no further current plans to change the consultation process, but we are open to suggestions for improvement. We shall continue to try to maximise the amount of time given to interested parties for them to comment.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of the closure of driving test centres on demand. [86221]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following the closure of a driving test centre, the Driving Standards Agency monitors demand at neighbouring centres. Should waiting times give cause for concern, additional examiners are allocated to maintain customer service standards.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he intends to take to ensure the establishment of a formal appeals procedure against the result awarded on a check test. [86250]

Ms Glenda Jackson: An appeals process already exists against a decision to remove an instructor's name from the Register of Approved Driving Instructors. The current arrangements contain safeguards for the instructor, who is not normally removed from the Register unless he or she has failed three successive check tests, the final one being conducted by an Assistant Chief Driving Examiner. After that, the Registrar's decision to remove an instructor from the Register is subject to the appeals process. Appeals are considered by an independent panel. There are no immediate plans to introduce separate arrangements to appeal against the professional judgment of an examiner conducting a check test.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Driving Standards Agency has to (a) change the criteria for check tests, (b) limit their frequency and (c) ensure examiner consistency. [86265]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A two-year research project is underway, considering the way car driving instructors are trained and tested. This will report next year, and we shall consider the criteria used for check tests thereafter. Organisations representing driving instructors are kept informed of the emerging results and there is ample opportunity for them to have input to the research. The Driving Standards Agency changed the frequency for Grade 4 instructors to be check tested from one year to two years from 1 October 1998. Consistency of assessment in the conduct of check tests is provided by training and supervision of the examiners conducting the tests.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of the theory test on the numbers of people learning to drive. [86255]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The introduction of the separate theory test added a step to the process of learning to drive, but we have no information whether or how it has affected the numbers of people wishing to learn to drive.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the opinion of driving instructors of the check testing regime. [86267]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency regularly surveys driving instructors to assess their satisfaction with the services provided by the Agency. In the most recent surveys during 1997–98, over 85 per cent. of those instructors who responded said they were satisfied with the way their check test was handled.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Driving Standards Agency takes to provide a local service when it decides temporarily to close a local test centre. [86260]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency would provide a local testing service during a temporary closure if there was not a neighbouring test centre that could ensure customer service standards were maintained, and providing there was sufficient time to arrange a temporary centre. Planning consent and time factors are critical in considering the viability of making alternative arrangements.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further steps the Driving Standards Agency intends to take to ensure that all those who pass the theory test apply for the practical test. [86254]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since August 1998, theory test pass certificates have been printed showing the expiry date. Also, in April 1998, the Driving Standards Agency wrote to candidates holding theory test pass certificates who had not passed a practical test after 14 months reminding them that their theory test certificate had a two-year life. The Agency is considering a further mailshot to candidates who have held a theory test pass for a significant period and who may let it lapse by mistake.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason no consultation is undertaken when a driving test centre is closed temporarily for operational reasons. [86220]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency consults interested parties about test centre closures when time allows. Temporary closures for operational reasons are generally caused by events outside the control of the Agency, such as roadworks or road closures or health and safety issues affecting the property. Prior consultation in these circumstances is not always possible.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of qualification and experience is required before an examiner may check test an approved driving instructor. [86249]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Examiners who conduct check tests are especially selected from the existing examiner workforce for the purpose. They have to successfully complete a six-week training course covering the theory and practice of driving instruction. After qualification, their professional development is supported by supervision by senior staff to ensure consistency and fairness.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what impact current trends in demand are having on the Driving Standards Agency's cashflow; and what plans the Agency has to respond to the impact of these trends. [86243]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Demand for driving tests is stable and the Driving Standards Agency's cashflow is satisfactory. The Agency is controlling costs in line with forecast demand, and in accordance with the rules for Government bodies operating with Trading Funds.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what alternatives are considered to closures of driving test centres. [86222]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Driving test centre closures are proposed when a centre is no longer needed or no longer viable. If a centre is needed to meet demand, but a particular property has become unsuitable or unavailable, other properties are sought. A relevant consideration is the availability of local alternative facilities in line with customer service standards.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of the issuing of reminders to those who have failed to apply for their practical driving test. [86253]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have not sought to distinguish between those who specifically responded to the reminder and those who would have applied for a practical test anyway.

Road Transport System Costs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total costs of the road transport system in the UK in the most recent year for which figures are available, broken down by (a) road building and maintenance, (b) traffic law enforcement, (c) pollution and (d) congestion; and if he will make a statement. [86111]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest estimate of expenditure in England on road building and maintenance are set out in the table. Costs incurred in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the respective devolved authorities.

Expenditure in 1998–99

£ million

	Road building	Road maintenance
Trunk roads in England	580	652
Local Authority roads in England	162	1,938

The deployment of police resources to different functions are operational matters for individual chief constables, and information on expenditure on traffic law enforcement is not collected centrally. Even at a local level it can be difficult to make such assessments, since traffic officers spend a good deal of their time dealing with ordinary crime and crime prevention, while officers assigned to general beat duties act against breaches of road traffic law.

Estimates of the levels of pollution caused by road traffic are published on a regular basis. The latest estimate of CO_2 emissions from road transport in the UK in 1997 is 32 million tonnes of carbon, some 21 per cent. of total UK CO_2 emissions[1]. We do not currently attempt to place an economic value on these.

As part of the Department's work on revisions to the 1997 pre White Paper National Road Traffic Forecasts, alternative ways in which congestion costs could be estimated are being explored. As yet, however, there is no agreed basis for such calculations. A number of external estimates have been made, these include an estimate of £15 billion in 1989 by the CBI (increased to £20 billion in 1996); and £7 billion in 1996 by National Economic Research Associates.

[1] Source:

UK Greenhouse Gas Emissions Inventory estimates of emissions at source.

Railway Rolling Stock

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has received on the future of mark 1 rolling stock from the HSE; and if he will make a statement. [86190]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Deputy Prime Minister has received advice from the Chairman of the HSC recommending that all mark 1 rolling stock on the network should be modified by 2003 and replaced by 2007. Ministers are considering the recommendations, and an announcement will be made shortly.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who will be participating on the scientific steering group overseeing the farm-scale trials of genetically modified crops; and when they plan to meet. [85949]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 June 1999]: Membership of the scientific steering committee overseeing the ecological studies which are part of the farm-scale evaluations of genetically modified crops was announced on 25 May and is as follows:

Professor Christopher Pollock, Research Director of the Institute of Environmental and Grassland Research (Chair);

Professor Mick Crawley, Imperial College, London;

Dr. David Gibbons, Head of Conservation Science at the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds;

Dr. Nick Sotherton, Director of Research for the Game Conservancy Trust;

Dr. Nicholas Aebischer, Director of Biometrics at the Game Conservancy Trust;

Dr. Alistair Burn, English Nature; and

Jim Orson, Director of the Morley Research Centre.

Dr. Brian Johnson, of English Nature, representing Statutory Nature Conservation Agencies, will also be participating on the group. The Secretariat will be provided by officials from my Department. Officials representing the research contractors, the Departments funding the ecological studies and SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops), who are funding the growing and management of the crops, will also attend meetings; not as advising members of the steering group, but to provide information to the members on progress with the ecological studies and the farm scale evaluations and listen to their advice.

The first meeting of the steering committee is to take place on 14 June 1999.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all aspects of the scientific design of the field-scale evaluations of the ecological effects of genetically modified crops will be subject to the scrutiny of members of the Scientific Steering Group. [86176]

Mr. Meacher: Yes.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that genetically modified crops will be tested in EU countries only once the timetable, rules and regulations with regard to conducting those trials have been agreed by the Council of Ministers. [86415]

Mr. Meacher: All consents for the deliberate release into the environment of Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs) are issued on the basis of the procedures laid down in Council Directive 90/220/EEC, which are now being reviewed in the context of the revision of this Directive. Part B of the Directive sets out the procedures for the deliberate release of GMOs for research and development purposes.

Deer (West Sussex)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to conduct a deer count in West Sussex. [85774]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 June 1999]: Visual censuses have been conducted in the West Sussex area for a number of years by the local Deer Management Group. However, this method of census is notoriously inaccurate and the Forestry Commission have been investigating alternative methods. As part of these trials the study area in West Sussex between Eatham and Buriton was surveyed at night during April 1999 using thermal imaging equipment. The results are currently being analysed and will be available shortly.

Petrol (Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the use of methyl tertiary butyl ether in petrol was authorised in the United Kingdom. [85869]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Methyl tertiary butyl ether (MTBE) has been used in petrol in the United Kingdom as an octane enhancer at very low levels for many years. Directive 85/536/EEC, which came into effect in domestic legislation on 24 April 1989, stipulates that member states may not prevent, restrict or discourage the production, marketing and free movement of blended petrol which contains 10 per cent. or less MTBE by volume. Directive 98/70/EC sets a maximum limit of 15 per cent. MTBE by volume applicable from 1 January 2000. Not all petrol sold in the UK contains MTBE; where it is used the concentration typically averages less than 1 per cent.

Household Projections

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the data to substantiate the recently revised household projections. [86357]

Mr. Caborn: The technical volume giving the main results and methodology for the 1996 based household projections is due to be published later this summer.

Transport Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the latest agenda of the Transport Council of 17 to 18 June, prior to the meeting. [86829]

Mrs. Liddell: The proposed agenda for the 17 June Transport Council comprises the following items:

1. Adoption of the agenda
2. Approval of "A" points

Maritime transport

3. Shore waste reception facilities

Air transport

4. Delays in air transport in Europe

Measures concerning all modes of transport

5. Year 2000 computer problem
6. Revision of Trans-European Network guidelines
7. Satellite navigation systems ("Galileo")

Land transport

8. Working time in road transport
9. Railway policy
10. Other business.

Roads and Transport Expenditure

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent on (a) roads and (b) public transport by the Government in the most recent year for which figures are available. [86672]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 11 June 1999]: The most recent breakdown of the expenditure for the Department of Environment Transport and the Regions and its associated departments is given on page 15 of the Department's Annual Report 1999 [Cm 4204]. An analysis of the estimated outturn for 1998–99 on Main Programmes shows that:

(a) the estimated amount spent on roads is £1.8 billion; and

(b) the estimated amount spent on public transport is £2.6 billion.

These amounts are for programme spend only, and exclude any apportionment of Departmental running costs.

Right to Roam

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what economic assessment he has carried out of the impact of the right-to-roam proposals on hill farmers; and if he will make a statement. [86418]

Mr. Meacher: My Department commissioned independent consultants, Entec UK Ltd., to undertake an assessment of different approaches for securing greater public access to open countryside. The study included an assessment of the effects on landowners and occupiers including agricultural enterprises such as sheep and cattle farms. Copies of the report, "Appraisal of Options on Access to the Open Countryside," have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Countryside (Access)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to fund any increased costs of dealing with wider access to the countryside (a) by increasing resources to and (b) from existing budgets of (i) the Countryside Agency, (ii) English Nature and (iii) English Heritage. [86419]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's proposals for giving people greater access to the countryside are set out in our "Framework for Action" which my Department published on 8 March this year. We do not expect them to have major financial consequences but we have made clear that, where appropriate, resources will be made available to the relevant statutory agencies to cover costs arising from the new legislation.

Rights of Way

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the law governing rights of way; and if he will make a statement. [86420]

Mr. Meacher: My Department expects to publish a consultation paper on rights of way shortly.

Vehicle Lights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the safety impact of compulsory use of vehicle lights during daylight hours; and if he will make a statement. [86938]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Research into the effectiveness of daytime conspicuity lights on vehicles has been conducted for the Department by the Transport Research Laboratory. This work indicated that conspicuity lights could be of benefit in certain weather conditions, however, in clear weather, no obvious safety benefits were apparent.

The European Commission is presently considering the possible costs and benefits of the use of vehicle lights during daylight hours. The negative environmental impact of the use of vehicle lights in daytime is being considered as part of this work. No formal proposals to regulate in this area have yet been put forward but the UK continues to play its part in discussions with the European Commission and other member states.

New Household Projections

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the report on the New Household Projections to 2021. [86425]

Mr. Caborn: The technical volume giving the main results and methodology for the 1996 based household projections is due to be published later this summer.

Workplace Violence and Bullying

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce measures to tackle workplace violence and bullying. [85590]

Mr. Meacher: I strongly condemn workplace bullying. It has no place in a decent society. The Government have already in place measures to protect workers. Some instances of workplace bullying may well constitute an offence under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997. Where workplace bullying presents a risk to a worker's health, health and safety inspectors could in principal use powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to require an employer to take action to protect the employee's health. No further legislative measures are planned.

I am very concerned about workplace violence. I have therefore asked the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) to consider options for further action that would make a significant impact on preventing assaults, verbal threats and abuse in the workplace. Any plans I make to introduce measures will be based on HSC's advice.

River Tweed

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has received from English Nature concerning the notification of the River Tweed as a candidate special area of conservation under the European Council Directive 92/43/EEC on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora; and if he intends to proceed to notification. [86868]

Mr. Macdonald: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to propose the River Tweed to the European Commission as a candidate Special Area of Conservation.

From 1 July 1999 the selection of Special Areas of Conservation in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo (Refugees)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has made for the co-ordination of refugee return to Kosovo. [86480]

Clare Short: The UNHCR has been given the lead responsibility for co-ordinating the arrangement for the return of the refugees to Kosovo. We are trying to assist them to strengthen this capacity to carry out their role as efficiently as possible.

The refugees will be provided with information about the conditions in Kosovo when the details become available, including the presence of mines, booby traps and unexploded ordnance. Arrangements for orderly return are being discussed with refugee leaders.

Kosovo (Land Mines)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what money she has allocated for the process of de-mining in Kosovo. [86481]

Clare Short: To date £250,000 has been allocated for de-mining, including a mine awareness programme, in Kosovo. We expect to allocate more once the needs are clearer. Education, about the danger and location of mines, and unexploded ordnance, for refugees inside and outside of Kosovo, will be a priority.

Death Penalty (Caribbean)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will itemise and state the value of (i) aid and (ii) trade preferences provided, respectively by the United Kingdom and the European Union, for (a) Trinidad and Tobago, (b) Jamaica and (c) each of the other Caribbean Commonwealth countries which have the penalty of capital punishment. [86408]

Clare Short: Net figures for official development assistance (oda) provided in 1997 (the latest year for which full figures are available) to those Commonwealth Caribbean Countries which retain statutory provision for capital punishment are as follows:

£ million

	UK	EC
Antigua and Barbuda	0.3	0.8
Barbados	0.3	3.5
Belize	1.0	2.7
Dominica	5.2	−0.4
Guyana	91.9	4.0
Jamaica	−2.9	45.6
St. Kitts and Nevis	0.2	0.8
St. Lucia	1.4	6.9
St. Vincent and the Grenadines	0.2	0.1
Trinidad and Tobago	0.4	20.4

Note:
Negative figures are the result of repayments on past oda loans. The UK oda figure for Guyana is particularly high because of a large debt relief payment made in 1997.

As with other non-EU members of the Lomé Convention, the Caribbean benefits from Lomé trade preferences including those relating to commodities. It would not be possible to quantify the value of these preferences to the countries in question without disproportionate cost.

Balkans (Reconstruction)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the resources required for refugee return and longer-term reconstruction of Kosovo and the Balkan region. [86482]

Clare Short: Most of the refugees are likely to return if their long-term security is guaranteed by an international security presence in Kosovo with NATO at its core. This is one of the conditions that has now been accepted. Arrangements for the withdrawal of all Yugoslav security forces, and the early entry of the international security force into Kosovo are currently being finalised. The immediate tasks are de-mining, and the provision of emergency relief for those who had remained in Kosovo and those returning (shelter, food, medicine, emergency rehabilitation of infrastructure).

In co-ordination with the lead agency, the UNHCR, we are preparing for the reception of refugees when they return to Kosovo. We have a team positioned in Skopje ready to provide a rapid assessment of the resources required to begin the process of planning provision of humanitarian relief repairs and rehabilitation. As I have stated previously, our objective remains as it has always been to assist as many refugees to return to Kosovo as quickly as possible.

Recent donor meetings have assessed the impact of the Kosovo crisis on neighbouring countries and highlighted action needed to deal with the consequences. We continue to work closely with the International Community to help these countries.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money is allocated by her Department for the return of Kosovan refugees and the longer-term reconstruction costs in the Balkans. [86479]

Clare Short: Since 24 March 1999, the Government have committed £40 million for humanitarian assistance to the region. We are working with the EU member states, IMF, the World Bank and regional banks to determine the resources required for the return of the refugees and the longer-term reconstruction in the Balkans. We expect to make an appropriate contribution to the reconstruction effort.

World Bank Loans

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what negotiations her Department has had with the World Bank about protecting the poor from the effects of financial crises; and if she will press for an external evaluation of the effectiveness of the protection measures which are supported with World Bank loans to be conducted and to be published. [86941]

Clare Short: We are working closely with the World bank to ensure its programmes pay particular attention to protecting poor and vulnerable groups from the effects of financial crises. We have been working to try to ensure that the bank and the IMF work more closely together on emergency adjustment programmes to ensure that the needs of the poor are taken fully into account. At the 1998 Annual Meetings of the Bank and Fund, the Chancellor of the Exchequer also called for a development of a Code of Good Practice on Social Policy to help guide countries in dealing with the social consequences of global economic problems. Work on this is underway, and the Bank will report on progress at the 1999 Annual Meetings in late September.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of occupational therapists required in Northern Ireland to reduce the waiting time for assessment of need to (a) six months and (b) three months. [85874]

Mr. McFall: No estimate has been made of the number of occupational therapists required to reduce the waiting times for housing adaptation assessments.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time occupational therapists are employed in Northern Ireland. [85875]

Mr. McFall: At 31 December 1998 the number of qualified occupational therapists employed in the Northern Ireland Health and Personal Social Services, across the full range of hospital and community services, was as follows:

(a) Full-time—339

(b) Part-time—127.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to recruit and train extra occupational therapists in Northern Ireland. [85887]

Mr. McFall: Training of occupational therapists in Northern Ireland is carried out in the University of Ulster. At the request of the Department of Health and Social Services the University has since 1992 increased the annual student intake level from 36 to the current level of 50. Recruitment of occupational therapists is a matter for individual Health and Social Services Trusts.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average waiting time for a home visit and assessment by an occupational therapist in Northern Ireland. [85873]

Mr. McFall: Information is not available in the form asked. The table shows the number of assessments commenced during the quarter ended 31 March 1999 and in each case the time waiting from referral.

Priority cases	Number
Less than 2 weeks	2,833
2 weeks to under one month	698
One month and over	645
Total assessments commenced	4,176

Other cases	Number
Less than 3 months	2,735
3 to 6 months	1,424
6 months and over	1,407
Total assessments commenced	5,566

Note:
Figures do not include Newry and Mourne Health and Social Services Trust due to a computer problem

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if hospitals and other NHS facilities in Northern Ireland used not-in-kind refrigerants. [86170]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Health Estates Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ronnie Browne. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. H. Browne to Mrs. Helen Brinton, dated 11 June 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question regarding the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if hospitals and other NHS facilities in Northern Ireland used not-in-kind refrigerants.

Data is not readily available on the use of refrigerants in hospitals and other Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS) facilities in Northern Ireland, and information in the form requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) is fully supportive of the Government's commitment to running and operating its estate in accordance with best environmental practice as an integral part of its contribution to the UK sustainable development strategy. All HSS Trusts are in the process of implementing GREENCODE, an environmental management system designed specifically for the Health Service.

The HPSS has made significant progress in reduction of greenhouse gas emissions and up to March 1998 achieved a reduction in CO_2 emissions of 22.21 per cent. against the base year of 1990/91. This exceeds the Government's target of 20 per cent. reduction by year 2010 against the same base year.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Fort Whiterock

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations are represented on the Whiterock Steering Group to examine development proposals for the former Fort Whiterock army base on Springfield Road, Belfast. [86152]

Mr. Ingram: The members of the Whiterock Steering Group represent the Industrial Development Board (IDB), Making Belfast Work (MBW), the Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU), the West Belfast Partnership Board, the Upper Springfield Development Trust and the local MP.

Glencree Reconciliation Centre

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what authority the Government fund the Glencree Reconciliation Centre in Co. Wicklow, Republic of Ireland. [86150]

Mr. McFall: The Glencree Reconciliation Centre receives project funding from a global grant body in the Republic, under the Cross-Border Community Reconciliation Measure of the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation. The project involves school children in the Border Counties and in Northern Ireland. The measure is jointly administered by the global grant body and the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust. The latter contributes to the funding of this project, given its cross-border nature, and the EU funding element attracts a matching contribution from Government.

SCOTLAND

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if hospitals and other NHS facilities in Scotland used not-in-kind refrigerants. [86169]

Mr. Macdonald: The specific information required to estimate the total reduction in greenhouse gas emissions if NHS in Scotland (NHSiS) bodies used not-in-kind refrigerants is not collected centrally.

The NHSiS already has operational mechanisms in place to ensure that no ozone depleting substances are vented into the atmosphere by refrigeration appliances and plant. This is achieved via the specification of suitable alternatives to products which contain such substances, by regular servicing and ensuring that they are recovered for recycling or destruction in accordance with all current statutes and codes of practice.

Additionally, against the wider Government obligation to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2008–12 and their domestic target of a 20 per cent. carbon dioxide reduction by 2010, the NHSiS has reduced carbon dioxide emissions by 30 per cent. in the eight years from 1989–90 to 1997–98. Carbon dioxide is recognised as the principal contributor towards the "greenhouse effect".

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Buchanan Centre, Glasgow

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total rateable value of the new Buchanan Centre in Glasgow; how much would have been paid in rates by the centre during the current financial year had all units been open and occupied at the start of the financial year and occupied throughout the year; and how much and what percentage of the total raised would be made available to Glasgow City Council. [86396]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not available. The local Assessor is responsible for determining rateable values and no entries have as yet been made in the valuation roll for this new property.

Homeopathy

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps are being taken to recognise at consultant level those practitioners with extensive experience in homeopathic medicine gained before 1 January 1997; [86325]

(2) what provision there is for the training of orthodox physicians in their conventional path of accreditation in homeopathy and complementary medicine. [86328]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 11 June 1999]: There is currently no statutory training path for doctors in homeopathy in the UK, although consultants in homeopathy have been appointed in the NHS. Since 1 January 1997 it has been a requirement to be on the GMC's Specialist Register in order to be eligible for appointment as a substantive or honorary NHS consultant. Doctors holding substantive NHS consultant appointments in homeopathy before 31 December 1998 were able to apply for inclusion in the Register under transitional provisions in the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995 (as amended). New consultants in homeopathy would ordinarily expect to be trained in another medical specialty recognised for the purposes of specialist registration, as well as in the non-statutory requirements for homeopathy.

The requirements for specialist medical education are governed by European Directive 93/16/EEC. The practice of homeopathy varies greatly across the EEA, and there is no provision within the Directive to recognise homeopathy for the purposes of medical training. The Faculty of Homeopathy has previously indicated its intention to develop a nationally recognised training programme in homeopathy. In order to do so, the Faculty would need to satisfy the Specialist Training Authority of the Medical Royal Colleges (STA) that the training programme met the requirements of Directive 93/16/EEC. It would then be for the STA to apply to the Secretary of State for Health for inclusion of the specialty in the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995 (as amended).

In Scotland trainees are able to undertake sessions in homeopathy at the Homeopathic Hospital in Glasgow during their training in General Medicine, provided that they fully comply with the Joint Committee on Higher Medical Training curriculum in General Medicine. At present the North Glasgow Acute Trust, of which the Homeopathic Hospital forms part, has two consultant physicians with an interest in homeopathy. It also has one higher medical trainee who is undertaking sessions in homeopathy. Two general professional trainees (Senior House Officers) are also based at the Homeopathic Hospital. In the west of Scotland registrars in general practice are funded to attend courses in homeopathy if they wish, but numbers who request it at that stage are small. Once they are in independent practice, however, demand increases and homeopathy courses are accredited for reimbursement by the NHS through the Postgraduate Education Allowance for GPs.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients are currently on the waiting list of the Glasgow Homeopathic Hospital. [86324]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 11 June 1999]: On 31 March 1999 the number of patients waiting for inpatient/day treatment at the Glasgow Homeopathic Hospital was 37.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times (i) the Lord Chancellor and (ii) the Minister of State in the Lord Chancellor's Department have met members or officials in the United States Government since 1 June 1998; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the US departments involved on each occasion, and the names of the US members and officials at each meeting. [86294]

Mr. Vaz: Neither the Lord Chancellor nor the Minister of State have had any official meetings with members or officials in the United States Government since 1 June 1998.

Legal Aid (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when it is intended to publish a consultation paper on legal aid reform in Northern Ireland. [87141]

Mr. Vaz: A consultation paper on legal aid reform in Northern Ireland has been published today. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Annual Report

18. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the method by which the contents of his Department's Annual report are determined. [85582]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office Annual Report conformed to the requirements and followed guidance laid down by Her Majesty's Treasury for all Departmental reports. It describes the aims and objectives of the Department, its policies and programmes, and details of the Department's expenditure plans.

Jury Trial

19. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding proposed curtailment of the right to trial by jury. [85583]

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representation he has received concerning his plans to restrict the right to trial by jury. [85587]

Mr. Boateng: The recommendation of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice 1993 and the Narey Review of Delay in 1997 was subject to a public consultation exercise last year. 133 responses covering a range of views were received during the consultation exercise. Consultation has not, in our view, weakened the case for abolishing the ability to elect for trial in either way cases.

27. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the bill to restrict the right to trial by jury in criminal cases. [R] [85592]

Mr. Boateng: A bill to remove the defendant's ability to elect for Crown Court trial in either way cases will be published and introduced when Parliamentary time allows.

Drug Dealers (Seized Assets)

20. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of assets seized from drug dealers in the last year for which figures are available. [85584]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997–98, courts in England and Wales made 1,510 confiscation orders for drug proceeds totalling just over £15 million. During that period, assets totalling £5 million were realised by the enforcement of drug trafficking confiscation orders.

We are considering proposals for strengthening confiscation legislation, including wider civil forfeiture powers and a National Confiscation Agency, on which we recently consulted.

Fire Cover

21. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department's review of fire cover has made; and if he will make a statement. [85585]

Mr. George Howarth: It was agreed last year to trial in a number of brigades new fire cover arrangements based on proper risk assessment and flexibility of response. We expect the trials will be completed by the end of next year.

Probation Service

22. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to review the work and case load of probation service staff. [85586]

Mr. George Howarth: The work of the probation service was reviewed last year as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, which resulted in an extra £127 million current grant being made available to the service over the three years 1999–2000 to 2001–02. It is a matter for probation services and the probation committees that employ them to decide how to make the best use of the resources available, including distribution of work and how staff should tackle that work.

Fines (Enforcement)

24. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the enforcement of fines. [85588]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are committed to the better enforcement of financial penalties imposed by the courts. The Access to Justice Bill, currently before this House, contains provisions which will give civilian enforcement officers and approved enforcement agencies employed by the courts wider and clearer powers to execute warrants issued against fine defaulters and those who have breached community penalties. This will enable responsibility for such work to be transferred from the police to the magistrates' courts, allowing the police to concentrate on fighting crime.

Also, the Government's Crime Reduction Programme includes a project which will fund work to extend successful fine enforcement techniques and encourage courts to make greater use of fines.

The courts will be expected to give a high priority to the prompt and efficient enforcement of the penalties they impose. As a result, more money—including compensation for the victims of crime—will be collected.

Police Overtime (Millennium Public Holidays)

25. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review police overtime pay for the millennium public holidays. [85589]

Mr. Boateng: I have no plans to review police overtime pay as police regulations already provide for public holiday working.

Social Exclusion

26. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the role of the voluntary sector in tackling social exclusion. [85591]

Mr. Boateng: The voluntary and community sector has a key role to play in tackling social exclusion. The Government recognise that many voluntary and community organisations have particular skills and knowledge across a range of subject areas and service provision. That is why the Government have entered into a new spirit of partnership with the sector and the Policy Action Teams established to take forward the work on social exclusion issues include representatives from a range of voluntary organisations.

Police Custody Officers

29. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that all police custody officers are fully trained before being allocated their custody duties. [85594]

Kate Hoey: National Police Training (NPT) has developed a two-week training course for Custody Officers for delivery by forces. The course is subject to regular updating and was revised last year in the light of the recommendations of the report by the Police Complaints Authority. It is due to be revised again this summer to take account of emerging good practice and the findings of the recently published report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary's thematic inspection of police training, "Managing Learning".

It is for Chief Officers to decide on the nature and timing of the training to be undergone by their officers. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) recognise the value and importance of the Custody Officer training package, and continue to work with NPT in strongly promoting the use of this course by all police forces. My right hon. Friend would encourage any initiative to ensure that training is provided prior to taking up Custody Officer duties.

Disclosure Rules (Rape and Domestic Violence)

30. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the disclosure rules in cases of (a) rape and (b) domestic violence. [85595]

Mr. Boateng: The aim of the disclosure provisions, which apply to all offences, is to ensure that all relevant unused prosecution material is disclosed to the defence. In response to concerns about their operation, the Director of Public Prosecutions has initiated a programme of work, focusing on the essential principles of disclosure, with a special emphasis on the duty of the prosecution to ensure a fair trial. In the light of this work Home Officials have been asked to consider what further needs to be done.

Changes to the Crown Court procedures for obtaining material from third parties came into force on 1 April 1999 with the aim of focusing applications on requests for relevant material. In addition the law on disclosure of a defendant's previous convictions is under review by the Law Commission.

Crime and Disorder Partnerships

31. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment the Government have made of the role of voluntary organisations as partners in combating crime and disorder. [85596]

Mr. Boateng: Voluntary organisations have an important crime prevention and reduction role. That is why the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 requires a wide range of voluntary bodies to be invited to participate in the work of the crime and disorder reduction partnerships.

36. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his counterparts in the Department for Education and Employment to ensure that schools are fully involved in local partnerships to combat crime and disorder. [85601]

Mr. Boateng: Following agreement with Ministers in the Department for Education and Employment, we have designated schools as bodies with which local authorities and police forces must co-operate in partnership to develop and implement crime and disorder reduction strategies.

Police Manpower

32. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Association of Police Authorities to discuss police manpower. [85597]

Mr. Straw: My hon. Friend and I meet the Association of Police Authorities regularly both at the Home Office and at police events when a range of issues are discussed, including police resources.

The Association is fully aware that, under legislation passed by the previous Government, the number of police officers in each force is a matter for local determination.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

33. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in resolving the problems arising from the move of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [85598]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have established a project team, working to tight deadlines, to plan and deliver urgent measures to ensure the Directorate improves its quality of service.

Animal Experimentation

34. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met members of the Animal Procedures Committee; and what discussions took place on licences. [85599]

Mr. George Howarth: I last met members of the Committee when I attended its meeting on 9 December 1998. I also met their Chairman, Professor Michael Banner, on 10 November. I had very worthwhile discussions on both occasions, although these did not specifically touch on the issue of licences, or on particular applications for licences, under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

The Government greatly value the Committee's advice. I keep in touch with the Committee on a regular basis and expect to meet members again soon.

Metropolitan Police Force (Ethnic Minorities)

35. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to enhance the recruitment, retention and promotion of Black and Asian police officers in the Metropolitan police force. [85600]

Kate Hoey: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a Question from the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) on 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 69.

Sex Offences Review

37. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to conclude his review of sex offences. [85602]

Mr. Boateng: The review of sex offences is aiming to produce recommendations at the end of the year.

Dangerous Driving Deaths

38. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the law relating to the causing of death by dangerous driving. [85603]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no current plans to review the law relating to causing death by dangerous driving. We believe that the courts have adequate powers to punish those who are convicted of this offence.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review his policy on charging individuals for checks made by the Criminal Records Bureau. [85566]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to review the policy. We considered very carefully whether it would be possible for the Criminal Records Bureau to provide free checks for volunteers but concluded that this would be unfair to other deserving groups such as school leavers, the unemployed and disabled people seeking work, for whom the level of fees payable would be increased as a result of the need for the Bureau's income to meet its costs.

Scottish Prisoners (Deportation Orders)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons awaiting deportation in 1998 were detained in Scottish prisons; and what was the average length of such detentions. [85567]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The average number of people detained at any one time in Scottish prisons solely under Immigration Act powers last year was in the range of 20 to 25. Consolidated records are not kept, neither do our records distinguish between detainees who are liable to deportation and those liable to removal as illegal entrants or having been refused entry at a port. This information, together with the average length of detention, could be established only by reference to each individual case record.

Macpherson Report

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all the persons within Government who had sight of the Macpherson report before its publication were required to account for their movements during the period within which a copy was shown to a journalist and whether any checks were made of their account. [86115]

Mr. Straw: The conduct of the inquiry into the leaking of parts of the Macpherson report was a matter for the independent investigator. Establishing who would have been in a position to leak the material is an integral part of investigations of this kind.

Home Detention Curfews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 27 April 1999, Official Report, column 110, 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 295 and 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 149, on home detention curfews, what powers he has to revoke the licences of the 14 curfewees who were charged with an offence during the period of curfew and who remained on home detention curfew. [86058]

Mr. George Howarth: The Secretary of State's powers to revoke the licence of any person subject to home detention curfew are set out in section 38A(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which provides that:

"If it appears to the Secretary of State, as regards a person released on licence under section 34A(3) above—

(a) that he has failed to comply with the curfew condition;

(b) that his whereabouts can no longer be electronically monitored at the place for the time being specified in that condition; or

(c) that it is necessary to do so in order to protect the public from serious harm from him, the Secretary of State may, if the curfew condition is still in force, revoke the licence and recall the person to prison."

In addition, on 1 January 1999, the Government implemented section 103 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. This means that a curfewee whose original offence was committed on or after 1 January 1999 and who is charged with a new offence committed during the home detention curfew period will be liable to have his licence revoked by the Secretary of State under section 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

The 14 curfewees referred to in the question are not liable to have their licences revoked by the Secretary of State under section 39 of the 1991 Act, as their original offences were committed prior to 1 January 1999, and there are no grounds for recall under section 38A(1) of the 1991 Act. However, breaches of licence conditions not covered by these provisions may be dealt with by the courts under section 38 of the 1991 Act and may result in a fine and/or recall to prison.

Inside Out Charity

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of the Inside Out charity in prisons. [86203]

Mr. George Howarth: The Inside Out Trust has been involved in the provision of work to prisons since 1994. All the work is charity based. Activities include Braille transcribing, repair of wheelchairs and artificial limbs, sewing and a wide range of arts and crafts work. The Trust supplies materials and arranges for transport of goods to and from prisons. The Prison Service supplies staff, accommodation and equipment.

The Trust has also set up a Charity link scheme, which has been operating since 1996, which aims to link each prison with organisations which can make the best use of the facilities prisons offer, such as making badges for flag days or re-labelling collection boxes.

Prisoners, particularly those involved in bookbinding and Braille transcribing, are also given the opportunity to qualify for proficiency exams.

The Trust makes a valuable contribution to work for prisoners who might otherwise be unoccupied. Prisoners are enabled to help other disadvantaged groups through work for charities including Oxfam, Barnardos, the Royal National Institute for the Blind and Victim Support.

Judicial and Police Co-operation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what documents have been published relating to the activities, financing and powers of Europol; what agreements need to be made prior to the commencement of operations of mixed national police teams, under its supervision within national states; and if he will state the name of the replacement committee concerning all matters of police and judicial co-operation in Title VI of the Treaty on European Union, the frequency of planned meetings and the nature and number of the representatives of the European Commission on that committee. [86226]

Kate Hoey: Europol produces an annual report that outlines the activities undertaken during the reporting period and includes a section on finance. A copy of the report for 1998 will be placed in both Libraries of the House shortly. A copy will also be sent to the European Parliament. The powers of Europol are outlined in the Europol Convention.

The principal role of Europol will be to support competent authorities of member states in their action against crime. Any decision to set up "mixed national police teams" would be for the member state principally concerned.

The senior level official committee concerned with Justice and Home Affairs issues has no formal title, but is known informally as the "Article 36 Committee". The Presidency of the day will decide how frequently it should meet. It has met once since the Treaty of Amsterdam came into effect and eight meetings are currently planned under the Finnish Presidency. The European Commission is represented at official level on the Committee; the nature and number of their representatives are matters for the Commission.

Crimes of Violence (Armed Forces)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the number of former members of the armed forces in Her Majesty's prisons and into the possibility of a relationship between crimes of violence and active service; and if he will make a statement. [85663]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not available. There has been no research into the number of prisoners who have served in the armed forces and the possibility of a relationship between crimes of violence and active service.

Prisoner N18072

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when prisoner N18072 will be subject to parole review; how long he has been custody; when he was reduced to category C status; when F75 reports were completed on him; if the Director General has responded to the request for information on the prisoner from the Chief Inspector; if the report writers at HMP Kingston recommend open conditions; and how many letters from the Worthing outside probation officer to his Department are unanswered. [86353]

Mr. George Howarth: Prisoner number N18072 is due to have a Parole Board review in October 2000. He has been in custody since 13 October 1983 and was convicted of murder on 28 January 1985. He was reduced to category C status on 12 April 1996 and his most recent F75 reports were completed in December 1996. None of the report writers at Kingston prison recommended a move to open conditions.

The Director General of the Prison Service wrote to the prisoner on 30 May 1999 in response to a request for information from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons.

The Prison Service lifer management and lifer review units have no indication that any letters from the Worthing outside probation officer remain unanswered, nor is Kingston prison aware of any such letters.

Firearms (Amendment) Acts

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the procedures adopted by the police in dealing with handguns and ancillary equipment handed in under the Firearms (Amendment) Acts; and what proportion of the equipment is (a) destroyed and (b) resold. [86452]

Mr. Boateng: It is a matter for individual chief officers of police to decide on the procedures necessary to deal with surrendered handguns, ammunition and ancillary equipment taking account of operational factors and local circumstances. Information on the procedures adopted by individual police forces was not collated centrally.

Surrendered equipment which qualifies for compensation is destroyed by the police when the associated compensation claims are resolved. No equipment is resold. Any items of equipment surrendered to the police but subsequently found not to qualify for compensation may be returned to their owners.

Fire Safety

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a bill to modernise fire safety provision; and if he will make a statement. [86387]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham), on 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 264. We intend to bring forward general legislation to consolidate and rationalise fire safety law along the lines proposed in our consultation document "Fire Safety Legislation for the Future", when Parliamentary time permits.

National Coroner Service

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a national coroner service; and if he will make a statement. [86386]

Mr. George Howarth: The coroner service is at present provided for the community by the relevant local authority. We have no plans to put the service on a national basis for England and Wales.

Managerial Suspensions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers of chief constable rank and their deputies are currently suspended on full pay; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of such officers. [86879]

Mr. Boateng: There are currently two deputies who are suspended on full pay which is 2.2 per cent. of the total of 92 chief constables and deputies, including the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police Service and the City of London Police and the Assistant Commissioners and the Deputy Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police Service.

High Security Hospitals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted offenders were transferred from prison to high security hospitals in the last (a) six months and (b) three months of their sentences in each of the past five years. [86432]

Mr. George Howarth: The available relevant information has been extracted from centrally held statistics and relates to the number of convicted prisoners who were transferred in the years 1995, 1996 and 1997.

Convicted offenders recorded as being transferred from Prison Service establishments to high security[1] hospitals as restricted patients, by period before release date

	1995	1996	1997
Within 3 months of release date	1	8	8
Within 6 months of release date	4	11	8
Determinate sentence with date of release not recorded	0	2	2
Total transferred from Prison to high security hospitals	47	55	44

[1] Ashworth, Broadmoor and Rampton

The figures relate to transfers, by order of the Secretary of State, of prisoners serving a sentence in a Prison Service Establishment made under sections 47 and 49 of the Mental Health Act 1983. The imposition of a restriction under section 49 has the effect of requiring the Secretary of State's consent on all matters relating to leave of absence, transfer or discharge.

Soar, Devon (Sale)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite bids for the redundant building and land formerly the Home Office Regional Government Headquarters at Soar, Malborough, Kingsbridge, Devon; and if he will make a statement as to the timetable for such a sale. [86430]

Mr. George Howarth: We have instructed our agents to arrange for the early sale of this land and building by tender on the open market. Our current expectation is that the sale will be completed by the end of September. This timetable is subject to the resolution of some outstanding issues with the owners of adjourning land.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Universities (Suspensions)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many vice-chancellors and their deputies in British universities are currently suspended on full pay; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of such persons. [86876]

Mr. Mudie: The Department does not hold this information. However, we have made inquiries and understand that no vice-chancellors or their deputies are currently suspended.

Further Education Colleges (Suspensions)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many chief executives and their deputies in further education colleges are currently suspended on full pay; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of such persons. [86877]

Mr. Mudie: The Department does not keep this information. However, we have made inquiries and understand that one chief executive and no deputies of the 435 further education colleges in England are suspended currently.

Water Charges

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will investigate the impact on school budgets in Worcestershire of the proposed increase in water charges. [86871]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under schedule three of the Financing of Maintained Schools Regulations 1999, local education authorities (LEAs) are free to determine factors—based on either actual or estimated costs—for the delegation of funds to schools for charges for water and sewage via budget shares. It is therefore a matter for Worcestershire LEA to devise such factors within its formula.

School Transport

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the rate support grant for rural local education authorities takes into account the cost of home to school transport with particular reference to Cornwall. [86680]

Ms Estelle Morris: The sparsity factor in the Standard Spending Assessment methodology delivers more funding to local education authorities in rural areas such as Cornwall, to help meet the extra costs of home to school transport. The Government will be reviewing the details of the formula over the next few years.

Standards Fund

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he intends to take to prevent adverse effects on core school budgets as a result of pressure on local education authorities to find the matching funding necessary for the Standards Fund. [86681]

Ms Estelle Morris: The requirement for Local Education Authorities to contribute to the Standards Fund was allowed for in the 5.7 per cent. increase in the Education Standard Spending Assessment for 1999–2000 announced in December. Cornwall County Council's own Education Standard Spending Assessment increased by 6.2 per cent. Local Education Authorities have accepted over 99 per cent. of the Standards Fund allocations offered to them, with Cornwall accepting 100 per cent. Around two-thirds of the Standards Fund must be devolved to school level, contributing to the funds available to schools.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 15 June 1999

DEFENCE

Kosovo

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to public funds of the operation in Kosovo since the beginning of military action. [86744]

Mr. George Robertson: As at the end of May, some £43 million of additional expenditure has fallen to my Department as a direct consequence of the UK's military response to the Kosovo crisis. This figure does not include the costs of replenishing stocks of expended ordnance.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times Ministers in his Department have met members and officials of the United States Government since 1 March; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion, and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [86286]

Mr. George Robertson: Since 1 March 1999, MOD Ministers have had scheduled bilateral meetings with our US counterparts, who are normally accompanied by officials, on the following occasions:

Minister	Team led by	Date	Location
Minister (Armed Forces)	John Hamre	1 March 1999	Washington
Secretary of State	William Cohen	7 April 1999	Brussels
Secretary of State	William Cohen	17 April 1999	Freeport, Maine
Minister (Defence Procurement)	John Hamre	17 May 1999	London

Full records of the US officials present at these meetings are not kept.

As well as these scheduled bilateral meetings, we have had exchanges and contacts at other meetings and conferences, including at the NATO Washington Summit.

Defence Estates

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for Defence Estates for 1999–2000. [87252]

Mr. Spellar: The following key targets have been set for Defence Estates 1999–2000:

Key Target 1:

To demonstrate an improvement of 10 per cent. in terms of the satisfaction of customer requirements.

Key Target 2:

To achieve net disposal receipts of £235 million.

Key Target 3:

To let three pilot Prime construction procurement Contracts.

Key Target 4:

To publish a strategy for the management of the Defence Estate.

Airborne Stand-off Radar

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in determining the outcome of the competition for the Airborne Stand-off Radar. [87314]

Mr. George Robertson: A consortium led by Raytheon Systems Ltd. has been chosen as the preferred bidder for the development, production and in-service support of ASTOR, the Airborne Stand-Off Radar system. The consortium includes Short Brothers, Motorola UK Ltd, GEC Marconi Avionics and Marshall SV.

ASTOR is a joint Army and RAF requirement for a ground-surveillance radar, expected to enter service in 2005. It will provide a substantial enhancement of military capability, using highly effective new radar systems installed on five fixed-wing aircraft to provide a high degree of resolution over a wide area of coverage. It can be used to monitor areas of interest from a stand-off position, in peace and in crisis, and could be deployed at short notice in support of United Kingdom, NATO or United Nations operations. The ASTOR Main Operating Base will be located at RAF Waddington.

ASTOR will provide UK industry with valuable, high-technology work. The project management team will be located in the United Kingdom, and the prime contractor will place work representing 100 per cent. of the contract value with UK firms. The project will be managed by the Defence Procurement Agency under Smart Procurement principles, with an Integrated Project Team involving representatives from industry and the Services. The likely value of the contract is about £800 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [86089]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No one in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Office, and their associated bodies and agencies, has benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage.

All staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Office and their associated bodies and agencies, who are covered by the terms of the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 have been paid more than £3.60 per hour since 1 April 1998.

Reconciliation (Funding)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she has taken to examine the case for enhanced financial assistance for the work of reconciliation as agreed in the Belfast Agreement; what consultations have been undertaken with the Irish Government; and if she will make a statement. [86149]

Mr. McFall: Financial allocations for all areas of public expenditure were considered in the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The acknowledgement of work to develop reconciliation and mutual understanding in the Good Friday Agreement was instrumental in maintaining the community relations budget at the present level of over £9 million per annum. This was not identified in the Good Friday Agreement as a potential area for enhanced North/South co-operation and implementation, and there have been no consultations with the Irish Government consequent on the Agreement. There are existing mechanisms for funding reconciliation work on a cross-border basis under the European Union Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation and International Fund for Ireland programmes.

School Enrolments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the enrolment at Saintfield High School in each of the three most recent years; how many applicants for admission in each of these years were refused; and what proposals there are for increasing the provision of secondary education in Saintfield. [86313]

Mr. McFall: The enrolment at Saintfield High School has been 326, 339 and 341 respectively in the 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 schools years. The number of pupils refused admission to Year 8 in each of these years was 2, 6 and 55 respectively. It is a matter for the South-Eastern Education and Library Board in the first instance to ensure that there are sufficient school places in its area.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the enrolment of pupils in each of the three most recent years at (a) Killinchy Primary School, (b) Killyleagh Primary School, (c) Derryboy Primary School and (d) the primary school in Saintfield. [86314]

Mr. McFall: The information requested is given in the following table. There are three primary schools in the general Saintfield area, and all three are shown.

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Killinchy Primary School	235	215	213
Killyleagh Primary School	136	127	111
Derryboy Primary School	81	77	73
Academy Primary School	329	325	336
Ballycloughan Primary School	84	79	67
St. Mary's Primary School	60	65	63

School Applications

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils at Killyleagh Primary School in their transfer procedures 1999 expressed a preference for Down High School; how many of these pupils have been accepted into Down High School; what were the grades of those pupils who were refused places in Down High School; and if she will make a statement. [86311]

Mr. McFall: In this year's transfer cohort, 6 pupils from Killyleagh primary School expressed a preference for Down High School and 5 obtained places. The unsuccessful applicant obtained a Grade C2.

The Department of Education approved an additional 18 places for September 1999 admissions to Down High School. The number of pupils to be admitted to a school is necessarily limited by the school's physical capacity and no grade guarantees a place at any school.

These points are made clear to the parents of pupils transferring from primary schools.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils at Derryboy Primary School in their transfer procedures 1999 expressed a preference for Saintfield High School; how many of these pupils have been accepted into Saintfield High School; what were the grades of those applicants who were refused places in Saintfield High School; and if she will make a statement. [86310]

Mr. McFall: In this year's transfer cohort, 16 pupils from Derryboy Primary School expressed a preference for Saintfield High School and 7 obtained places. Of the remaining 9, 4 did not reach Saintfield High School because they obtained a place in their first preference schools. Non-grammar secondary schools cannot consider the Transfer Procedure Test Grade of applicants in deciding admissions.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils at Killinchy Primary School in their transfer procedures 1999 expressed a preference for (a) Down High School and (b) Down Academy; how many of these pupils were accepted into each of these schools; what were the grades of those applicants who were refused places at each of these schools; and if she will make a statement. [86309]

Mr. McFall: In this year's transfer cohort:

(a) 15 pupils from Killinchy Primary School expressed a preference for Down High School and 7 obtained places. Of the remaining 8, 4 were Grade B1 and 2 were Grade B2 and 2 preferences were not received by Down High School, because the pupils obtained places in their first preference schools.

(b) 13 pupils expressed a preference for Down Academy and 5 obtained places. Of the remaining 8, 5 did not reach Down Academy because they obtained places in their first preference schools. Transfer Procedure tests grades may not be taken into account in admissions decisions for non-grammar secondary schools.

The Department of Education approved an additional 18 places for September 1999 admissions to Down High School. The number of pupils to be admitted to a school is necessarily limited by the school's physical capacity and no grade guarantees a place at any schools.

These points are made clear to parents of pupils transferring from primary schools.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times Ministers in her Department held meetings with Ministers and officials of the US Government between 1 January and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved at each meeting, and the US representatives at each meeting. [86289]

Marjorie Mowlam: The following meetings with members and officials of the US Administration took place during the period 1 January to 1 June 1998:

Dates	Location	Minister	US Representative
16 March 1998	Washington	Dr. Mowlam	Mr. J. Lyons Special Adviser to President Clinton and Secretary of State for Economic Initiatives in Ireland
			The hon. S. Berger Special Assistant to President for National Affairs, Mr. J. Steinberg, Deputy National Security Adviser, Mr. L. Butler, Director for European Affairs and Mr. D. Bandler, Senior Director European and Canadian Affairs
			Ms M. Albright, US Secretary of State, State Department, the hon. T. Pickering, Under-Secretary of State for Political Affairs, Ms E. Shocas, Deputy Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, Mr. J. Gadsden, Deputy Assistant Secretary for European Affairs and Canadian Affairs, Mr. J. O'Brien, Special Adviser to Secretary of State and Ambassador W. Sherman
17 March 1999			President Clinton and The First lady

Water Service

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what key performance targets have been set for the Water Service in 1999–2000. [87247]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For 1999–2000, the following key performance targets have been set for the Water Service:

1. To achieve 98.2 per cent. compliance with drinking water standards set in the Water Quality Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1994.
2. To achieve 75 per cent. compliance with the wastewater treatment works discharge standards set by the Environment and Heritage Service.
3. To ensure that fewer than 0.8 per cent. of properties experience unplanned interruptions to water supplies lasting greater than 12 hours.
4. To issue substantive replies to 90 per cent. of written complaints within 15 working days of receipt.
5. To deliver water at a unit cost of 67 pence per cubic metre.
6. To treat wastewater at a unit cost of 60 pence per cubic metre.
7. To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.
8. To achieve efficiency gains of 3 per cent. on running costs expenditure.

The targets are included in the Water Service's 1999–2000 Business Plan, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

These targets are subject to endorsement or amendment by local Ministers in the event of the Northern Ireland Assembly being established.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets have been set for the Training and Employment Agency for Northern Ireland for the period 1999–2000. [87249]

Mr. McFall: The following targets have been set for the Agency:

1. To ensure that those who began Jobskills training in 1997–98 will achieve at least a 65 per cent. qualification success rate at NVQ Level 2 or above.
2. To have at least 50 per cent. of trainees who commenced a Jobskills traineeship in 1997–98 progressing to employment on leaving the programme.
3. To pilot an Individual Learning Accounts system and contribute to the creation of 500 accounts, by March 2000.
4. CDP projects to achieve 80 per cent. of their agreed productivity targets.
5. To assist 3,000 16–24 New Deal participants to find work.
6. To contract with suitable organisations for the delivery of the new Worktrack programme by 31 May 1999.
7. To increase the number of NI organisations achieving Investors in People (IiP) standard from 171 to 230.
8. 50 per cent. of unemployed people placed into jobs to be from TSN areas.
9. To achieve a score in the range of 350–400 points against the Business Excellence Model in an entry for the Northern Ireland Quality Awards in September 1999.

These Key Targets will be subject to consideration and possible amendment by the relevant Assembly Minister when the Assembly is established.

Probation Services

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has reviewed the arrangements for the delivery of probation services in Northern Ireland. [87250]

Marjorie Mowlam: My Department has completed a quinquennial review of the Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI), including a prior options study of all its functions. I have accepted the main recommendation from the report of the study that PBNI should continue as a non-departmental public body (NDPB). A Management Statement has been prepared for PBNI which will operate from 1 April 1999. I have, therefore, confirmed NDPB arrangements for PBNI for a period of three years from that date, subject to the findings and outcome of the Criminal Justice Review.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Bug

Helen Jones: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 285, when she will publish the latest results of the market research tracking public perception of the millennium bug. [87248]

Mrs. Beckett: I have today placed copies of the Executive Summaries of the April and May tracking research in the Libraries of the House. The results are broadly consistent with those for March, showing that concern among the public on this issue is still low.

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Council how many copies of the public information booklet, "The Millennium Bug-Facts not Fiction", have been produced; and at what cost. [87111]

Mrs. Beckett: 31 million copies of the booklet have been produced so far; at a cost of just over £1.87 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to require Government Departments and agencies to discontinue the practice of referring to date as postmark and to date their correspondence. [86873]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 June 1999]: All correspondence from Government Departments and agencies should be clearly dated. The Cabinet Office will be issuing revised guidance on correspondence handling later this year to reinforce this message.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo (Refugees)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what preparations her Department has made for winter accommodation for Kosovar refugees; and what discussions it has held with the refugees on this matter. [86193]

Clare Short: We have urged the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, as the lead humanitarian agency in the region, to co-ordinate the development of a comprehensive approach for Kosovars during the winter. The strategy for shelter provision will include a combination of methods—hard shelter, winterised tents and repair and rehabilitation of existing structures.

In a number of well-established camps and collective centres, elected refugee representatives are feeding information to camp managers, and in turn to agencies, international organisations and donors, about the problems and needs of the refugee population. Planning for winter is among the topics of discussion between these parties.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress her Department has made in reviewing the implications of genetically modified organisms for poorer farmers in developing countries since her answer of 11 November 1998, Official Report, columns 206–07. [86774]

Clare Short: The findings of this initial review are summarised in the "Background Briefing: Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs) and developing countries", which we published in May 1999. The paper sets out our approach to GMOs and developing countries and identifies further actions which we are undertaking. I will send a copy to the hon. Member and place copies in the Library of the House.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals there are to amend her Department's departmental expenditure limits for 1999–2000. [87245]

Clare Short: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VIII, Vote 1, Department for International Development: International Development, the Department expenditure limit for 1999–2000 will be increased by £10,000,000 from £1,794,764,000 to £1,804,764,000. The increase is the net effect of additional humanitarian assistance to Kosovo.

The increase will be a charge on the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

WALES

A40 (Dualling)

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the results of the study which he undertook on dualling the A40 to St. Clears; and if he will place a copy of the study in the Library. [85661]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 8 June 1999]: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

The results of the study indicate that although there would be significant benefits to be gained from investments in public transport options, there would still remain the need to provide good road infrastructure.

It will now be for the Assembly to decide what resources to devote to new trunk road schemes and to what standards they should be built.

Poll Tax Debts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the level of poll tax debts which remain unpaid; and if he will make a statement. [86346]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information provided on local authority returns indicate that around £6.5 million of community charge arrears were still outstanding at 31 March 1999.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Coal Mines

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many coal mines there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [86339]

Mr. Hain: There are currently 11 underground and eight opencast licensed coal mines in Wales.

Social Inclusion

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has put in place to enhance social inclusion; and if he will make a statement. [86338]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Ms Morgan) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 727–29.

Copies of the document "Building an Inclusive Wales: Tackling the Social Exclusion Agenda" were placed in the Libraries of the House.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Medium Secure Units

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the medium secure units in operation in Wales and the date when each was commissioned. [87043]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are currently three medium secure units in operation in Wales. These are Ty Llywellyn in Llanfairfechan completed in 1998, Caswell Clinic in Bridgend completed in 1992 and the privately run Llanarth Court in Raglan also completed in 1992.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions patients have absconded from medium secure units in Wales in the last three years, and from which units; and on how many of those occasions (a) it was assessed that there was a risk to the public and (b) members of the public were assaulted or threatened. [87040]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are three medium secure facilities in Wales. Figures for escapes from the hospital grounds over the last three years are as follows:

	Number of escapes
Ty Llywellyn, North Wales	1
Caswell Clinic, Bridgend	3
Llanarth Court, Raglan	0

At no time were any of the patients assessed as a danger to the public nor were any members of the public assaulted or threatened. In addition to these escapes, Caswell had 15 patients who breached parole arrangements over the same period and Llanarth Court had 26.

Following the transfer of functions, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mileage Claims

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Council if she will estimate the number of additional hours per month required to complete the newly designed C1, C2, C3, C4 and C5 forms; how many additional staff are employed by the Fees Office to handle these claims; and if she will estimate the average number of hours (a) hon. Members will spend annually, recording and completing motor mileage claims and (b) the Fees Office takes to check this information. [86884]

Mrs. Beckett: I am afraid that it is not possible for me to estimate the hours required by Members to complete the Fees Office claim forms and their motor mileage claims. As I am sure the hon. Member will understand, Members have differing claim and travel patterns and, therefore, will take different amounts of time to complete the relevant forms. The new claim forms were designed to make completion easier for Members. I understand that the Fees Office has had a number of favourable comments about them from Members.

No additional staff were engaged to handle the revised claim forms. Staff employed by the Fees Office in checking motor mileage claims also have other duties and it is not possible accurately to apportion the time spent on each specific area of work.

Line of Route

Mr. Tyler: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, what has been the cost to date of the consultants' study of the proposal to re-open the line of route during the summer adjournment; and whether their contract has been re-negotiated. [86683]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The costs of the study to date have been shared between both Houses. The original contract up to April 1999 was suspended in the light of the decision to defer the summer opening until 2000. A new contract was re-negotiated to cover the period up to October 1999, but this is being reviewed as a result of the House's decision on 26 May that other options should be examined. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member with details.

Debate Extracts

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chairman of Broadcasting Committee if his Committee will investigate the feasibility of allowing hon. Members to obtain audio or video clips from debates in a digital format. [86399]

Mr. Eric Clarke: The Parliamentary Recording Unit supplies sound and video tapes to hon. Members. Audio tapes can be supplied in DAT, or digital format if requested. However, video tapes are not yet available in digital format since all recordings are still analogue. The first digital signals will originate from the Committee Rooms in Portcullis House and, from autumn 2000, digital and analogue video tapes will be available on request.

TREASURY

Financial Advice (VAT)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove VAT on fee-based financial advice. [86935]

Ms Hewitt: No. VAT liability depends upon what service is provided and whether it is paid for. Financial advice for which a charge is made is liable to VAT at the standard rate. This is a requirement of European law.

ECOFIN

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the latest agenda of the ECOFIN meeting of 14 June, prior to the meeting. [86832]

Ms Hewitt: There is no meeting of ECOFIN today. The next meeting is scheduled for 12 July. The agenda will be made available to the Scrutiny Committees when determined by Coreper, approximately one week before the meeting. Copies of the agenda will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much capital gains tax relating to the sale of exploration licences was paid by the offshore oil and gas industry in each of the last three years; and what is the forecast figure for the current financial year. [86858]

Mrs. Roche: The corporation tax liability of oil and gas companies arising from their capital gains on the sale of exploration and production licences averaged £25 million a year in the period 1995–96 to 1997–98 and is expected to be about £15 million for the current year.

Charities (Tax Concessions)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual cost to his Department of all tax concessions to charities (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of the total registered turnover of the charitable sector. [86689]

Ms Hewitt: (a) The annual cost of all tax reliefs for charities is estimated at over £2 billion. This comprises around £1.2 billion of relief from direct tax, about £0.2 billion in VAT reliefs and £0.6 billion in business rate relief.

(b) The total turnover of the charitable sector is not known. The Charity Commission's Register showed at the end of March 1999 that the total annual income of all registered charities in England and Wales was about £21 billion. This does not cover charities in Scotland and Northern Ireland, nor does it include non-registered charities.

Centre for European Reform

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total funds available from the European Community in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999 to date to the Centre for European Reform. [86644]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any funds being made available from the European Community to the Centre for European Reform in 1998 or 1999. The relevant budget lines—established by the Council and the European Parliament—are administered by the Commission headquarters in Brussels.

"Britain in Europe"

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what European Communities moneys have been provided to the "Britain in Europe" organisation in each of the last three years. [86453]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any funds being made available from the European Community to the "Britain in Europe" organisation in the last three years. The relevant budget lines—established by the Council and the European Parliament—are administered by the Commission headquarters in Brussels.

European Movement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds were made available from the European Communities in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999 to date to the European Movement; and for what purposes. [86455]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any funds being made available from the European Community to the European Movement in 1998 or 1999. The relevant budget lines—established by the Council and the European Parliament—are administered by the Commission headquarters in Brussels.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental Accommodation

14. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advantages which the new offices of his Department have over those in Marsham Street. [85792]

Mr. Meale: I never had the joy of working in 2 Marsham Street. Staff now have the advantage of a modern working environment and better team working as a result.

National Rail Summit

18. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to convene a further National Rail Summit. [85796]

Mrs. Liddell: The next National Rail Summit will be held in Spring 2000. The Summit will be used to review progress and maintain the momentum created by the Summit on 25 February.

Ethical Standards (Local Government)

19. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to introduce proposals to implement new ethical standards in local government. [85797]

Ms Armstrong: We have recently consulted on draft legislation, the Local Government (Organisation and Standards) Bill, putting in place a new ethical framework for local government. The draft Bill is also being considered by a Joint Committee that is due to report before the summer recess. We will be considering any issues raised during this scrutiny process with the aim of introducing new legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Rural Train Services

20. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to safeguard rural train services. [85798]

Mrs. Liddell: Train operators are required to provide the minimum service level set out in the Passenger Service Requirement. Where services are heavily dependent on subsidy, for example in rural areas, PSRs reflect closely the level of services operated by British Rail at the time of franchising.

Proportional Representation (Local Government)

21. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the benefits of introducing proportional representation for local government elections in England. [85800]

Ms Armstrong: Other than our proposals in the paper, "Local leadership, local choice" (Cm 4298, March 1999) for the introduction of the Supplementary Vote system for the election of directly elected mayors, we do not intend now to make any assessment of local government voting systems for England.

Household Projection Figures (Gloucestershire)

22. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the new sub-regional household projection figures for Gloucestershire, with particular reference to the figure contained in the county's structure plan. [85801]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State has made the 1996-based household projections available to the regional planning bodies to assist them with the preparation of regional planning guidance. The House would not expect me to comment on the Gloucestershire Structure Plan because of the Secretary of State's quasi-judicial role in planning matters.

Regional Airports

23. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions he intends to take in order to improve the competitiveness of regional airports. [85802]

Mrs. Liddell: We have freed four major regional airports from borrowing controls; we have liberalised international access to regional airports; and we are conducting a series of studies of the opportunities for the development of the regional airports.

Local Government Settlement (Southend)

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on the current local government settlement for Southend. [85803]

Ms Armstrong: Following approval by this House of the Local Government Finance Settlement for 1999–2000, we have received three letters about the settlement for Southend on Sea Borough Council.

A14 Traffic Flow Projections

25. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the revised traffic flow projections on the A14 (A1-M1 link road) for the years 1999 to 2007. [85804]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Traffic flow projections for the A14 (A1-M1 link road) were produced during the 1980's planning stages of the road. Whilst those original forecasts would not normally be revised as a matter of course, our planned multi-modal study for London-South midlands, due to start next year, will include this section of the A14 and consider projected traffic flows on it.

Passenger Services (Freight Network)

26. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage rail operators to provide new passenger services on under-utilised sections of the freight network. [85805]

Mrs. Liddell: The Director of Rail Passenger Franchising recently published Bidding Guidance for the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme announced in the Government's Integrated Transport White Paper. The scheme will encourage innovative new rail passenger services at the local and regional level.

Local Government Finance

27. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the bodies with which he has held consultations on the review of local government finance; and if he will make a statement. [85806]

Ms Armstrong: The Local Government Association, including representatives from the various Treasurers' societies, and the Association of London Government have both been closely involved in discussions on the review of revenue grant distribution since the review began earlier this year.

Radioactive Material Transport

28. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the survey of radioactive material transport packages which he commissioned from Nukem Nuclear Ltd. [85807]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The survey commissioned by my right hon. Friend the former Minister for Transport (Dr. Reid), has been completed and the report has been made freely available. The survey indicates that, while low levels of contamination exists on the surface of fuel flasks, there is no evidence of the high levels of contamination found elsewhere in Europe and there is no significant hazard presented to public safety by the levels of contamination found. Copies of the report will be placed in the Commons Library.

North-west Development Agency

29. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next intends to meet members of the North-west development agency to discuss their use of public money. [85808]

Mr. Caborn: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, nor I have any plans at present to meet members of the North-west Development Agency. However, I hold regular meetings with the chairmen of the regional development agencies to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Standard Spending Assessments

30. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the principles and objectives underlying the review of standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement. [85809]

Ms Armstrong: The objectives of the current review of revenue grant distribution are to investigate thoroughly whether there is a better way of determining the distribution of revenue support grant which is simpler, more stable, more robust and fairer than the present arrangements for SSAs. These objectives were set out in last year's White Paper, "Modern Local Government—In Touch with the People".

Fishing Vessel Accidents

31. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 148, on the consultation document "Fishing Vessel Accidents and the Recovery of Those Lost at Sea", when he expects to publish his response to the consultation exercise. [85810]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Good progress is being made on many of the issues raised in the consultation paper. The analysis of responses was discussed by the Fishing Industry Safety Group on 22 April. Members of the Group were invited to submit comments by 31 May and the Government will issue their response soon.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

32. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the use of tonnes of carbon as a measure for greenhouse gas emissions from motor vehicles. [85811]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under international guidelines, greenhouse gas emissions are measured in terms of their global warming potential. Conversion to a common unit of measurement (whether in tonnes of CO_2 equivalent or tonnes of carbon equivalent) allows comparisons to be made between countries, between various policies and measures and between different greenhouse gases.

Road Taxes (London)

33. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the proposed road taxes for London on the use of private cars; and if he will make a statement. [85813]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Research undertaken by my Department and other organisations has shown that new charges could help to tackle London's congestion problems and generate a revenue stream for transport improvements. A further study is currently looking at how the new charging powers contained in the Greater London Authority Bill could be used in London. It will be for London's Mayor and boroughs to decide whether to introduce any charging scheme in London.

Integrated Transport Strategy

34. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he will ensure that local transport plans meet the quality standards set out in the integrated transport strategy. [85814]

Mrs. Liddell: We have produced comprehensive guidance for local authorities, setting down the criteria by which we will judge local transport plans. Officials, particularly in the Government Offices, are working closely with local authorities to help them deliver the best quality local transport plans that they can.

Council Tax (Shropshire)

35. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Shropshire county council regarding council tax. [85815]

Ms Armstrong: The Secretary of State received representations from Shropshire county council as part of the 1999–2000 local government finance settlement consultation process. Shropshire county council is also one of the 12 authorities with the largest increases in budget and council tax which we have called in to discuss their increases and put on warning for next year. I shall be meeting them on 24 June.

London Underground

36. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the income to be derived by London Transport from the Public-Private Partnership leases on London Underground's infrastructure in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03. [85816]

Mrs. Liddell: It is not the intention of the Public/Private Partnership to derive income for London Transport through leasing charges. The leasing of the infrastructure to the private sector is the legal mechanism necessary to allow private sector partners to undertake and finance the necessary maintenance, renewal and upgrade works to the system.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack plc on the possibility of granting them a public–private partnership of the whole London Underground system; and if he will make a statement. [86640]

Mr. Prescott: I announced to the House earlier this afternoon, Official Report, columns 155–67, that I have agreed with London Transport that they should not hold a PPP competition for London Underground's sub-surface lines at present. This is to allow London Transport to explore with Railtrack whether there is a way of linking the national rail network to the sub-surface lines in a PPP, under which Railtrack would undertake and finance the maintenance and upgrading of the subsurface lines for London Underground, under contract to London Underground, and Railtrack would build links between the Underground and the national rail network, to allow new services for passengers running into the heart of London.

I also announced that London Transport is today inviting companies to pre-qualify as bidders to invest in the Underground through the Underground's two deep-tube infrastructure contracts. Railtrack have themselves confirmed that they will not be seeking to pre-qualify for the two deep-tube PPP competitions.

I met Gerald Corbett, Chief Executive of Railtrack, this morning, to discuss the work involved. Prior to this, my officials held a number of working level meetings with Railtrack.

Energy Reduction Plans

37. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what time scale he set for agreeing energy reduction plans with major energy user industries; and if he will make a statement. [85817]

Mr. Meale: The Chancellor has asked energy intensive sectors of industry to make proposals for targets to improve efficiency and reduce emissions by October. DETR is leading the negotiations with the sectors concerned.

Rail Services

38. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent steps he has taken to secure an improvement in rail services. [85818]

Mrs. Liddell: The National Rail Summit on 25 February produced a package of measures to tackle medium to long-term problems, including the creation of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority under the Chairmanship of Sir Alastair Morton. The Deputy Prime Minister has also recently appointed a new Franchising Director and a new Rail Regulator.

Scheduled Flights (Journey Times)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the increase in (a) fuel burn and (b) emissions as a result of the increased times taken on scheduled flights to Scotland. [85872]

Mrs. Liddell: We have not assessed whether the slight increases in some scheduled journey times reflect delays on the ground or in the air. That information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Without it, no estimate of any increase in fuel burn or emissions could be made.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the United States Government since 30 January 1999; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion, and the name of the US counterpart at each meeting. [86292]

Mr. Prescott: The information for DETR is as follows:

1999	Location	DETR Minister	US Counterpart
30 January	London	John Prescott	Al Gore, US Vice President
26 March	London	John Prescott John Reid	Rodney Slater, Secretary of Transportation
26–28 March	Schwerin, Germany	John Prescott Michael Meacher	Carol Browner, Administrator, Environment Protection Agency
20 April	Washington	John Prescott	Carol Browner, Administrator, Environment Protection Agency Andrew Cuomo, Secretary Department of Housing and Urban Development Rodney Slater, Secretary of Transportation
22 April	New York	Michael Meacher	Frank Loy, US State Department
14 June	London	John Prescott Michael Meacher	Frank Loy, US State Department

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the level of UK carbon dioxide emissions in each year from 1990 to date. [86663]

Mr. Meale: The following table gives estimates of carbon dioxide emissions for each year from 1990 to 1998 from the UK's greenhouse gas emissions inventory. The 1998 data are provisional. Emissions in 1998 are provisionally estimated to be 7 per cent. lower than in 1990, due mainly to the switch from coal to gas in electricity generation, and increased efficiency of nuclear power stations.

Year	Emissions (million tonnes of carbon)
1990	168
1991	169
1992	165
1993	161
1994	159
1995	157
1996	162
1997	155
1998	[1]156

[1] Provisional

Council Tax

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it a criminal offence to claim falsely the single person's discount for the council tax; and if he will make a statement. [86381]

Mr. Meale: A 25 per cent. discount applies where a dwelling is the sole or main residence of one person, or where all but one resident is disregarded for the purpose of a discount. We do not have any plans to make it a criminal offence to make an invalid claim for the 25 per cent. discount. However, local authorities already have powers to impose a penalty of £50, without having to go to the Courts, if a person receiving a discount fails to notify the authority that he is no longer (or never was) eligible for it.

Brownfield Sites

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish statistics on the proportion of new development on brownfield sites; and if he will make a statement. [86356]

Mr. Caborn: Estimates of the proportion of new development on previously developed land are published annually in the statistical Bulletin series "Land Use Change in England". The latest results were published in December 1998 in issue no 13, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The next edition should be published in September 1999.

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the trend in the number of abandoned vehicles over the last two years; and if he will make a statement; [86865]

(2) what plans he has to help local authorities deal with an increase in abandoned vehicles resulting from the fall in the price of scrap metal. [86866]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department does not monitor the number of abandoned vehicles collected from the public highway by local authorities. There is no requirement for local authorities or the police to provide the Secretary of State with information in respect of the abandoned vehicles which they have dealt with.

The number of abandoned vehicles was not an issue raised with this Department by the Local Government Association during discussions on the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR), which provided substantial additional provision for local authorities over the three year period covered by the CSR.

Nuisance Hedges

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make an announcement on plans to introduce legislation to control (a) leylandii and (b) other trees and bushes on private property which cause nuisance; and if he will make a statement. [86922]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 473.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the report of the Departmental Working Group on nuisance caused by hedges; and if he will make a statement. [86777]

Mr. Meale: The voluntary code of practice on the information to be provided on the sale of hedging plants, drawn up the Leylandii Working Group, is being launched to the horticultural and landscape industry today. Copies have been placed in the Library; otherwise, the position remains as set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 19 March 1999, Official Report, column 881.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reform the area cost adjustment. [85812]

Mr. Meale: We shall be examining possible improvements to the area cost adjustment as part of the Review of Revenue Grant Distribution.

Road Traffic

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to set targets in respect of his proposals to reduce road traffic levels; and if he will make a statement. [86433]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are already implementing policies to tackle road traffic as a vital part of our integrated transport strategy set out in last year's White Paper. We already have a number of international and national targets for protecting the environment and promoting more sustainable transport, and will ask the Commission for Integrated Transport, which will be starting work shortly, to advise us on further targets. We remain committed to publishing our first report under the Road Traffic Reduction (National Targets) Act 1998, on the issue of whether to set a national traffic reduction target, by the end of this year.

Train Overcrowding

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for defining overcrowding on trains. [86691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is not proposed to change the current definition of overcrowding. For services into London and also some commuter services into other large cities, overcrowding is defined in franchise agreements in terms of passengers in excess of capacity. Trains have a nominal capacity (the number of standard class seats for journeys of more than 20 minutes; plus, for journeys of less than 20 minutes, an allowance of 0.55 sq metres of floor space per standing passenger) which should not be exceeded by more than 3 per cent. in the morning and evening peaks combined. This is the general definition of overcrowding. It is broadly comparable with that formerly used by British Rail. The current practice of systematically controlling overcrowding only on commuter services also reflects previous British Rail practice.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had recently with (a) the train operating companies, (b) rail users and (c) trade unions on the subject of overcrowded trains. [86692]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The problem of overcrowding on trains was discussed at the National Rail Summit on 25 February which was attended by train operating companies, rail users and trade unions.

Bus Service

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with bus operators on the quality of their services. [85799]

Ms Glenda Jackson: DETR Ministers and officials are in frequent contact with bus operators on a wide range of issues as the policies for improving bus services announced in last year's Transport White Paper are taken forward. Improving the quality of service is prominent among the issues considered in these discussions.

National Bus Company (Pensions)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the position reached in respect of the pensions scheme of the former National Bus Company. [87246]

Mr. Prescott: I am pleased to be able to announce substantial progress in the settlement of the long running dispute concerning the payment to the Government in 1990 of surpluses held in the two National Bus Company pensions funds. At the first opportunity following full consideration of all the relevant legal and other issues, I instructed the Department's lawyers to open discussions with the pension trustees with a view to obtaining a just and equitable out of court settlement as soon as possible.

Those discussions have been successful. Offers have been made which the trustees have indicated they intend to recommend as acceptable. An application will be made to the Court for its approval of the proposed settlement terms as soon as possible following all proper consultation with the beneficiaries.

The proposed settlement involves payment to the trustees of £300 million in respect of the BEST scheme and of £55.77 million in respect of the NBPF scheme. I am satisfied that this is a just and reasonable settlement for all concerned.

The details of the distribution of the settlement sum to individuals will be a matter for the trustees to decide and carry forward.

Public Safety Zone Policy

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further decisions he has reached on Public Safety Zone Policy and administration since the announcement on 31 July 1998. [87251]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since my announcement we have been developing our proposals on two fronts, relating to the definition of new Public Safety Zone boundaries and to the preparation of guidance to local planning authorities for use in considering planning applications. Work is well in hand on the redefinition of the existing Public Safety Zones. We shall notify the local planning authorities and airports concerned of the grid co-ordinates of the new Zones during the next couple of months, and we shall follow this up by providing the data to them in map form. We shall also define Public Safety Zones for Teesside and Sheffield City airports, which were mentioned in the December 1997 consultation document.

Meanwhile we are today issuing for consultation a draft of a circular to local planning authorities in Great Britain containing guidance for use in considering applications for development within Public Safety Zones. This recommends that new housing development, and most types of non-housing development, should not be approved within Public Safety Zones. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Subject to the progress of this consultation we hope to bring the new arrangements into effect later this year in relation to the airports which already have Public Safety Zones, and to Teesside and Sheffield City. At that stage the residual work of the Civil Aviation Authority in administering the Public Safety Zone policy will be transferred to the Department. We hope by next spring to have established Public Safety Zones at the other airports for which modelling work suggests that this would be justified.

Land-use Planning

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on land-use planning and renewable energy in England. [87315]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's policy is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 22, published in February 1993. This makes clear that in formulating the policies and proposals in their development plans, and in making decisions on applications for specific renewable energy developments, local planning authorities need to consider both the immediate impact on the local environment and the wider contribution to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. They need to take account of the Government's policy for renewable energy sources along with policies for Green Belts, conservation areas and industrial and commercial development, for example.

In October 1998, the Department published a good practice guide on "Planning for Sustainable Development" and sent copies to all local planning authorities. The guide includes advice on renewable energy. It underlines the importance of renewable energy, developing a strategy at regional and local levels for the provision of renewable energy development and having clear policies and criteria in plans to help decide individual applications. The Department has held a series of seminars for local planning authorities and others to disseminate the messages of the guide.

On 30 March 1999, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry published a consultation document, "New and Renewable Energy: Prospects for the 21 Century". This confirmed that the Government are working towards a target of renewable energy providing 10 per cent. of UK electricity supplies as soon as possible and that they hope to achieve this by 2010. It also underlined the important role of renewables in enabling the UK to meet its legally binding target of reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. (compared to 1990) by 2008–12 and its goal of reducing emissions of carbon dioxide by 20 per cent. by 2010.

The consultation document indicated that the Government are reviewing the contribution which the planning system has to make to delivering their target for renewable energy and noted that widespread adoption of renewable of energy will not be possible unless the public is prepared to accept projects in their locality. The consultation document also acknowledged that concerns have sometimes been expressed that the current Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) scheme does not address, e.g. environmental aspects, sufficiently effectively and that future support mechanisms or obligations will need to deliver good quality schemes.

The planning system has an important role in helping to deliver the Government's targets and goals for renewable energy and climate change. It is clear that we need a positive strategic approach to planning for renewable energy from regional level downwards, with appropriate provision made for development in authorities' plans. There needs to be an open and constructive dialogue between prospective operators, local planning authorities and local people about identifying suitable sites with sensitivity and care. We shall build on these themes in considering what further practical steps may be needed to ensure that the planning system enables renewable energy provision to contribute to the UK's sustainable energy needs while continuing to protect the countryside.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 142, on the BBC, (1) if he will set out the internal and external audit requirements for BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources Ltd; [86270]

(2) what are the agreed borrowing limits for BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources Ltd.; and what is the security for such borrowing; [86268]

(3) if the agreed borrowing limits for BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources Ltd. count as part of the public sector borrowing requirement. [86269]

Janet Anderson: BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources are audited under the BBC's group internal audit plan. Both companies are required to have an external audit because they are limited companies that exceed the threshold size for audits.

BBC Worldwide has a loan agreement with the BBC which allows maximum borrowings of £150 million, subject to the constraints of three financial covenants: net assets, free cash flow and interest cover. BBC Resources has a £70 million term loan facility and a £30 million revolving loan facility which reduce to zero by August 2005. As with BBC Worldwide, borrowing is restricted by various financial and non-financial covenants within a loan agreement with the BBC. The covenants in both cases ensure, among other things, that licence fee money is not placed at risk.

Only the BBC's external borrowings form part of the public sector borrowing requirement, so the borrowing limits for BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources would only impact on the public sector borrowing requirement if they were to lead to an increase in the BBC's own borrowing from the market.

EU Weimar Meetings

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his contribution to the EU meetings at Weimar on cultural and audiovisual issues, in respect of (i) European identity and history, (ii) self-regulation of the media, (iii) the Culture 2000 programme and (iv) the Commission Green Paper on Convergence. [86364]

Mr. Alan Howarth: This was an informal meeting of EU Culture Ministers, with no formal agenda or conclusions. There was a wide-ranging exchange of views on these and other subjects. On the Culture 2000 programme, I indicated the UK's desire to agree a Common Position at the formal Culture/Audiovisual Council on 28 June. That Council will also consider draft conclusions on convergence and self-regulation in the media. I drew attention to a number of features which are common to both, noting in particular that self-regulation can be expected to make an important and complementary contribution to state regulation in the light of future digital media developments. The discussion on European identity and history focused on a presentation from the Spanish writer and former Minister of Culture, Jorge Semprun.

National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to publish the report of the National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education; and if he will make a statement. [86934]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 14 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith and Fulham (Mr. Coleman) on 14 May 1999, Official Report, column 226. Printed copies of the report will be available from the Department for Education and Employment's Publication Centre from 14 June 1999.

National Lottery (Good Causes)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the current estimate of the amount of money to be given to the good causes under the present National Lottery licence arrangements. [86688]

Mr. Chris Smith: Our latest forecast is that the income (including interest) to good causes from the National Lottery over the seven years of the current licence will be at least £10.85 billion, £1.85 billion more than originally anticipated when the Lottery was launched in 1994.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Judicial and Police Co-operation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what will be the name of the replacement committee dealing with matters arising from Title VI of the consolidated Treaty on European Union, Articles 29–42 concerning police and judicial co-operation on criminal matters; who will represent the UK at its meetings; and how frequently it is planned to meet; [86233]

(2) whom he plans to appoint to the co-ordinating Committee of officials established by article 31 of the Treaty on European Union, whose duty it is to prepare for deliberations of the Council of Ministers concerning judicial and police co-operation in criminal matters. [85675]

Mr. Straw: The new co-ordinating Committee established by Article 36 of the revised Treaty on European Union has no formal title but is known informally as the Article 36 Committee. The United Kingdom representative is Mr. John Warne of the Organised and International Crime Directorate in the Home Office. It is for the Presidency of the day to determine how frequently the Committee meets, but we would expect there to be meetings at approximately monthly intervals.

Millennium Compliance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on preparations to tackle the millennium bug problem in (a) police forces and (b) fire services; [86172]

(2) what assessment he has made of millennium bug preparations in (a) the police forces and emergency services of (i) Avon and Somerset, (ii) Devon and Cornwall, (iii) Cheshire, (iv) Hampshire, (v) Metropolitan London, (vi) Warwickshire and (vii) Sussex and (b) the National Criminal Intelligence Service. [86240]

Mr. Straw: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and Her Majesty's Fire Services Inspectorate have carried out independent assessments of the millennium readiness of all police forces and fire brigades in England and Wales, using the colour coding method defined by Action 2000. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary assessment also covers the National Criminal Intelligence Service. Under this method, 'red' means there is a severe risk of material disruption, 'amber' means there is some risk of material disruption but an agreed rectification plan exists, and 'blue' means there are no identified risks of material disruption. The status of all forces and brigades, assessed according to this method, will be made public at the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July. The aim is that by that date, no forces or brigades will be 'red', and by September, all will be 'blue'.

The NHS Executive has assessed the readiness of all NHS bodies, including NHS Ambulance Trusts, on a regular basis since June 1998. Aggregated figures are published on a quarterly basis, and the individual monitoring returns from each organisation are also published on the Internet. The latest returns at 31 March 1999 were published on 21 May. An up-to-date assessment of the status of all individual NHS organisations, including NHS Ambulance Trusts, will be made public at the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July.

K4 Committee

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 May 1999, Official Report, columns 445–46, concerning the business conducted at the final meeting of the K4 Committee in Brussels on 29 to 30 April, if he will list (a) the 25 agenda items there considered, (b) the Treaty base, terms of reference for Eurodac, and documentary reference to rules for its implementation, and any parliamentary scrutiny related thereto and (c) where, and by what means, the proposals of the United Kingdom for mutual recognition of criminal court decisions have been published, what consultative or scrutiny procedures have taken, or are to take, place in respect of them, and what comparable proposals have been received from other member Governments. [86235]

Mr. Straw: As regards listing, the 25 agenda items considered at the K4 Committee meeting on 29–30 April, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 259.

The draft Eurodac Convention had as its legal base Article K3(2)(c) of the Treaty on European Union. Its purpose is to assist in determining the member state which is responsible, under the Dublin Convention, for examining an application for asylum lodged in a member state, and otherwise to facilitate the application of the Dublin Convention. The draft implementing rules were developed in the context of these proposals. The draft Convention cleared Parliamentary scrutiny in May 1998, but the draft Protocol had not cleared scrutiny when the Treaty of Amsterdam came into effect; the draft implementing rules were not subject to the parliamentary scrutiny arrangements. The European Commission has now adopted a draft Regulation under Article 63(1)(a) of the Treaty establishing the European Community replacing the draft Eurodac Convention and Protocol, but this has not yet been communicated to member states.

The United Kingdom's discussion paper on the mutual recognition of court decisions and judgments in criminal matters was submitted to the K4 Committee on 29 March. It follows up the initiative of the United Kingdom Presidency endorsed at the Cardiff European Council, the conclusions of which called on the Council to identify the scope for greater mutual recognition of decisions of each other's courts. The paper, together with an Explanatory Memorandum, was deposited for scrutiny on 31 March and a copy of both has been placed in the Library.

France and Belgium have produced jointly an informal document described as a study proposal, in preparation for the Tampere European Council, on the need to develop criminal judicial co-operation. The document calls for a common push to deal more effectively with the key concerns of citizens on organised crime, corruption and European Community budget fraud, and suggests that this could be done by instruments on money laundering, use of offshore centres by organised crime and use of new technology for cross-border crime.

European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 May 1999, Official Report, columns 445–46, when, and by whom, the agenda for the additional European Council Meeting due in October at Tampere, Finland, concerning judicial and home affairs in the European Union will be published; what principal documents will be available to the public and national Parliaments prior to that meeting; and when it is planned that they will be available. [86232]

Mr. Straw: There is normally no formal agenda for European Councils. The German Presidency and the incoming Finnish Presidency have proposed that the Tampere special European Council should focus on three main issues: immigration and asylum, the fight against cross-border crime and the establishment of a European judicial area, including citizens' access to justice. A list of documents to be submitted to the European Council is unlikely to be finalised until shortly before the meeting. Appropriate documents will be made available to the public and Parliament in accordance with the normal procedures.

Fire Hydrants

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department gives to the Fire Service on (a) the location of and (b) distances between hydrants. [86299]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office issued guidance to the Fire Service on water hydrants in the "Manual of Firemanship, Book 7". The most recent edition (dated 1997) states on page 73 that

> "hydrants are normally placed at intervals of between 90 and 180 metres, except in the case of high risks and rural areas".

Further guidance on water hydrants is issued by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Draft Convention (Road Traffic Offences)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's contribution to the formulation, within the Schengen framework, of a draft Convention on Co-operation in Matters of Criminal Proceedings for Offences Against Road Traffic Regulations and the Enforcement of Fines Imposed from Such Offences. [86724]

Mr. Straw: The agreement on this subject was adopted by the Schengen Executive Committee on 28 April. The Government were not involved in drawing it up and it does not at present apply to the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom has recently applied to participate in certain parts of the Schengen acquis, but has reserved its position on whether it would wish to become a party to the agreement on road traffic offences.

Electronic Intercepts

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if legislation currently being discussed by the Council of Ministers on electronic intercepts is consistent with the 1981 Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Individuals with Regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data; and if he will make a statement. [86719]

Kate Hoey: The draft Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters between the member states of the European Union would, if agreed, be implemented in United Kingdom law in accordance with data protection legislation. The 1981 Council of Europe Convention was implemented in United Kingdom law by the Data Protection Act 1984.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the UK share of (i) costs and (ii) personnel for the Schengen Information System. [86446]

Mr. Straw: There are likely to be three main elements to the costs for the Schengen Information System (SIS): the cost of running and staffing the inquiry points at the United Kingdom National SIS; the cost of the national contribution to the costs of the central SIS in Strasbourg; and a one-off contribution towards the start-up costs of the system. At this stage, it is not possible to provide a precise estimate of the costs and staffing arrangements, which we are discussing with interested parties, including the police service.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the cost of current applicant countries joining the Schengen Acquis; and whether present member states intend to share those costs. [86737]

Kate Hoey: The Schengen acquis was incorporated into the European Union Treaty structures on the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam on 1 May 1999. Any costs falling on to member states and associated with accession to the Schengen acquis are, therefore, now part of the overall costs incurred in assisting candidate countries to prepare for accession to the European Union.

Police Car Response Times

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the response time of a police car using its blue light in responding to emergency calls. [86461]

Mr. Boateng: No research on this subject has been commissioned or evaluated.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the cases arising from asylum applications made (a) prior to 1 July 1993 and (b) between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 have been dealt with under the asylum backlog procedures; and what proportion of cases so dealt with have resulted in the granting of exceptional leave to remain. [86642]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Up to the end of April 1999, a total of 2,840 cases have been decided under the asylum backlog procedures. 94 per cent. of decisions were grants of exceptional leave to remain.

2,075 of the decisions were made on asylum applications lodged prior to July 1993 and 765 decisions were made on applications lodged between July 1993 and the end of December 1995.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received on the means of arrival in the UK of asylum seekers granted refugee status or indefinite leave to remain; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the measures in the Immigration and Asylum Bill on the routes they have taken. [87021]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Asylum applications are received from persons arriving at ports, persons who seek to enter, or who have entered, clandestinely and those who have entered lawfully for other purposes. It is not always possible to establish the means of arrival of asylum seekers. The Department does not collate specific records of the routings used by those granted refugee status or indefinite leave to remain. Measures in the Immigration and Asylum Bill contain powers designed to reduce the number of clandestine entrants and inadequately documented persons arriving in the United Kingdom. It is not the object of these measures to keep out genuine refugees. We remain firmly committed to dealing with asylum seekers in a way that complies with the United Kingdom's international obligations.

Passport Agency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times this year the Liverpool office of the UK Passport Agency has turned away applicants who attended in person without serving them; and how many such applicants it turned away without serving on Friday 7 May. [86352]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Passport applicants who have attended personally have not been turned away if this would have resulted in their missing their travel date.

The Passport Agency has not kept a detailed record of the number of passport applicants attending in person at the Liverpool passport office who have been turned away. This has only happened very exceptionally where the number of applicants inside the Liverpool office have been the maximum permitted in the office. In these circumstances, the position has been explained to applicants who have been asked to call back at a later date.

The Passport Agency has no specific information available for 7 May and it is not aware of any particular problems arising from customers being turned away from the Liverpool office on that date. However, if my hon. Friend has concern about a particular case I should be grateful if he would let David Gatenby, Chief Executive of the Passport Agency know, and he will be pleased to investigate the matter and report urgently to me.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the passport service provided by the Passport Agency's high street partners takes priority over the Agency's standard service. [86334]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency gives priority to passport applications by the applicant's declared date of travel. This applies to all applications, whether they are received via the Agency's partners or directly in the mail, or made in person. As partnership applications have been pre-checked for accuracy and completedness, and the fee has been collected, these applications can normally be processed more speedily than direct postal applications.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the passport service provided by the Passport Agency's high street partners on the Agency's standard service. [86335]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The service provided by the Passport Agency's high street partners since 1996 has helped the Agency to deal effectively and efficiently with high levels of demand by reducing processing times for passport applications. Partnership applications are pre-checked for accuracy and completeness, which enables them to be processed more speedily. This has had a beneficial impact on the service provided by the Passport Agency to all its customers.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources were given to the Passport Agency following introduction of the requirement that every child travelling overseas should have an individual passport. [87106]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As part of its business planning, the Agency took account of this change in forecasting demand for passports in 1998–99, and 1999–2000, and planning the resources and budget needed to deal effectively with this forecast demand.

The Agency is on a net financing regime and is required fully to recover its costs from passport fees.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Passport Agency has relaxed its procedures for checking passport applications; and if he will make a statement. [87107]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no relaxation of security, but to facilitate the more efficient processing of new passport applications the Passport Agency has issued guidance to its examiners to ensure they do not unnecessarily delay issuing passports by exercising discretion to approve applications where the examiner has no significant doubt about the identity of the applicant. The guidance has been agreed with the Agency trade unions as not compromising effective checks.

The Agency is often criticised for taking too narrow a view of whether a counter-signatory "is a person of similar standing" to a professionally qualified person. Passport examiners have been encouraged to give a reasonable interpretation to this requirement. In the context of the whole application and supporting documentary evidence, sensible use of discretion can ensure both quicker and proper processing of applications.

In order to clear quickly straightforward renewal applications made in person, certain existing passports are being extended for two years provided certain criteria are fulfilled. Passports valid or expired within the last five years are being exceptionally extended provided the holder's identity can be confirmed, for example, by comparing the photograph with the photograph in the old passport, or with the person who is applying in person, and provided certain other checks are satisfactorily completed.

These extended passports are properly issued passports valid for travel. Immigration authorities abroad have been made aware of this position.

Neither of the measures imply any relaxation in the Agency's security. No security checks have been suspended.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passport applications are currently outstanding; what is the average time taken between receipt of the application and the issue of the passport; and what were the estimated figures for June 1996, June 1997 and June 1998. [87112]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency currently has 487,658 passport applications outstanding, which represents, at current output levels, about one month's work.

The current average turnround time across the Agency's six passport offices is 34 working days. The average turnround time in June 1996, June 1997 and June 1998 was 8 working days, 9.5 working days and 16 working days respectively.

Teething problems with the introduction of new computerised passport-issuing arrangements into the Liverpool and Newport Passport Offices, and high seasonal demand for passports, have caused current delays.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the time that will be taken between application to the Passport Agency and issue of a passport for (a) new passports and (b) renewal of a passport (i) one month hence and (ii) six months hence. [86980]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is difficult to provide an estimate of the position in one month's time as the Passport Agency is prioritising applications to meet applicants declared travel dates. With high seasonal demand for passports, this means there are delays in processing non-urgent applications. Much depends on intake, the Agency's output, and the impact of the measures the Agency is taking to reduce current delays.

The Agency is meeting travel dates in 99.99 per cent. of cases and will continue to do so throughout the summer. The Agency's aim is to reduce turnaround times to 10 days by September.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Newport Passport Office regarding (a) the telephone service and (b) the general service provided to the public; and if he will make a statement. [86944]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am aware from the weekly reports that I have been receiving from the Passport Agency's Chief Executive on the Agency's current operational difficulties of the teething problems that the Newport Passport Office have encountered in piloting new computerised passport issuing arrangements. Productivity has been below expectations and arrears of work have developed. In addition, along with the Agency's other five offices, Newport has been dealing with high seasonal demand for passports.

The Passport Agency is taking a number of measures to improve the position at Newport. Applications are being prioritised by customers declared travel dates, and Newport is meeting those dates for 99.99 per cent. of passports issued. Additional staff are being deployed, examination processes are being streamlined, and Newport is working extended hours.

Current delays will reduce as a result of the action being taken and the seasonal nature of the Agency's work. The aim is to reduce turnround times to 10 days by September.

Because of its arrears of work, the Newport Office has been swamped with telephone and written inquiries. Despite its best endeavours, and with its focus on the customers declared travel dates, the Newport Office has not in many cases been able to provide a satisfactory response. The Passport Agency very much regrets the present situation and is taking action to improve matters. It is looking urgently at alternative telephone answering arrangements.

I have written to all hon. Members with a more detailed explanation of the Agency's current operational position, and its plans to reduce current delays.

Trial by Jury

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will estimate the proportion of cases where trial by jury having been denied by the magistrates, refused by the Crown Court, and having given rise to a subsequent conviction in the magistrates court, are then likely to be appealed to the Crown Court; and if he will estimate the total cost involved in such cases; [86762]

(2) what is his estimate of the cost of appeals to the Crown Court by defendants to whom the magistrates have refused to accede to their request for jury trial in respect of either way offences; and how such overall estimated cost has been calculated; [86760]

(3) what he estimates to be the likely annual savings to the public purse of abolishing the rights of defendants to elect jury trial for either-way offences, setting out how his estimate is calculated. [86758]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not currently available. Detailed estimates of the costs and savings of the proposed procedure are still under consideration.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of their eventual sentence defendants who elect jury trial and subsequently plead guilty serve while on remand. [86766]

Mr. Boateng: The available information relates to the average time spent on remand for those tried at the Crown Court. Information on a defendant's plea and the numbers electing jury trial are not available.

Provisional information for 1998 shows that the average time spent on remand for untried prisoners prior to conviction at the Crown Court was 4.1 months. This compares with an average sentence length imposed at the Crown Court of 22.1 months. This shows that, on average, around 20 per cent. of the eventual sentence was served on remand as an untried prisoner.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes that magistrates should be entitled to deny jury trial to a defendant charged with an either-way offence who, if convicted, they consider they would be likely to commit to Crown Court for sentence. [86756]

Mr. Boateng: Among the factors magistrates are currently required to have regard to under section 19 of the Magistrates Courts Act 1980 is whether the punishment which they would have the power to inflict if the defendant is convicted would be adequate. Magistrates will continue to be expected to consider each case individually and on its own particular facts in determining the appropriate mode of trial having regard to whether their sentencing powers are sufficient.

Either-way Offences

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all either-way offences. [86753]

Mr. Boateng: There is no readily available list of triable either-way offences. Appendix Four of the annual Command Paper "Criminal statistics England and Wales" lists just over 370 triable either-way offence codes which are used for statistical purposes. Each code may cover more than one offence and these codes cover approximately 700 offences. Other triable either-way offences are grouped together under one ad hoc code. Copies of the Command Paper are available in the Library.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many either-way cases were tried in the Crown Court in each of the last five years for which records are available; how many were contested; how many defendants pleaded guilty; and what proportion of those which were contested resulted in a conviction for (a) all offences charged and (b) for any offence charged. [86764]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not held centrally, but is being prepared. I will write to the right hon. and learned Member when this information becomes available.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the proportion of defendants electing for trial of either-way offences in the Crown Court who are persistent offenders abusing the system. [86754]

Mr. Boateng: Research conducted by the Home Office showed that nearly 90 per cent. of convicted offenders who had elected trial in 1989 had previous convictions and over a third had more than 10 previous convictions.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants electing trial in the Crown Court for either-way offences have (a) been convicted and (b) received sentences greater than could have been imposed by the magistrates. [86757]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally. Home Office research conducted showed that two-thirds of convicted defendants who had elected trial in 1989 received non-custodial sentences. Others will have received custodial sentences within the powers of magistrates.

The same research showed that those who elected trial were three times as likely to receive a custodial sentence, and sentences were on average two and a half times as long as similar defendants sentenced in magistrates courts.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants electing trial in the Crown Court for either-way offences subsequently plead guilty (a) to all offences of which they were charged, (b) to the most serious offence of which they were charged and (c) to an offence less serious than the most serious offence with which they were charged. [86755]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally. Home Office research conducted in 1989 showed that of convicted offenders who had elected trial, 70 per cent. finally pleaded guilty to all charges and 14 per cent. finally pleaded guilty to some charges.

Trial Costs

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the daily cost of a trial in a contested case before (a) the Crown Court in England and Wales and (b) the Sheriff's Court in Scotland. [86763]

Mr. Boateng: In 1997–98, the average cost of a contested trial in the Crown Court in England and Wales is estimated to be £18,100. The estimate is for the costs of a trial of average length and includes "capital costs" as well as the running costs of the Criminal Justice System for all of the different agencies.

In 1997–98, the average criminal case cost in Sheriff and jury cases in Scotland where evidence was led was £10,900. The estimate includes court, prosecution and legal aid costs—but excludes "capital costs". Daily costs are not available.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the cost of trials (a) in the Crown Court and (b) in the magistrates court lasting (i) one day, (ii) two days, (iii) three days, (iv) four days and (v) five days; and how such figures are calculated. [86759]

Mr. Boateng: The average costs of a trial in England and Wales in 1997–98 are estimated to be:

£8,700 for a trial in the Crown Court (regardless of plea, all indictable offences); and £500 for a trial in a magistrates' court (regardless of plea, all offences).

The estimates are for the costs of a trial of average length and include "capital costs", as well as the running costs of the Criminal Justice System for all of the different agencies. Separate figures are not available for trial of different lengths.

Remand Prisoners

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the additional privileges enjoyed by a prisoner in custody on remand as compared to a prisoner serving a sentence of imprisonment or youth custody. [86765]

Mr. George Howarth: A person remanded to prison awaiting trial is entitled to a number of additional privileges when compared to a prisoner serving a sentence of imprisonment or youth custody.

Unconvicted prisoners are allowed to:

have additional books, newspapers, writing materials and other means of occupation in their possession at their own expense;

undertake business activities;

wear their own clothing;

decide not to have their hair cut if they wish;

send and receive an unlimited amount of letters;

be visited and treated by a registered medical practitioner or dentist of their choice at their own expense;

have an extra private cash allowance;

have additional smoking materials in their possession;

have unlimited visits; and decide whether or not to work.

Unconvicted prisoners are also not required to share a cell with a convicted prisoner.

Crime (Sentences) Act 1997

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners sentenced to life imprisonment under section 2 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 have received tariffs of (a) less than three years and (b) less than five years. [86323]

Mr. George Howarth: Of the 60 prisoners currently confirmed as serving life sentences under section 2 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997, seven have tariffs (relevant parts under section 28 of the Act) of less than three years and 29 of less than five years.

Short Tariff Prisoners

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change (a) Prison Service and (b) Parole Board procedures to ensure that prisoners with short tariffs are not unnecessarily held beyond expiry of the tariff. [86375]

Mr. George Howarth: None. Short tariff life sentence prisoners are, with rare exceptions, those whose tariffs (relevant parts) have been set by the courts. Such prisoners are statutorily entitled to an oral hearing of their case by the Parole Board once the relevant part of the sentence has expired. The Board may direct the prisoner's release following such hearings if they are satisfied that the level of risk is acceptable. No change is, therefore, necessary to Parole Board procedures.

The Prison Service has set up an 86-bed main centre at Brixton prison to provide fast-track arrangements for life sentence prisoners with short tariffs. The aim is to provide expedited reports on such prisoners so that they may be allocated at an early stage to other prisons which can offer any necessary course work on offending behaviour. This should enable such work to be completed in time for the outcome to be reported to the Parole Board for the oral hearing on tariff expiry.

Experimental Psychiatric Research

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of the papers which his Department holds in connection with experimental psychiatric research on delinquent youths at (a) the Burden Neurological Institute in Bristol, (b) Star Cross Hospital, Newton Abbott and (c) other institutions during the 1970s. [86460]

Mr. Boateng: I and my Department of Health colleagues need to find out whether there are records of any such research. We will write to the hon. Member once we have been able to establish the position.

Visas

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the system of handling visa applications of family members of refugees residing in the UK. [86842]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no such plans.

However, in response to the crisis in Kosovo, special arrangements have been made to facilitate family reunion for Kosovans who have been evacuated from Macedonia under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) Humanitarian Evacuation Programme. Arrangements have also been made to send a Home Office team to Macedonia to assist the UNHCR in the registration of refugees and selection for evacuation to the United Kingdom. A further Home Office team is going to Tirana to process applications from family members notified to the Red Cross by their families in the United Kingdom. This is to assist the British diplomatic post in Tirana which is not resourced to provide a full visa service.

Police Officer Dismissal

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish his reasons for overturning the Devon and Cornwall Chief Constable's decision to dismiss police officers Wayne Burns and Andy May. [86412]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 11 June 1999]: Wayne Burns and Andy May appealed to me against decisions by the Chief Constable of Devon and Cornwall in January 1998 to find them guilty of disciplinary offences and dismiss them from the force. I appointed an independent tribunal to consider the appeal and to make recommendations to me. The tribunal reheard the evidence and unanimously recommended that the appeals should be allowed.

I considered all the facts of the case, the points raised in the grounds of appeal and the Chief Constable's response, together with the report of the tribunal. I decided to accept the tribunal's reasons and their recommendation to allow the appeals. The reason for my decision was that I was not satisfied that the charges had been proved to the criminal standard of proof which was the standard required at the relevant time. The standard of proof required in police discipline proceedings has now been lowered from the criminal standard to the civil standard but only in respect of alleged police misconduct occurring after 1 April 1999.

Police Custody

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fatalities have occurred in police custody units in each of the past 10 years. [86978]

Mr. Boateng: Deaths in police custody units are included in the statistics for deaths in police custody or otherwise in the hands of the police. During the period from 1991–92 to 1994–95, such deaths were tabulated on a financial year basis for the Metropolitan Police and a calendar year basis for the rest of England and Wales, with the result that no national annual totals are available for that period. The figures for the last 10 years are as follows:

Year	Metropolitan police	Year	Provinces	Total
1989	37	1989	36	73
1990	20	1990	41	61
1991	24	1991	36	60
1991–92[1]	21	1992	33	—
1992–93	18	1993	18	—
1993–94	16	1994	36	—
1994–95	15	1995	39	—
1995–96	13	1995–96	37	50
1996–97	18	[2]	39	57
1997–98	12	1996–97	57	69
1998–99[3]	17	1997–98	49	66
		1998–99

[1] Change to financial year basis includes some figures previously counted in 1991
[2] Change to financial year basis includes some figures previously counted in 1995
[3] Provisional figures

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of supervision is required in police custody units. [86979]

Mr. Boateng: Section 36 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides that one or more custody officers shall be appointed for each designated police station. No officer may be appointed a custody officer unless he is of at least the rank of sergeant. An officer of any rank may perform the functions of a custody officer at a designated police station if a custody officer is not readily available to perform them.

Guidance on the interpretation of "readily available" was given in the report of the Steering Group on Custody Officers which was circulated to Chief Officers and to Police Authorities in July 1993.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory provisions which apply to police custody units. [86977]

Mr. Boateng: The principal statutory provisions relating to police custody units are contained in Part IV of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued concerning the centralisation of police custody units. [86976]

Mr. Boateng: In July 1993, the Home Office circulated to Chief Officers and to Police Authorities the report of the Steering Group on Custody Officers, which included the recommendation that each chief officer who had not already done so should review the provision of designated stations with a view to rationalising custody facilities.

Kosovo Refugees

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the changed circumstances, any more refugees from Kosovo will be evacuated from the region to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [87354]

Mr. Straw: The Government's aim, in common with that of our European Union partners, has been to ensure that the great majority of refugees are looked after in the region so that they are able to return to their homes when it is safe to do so. We have also responded to the request for help from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to evacuate the most vulnerable people from the area. We accordingly accepted around 4,000 refugees into the United Kingdom. The stage now reached in the military action against the Milosevic regime and the fact that the first steps have been taken to allow the refugees to return mean that significant evacuations under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programmes are no longer necessary.

We have, therefore, decided to reduce significantly the number of flights into the United Kingdom. After today, we expect to receive a further flight this week and one next week. We will, then, keep the situation under review. We will focus on people who cannot be cared for in the region and on the spouses and dependants of people who are already in the United Kingdom.

Those refugees arriving under the Programme who have been granted 12 months leave to enter will not have their stay curtailed. We will, however, actively be establishing arrangements to facilitate the return of those who want to go back to Kosovo before then.

Consideration of claims for asylum for citizens of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) will be suspended temporarily while the security situation in Kosovo is clarified. Consideration of applications will resume as soon as practicable. Nobody will be sent back to Kosovo until we are satisfied that it is safe for them to go. We propose for the time being to grant 12 months leave to enter or remain to Kosovan Albanians on an exceptional basis. This will provide for the same status and access to benefits as between those FRY citizens who have arrived as part of the UNHCR's Humanitarian Evacuation Programme and those who have arrived independently once their cases are decided.

Although the evacuation flights from Macedonia to the United Kingdom are coming to an end, we will continue to apply family reunion criteria under our normal immigration policy for those in the United Kingdom who have refugee status, and we propose to continue to operate family reunion for those who have come to the United Kingdom under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme. Anyone granted such a visa for travel to the United Kingdom will, however, be required to make their own travel and accommodation arrangements.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay a warm tribute to the hard work which local authorities and the voluntary sector have done in preparing for and receiving evacuees from Kosovo. Even those areas which have not actually received flights or accommodated evacuees have responded with generosity and enthusiasm to the need to plan for arrivals.

Handguns

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) illegally held handguns and (b) legally held handguns have been handed in since 1 May 1997. [86746]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the number of illegally or legally held handguns handed in to the police on a routine basis is not kept centrally.

Following the passage of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997, which prohibited large and small-calibre handguns, a total of 162,198 handguns were surrendered to the police in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents involving handguns have been recorded for each month since May 1997. [86745]

Mr. Boateng: The figures for notifiable offences recorded by the police in which handguns were reported to have been used in England and Wales since 1 May 1997 are set out in the table. The figures for 1998 are provisional and currently available for only the first three months of the year.

Month	Number of offences
1997
May	214
June	208
July	212
August	212
September	183
October	216
November	237
December	266
1998
January	216
February	201
March	210

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 and 28 May, in respect of the draft Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance in so far as this relates to the interception of communications, indicating what position the Government advocated. [86435]

Mr. Straw: No agreement was reached at the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 27 and 28 May on the interception of communications provisions in the draft Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters. The Council agreed that the outstanding issues should be referred to the Article 36 Committee. The Government's position remains as set out in my reply given to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 23 March 1999, Official Report, column 176.

Royal Escort Costs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) police and (b) other security officers were deployed to escort the royal party to the Chelsea Flower Show in May; and what was the cost of this operation; [86751]

(2) what his policy is in respect of security protection for members of the Royal Family other than the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, their offspring, and Princes Henry and William; and what was the cost of security protection for those members of the Royal Family not listed above for the last year for which figures are available. [86750]

Mr. Boateng: We seek to ensure the most effective and efficient protective arrangements for the Royal Family and other public figures in the light of the changing threat from terrorism and other continuing risks. It is our policy not to comment on the details of protection arrangements for individuals, as to do so could compromise their security.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the visit of the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth), to Shamrock Farm on 15 December 1998 was unannounced. [86885]

Mr. George Howarth: The visit was made by appointment. I do not believe it would be appropriate for me to visit establishments unannounced, but members of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate do make unannounced visits.

Metropolitan Police (Advertising)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the advertisement placed by the Metropolitan Police in the London Evening Standard on 9 June. [87109]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the advertisement cost £11,000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Metropolitan Police spent on (a) recruitment advertising and (b) general advertising in each of the last three years; and what is the budget for the current year. [87110]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has provided the following information:

£

Year	Other advertising	Recruitment advertising
1996–97	620,000	862,000
1997–98	659,872	859,000
1998–99	782,236	1,598,945
1999–2000	915,000	1,565,000

Access to Government Information

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the 1998 report on the operation of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. [87105]

Mr. Straw: I hope to be in a position to publish the 1998 Monitoring Report, on the operation of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, shortly. Publication of the Monitoring Report has been delayed due to work on the draft Freedom of Information Bill.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the per capita figures for the use of neuroleptic drugs in each women's prison; and what percentage of prisoners in each women's prisons are users, at least weekly, of tranquillisers and pain killers. [86952]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 26 October 1998, Official Report, columns 59–60.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the numbers and percentage of prisoners who will be participating in drug treatment programmes in each of the next 10 years. [86956]

Mr. George Howarth: It is not possible to make any meaningful estimate at this stage. Implementation of the Prison Service drug strategy will allow projections to be made at the end of this financial year, once measurement and monitoring systems have been established.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of annual cost of imprisoning cannabis offenders in each of the past four years for which figures are available. [86949]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of imprisonment for cannabis offenders is not calculated separately from other offenders. The information in the table gives an average cost per place for all prisoners. Cost per place for 1998–99 is provisional and subject to validation by prisons.

Average cost per place for prisoners

Financial year	Cost per place (£ cash terms)	Cost per place (1992–93 prices)
1995–96	24,178	22,562
1996–97	24,271	21,975
1997–98	23,940	21,152
1998–99	25,096	21,633

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the report on the experiments on the efficacy of medicinal cannabis to be published. [86945]

Mr. George Howarth: Information from G W Pharmaceuticals Ltd., the company licensed to conduct cannabis medical research, indicates that clinical trials are scheduled to start in mid-July. These are likely to continue for one or two years. Publication of results is a matter for the research community.

Prisons (Random Drug Tests)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of random drugs tests in prisons on the use of (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine and (c) heroin. [86958]

Mr. George Howarth: The table sets out the percentages of random mandatory drug test (MDT) samples that have tested positive in each of the last three financial years. It is not possible to attribute any changes entirely to the MDT programme. Supply reduction and treatment programmes also impact on the level of drug misuse in prisons.

Percentage of random mandatory drug tests positive for cannabis, heroin and cocaine

Drug type	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Cannabis	19.9	16.5	14
Opiates (including heroin)	5.4	4.2	4.4
Cocaine	0.2	0.2	0.3

Drug Use

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what forecasts he has made of the levels of use of (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine and (c) heroin in June 2002 relative to the figures for June 1997. [86953]

Mr. Boateng: None. The targets set recently under the drugs strategy by the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator include reducing by 20 per cent. by 2002 the numbers of 11–16 year-olds who use Class A drugs.

Drug Offences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the numbers of offenders who will receive prison sentences for all (i) cannabis, (ii) heroin and (iii) illegal drugs repeat offences in each of the next 10 years if (a) present trends continue and (b) the Government's current policies are successful. [86950]

Mr. Boateng: No. The United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator recently set all national and local agencies and departments the target of reducing levels of repeat offending among drug misusing offenders by 50 per cent.

by 2008. Systems are being put in place to monitor progress towards this target and others set under the drugs strategy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if (a) travelcards and passes, (b) luncheon vouchers, (c) protective clothing, (d) gift vouchers and (e) other payments in kind are disregarded for benefit purposes if received by a Jobseeker's Allowance claimant who is participating on a European Social Fund training course. [85750]

Angela Eagle: Jobseeker's Allowance regulations provide for any income in kind such as travelcards and passes; luncheon vouchers; protective clothing and gift vouchers, to be disregarded in the calculation of entitlement to benefit.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for (1) what reasons Disability Living Allowance was removed from Brenda Oakham of Barton Close, Paignton, in April; and for what reason no explanation was given; [86428]

(2) if he will arrange to expedite the Disability Living Allowance review in relation to Brenda Oakham of Barton Close, Paignton. [86429]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 14 June 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions. You asked why Disability Living Allowance (DLA) was removed from Mrs Brenda Oakham, in April, why no explanation was given, and that the DLA review in relation to Mrs Oakham's case be expedited.

It may help if I explain that entitlement to DLA does not depend on the diagnosis of a condition but on the way in which that condition affects a person on a day-to-day basis. Decisions are made by adjudication officers (AOs) who are statutory office holders. It would be improper of me to comment on, or interfere in, their decisions. I can confirm that, although an award of DLA may be given for life, an AO may reduce or revoke an entitlement decision if information is received which indicates that a person's entitlement may have changed.

Mrs Oakham's entitlement was examined as part of the work of the Benefit Integrity Project. With the help of a visiting officer Mrs Oakham completed a questionnaire on 21 October 1998 giving details of her current care and mobility needs. In addition, a report was obtained from Mrs Oakham's General Practitioner. A report was also completed by a Medical Services doctor who examined Mrs Oakham on 15 February 1999. Following a thorough consideration of all the evidence about her current needs, an AO decided on 10 March 1999 that Mrs Oakham no longer satisfied the conditions for entitlement to either component of DLA from 15 February 1999. This decision, which included an explanation of the reasons for the decision, was issued to Mrs Oakham on 28 April.

Your letter to me dated 5 May was accepted as a request for a review of that decision. On 9 June, a different AO considered all the evidence, including additional evidence submitted with your letter. The revised decision is that Mrs Oakham is entitled to the lower rate mobility component from 15 February 1999 and the highest rate care component from 31 May 1996. The decision was issued to Mrs Oakham on 11 June. This includes a full explanation of the reasons for the decision and details of her right of appeal to an independent Disability Appeal Tribunal, if she is unhappy with the outcome.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Litigants Compensation Scheme

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce a compensation scheme for litigants whose cases could not proceed because of failure in listing for which the court service is responsible; and if he will make a statement. [86652]

Mr. Vaz: None. When any mistake which is the fault of the Court Service, including an administrative error over listing, leads to loss for a party in a court action, the Court Service will consider making an ex gratia payment, in line with Treasury guidance.

Documents Service

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answers of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 311, if he will deposit in the Library copies of the Commission proposals referred to. [86706]

Mr. Vaz: At present, only provisional versions of the Commission proposals have been made available. Copies of the proposals will be placed in the Library in the usual way as soon as a formal proposal is made.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Reach-Out Fund

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the launch of the Reach-Out fund to enhance university interaction with business. [87033]

Mr. Battle: Following the Competitiveness White Paper announcement that the DTI and the DfEE would jointly create the Reach-Out fund in partnership with the HEFCE to enhance university-business interaction, the HEFCE recently led a consultation with the academic and business communities on the proposed aims and objectives of the fund. There was strong support for the creation of the fund and detailed responses have enabled us to finalise its design.

I am therefore pleased to announce that I and my noble Friend Baroness Blackstone, the Minister for Education, are today jointly launching the Higher Education Reach-Out to Business and the Community Fund at a Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals conference on regional competitiveness.

The Reach-Out fund, rising to around £20 million per year, is intended to initiate an important third stream of funding for universities, alongside research and teaching funds to help recognise the importance of working with business and develop the capability in universities to respond to business needs. This in turn will help to stimulate more informed demand from business for greater innovation and competitiveness. The fund will be open to all universities in England and Northern Ireland (in partnership with the DENI), complementing measures in Scotland and Wales.

There will initially be two calls for applications—the first of which is issued today and invites applications by 15 September for the first allocations to be made early in November 1999. The second call will be announced by January 2000 and will follow a similar timetable, allowing three months for response, with allocations announced around two months from the closing date.

Copies of the Applications Guidelines have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Regional Assistance Map

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to announce his proposed map for regional assistance. [87030]

Mr. Wills: As soon as possible.

Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1999, Official Report, column 403, what account he took of (a) the Government's information policies and (b) the implications for public confidence in the Government's policies on biotechnology of his decision not to reveal details of meetings held between Ministers in his Department and representatives of biotechnology companies. [86486]

Mr. Battle: Ministers and civil servants meet many people as part of the process of policy development and analysis. All such contacts are conducted in accordance with the "Ministerial Code", the "Civil Service Code", and "Guidance for Civil Servants: Contacts with Lobbyists". Some of these discussions take place on a confidential basis, and in order to preserve confidentiality it is not the normal practice of Governments to release details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what projects in Essex have (a) been approved in respect of the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation and (b) taken up that approval. [86436]

Mr. Battle: The Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) for renewables requires the Public Electricity Suppliers to secure specified generating capacity from specified renewables. Thirty-one (31) projects with an aggregate capacity of 319 Mega Watts have been contracted in Essex under the NFFO arrangements made so far. Six of these projects have been commissioned and we expect many more to do so in due course.

Libya (Sanctions)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on measures taken at European Communities level to remove sanctions on Libya. [86722]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, West and Hessle (Mr. Johnson) on 20 April 1999, Official Report, columns 512–13.

HEALTH

Yellow Card Scheme

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the operation of the Yellow Card Scheme. [86156]

Ms Jowell: The Yellow Card Scheme is run on a day-to-day basis by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) on behalf of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM), the expert advisory committee to the Licensing Authority, which has responsibilities under the Medicines Act 1986 for the promotion of collection and investigation of information relating to adverse reactions (ADRs).

The MCA and the CSM regularly review all aspects of Yellow Card Scheme including:

1. The number of reports received, trends in reporting, the source of reports and their quality.
2. The proportion of serious adverse drug reactions compared to non serious and by reporting group.
3. The recent extension of the Yellow Card Scheme to include hospital pharmacists as reporters and the inclusion of community pharmacists later this year.
4. The progress of special reporting initiatives such as:
   i. The HIV Adverse Drug Reaction Reporting Scheme.
   ii. Pilot schemes for extending the Yellow Card Scheme to include nurses and to investigate reporting of suspected ADRs in children.
   iii. Development of electronic Yellow Cards.
5. Feedback from focus groups investigating GPs perceptions about the Yellow Card Scheme and how it might be improved.
6. Providing feedback to reporters in regular bulletins such as "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance".

The work of activities of the four MCA/CSM Regional Monitoring Centres in Merseyside, Northern Region, Wales and the West Midlands is reviewed at an annual meeting with the MCA.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Yellow Card Scheme reports since 1989 have been received by the Medicines Control Agency regarding adverse reaction to metrizamide/myodil; and if he will make a statement. [86158]

Ms Jowell: The total number of suspected adverse drug reaction reports for reactions to metrizamide and myodil received under the United Kingdom spontaneous reporting scheme (Yellow Card Scheme) for the period from 1 January 1989 was none and 8 respectively. It should be noted that some of these reactions have been reported retrospectively and were reported to have occurred between 1972–1989.

NHS Pay Awards

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average pay award to (a) nurses, (b) doctors, (c) speech therapists, (d) medical laboratory scientific officers and (e) NHS administrative staff, in percentage terms, in the most recent round of pay negotiations; how much each of these awards cost in cash terms in (i) Gloucestershire and (ii) nationally; what percentage of the increase in the NHS budget each of these awards took up (1) in Gloucestershire and (2) nationally; and if he will make a statement. [85647]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 June 1999]: In the last complete round of pay negotiations, hospital doctors were awarded 4.2 per cent. paid from 1 December 1998, with 2 per cent. (and 0.35 per cent. in respect of the value of pensions) paid from 1 April 1998. Nurses, speech therapists, medical laboratory scientific officers and National Health Service administrative and clerical staff received 3.8 per cent. from 1 December 1998 with 2 per cent. paid from 1 April. The additional cost of pay increases for all Hospital and Community Health Service staff in 1998–99, relative to pay in 1997–98, was £440 million in England; separate information for Gloucestershire is not available. This cost was 20 per cent. of the £2,196 million increase in net NHS funding in 1998–99.

Out-of-hours Calls

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about GPs redirecting out-of-hours calls to the local hospital; and if he will make a statement. [86376]

Mr. Denham: We are not aware of any general representations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the redirection of general practitioners out-of-hours calls to local hospitals.

GPs may make arrangements with any organisation to provide out-of-hours primary care services on their behalf but they must satisfy themselves that the service provided is adequate and appropriate for their patients. They must ensure that any deputising arrangements which they have chosen continue to meet those standards.

Decisions on whether to refer a patient for secondary care outside surgery hours will be based on clinical need—the same as for referrals which are made after a consultation during surgery hours.

Devonshire Royal Hospital

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with the sale of the Devonshire Royal Hospital in Buxton by NHS Estates. [86465]

Mr. Denham: Devonshire Royal Hospital, Buxton is contained within my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's retained estate and has been actively marketed for five months. This follows an innovative marketing strategy developed by Capitec (part of NHS Estates) and agents to maximise awareness throughout the United Kingdom and internationally. 800 sets of information have been sent out with 170 specific inquiries received to date.

Spending (OECD Countries)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if comparative figures for the United Kingdom and other OECD countries are collated for health spending; and if he will make a statement. [86634]

Mr. Denham: The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development produce figures for public and total health care spending for member countries. Two indicators of comparative public and total health care expenditure are given in the table. These are health care expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product and health care expenditure in dollars per capita. All figures are for 1996.

Country	Public healthcare expenditure as a percentage of GDP	Total healthcare expenditure as a percentage of GDP	Public healthcare expenditure ($ per capita)	Total healthcare expenditure ($ per capita)
Australia	5.9	8.5	1,220	1,775
Austria	5.7	8.0	1,258	1,748
Belgium	6.8	7.8	1,498	1,708
Canada	6.7	9.6	1,440	2,065
Czech Republic	6.6	7.2	836	904
Denmark	5.2	8.0	1,175	1,802
Finland	5.8	7.4	1,082	1,380
France	7.8	9.7	1,599	1,983
Germany	8.2	10.5	1,783	2,278
Greece	5.2	6.8	688	888
Hungary	4.7	6.7	417	602
Iceland	6.8	8.2	1,582	1,893
Ireland	5.2	7.0	947	1,276
Italy	5.5	7.8	1,106	1,584
Japan	5.7	7.2	1,321	1,677
Korea	2.1	4.0	282	537
Luxembourg	6.2	6.8	1,980	2,139
Mexico	2.7	4.6	212	358
Netherlands	6.2	8.6	1,273	1,766
New Zealand	5.6	7.3	974	1,270
Norway	6.5	7.9	1,591	1,928
Poland	4.6	5.0	344	371
Portugal	4.9	8.3	641	1,071
Spain	5.8	7.4	878	1115
Sweden	7.2	8.6	1,389	1,675
Switzerland	7.1	10.2	1,748	2,499
Turkey	2.7	3.8	165	232
United Kingdom	5.8	6.9	1,113	1,317
United States	6.5	14.0	1,819	3,898

Source:
OECD Health Databank 1998

Secure Units

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the medium secure units in operation in England and the date when each was commissioned. [87039]

Mr. Hutton: The list shows the number of medium secure units in the National Health Service in England. The date when each was commissioned is not held centrally.

North West

Scott Clinic, Rainhill
Edenfield Centre, Salford
Langdale Unit, Preston
Calderstones, Whalley
Scott House, Rochdale
Auden Unit, Winwick
Mary Dendy Unit, Macclesfield

Northern and Yorkshire

Hutton Centre (Adult) St. Luke's Hospital, Middlesbrough
The Bamburgh Centre (Adult), Newcastle City Health NHS Trust
Newton Lodge, Wakefield
Humber Centre, Hull

Trent

Arnold Lodge, Leicester
Wathwood Unit, Rotherham

Eastern

Norvic Clinic, Norwich
The Larches, Gloucester Centre, Peterborough
Broadlands Clinic, Little Plumstead Hospital, Norwich
Runwell Hospital, Essex

London

Camlet Lodge, Enfield
John Howard, Hackney
Three Bridges, Ealing
Cane Hill, Coulsdon
Bracton Centre, Bexley
Denis Hill Unit, Beckenham
Shaftesbury Clinic and Longridge Clinic, Tooting

South East

Wallingford Clinic, Fairmile Hospital, Oxford
Marlborough House, Milton Keynes
House 4 Slade Hospital, Oxford
Hellingly Hospital, Ashen Hill, Eastbourne and County
Ravenswood, Hampshire
Maidstone Priority—Trevor Gibbens Unit, West Kent

West Midlands

Reaside Clinic, Birmingham
The Hatherton Centre, Stafford
Janet Shaw Clinic, Birmingham

South West

Butler Clinic, Dawlish
Fromeside Clinic, Bristol.

SCOTLAND

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [86090]

Dr. Reid: In the main Scottish Office bargaining unit 181 casual members of staff received an increase in salary. One member of staff in the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency also received an increase in salary as did 45 staff in Historic Scotland. Information about the pay of staff outwith the Scottish Office and its Agencies is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999, the pay of staff below Senior Civil Service level in the Scottish Office and its Agencies will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total amount that will be paid by students in tuition fees during 1998–99. [85888]

Dr. Reid: It is estimated that Scottish students undertaking full-time undergraduate courses in further and higher education institutions in the UK and EU students studying in Scotland will contribute £18 million to their tuition fees in 1998–99.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [86093]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since at 1 April 1999, there were no staff in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, or in the Non-Departmental Bodies for which it is responsible, who were paid less than the equivalent of £3.60 per hour. None has benefited directly from the introduction of the National Minimum Wage.

Kashmir

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the UN has taken recently to help resolve the conflict in Kashmir. [86466]

Mr. Hoon: The Secretary-General made clear to the Prime Ministers of Pakistan and India his concern over the fighting in Kashmir. Pakistan and India are also aware that the Secretary-General is willing to assist in their search for a just and lasting solution, if such involvement were acceptable to both countries.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussions held with the US Secretary of State on 21 November and 8 December 1998 concerning Senator Pinochet's arrest. [86457]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: It is not the practice of the Government to disclose the substance of their discussions with foreign authorities.

European Flag

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which organisation holds copyright over the European 12 star flag. [86732]

Ms Quin: There is no formal copyright over the European flag.

European Integration

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the nature of the Government's input into the Council of Europe document, "Europe Under a Single Roof". [86646]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: "Europe Under a Single Roof" was the title of a book commemorating the 50th Anniversary of the Council of Europe (CoE). The Council Secretariat had full responsibility for editorial control and publication. Member States Governments' involvement, including that of the UK, was confined to approving the project in principle when it was proposed to the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the requirement for furthering European integration, as set out in European Communities budget lines, as a basis to be fulfilled by applicants under those budget lines and determining the value of the award; and what is his policy on the requirement. [86723]

Ms Quin: I assume the hon. Member is referring to budget line A-302 "Grants to organisations advancing the idea of Europe", which has as its particular aim to cover expenditure on the activities and operation of organisations actively working toward European integration. The European Commission's guidelines for operating this budget line set out the objective this budget line contributes to, the eligibility criteria for organisations seeking funding from it, details of the selection criteria, financial conditions and the procedure to be followed when applying for a grant. A copy has been sent to the hon. Member directly, and a copy placed in the House Library. The Government support activities which help increase public awareness of the EU.

Albania

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the EU project to collect and destroy weapons in the Gramsh district in Albania on the combat effectiveness of the KLA; and to what bodies EU funds will be made available. [86449]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) are the lead organisation on the pilot weapons collection project in Gramsh. The EU has allocated 500,000 euros to extend the successful project to other regions.

The Department for International Development (DFID) has funded one ammunition technical officer as part of the project and have agreed in principle to fund another. They have also agreed to fund a feasibility study on destruction of the weapons.

The aim of the project is to reduce the number of weapons in circulation among the civilian population in Albania. It is not targeted at the Kosovo Liberation Army.

Belgian Manure Decree

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the funding of European Communities payments under the Belgian manure decree. [86447]

Ms Quin: I understand no Community money has been used to finance the Belgian manure decree, and that the Commission is currently investigating whether the decree contravenes EU state aids rules.

Internal Histories

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his Department's Internal Histories, indicating which are not due for accelerated release. [86363]

Mr. Hoon: No comprehensive list exists of internal histories held by the FCO on an ad hoc basis for many years. Those over 30 years old, such as a 1962 study by the Historical Adviser of British Policy in the Relinquishment of Abadan in 1951, have been routinely released to the Public Record Office (FO 370/2694). As part of an open government initiative, the FCO began in 1998 to identify internal histories scattered across the FCO archive and assess them for publication and accelerated release. The first practical result of this initiative will be the publication and release early next year of the report written in 1972 by Sir Con O'Neill on the negotiations for entry into the EEC.

Titles of other internal histories remain classified until proper consideration has been given to their suitability for accelerated release or publication.

Overseas Posts (E-mail and Internet Links)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 26, to the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), if he will place a list in the Library of (a) Internet and (b) e-mail sites for his offices overseas. [86647]

Mr. Hoon: The website addresses and public e-mail addresses of FCO Missions overseas are listed on the FCO website (www.fco.gov.uk) under "British Diplomatic Missions".

Schengen

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of

17 May 1999, Official Report, column 239, if the subject matter covered in the letter from the Dutch Government of 16 July 1997 on the Amsterdam Treaty negotiations has been referred to in the content of the Home Secretary's proposal to join elements of the Schengen system. [86717]

Ms Quin: No, it has not.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in determining the future status of the Commonwealth Institute. [86916]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Commonwealth Institute have not yet reached a final agreement on the financial arrangements which will underpin the plan for the Institute to become a company limited by guarantee, while remaining a charity. Both sides hope that the remaining differences can be resolved soon and are working together to that end.

ASSIST Programme

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the performance of the ASSIST programme in its first year; and what changes to the programme are planned. [87285]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my hon. Friend will be aware from my announcement in the House on 26 March 1998, Official Report, columns 235–36, the ASSIST programme was established on 1 April 1998 to replace the UK Military Training Assistance Scheme (UKMTAS), with the main purpose of re-focusing support to the Government's priority of promoting respect for human rights and good governance.

Notable results in the first year included: a course in China run together with Save the Children Fund, designed to fight child trafficking; direct human rights training for the Russian military; a workshop on conscientious objection in Novograd; and a women and children protection course in the Philippines.

The transition to new objectives made a good start in the financial year 1998–99 with 84 per cent. of spending being compatible with the new ASSIST criteria. For the next financial year, as pre-existing commitments reduce we shall be increasing this percentage and further refining the ASSIST criteria.

New objectives will include:

The addition of an objective to promote the re-establishment of appropriately structured and armed forces in post conflict situations (internal and external) and in newly democratised countries;

Promotion of the security of the Overseas Territories;

The inclusion of training for peacekeeping in accordance with UN guidance;

Co-operation with NGOs and other representatives of civil society on security sector assistance;

Increased emphasis on counter proliferation and combating small arms trafficking.

Enhancement of the professionalism of the armed forces has been withdrawn as an independent objective within the criteria.

We have set up an ASSIST Challenge Fund to be used for flagship projects. To enable greater continuity and planning, we have agreed that ASSIST will continue for at least 3 years. We are also liaising with the MOD and DFID to ensure that ASSIST's programmes complement those Departments' programmes in related areas.

A copy of the new ASSIST criteria will be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of an energy tax on the UK glasshouse industry. [86106]

Mr. Rooker: The impact of the climate change levy on any one industry, firm or plant will depend on the tax rates set for different sectors. Final rates for the climate change levy will not be set until the Finance Bill 2000, so it is not possible to produce definitive figures at this stage. The Government will consider the issue of competitiveness when setting the final rates for the climate change levy.

Energy Products Directive

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the policies of European Union Agriculture Ministers in respect of the proposed energy tax on the horticultural industry; and what reports he has received of plans to exempt the industry in individual member states. [86050]

Mr. Rooker: The scope of the proposed EC Energy Products Directive, and the minimum rates of tax which might apply, are still under discussion. It is known that a number of member states have fundamental objections to certain aspects of the Energy Products Directive and there are a number of technical points on which member states are seeking further clarification. These will be discussed further at future meetings of ECOFIN.

Quarantine

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with quarantine kennel owners since he announced his proposals for reform of quarantine law relating to pets. [86278]

Mr. Rooker: Dialogue with representatives of the quarantine industry is continuing and we are pleased that they have joined the Pet Travel Scheme Advisory Group established by my Department.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make rabies vaccines for pet dogs and cats freely available to pet owners preparing to travel abroad and return to Britain without quarantine; and if he will make a statement. [85747]

Mr. Rooker: Rabies vaccine will be made freely available in due course.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to submit the drafts of proposed amendments to the secondary legislation on quarantine to the European Commission for inclusion in EU law. [85745]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission have been sent a copy of the report of the Advisory Group on Quarantine. Decisions on whether to make proposals for EU law are a matter for the Commission.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the draft of proposed amendments to the secondary legislation on quarantine; and if he will make a statement. [85746]

Mr. Rooker: Drafting of a Statutory Instrument providing for the Pet Travel Scheme pilot arrangements is still under way. Copies of the draft will be placed in the Library of the House when work has further advanced.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to approve rabies antibody sera-testing for pet dogs and cats; and if he will make a statement. [85748]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine recommended that under the new arrangements it proposed for pets, laboratories should be accredited to perform serological tests according to a quality procedure specified and operated by the British authorities. Once the Government have approved a list of laboratories for serological testing under the Pet Travel Scheme (which is expected soon), a list will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to instruct his advisers on quarantine reform to ensure that all new implementation proposals comply with European Community law, with particular reference to Articles 30–36 of the Treaty of Rome. [85744]

Mr. Rooker: It is always the Government's intention that their proposals should comply with European Community law.

Bacillus Thuringiensis

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what discussions he has had with users of Bacillus thuringiensis in respect of its safety; and what plans he has for future discussions; [86216]

(2) what plans he has to issue guidance and regulations concerning the use of Bacillus thuringiensis spores by organic farmers and forestry workers; [86214]

(3) what representations he has received from producers of Bacillus thuringiensis bacteria concerning its safety. [86215]

Mr. Rooker: One strain of Bacillus thuringiensis, a naturally occurring bacterium, is specified as the active ingredient in a number of insecticide products approved for use on ornamental plants, vegetables, fruit crops and fruit trees in the UK. No products containing Bacillus thuringiensis have approval for use in forestry in this country.

Following recent reports of possible adverse effects from a particular strain of Bacillus thuringiensis (not approved for use in the UK), the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) has demanded information from the main producer of approved products on whether those effects could arise from the use of the Bacillus thuringiensis strains approved in the UK. Their representations are awaited and will be promptly evaluated.

The Government have not yet been asked for, or sought, discussions with users of Bacillus thuringiensis, but we will consider whether this would be appropriate in the light of any information the producer provides.

Information to help users use pesticides correctly is given on each product's label—the content of which must comply with any requirements set by Government. If additional restrictions need to be placed on the use of Bacillus thuringiensis, approval holders will be required to add these to their labels.

All pesticides are regulated to provide protection for people—including pesticide users—and the environment. Detailed scientific information supplied by applicant companies is evaluated by the Government and their independent advisers; only if a pesticide can be used without unacceptable risk to people and the environment will Ministers approve it. All approved pesticides are subject to routine review and may be reviewed at any time if particular concerns arise.

Pet Transport Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what timetable he plans to follow for developing a pilot scheme for the new pet transport system; and when he expects to announce (i) the list of approved laboratories in the EU and rabies-free islands, (b) the vaccines, (iii) the identification system and (iv) the certification format. [86105]

Mr. Rooker: A pilot project will be in place as soon as possible (and in any event by next April), and the main scheme will be in place by April 2001. Announcements will be made about the arrangements for microchipping, vaccination, blood testing and health certification as these details are settled.

Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many passports for imported animals have been processed each month by the British Cattle Movement Service from September 1998 to the latest month for which figures are available. [85732]

Mr. Rooker: The number of cattle passports for imported animals processed by the British Cattle Movement Service each month from September 1998 to May 1999 is as follows:

Month	Number of imported animal passports processed
September 1998	0
October 1998	444
November 1998	713
December 1998	728
January 1999	684
February 1999	505

Month	Number of imported animal passports processed
March 1999	899
April 1999	2,258
May 1999	1,608
Total for period	7,839

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many passports for imported animals are currently awaiting processing at the British Cattle Movement Service; and how many working days, on average, it takes to process each animal. [85733]

Mr. Rooker: There are currently 1,005 applications for passports for imported animals awaiting processing. Applications for imported animals which do not require the British Cattle Movement Service to seek further information or supporting documentation from the applicant take, on average, 7 to 10 working days to process. Applications that must be referred back to the applicant will take longer than this.

CAP (Beef)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the Berlin summit agreement for the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy relating to beef. [86024]

Mr. Rooker: Following the conclusion of the Berlin summit on Agenda 2000, a summary of the CAP Reform agreement was sent to interested organisations on 22 April 1999. We have received representations from those involved with the beef sector, including consumer groups. These representations are in addition to regular on-going contact with representatives from the beef sector. We will be consulting on all discretionary elements of the Agenda 2000 agreement in the Summer.

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many broiler chickens slaughtered in the United Kingdom were rejected as unfit for human consumption in (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998. [86208]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Unfit for human consumption (in whole or in part)
1997
Great Britain	709,291,374	8,705,858
Northern Ireland	60,270,049	721,859
1998
Great Britain	713,047,348	8,339,457
Northern Ireland	61,774,233	544,907

Note:

The total throughput figures provided for Great Britain for 1997 and 1998 are not directly comparable, owing to the method for collecting these data having changed slightly.

Genetically Modified Foods

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are in place for monitoring the safety of feeding genetically modified feeds to animals. [86306]

Mr. Rooker: In relation to its role in considering whether to recommend release to the environment and/or marketing consent for genetically modified organisms, the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) assess and advise on aspects of use in animal feed. The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP) addresses any impact of the animal feed use of genetically modified plants on food for the human consumer. The Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs, due to be set up very shortly, will also have an important role, liaising as necessary with other committees.

Seed Marketing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the basis of his policy on measures set out in 1999/305/EC (OJ L118/63, of 6.5.99), on repealing restrictions on the marketing of seeds; and if he will make a statement. [86718]

Mr. Rooker: Article 15 of Council Directive 70/457, on the common catalogue of varieties of agricultural plant species, provides for member states to be granted derogations to prohibit in their territory the marketing of seed and propagating material of varieties which they consider not to be distinct, stable or sufficiently uniform (DUS).

Commission Decision 1999/305/EC repealed various such derogations which had been granted to the United Kingdom. In most cases the varieties themselves, or similar ones which had raised concerns regarding DUS, no longer appeared on the common catalogue while, for the remaining varieties, no certified seed had been produced in the UK in the previous twelve years. The UK therefore saw no reason to maintain the derogations and was content with their repeal. No genetically modified varieties are involved.

Meat Hygiene

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how the word veterinaire is being interpreted by his Department, with respect to the enforcement of EU hygiene directives; [86471]

(2) what training (a) environmental health officers and (b) meat inspectors would require to enable them to supervise meat hygiene inspections. [86472]

Mr. Rooker: EU meat hygiene rules lay down specific requirements about the level and frequency of supervision of licensed meat plants. Such functions are assigned to "official veterinarians", defined in those rules as

"the veterinarian designated by the central competent authority of the Member State".

Although the EU meat hygiene rules do not define "veterinarian", the EU Directives on the mutual recognition of veterinary qualifications and on veterinary training (78/1026/EEC and 78/1027/EEC) clearly define veterinarians in terms of named qualifications for each member state (which other member states must recognise) and in terms of the subjects that their veterinary courses must have covered and the length of training.

Given the aim of the EU meat hygiene rules (namely, to prescribe minimum standards of health inspections in licensed meat plants) and the functions allocated to official veterinarians under those rules, my Department takes the view that references in those rules to "official veterinarian" must be construed consistently with the EU rules on veterinary qualifications. In short, an "official veterinarian" for meat hygiene purposes must be a veterinarian whose veterinary qualifications meet the terms of the relevant Directives. As such, environmental health officers and meat inspectors would be eligible to supervise meat hygiene inspections only if they were also fully qualified veterinarians.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he takes to ensure that animal feedstuffs are not contaminated with additives injurious to human health. [86467]

Mr. Rooker: Only additives on an EU approved list are permitted for use in animal feedingstuffs. Where appropriate, maximum levels and other conditions apply. Additives are included in the list on the basis of an extensive assessment by experts for safety, quality and efficacy.

UK Regulations, implementing another EU measure, require the approval or registration of premises manufacturing, selling or using feed additives. This ensures that only premises that comply with detailed quality and safety standards can produce or use additives in feedingstuffs.

Independent Arbiter (English Farmers)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will appoint an independent arbiter for English farmers in order to rule on disputes between English farmers and his Department on similar lines to the one to be set up for Scottish farmers. [86416]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 June 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Minister is considering the possible implications for English farmers of the undertaking by the Scottish Executive to introduce an independent appeal mechanism for Scottish farmers suffering penalties in relation to their claims for subsidies under the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP). In cases where CAP subsidies are reduced or refused, farmers already have the options of seeking Judicial Review or of asking their Member of Parliament to raise the matter with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Catering Levy

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has for public consultation relating to proposals to introduce a levy upon those providing outside catering facilities at (a) amateur and (b) professional sporting venues; [86972]

(2) what assessment his Department has carried out of the financial consequences for the sports concerned of the imposition of a levy on those providing outside catering at (a) amateur and (b) professional sporting venues. [86973]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 June 1999]: As announced on 11 June, the Government have decided not to proceed with their proposals for a levy on food premises.

Food Standards Select Committee

Mr. Barron: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to respond to the report of the Food Standards Select Committee [87298]

Mr. Rooker: I have today published the Government's response to the Select Committee (Cm 4377).

I have also placed in the Library of the House a summary of other responses to the consultation on the draft Food Standards Bill.

Genetically Modified Material

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 190, when he expects a de minimis threshold for the presence of genetically modified material in food to be established; and if he will make a statement. [86772]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission have undertaken to provide a proposal for such a threshold as soon as possible. The Government and officials are continuing to press for this to be published at the earliest possible opportunity.

Genetically Modified Soya

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that imported foods which contain genetically modified soya have been subject to safety tests equivalent to those which would apply to such foods originating in the United Kingdom. [86748]

Mr. Rooker: Monsanto's genetically modified (GM) soya, modified to be tolerant to the herbicide glyphosate, was assessed and cleared for safety by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes in February 1994. It is the responsibility of local authorities to ensure that foods containing only approved GM soya are imported and sold in the United Kingdom.

National List Applications

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of test sites needed for national list applications for maize, oilseed rape, fodder and sugar beet in each year to 2003. [86485]

Mr. Rooker: The projected numbers of test sites to be sown per year for each variety from autumn 1999 to spring 2003 are listed in the table. Different varieties of a species entered in the same year are normally tested at the same sites, although the entry of genetically modified varieties may result in separate trial sites being sown. Test site requirements are subject to review and while no major changes to the numbers given are anticipated it is not possible to forecast the outcome of such reviews.

Crop	Number of sites per variety/year
Maize	5
Winter oilseed rape	11
Spring oilseed rape	4
Fodder beet	1
Sugar beet	6

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the United States Government between 1 January and 1 June 1998; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion, and the names of the US counterparts at each meeting. [86290]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There were no meetings between Cabinet Office Ministers and their US counterparts between 1 January and 1 June 1998.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 13 May 1999, Official Report, columns 201–02, on Ministerial meetings, if he will list the Departments and names of the senior officials whom the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster met in Washington between 21 and 24 June 1998. [86296]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The programme for the visit to Washington on 21 to 24 June by my right hon. Friend then Chancellor of the Duchy included meetings with:

Morley Winograd, senior policy adviser to Vice-President Gore; Bob Stone and John Kamensky, National Partnership for Reinventing Government. Comparison of public sector reform initiatives in the USA and UK;

Bob Wenzel, Internal Revenue Service. IRS experience of electronic delivery of services;

Stan Solloway, Diane Disney, Cindy Bogner, Bill Mounts from the Department of Defense. Defence Department experience of the "Reinventing Government" initiative;

Nye Stevens, Director, Federal Workforce Management Issues, General Accounting Office. Implementation of the Government Performance and Results Act;

Congressman Steve Horn and Congresswoman Caroline Maloney. Congressional oversight of US Federal Government reform and Federal Government handling of the Year 2000 problem.

In addition, my right hon. Friend chaired a seminar "Citizens and the State: Transatlantic Approaches to Governance", organised by the European Institute, Washington. This brought together Ministers and senior policy-makers from the European Union, the USA and the OECD.

Duchy of Lancaster

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if all hon. Members representing constituencies within the County Palatine are to receive invitations to the celebrations marking the 600th anniversary of the Duchy. [86713]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: My hon. Friends the Members for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) and for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Miss Smith) have been invited to attend functions in their constituencies associated with The Queen's visit to Lancashire next month in connection with the 600th anniversary of the Duchy's link with the Crown.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list those thoroughfares along which he is entitled to pass in a vehicle in his capacity as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to which the general public is denied equivalent access. [86714]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I am not aware of any such thoroughfares.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will estimate the average amount of time which he devotes each week to Duchy matters. [87004]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: On average, approximately 5 per cent. of my time.

Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is the present role of the Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology. [86887]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology (IGGMOT) is an official level group which provides a forum for co-ordination of policy on genetic modification technology between Departments.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is his estimate of the current number and percentage of under 25-year-olds who have access to (a) heroin and (b) cocaine; and if he will set targets for these figures for each of the next 10 years. [86954]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There are no figures at this time which relate to drug use specifically among the under-25 age group. Figures from a recently published national Health Education Authority survey undertaken in 1996 show that approximately 13 per cent. of 11 to 35-year-olds claim to have been offered heroin, with approximately 1 per cent. claiming to have used it; and approximately 14 per cent. of 11 to 35-year-olds claim to have been offered cocaine, with approximately 3 per cent. claiming to have used it.

I have no plans to set annual targets for reduced access to heroin and cocaine among young people. However, in the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's first annual report and plan, I published a target to reduce substantially the proportion of people under 25 reporting use of illegal drugs in the last month and previous year, and to reduce the proportion of young people using the drugs which cause the greatest harm—heroin and cocaine—by 50 per cent. by 2008 and by 25 per cent. by 2005.

I will, however, shortly be commissioning new research to establish more robust baseline information for this year, from which I will measure our future success.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will visit (a) the Netherlands to assess that country's claims of a reduction in heroin use and (b) Switzerland to assess that country's reported reduction in drug-related crime. [86946]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have no plans at the moment to visit either the Netherlands or Switzerland, but will continue to monitor their anti-drug strategies.

Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 290, on biotechnology, what account he took of (a) the Government's freedom of information policy and (b) the implications for public confidence in the Government's policies on biotechnology, in his decision not to provide further details in respect of questions asked about the Biodiversity Presentation Group. [86889]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Biotechnology Presentation Group is an internal working group. In line with the practice of successive Administrations, it is not the normal practice of Governments to release details of internal discussion, advice to Ministers, specific meetings or their content. This principle is reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Tuition Fees

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of increasing the income level below which students are exempt from tuition fees by (a) £2,000, (b) £4,000, (c) £6,000, (d) £8,000 and (e) £10,000 for students resident in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) England. [84061]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 13 May 1999]: The estimated costs for students ordinarily resident in England and Wales and EU students in English and Welsh institutions, and for Scottish resident students and EU students in Scottish institutions, are given in the table. Estimates are not available for Northern Ireland as suitable information on levels of contributions is not readily available.

Costs of increasing income level below which students are exempt from paying tuition fees—2000–01

£ million

Increase in income level	England and Wales	Scotland
£2,000	5	1
£4,000	20	2
£6,000	35	5
£8,000	60	11
£10,000	85	17

The costs have been estimated for the year 2001–02 by which time, under the current arrangements, virtually all students will have a liability to contribute to their tuition according to means. It has been assumed that existing contributions for all other income levels above the increased income level below which students are exempt remain the same. If the contribution scales were to be recalculated on the basis of increased income thresholds then there would be further knock-on costs, depending on how the policy is implemented, on the proportion of tuition fees paid by those not fully exempt and on other assessed elements of student support, and so the financial impact would be significantly higher.

Refrigerants

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to change departmental refrigeration and air-conditioning systems to operate on not-in-kind refrigerants. [86165]

Mr. Mudie: It is already the policy of both the DfEE and the Employment Service not to purchase refrigeration and air-conditioning systems containing ozone depleting substances such as CFCs and HCFCs.

Failing Colleges

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated from the schools sector on the policy of naming and shaming failing colleges. [86171]

Mr. Mudie: The Government have no specific policy of "naming and shaming" further education colleges with poor provision. We may, however, comment on adverse inspection reports or other evidence which is already in the public domain.

The Government are strongly committed to raising standards in further education. We will continue to give praise to successful colleges who are performing well and will emphasise how much we value excellence through the announcement of further Beacon Colleges. However, we will not tolerate unacceptable standards, or hesitate to intervene where colleges are failing their students and communities.

Examination Marking

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria will be used to determine which schools and colleges will participate in the pilot project on the return of GCSE and A-Level exam scripts. [86404]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 June 1999]: A total of about 200 centres in England will pilot the four GCSE models. Centres were selected at random and their agreement sought prior to the introduction of the pilots. At A-Level, two syllabuses from each of the five Awarding Bodies were chosen. To keep the pilots manageable, syllabuses with entries of around one thousand candidates, and involving no more than one hundred centres, were selected.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the timetable for the return of GCSE and A-Level exam scripts to students under the pilot project. [86403]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 June 1999]: The timetable will depend upon the particular model being piloted. At A-Level, photocopied scripts will arrive on the day the results are issued—Thursday 19 August.

At GCSE, four different models will be piloted. Under three of these models, scripts will be available from Tuesday 1 September. Under the fourth, where scripts will be available only on request, scripts are not expected to arrive before Friday 4 September. The pilots will provide a framework within which centres should operate the pilots, rather than imposing rules, so timings may vary between centres.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated cost of the pilot project to return GCSE and A-Level exam scripts to students; and what estimate his Department has made of the total cost of a general return of such exam scripts. [86405]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 June 1999]: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) will be conducting the pilot exercises, from a budget of £250,000. One of the objectives of these pilots is to assess the costs associated with each model before any decisions on wider implementation are made.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if guidance to those marking exam scripts will be changed in those areas participating in the pilot project for the return of GCSE and A-Level scripts. [86402]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 June 1999]: All GCSE and GCE Awarding Body examiners are bound by a Code of Practice, developed in consultation with the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. The Code provides a basis for high standards in all aspects of the examining process. There are no plans to change this guidance ahead of this summer's examinations.

Investors in People

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will announce the outcome of the Quinquennial Review of Investors in People UK. [87297]

Mr. Mudie: Against the background of the established practice of carrying out quinquennial policy and financial reviews of non-Departmental Public Bodies, the Department conducted a thorough review of Investors in People UK during 1998.

The first stage was a policy review of whether the functions were still needed, and also what framework was most efficient to deliver them. It was concluded that Investors in People UK should continue to carry out the functions with an NDPB framework.

Stage 2 consisted of a financial management survey of the organisation. The financial management survey, carried out for the Department by external consultants Pannell Kerr Forster, concluded that the Company achieves value for money in Grant-in-Aid terms and has achieved excellent performance against its objectives.

The combined quinquennial review is published today and a copy is being placed in the Library. Further copies can be obtained on request from: Jane Binney, Department for Education and Employment, Workplace Learning Division, Area E8b, Moorfoot, Sheffield S1 4PQ, telephone number 0114 259 4232.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of 11-year-old (a) male, (b) female and (c) male and female pupils in each local education authority attained (i) Level 3 or better, (ii) Level 4 or better and (iii) Level 5 or better, in the 1998 Key Stage 2 tests for mathematics; and what was the average level per pupil; [87016]

(2) what percentage of 11-year-old pupils in each local education authority in maintained schools were entered for the 1998 Key Stage 2 SAT tests in mathematics but were absent; [87017]

(3) what percentage of 11-year-old (a) male, (b) female and (c) male and female pupils, in each local education authority attained (i) Level 3 or better, (ii) Level 4 or better and (iii) Level 5 or better, in the 1998 Key Stage 2 tests in the (1) writing, (2) reading and (3) combined test for English; and what was the average level per pupil; [87019]

(4) what percentage of 11-year-old pupils in each local education authority in maintained schools were entered for the 1998 Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) writing, (b) reading and (c) both for English but were absent. [87020]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Aggregate School Budgets

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by local authority the planned expenditure per pupil at 1998–99 prices from aggregate school budgets in (a) maintained primary schools and (b) maintained secondary schools in 1999–2000. [87015]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information for the financial year 1999–2000 is still being collected and checked by the Department. We will publish authoritative data showing the plans of the authorities, including the amounts to be held back centrally, later this month. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Employment Service Programme Centres (Wheelchair Access)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many Employment Service programme centres there are in Wales; and how many are accessible to disabled persons using wheelchairs; [87041]

(2) how many Employment Service programme centres there are in England; and how many are accessible to disabled persons using wheelchairs. [87042]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There are 178 Programme Centres in England and 30 in Wales, all of which are accessible to disabled people using wheelchairs or have alternative arrangements to ensure they have adequate access to all of the provision.

Sport (Coaching)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he has taken to target coaching support to those schools where sporting commitment is below average. [86686]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the Department's Specialist Schools programme, Sports Colleges provide specialist support to local schools to help raise the standards of teaching and learning in physical education and sport. This can be in the form of in-service training for teachers or the sharing of specialist sports equipment, facilities and other resources. Sports Colleges also act as local centres of sports development and are able to disseminate good practice in their geographical area.

In addition, the Coaching for Teachers Programme, funded by Sport England and co-ordinated by the National Coaching Foundation, provides opportunities for teachers involved in the delivery of extra-curricular school sport to improve their teaching and coaching, update their knowledge by attending Governing Body courses, and obtain qualifications. Over 11,000 teachers have received training through this scheme.

The Government also fund Sport England, whose Active Schools programme ensures quality sports provision in schools through a variety of initiatives, which include coaching materials and training, such as TOP Play, BT TOP Sport, Sportsmark and Sportsmark Gold awards and the Sporting Ambassadors scheme.

Anti-drugs Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the evidence held by the Department of the efficacy of anti-drugs education programmes in reducing drug use. [86957]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The DfEE's drug education good practice guidance, published in November last year, brings together the findings of Ofsted, and the experience of health professionals and others, and outlines already published research on the effectiveness of drug education in schools. In addition, the Department has published two booklets summarising a number of innovative drug education projects supported through the Department's Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme in 1995–96 and 1996–97 respectively. They offer information on the findings of a range of different drug education projects set up by local education authorities during those two years.

Sporting Provision

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he has taken to ensure that sporting provision is set out in schools' annual reports and prospectuses. [86687]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Sport is an essential part of young people's education, playing a key role in their physical and social development. Department for Education and Employment guidance makes it clear that prospectuses and annual reports should include references to sporting aims and provisions, so as to ensure that parents receive a complete picture of the school.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 16 June 1999

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Macedonia

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he initiated steps to remove controls on the export to Macedonia of all-wheel drive utility vehicles, heavy duty recovery vehicles and drop-sided trucks; and what assessment he has made of the effect this ban has had on relief efforts. [86734]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The controls set out in Group 3, Part 1, Schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 prohibit the export of certain vehicles to the Republic of Macedonia without an export licence. These controls do not constitute a ban. We do not believe that they have had a significant effect on the current relief effort in Macedonia.

We began the process of lifting these controls in April 1999 in order to assist relief organisations working in Macedonia. Since then we have fast tracked relevant licence applications to allow the speedy export of vehicles for relief work in Macedonia.

Register of European Commissioners' Interests

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Register of European Commissioners' Interests to be deposited in the Library. [86736]

Ms Quin: The register of European Commissioners' Interests is a public document which is regularly updated. It can be found on the Internet at the following address: http://europa.eu.int/comm/commissioners/interests-en.htm.

Nuclear Plant (Turkey)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning Turkey's plan to build a nuclear plant at Akkuyu Bay; what assessment his Department has made of the potential risks of this project; and if he will make a statement. [86849]

Ms Quin: We have received representations from the Greek Government on the matter of the proposed nuclear power plant in Akkuyu. They have drawn attention to their publication, "Risks Associated with the Construction of a Nuclear Power Plant in Akkuyu, Turkey".

We are aware that Turkey has been considering this project for some time as part of a wider strategy to increase energy production. Turkey is a member of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and has a full scope safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Association (IAEA). Any nuclear power plant in Turkey would be subject to full scope safeguards by the IAEA. Turkey has also recently applied to join the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) and the Zangger Committee, the international nuclear export control regimes.

We understand that the Turkish authorities are still evaluating bids for this project. We will continue to monitor its development.

EU-Japan Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the latest agenda for the EU-Japan summit of 17 June, prior to the meeting. [86830]

Ms Quin: The provisional agenda for the EU-Japan Summit on 20 June 1999 is:

1. Opening remarks (including new developments in EU-Japan relations)
2. International situation
   - Kosovo
   - Russia
   - Korean Peninsula
   - Indonesia
   - East Timor
   - Macau
3. Economic, trade and co-operation issues
   - Macro-economic development in Japan, Asia and Europe
   - Bilateral economic co-operation
     - business dialogue
     - deregulation
     - Mutual Recognition Agreement
   - WTO related issues (new round, accession)
   - Peaceful use of nuclear energy

Antarctic Environmental Treaty Secretariat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Antarctic Environmental Treaty Secretariat to be established; how many signatory states have ratified the Treaty; and if he will make a statement. [86893]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Issues relating to a possible Antarctic Treaty Secretariat were discussed at the recent Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting, held in Peru in May. Both Argentina and Australia reiterated their offer to host the Secretariat, but no consensus was reached on either bid. The UK looks forward to a resolution of the matter and will continue constructive dialogue on it with other Treaty Parties.

Forty-four countries have now ratified or acceded to the Antarctic Treaty, 27 of which have Consultative (voting) status; 37 countries have signed the Environmental Protocol to the Treaty; and 28 countries have either ratified or acceded to the Protocol.

WALES

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact upon small businesses of the flat rate levy to fund the new Food Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement. [86345]

Mr. Hain: The Government have responded to the views put forward in the public consultation and have decided not to place a levy on retailers and caterers.

Voluntary Services (Social Exclusion)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the role of the voluntary services in tackling social exclusion; and if he will make a statement. [86347]

Mr. Hain: The voluntary sector has a key role to play in helping to tackle social exclusion and will be a key partner of the Assembly in taking forward its social inclusion work. The voluntary sector successfully leads numerous initiatives and projects to counter social exclusion at local level and across Wales. The Wales Council for Voluntary action makes an important contribution to policy making through its membership of our Advisory Panel on social exclusion.

In March, my right hon. Friend announced additional funding of £1.5 million from the Social Inclusion Fund to support volunteering initiatives to encourage people to participate in their communities through joining in the work of local voluntary sector initiatives.

Following the transfer of functions this will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Climate Levy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the world climate levy upon industry; and if he will make a statement. [86344]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The climate change levy will make a significant contribution to meeting the UK's legally-binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto Protocol and our domestic commitments for further reductions. It will entail no increase in the overall burden of tax on business, since it will be accompanied by a 0.5 percentage point cut in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions. This will reduce the cost of hiring workers and encourage employment opportunities. Business will also benefit from an additional £50 million a year for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and additional support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

The impact of the climate change levy on any one industry, firm or plant will depend on the tax rates set for different sectors. The Government are well aware of the need to protect the competitiveness of British industry and intend to set significantly lower rates of tax for those energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving their energy efficiency. A number of energy intensive sectors are involved in these negotiations.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what Article of the Treaty consents for growing genetically modified crops are issued; when the relevant substantive resolution was agreed in each House of Parliament relating thereto; and what amendments have subsequently been made. [86236]

Mr. Meacher: All consents for the deliberate release into the environment of Genetically Modified Organisms are issued on the basis of the procedures laid down in Council Directive 90/220/EEC of 23 April 1990. The legal basis of the Directive is Article 95 (ex Article 100a) of the Treaty establishing the European Community. The Regulations implementing the Directive, detailed in the answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 41, were adopted by negative resolution. The Directive was adapted to take account of technical progress by Commission Directive 94/15/EC of 15 April 1994.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the antibiotic marker genes, and the antibiotics to which they convey resistance, that have been used in the genetic modification of plant crops. [86321]

Mr. Meacher: The antibiotic marker genes and the antibiotics to which they convey resistance, that have been used in the genetic modification of plant crops released for research purposes in the European Community are listed in the table:

Gene	Antibiotic
nptII	Kanamycin
bla	Ampicillin
hpt	Hygromycin
aad	Streptomycin
tet	Tetracycline
aad	Spectinomycin
nptIII	Amikacin
gen	Gentamycin

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what baseline studies of biodiversity in genetically modified crop test site areas are required to be carried out prior to genetically modified crops being planted. [86886]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 15 June 1999]: All applications for consent to release a genetically modified plant must include a pre-planting environmental audit including details of the release site ecosystem including climate and fauna, details of any sexually compatible wild relatives or cultivated plant species present and the proximity of officially recognised biotopes or protected areas. Specific baseline studies of biodiversity at test sites are not required.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what permissions have been granted to grow genetically modified food at Blunsdon, near Swindon; and if he will make a statement. [86413]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 11 June 1999]: No consent to release a genetically modified crop has been issued in respect of Blunsdon, Wiltshire. The only such consent in Wiltshire relates to the release of GM spring oilseed rape at Lushill Farm, Hannington, Wiltshire, consent number 98/R19/18.

West Coast Main Line

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the upgrade of the west coast main line is on schedule. [86854]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for Railtrack. Railtrack has entered into both contractual commitments and licence undertakings in respect of the upgrade of the west coast main line. Ministers expect Railtrack to deliver on its obligations.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect the failure of Railtrack to complete the capacity review on time has had on the schedule for the upgrade of west coast main line. [86855]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that Railtrack has assured the Rail Regulator and its customers and funders that delay in completing those strategic capacity reviews which it undertook to provide as part of its licence obligation will not delay the upgrade of the west coast main line, or compromise the ability to proceed with any of the enhancements explored in those studies.

Lead Shot

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to lay before Parliament a Statutory Instrument on the use of lead shot in wetlands. [86417]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 14 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 June 1999, Official Report, columns 374–75.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the length of dedicated cycle routes in (a) Greater London and (b) each London borough, (i) currently and (ii) in 1997. [86894]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 3 March 1999, Official Report, columns 737–38, about the length of the London Cycle network at April 1998. While it is anticipated that the London Cycle Network grew to some 800 miles in 1998–99, lengths on a borough basis are being collected at the present time. Therefore, I will write to my hon. Friend setting out the figures for April 1999, with comparable April 1997 data, as soon as they are available.

Bletchley and Bicester Railway Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to receive plans for the re-opening of the Bletchley and Bicester railway line; what level of expenditure on this line is planned by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [86895]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The East-West Rail Group, a consortium of local authorities, have proposed re-opening this section of line as part of their proposal for opening up an East-West rail route which would extend from Oxford to Ipswich via Bicester, Bletchley, Bedford and Cambridge. I understand they have arranged for Railtrack to carry out a feasibility study which is expected to be completed in a few weeks. Subject to the outcome of the feasibility study it will be for the consortium to seek sources of funding for any plans it decides to pursue. The Department will consider any proposals that may be put to it.

Barking to Gospel Oak Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the electrification of the Barking to Gospel Oak railway line; what proposals he has received for the opening of a station at Tufnell Park; and if he will make a statement. [86896]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no current plans to electrify the Barking to Gospel Oak railway line and no proposals have been received for a station at Tufnell Park.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has received from the train operating company for new services to different destinations on the Barking to Gospel Oak line in the last 12 months. [86899]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None.

Planning Applications

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about his policy on calling in planning applications under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. [87392]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend's general approach, like that of previous Secretaries of State, is not to interfere with the jurisdiction of local planning authorities unless it is necessary to do so. Parliament has entrusted them with responsibility for day-to-day planning control in their areas. It is right that, in general, they should be free to carry out their duties responsibly, with the minimum of interference.

There will be occasions, however, when my right hon. Friend may consider it necessary to call in the planning application to determine himself, instead of leaving the decision to the local planning authority.

His policy is to be very selective about calling in planning applications. He will, in general, only take this step if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. Such cases may include, for example, those which, in his opinion:

- may conflict with national policies on important matters;
- could have significant effects beyond their immediate locality;
- give rise to substantial regional or national controversy;
- raise significant architectural and urban design issues; or
- may involve the interests of national security or of foreign Governments

However, each case will continue to be considered on its individual merits.

Passenger Movements (Stansted)

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision on the application to raise the passenger air transport movement limit at Stansted. [87394]

Ms Glenda Jackson: After careful consideration of BAA plc's application for an increase, and the responses to the consultation that was held on it, I have today laid before the House an Order allowing 120,000 passenger air transport movements at Stansted between August 1999 and February 2000, and increasing, from 1 March 2000, the annual limit from 120,000 to 185,000 per annum. The new limit should allow Stansted to expand to around 15 million passengers a year (mppa)—a limit for which it has had outline planning permission since 1985 and for which detailed planning approval was given in March.

The purpose of the passenger air transport movement limit is to ensure that the development of Stansted does not outpace the ability of local infrastructure to cope with it. The Government are satisfied that the growth in road and rail traffic that will be generated will be satisfactorily accommodated, and that the overall effects of a 15 mppa airport are properly reflected in local development plans.

Commission for Integrated Transport

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the remaining appointments to the Commission for Integrated Transport; and if he will make a statement. [87395]

Mrs. Liddell: I have today appointed Bill Bradshaw, Lawrence Christensen, Nicky Gavron, Stephen Joseph, David Leeder, Lilli Matson, Bill Morris, John O'Brien, Veronica Palmer, Mike Parker and Nick Reilly as members of the Commission for Integrated Transport.

They will be joined by four ex officio members: the Chair of the SRA (Sir Alastair Morton), the Chairman of the CAA (Sir Malcolm Field), the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency (Lawrie Haynes) and the Chair of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (Jane Wilmot).

I am pleased that the new Commission is now able to start work. We have brought together a strong and balanced team with the experience to provide practical and constructive advice on making integrated transport a reality. The ex officio members will bring the expertise of their own organisations, but we have otherwise appointed members not as representatives of particular interests but as individuals with a breadth of knowledge of transport and its impacts.

The 17-strong Commission will be a fresh and creative force in helping Government deliver the clean, safe, fair and efficient transport system the country needs. The Commission must build on the consensus established around last year's Transport White Paper, and I and my ministerial colleagues very much look forward to working with it.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mrs. Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what period after 15 March, the Royal Ulster Constabulary telephone hotline number which any potential witnesses to the murder of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson were urged to call was unstaffed; and for what reasons. [85453]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 May 1999]: A contact line was established in March. A separate hotline was set up on 9 April following the arrival of Mr. Port. I understand that, where possible, it is manned during office hours, which are normally 0900 to 1700. The line is answered by non-RUC officers. Outside these hours the hotline works on an answering machine.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the involvement of officers of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in respect of the inquiry into the murder of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson. [85451]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 May 1999]: The RUC have advised that, on the day Mrs. Nelson was murdered, the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary contacted the Director of the FBI, who agreed to offer the Bureau's investigative expertise. As a result, a number of experienced agents arrived from the United States of America. They brought expertise in investigating acts of terrorism, including major case management. As the FBI's Legal Attaché, John Guido said on 12 April:

> "The FBI arrived fully prepared to provide as much assistance as they could by offering suggestions on investigative strategy, evidence collection and data management. Frankly, we found the RUC to be well prepared to handle the investigation."

They were in Northern Ireland from 20 March to 16 April and noted that a very dedicated and professional inquiry team had been assembled to bring the killers of Mrs. Nelson to justice. Mr. Guido also said that the FBI had confidence that all appropriate lines of inquiry were being pursued and that the greatest chance of success lay with the RUC continuing the investigation. The FBI continue in an advisory role and there is regular contact with Mr. Port's team.

Planning Applications

Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if the European Union Directive on landfill of waste will be taken into account when current planning applications are being decided; [85922]

(2) what arrangements are in place to take account of the views of objectors and their public representatives when deciding on contentious planning applications; [85919]

(3) from what date the European Union Directive on landfill of waste will be applied to planning applications in Northern Ireland. [85921]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The emerging draft European Directive on landfill of waste is, and will continue to be, a material consideration in the assessment of planning applications. The weight to be given to the draft Directive will be influenced by its status at any given time. Greater weight will, of course, be attached when the Directive has been adopted. As regards taking account of the views of objectors and their public representatives when deciding contentious planning applications, all representations received, whether in favour of or against a proposal, are considered fully before a decision on an application is reached. If necessary, a public inquiry can be called.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of her Special Advisers travelled to Washington and New York on 15 March; and if she will list the meetings which her Special Advisers held with members and officials of the United States Government during this visit, the dates and locations of each meeting, and the names of the US ministers and officials at each meeting. [86288]

Marjorie Mowlam: I met Mr. S. Berger and Mr. J. Steinberg, the National and Deputy National Security Advisers at the National Security Council in Washington in March 1999. I also participated in other meetings including with Senators, Congressmen and the press. Mr. Warner accompanied me to these meetings.

The New York leg of the visit was cancelled because of developments in Northern Ireland.

Violent Incidents

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of incidents of assault, attacks on houses and other property and intimidation reported to the RUC in the Fountain Estate/Wapping Lane area of Londonderry for the period from 1 April to the latest available date. [87037]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 15 June 1999]: Records indicate that there were eight incidents of assault in the Fountain Estate/Wapping Lane area of Londonderry from 1 April to 10 June 1999. No reports have been received by police of any incidence of attack on houses or other property nor of intimidation in that area during the period.

Social Need Initiative

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has reached a view on the priorities for the promoting social inclusion element of the new targeting social need initiative; and how these will be taken forward. [87560]

Mr. McFall: Following extensive consultation with a range of voluntary sector and other interests the Secretary of State has decided that the first four strands of work to be tackled under the Promoting Social Inclusion will be:

action to alleviate the needs of Travellers

a strategic approach to the needs of minority ethnic groups

the problems of teenage parenthood strategies for making services more accessible to minority groups and others at risk of social exclusion—focusing firstly on how information can be presented and distributed in ways appropriate to their needs.

Working Groups will now be set up to examine each of these areas and to recommend effective ways of tackling social exclusion.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland in 1999–2000. [87562]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000 the following key performance targets have been set for the Agency:

Output:

1. To dispatch 96 per cent. of registration books for new vehicles in 16 working days from receipt.

2. To dispatch 96 per cent. of refunds of vehicle excise duty in 10 working days from receipt.

3. To dispatch 96 per cent. of vehicle excise licences in five working days from receipt of postal application.

4. To dispatch 96 per cent. of duplicate vehicle registration books in six working days from receipt of applications.

5. To dispatch 92 per cent. of all driving licences in nine working days from receipt of applications.

6. To dispatch substantive replies to 97 per cent. of written inquiries for information from the drivers and vehicles registers in three working days from receipt.

Efficiency:

7. To limit maximum waiting time at Local Vehicle Licensing Offices so that 96 per cent. of customers are attended to within 22 minutes during peak periods (the first eight and the last two working days of each month) and within 10 minutes at other periods.

8. To meet an overall efficiency gain of 2.5 per cent.

Financial:

9. To reduce the unit cost per vehicle excise enforcement case by 0.5 per cent. in real terms compared to 1998–99.

Quality:

10. To limit the error rate (errors on any item sent out by the Agency) to a maximum of 0.5 per cent. of total Agency output.

Public Record Office

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland in 1999–2000. [87563]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000, the following performance targets have been set out for PRONI:

Financial Performance

To meet the challenge of managing the Agency's workload by:

a) implementing the results of staff grading review so as to achieve a 3 per cent. efficiency gain while coping with a 4 per cent. increase in on-site public use of PRONI.

b) Ensuring that expenditure is within the financial limits approved by the Department.

Output

To appraise at least 4,500 linear metres of records, including the reappraisal of records so as to eliminate low-grade material.

To list and index at least 550 linear metres of records, including ensuring that 100 per cent. of all new "open" material is processed within one year of receipt.

Quality of Service

To maintain the extra 4 hours opening per week beyond the standard 37½ hours.

With the help of the computerised document request system, to improve the speed of on-site production to the public by reducing waiting time from 34 minutes to 30 minutes or less in 90 per cent. of cases.

To process customer queries within 10 working days of receipt in 90 per cent. of cases and within 14 working days in 96 per cent. of cases, thus maintaining PRONI's Citizen Charter commitment.

To ensure by 31 December 1999 the smooth completing of the annual release for 2000—c.2,000 records—as well as the on-going release of identified blocks of records at earlier than 30 years.

As part of a 10-year storage improvement programme, to survey the conditions in which 10 per cent. of 33,360 metres of records are stored, and, in a related exercise, to take remedial action on upgrading, c.1,800 linear-metres of records as presently stored on mobile shelving or in plan cases in Balmoral Avenue so as to bring them up to defined standards of archival protection.

To complete remedial conservation treatment (assessed overall as of medium technical difficulty) of at least 3,000 archive units, mainly from Grade 1 archives.

To provide standards of service which ensure that the number of unsatisfied customers does not exceed 2 per cent. as reflected in signed customers satisfaction questionnaires.

Efficiency

To reduce by 3 per cent. (from £198 to 192), PRONI's composite Unit Cost in the areas of selecting and accessioning, records listing, records storage, document production, reader services, correspondence, outreach, public photocopying conservation and security microfilming.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Industrial Research and Technology Unit for the financial year 1999–2000. [87564]

Mr. Ingram: The Industrial Research and Technology Unit is an Agency within the Department of Economic Development. Its prime strategic target is to raise the level of industrial R & D in Northern Ireland and in addressing this target the Agency also aims to operate efficiently and effectively and provide a quality service. Against this background the following key targets have been set for the Agency:

To achieve new user participation in the COMPLETE Programme of 20 per cent.

To increase the average industry contribution to projects funded under the COMPLETE Programme by 1 per cent.

To achieve an increase in R & D projects under the START Programme of 20 per cent.

To achieve full cost recovery for Scientific Services.

To maintain UKAS Accreditation for Scientific Services.

Fair Employment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answers of 16 April 1999, Official Report, columns 364–65, if she will (a) estimate the cost of commissioning a study on the application of information technology across the field of equal opportunities monitoring in order to (i) assist employers in complying with monitoring requirements, (ii) assist analysis of monitoring returns, (iii) assist analysis of the operation of complaints mechanisms and (iv) assess the effectiveness of measures taken to address equality of opportunity, (b) list publicly funded research studies of relevance and (c) estimate the cost of a literature search in this field. [87171]

Mr. Ingram: A major benefit of the new single Equality Commission will be to enable more effective monitoring across the whole equal opportunities field. We are committed to greatly increased use of information technology in all aspect of government and I would expect that the new Commission will see the development of appropriate computerised monitoring systems as a priority. I have no way of making an informed estimate of the cost of a study.

I am not aware of any relevant publicly funded research studies or of any previously completed literature search. I am not able to make an estimate of the cost of the latter.

Policing and Justice Review (Costs)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the financial estimates for (a) cost to completion and (b) the monthly breakdown of running costs and programme expenditure by main spending items since April 1998 for (i) the Independent Commission on Policing and (ii) the Review of Criminal Justice. [87168]

Mr. Ingram: The following table shows the spending profile of the Criminal Justice Review from April 1998 to March 1999. In effect the cost of the Review for the 1998–99 financial year is £390,262. The budget from April 1999 until the completion of the Review is £572,000, bringing the total cost to £962,000.

Costs of the Criminal Justice Review

£

	Costs from April 1998 to March 1999
Month	Running costs	Programme costs	Total
April 1998	0	0	0
May 1998	0	0	0
June 1998	109	0	109
July 1998	8,094	20,593	28,687
August 1998	306	26,640	26,946
September 1998	81	2,181	2,262
October 1998	1,990	44,468	46,457
November 1998	8,438	28,224	36,662
December 1998	270	6,048	6,317
January 1999	2,827	56,723	59,550
February 1999	10,658	25,940	36,598
March 1999	20,106	126,566	146,671
Totals	52,881	337,380	390,262

Note:
Totals may differ as a result of rounding

With regard to the Independent Commission on Policing, the cost to completion is £2.874 million. The following is a table showing the breakdown of running costs and programme expenditure per month:

£

Month	Running costs	Programme costs	Total
June 1998	14,382.85	27,790.83	42,173.68
July 1998	50,202.37	113,647.89	163,850.26
August 1998	22,178.71	93,594.02	115,772.73
September 1998	33,341.14	56,252.76	89,593.90
October 1998	34,478.57	113,645.15	148,123.72

£

Month	Running costs	Programme costs	Total
November 1998	61,520.10	44,798.52	106,318.62
December 1998	33,592.72	89,111.74	122,704.46
January 1999	30,459.07	179,083.51	209,542.58
February 1999	34,608.66	145,632.27	180,240.93
March 1999	54,679.21	113,035.06	167,714.27
Totals	369,443.40	976,591.75	1,346,035.15

Equality Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will (a) place in the Library the written submissions to the Equality Commission Working Group meeting under Dr. Joan Stringer, (b) list the recommendations of the Working Group and (c) give the Government response to each. [87167]

Mr. Ingram: My officials are writing to those who made submissions to the Equality Commission Working Group and subject to their agreement I will place the submissions in the Library. The recommendations of the Working Group are listed in the Executive Summary of the Report, which is available in the Library. Many of the recommendations will be for the new Commission itself to consider and it would be inappropriate for Government to make a response to these. The recommendations that fall to Government are those that relate to appointments, induction training and resources. Appointments and induction training are being progressed and I will be monitoring the position on resources carefully to ensure that the new Commission is properly resourced to fulfil the current statutory obligations and implement important new responsibilities.

DEFENCE

Homosexuality (Armed Forces)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on employment of homosexuals in the armed forces. [86369]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The current policy is that homosexuals are excluded from the armed forces. As I have already made clear, the issue of homosexuality will be reviewed during this Parliament and there will be a free vote in Parliament on the subject.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the value of technology developed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which has been made available to British industry by way of (a) licensing and (b) joint venture for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [86370]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, DERA, does not assign a capital value to technology when transferred to industry. Instead, moneys are recouped by way of a running royalty over a number of years, sometimes as many as twenty. Details of the total licence income from UK industry for each of the last five years is detailed in the table:

Financial year	£000
1994	450
1995	1,205
1996	1,419
1997	1,300
1998	1,468

The figures include income from non-equity joint ventures. DERA has been permitted to engage in equity joint ventures only since April 1999 and, so far, there has been no income from this source. Technology required by industry for government purposes is transferred free of charge; records are not kept of its theoretical value.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to pension arrangements for existing staff are planned if the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency becomes a public and private partnership; and if he will make a statement. [86670]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 11 June 1999]: As the hon. Member is aware, we are currently conducting a consultation programme on proposals for a DERA Public Private Partnership. We hope to be in a position to make an announcement on DERA's future later in the year.

Only after this will we be able to assess future pension arrangements for DERA staff.

HMS Chatham

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the forecast cost of the refit of HMS Chatham and its planned completion date; and if he will make a statement. [86385]

Mr. Spellar: The refit for HMS Chatham is due to be completed in late 1999, at a planned cost of £19.6 million. It is not possible to say whether additional unforeseen work, which may affect the final cost, will be required.

HMS Campbeltown

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) delays and (b) cost over-runs there are in respect of the refit of HMS Campbeltown; what is the cost of the refit; when she will be ready for operational duties; and if he will make a statement. [86371]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Campbeltown is now fully operational. The refit, which was completed in December 1998, required some unforeseen additional work, which resulted in a delay of just over seven weeks. The final cost of the refit will not be known until all contractual aspects have been finalised but is expected to be about £23 million, which is within the overall budget.

HMS Southampton

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the refit of HMS Southampton will be completed; and at what cost. [86450]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Southampton is currently on Sea Trials following her refit and will return to operational service in Autumn this year. As is normally the case, the sea trials will be followed by a period of defect rectification work. Expenditure to date is about £37 million, but the total project cost will not be known until any additional work is complete.

Army Cadets (Safety)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received of the Coroner's inquest into the death of army cadet Claire Louise Shore; and what arrangements he will make for his Department to respond to the findings of the inquest. [86354]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Coroner's inquest into the tragic death of Cadet Claire Louise Shore took place at the Coroner's Court Basingstoke, between the 17 and 20 May 1999. The inquest jury returned a verdict of "accidental death" and no specific recommendations were made by the Coroner. A Board of Inquiry (BOI) will however, now be held by my Department, to investigate the circumstances surrounding the accident and to make, where appropriate, any necessary recommendations to ensure that a similar incident does not reoccur. A copy of the BOI report would be made available to the family if they wish.

Paternity Leave

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what paternity provision is available for members of the armed forces (a) as a general right and (b) when there is medical advice that the health of the mother and baby, pre or post natal, requires the presence of the father. [86735]

Mr. Spellar: There is currently no national legal requirement to provide paternity leave and my Department has no policy to provide special leave for Service fathers. However, as a good employer, the Services seek, whenever possible, to grant a serviceman annual leave (or compassionate leave if appropriate) before or after childbirth. Operational commitments may, on occasions, make it impossible for every serviceman to be released from his duties.

Harpoon Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to upgrade the Harpoon missiles fitted to HM ships to give them Block II land attack capability. [87001]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently no plans to upgrade the existing Harpoon missiles fitted to HM Ships to Block II land attack capability.

Block II Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to fit Block II land attack missiles to HM ships. [87002]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently no plans to fit HM ships with Block II Harpoon land attack missiles.

Kosovo

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what advice will be given to returning Kosovan refugees and what precautions will be taken to protect them from contamination from depleted uranium in the region consequent on its use in ordnance and missiles; [86743]

(2) what special equipment has been issued to service and other personnel in the former Yugoslavia to minimise the risk of contamination from depleted uranium; what other precautions were taken; what guidance was given to commanders; and if he will make a statement. [86741]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The UNHCR is the lead agency responsible for the return of the refugees to their homeland. It will be for them to provide such advice as they judge to be necessary on the hazards which returning refugees may face.

Although we believe that the health risks to our personnel from the use of depleted uranium ammunition in the Gulf War were very small we are making available to the UNHCR the March 1999 paper produced by the MOD's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit in respect of testing for the presence of depleted uranium in UK veterans of that conflict. This contains detailed material which we believe may be of use to the UNHCR.

As far as Service personnel are concerned, appropriate guidance is given to them on dealing with any potential hazards from depleted uranium which they might encounter in Kosovo. As a precaution, this guidance includes advice to wear respiratory protection and gloves when contact with vehicles damaged by depleted uranium ammunition is unavoidable. UK forces in theatre have been issued with the appropriate range of NBC clothing and equipment.

"Costing the Earth"

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has obtained a tape of the entire BBC Radio 4 programme, "Costing the Earth", broadcast on 7 June to which the Minister of State for the armed forces contributed. [86742]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 14 June 1999]: We do on occasion tape programmes, particularly those to which we make a contribution. We did not on this occasion as there are various ways of obtaining a tape should it be required.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what epidemiologically valid trials have been conducted on service people who were exposed to depleted uranium debris in the Gulf War. [86951]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The Ministry of Defence's portfolio of research programmes into Gulf veterans' illnesses matters currently comprises two major epidemiological studies looking at the health of UK Gulf veterans, a neuromuscular symptoms study, an independent review of research literature, and a programme to investigate possible interactions between the medical countermeasures which were used during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict. The Ministry of Defence is also supporting a further epidemiological study of UK Gulf veterans which is being funded by the United States Government. However, none of these programmes, epidemiological or otherwise, is specifically aimed at investigating the health effects of depleted uranium.

Nevertheless, all three teams conducting epidemiological research are well aware that depleted uranium is one of many possible exposures in the Gulf which have been put forward as a potential cause of Gulf-related illnesses, and they have and will continue to, take this into account in their studies. Possible exposure to depleted uranium at the time of the Gulf conflict was included in the questionnaires which the teams have sent, or are sending, to random samples of Gulf veterans and control groups.

One of the epidemiological studies—that being conducted by a team from King's College, London—published their initial results in the Lancet in January. Of the 30 different exposures reported by those veterans who completed the survey, depleted uranium was the fourth least frequently reported.

The need for further research work is kept under regular review by the Ministry of Defence and the Medical Research Council (MRC) which advises the Government on its overall strategy for Gulf health issues. So far, however, the MRC has not recommended that the Ministry of Defence commission any specific depleted uranium related research.

Gulf veterans who are concerned that their health has been adversely affected by service during the Gulf conflict, including by possible exposure to DU, are entitled to seek a referral to the Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) for a full medical assessment. During this assessment, veterans receive a standard set of tests and are asked by the examining MAP physician to provide detailed information about possible factors, including depleted uranium, to which they may have been exposed during the Gulf conflict. Any further tests which are considered clinically appropriate by the examining MAP physician, including those to detect the presence of depleted uranium, are also arranged.

Army Training and Recruiting Agency

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the key targets are for 1999–2000 for the Chief Executive of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency. [87565]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Chief Executive of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency has been set the following Key Targets for 1999–2000:

1. To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for 620 commissioned officers.
2. To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for 610 officers qualified for service in Field Force units following successful Special to Arm training.
3. To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for the professional development training of 6,714 officers.
4. To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for 10,831 regular soldiers qualified for service in Field Force units following successful Basic and Special to Arm training.
5. To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for professional development training for 52,458 soldiers.
6. To achieve a 3 per cent. annual aggregate improvement in ATRA efficiency measured on the ATRA Efficiency Index.

Gulf Veterans

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlie recent trends in the number of referrals to the Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme. [86224]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) was set up by the Ministry of Defence in 1993 to provide as full a diagnosis as possible to Gulf veterans who are concerned about their health, or provide reassurance if no illness is found. It will continue for as long as it is needed.

So far during 1999, a weekly average of five new patients have been referred to the MAP. The comparable figure for 1997 is about 19 and for 1998 is 12.

The Ministry of Defence has made no assessment of the factors underlying this trend but has taken a number of steps over the last two years to highlight the MAP's existence and its purpose. Most recently, for example, the Department of Health's Chief Medical Officer's May Update highlighted the existence of an information pack to provide GPs and other health professionals with information they may find useful in dealing with Gulf veterans' health concerns. This pack includes a section on the MAP.

As of 15 June, my Department had sent 176 copies of the information pack in response to requests from doctors. The pack is also available on the Ministry of Defence's Gulf veterans' illnesses webpage (http://www.mod.uk/policy/gulfwar/index.htm) and was highlighted in the memorandum "Current Activity relating to Gulf Veterans' Illnesses" which I published in April. Copies have also been sent to various Parliamentarians and placed in the Library of the House.

Army (Re-enlistment)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel who retired from the Army in the last 24 months have been persuaded to re-enlist; and if he will list the main places where they are now serving. [86146]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of Officers and Other Ranks who have left the Army within the last 24 months, and who have subsequently re-enlisted is as follows:

Rank	Numbers re-enlisted
Officers	2
Soldiers	597

Some 84 per cent. of those who have re-enlisted are currently serving in Great Britain and Northern Ireland with a further 12 per cent. in Germany and theatres in the former Yugoslavia. The remaining 4 per cent. are serving in a variety of posts and theatres worldwide. These figures exclude mobilised Territorial Army (TA) and Reserve personnel.

MOX Fuel Shipment

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he had with other departments regarding the shipment of MOX fuel to Japan. [86738]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 11 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 663, and the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on the same day, Official Report, column 692.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Helen Jones: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 285, when she will publish the latest results of the market research tracking public perception of the millennium bug. [87248]

Mrs. Beckett [pursuant to her reply, 15 June 1999, c. 71]: I have placed copies of the Executive Summary of the April tracking research in the Libraries of the House.

The results are broadly consistent with those for March, showing that concern among the public on this issue is still low.

The results of the May tracking research will be published in the next few weeks and I will place copies of the Executive Summary in the Libraries of the House as soon as it is available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Attacks

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial attacks for which people were prosecuted took place in London, broken down by police district, (a) in total, (b) per head of population and (c) per head of the ethnic minority population, in (i) 1998, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1993. [85688]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that data on the number of prosecutions for violent racial crime are unavailable. The Metropolitan Police Service do not currently record information on the number of such crimes which were prosecuted in the courts.

However, data are available on the number of charges and summons for violent racial crime, by police district and per 100,000 head of residential population for the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99. Data are also available on the ethnicity of the victims of violent racial crime, per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population for those years. This information, provided by the Commissioner, is set out in the tables:

Charges/summons for racial violent crime per 100,000 head of residential population; financial year 1997–98

Area/division	Division total	Residential population estimate[1]	Per 100,000 head of population
Area 1 (Central)
Belgravia	2	50,361	4.0
Notting Hill	3	64,407	4.7
Chelsea	0	99,637	0.0
West End Central	0	4,817	0.0
Charing Cross	1	5,707	17.5
Marylebone	1	56,460	1.8
Paddington Green	0	94,954	0.0
Fulham	0	66,644	0.0
Hammersmith	1	90,277	1.1
Total	8	533,265	1.5
Area 2 (North West)
Hampstead	0	85,791	0.0
Kentish Town	5	80,991	6.2
Holborn	1	22,905	4.4
Holloway	1	90,326	1.1
Islington	3	86,455	3.5
Harrow	5	210,900	2.4
Wembley	0	133,707	0.0
Kilburn	2	115,844	1.7
Hertsmere	1	193,623	0.5
Barnet	4	226,274	1.8
Ealing	1	162,175	0.6
Southall	3	136,702	2.2
Hornsey	3	109,710	2.7
Tottenham	4	110,091	3.6
Total	33	1,765,494	1.9
Area 3 (North East)
Shoreditch and Hackney	3	85,567	3.5
Stoke Newington	0	106,102	0.0
Limehouse	6	84,409	7.1
Whitechapel	4	95,425	4.2
Barkingside	1	170,783	0.6
Chingford	1	119,572	0.8
Ilford	3	133,305	2.3
Leyton	2	99,851	2.0
Havering	5	230,222	2.2
Forest Gate	1	111,700	0.9
Barking and Dagenham	3	153,755	2.0
Plaistow	2	116,826	1.7
Edmonton	2	146,905	1.4
Enfield	1	175,602	0.6
Total	34	1,830,024	1.9
Area 4 (South East)
Southwark	2	61,895	3.2
Peckham	0	105,873	0.0
Walworth	0	62,732	0.0
Catford	7	134,530	5.2
Lewisham	2	106,863	1.9
Bromley and Orpington	2	297,367	0.7
Plumstead	6	107,440	5.6
Greenwich	2	106,183	1.9
Bexley	7	217,216	3.2
Croydon	1	120,034	0.8
South Norwood	3	215,574	1.4
Epsom and Sutton	0	290,639	0.0
Total	32	1,826,546	1.8
Area 5 (South West)
Heathrow Airport	0	685	0.0
Brixton	0	89,380	0.0
Streatham	0	91,168	0.0
Vauxhall	1	84,624	1.2
Spelthorne	0	208,828	0.0
Richmond-upon-Thames	1	88,998	1.1
Hounslow	10	183,774	5.4

Charges/summons for racial violent crime per 100,000 head of residential population; financial year 1997–98

Area/division	Division total	Residential population estimate[1]	Per 100,000 head of population
Kingston-upon-Thames	5	213,940	2.3
Battersea	3	183,438	1.6
Wandsworth	3	114,398	2.6
Hillingdon	5	151,101	3.3
Merton	8	249,437	3.2
Total	36	1,659,772	2.2
MPS total	143	7,615,101	1.9

Charges/summons for racial violent crime per 100,000 head of residential population; financial year 1998–99

Area/division	Division total	Residential population estimate[1]	Per 100,000 head of population
Area 1 (Central)
Belgravia	11	50,361	0.22
Notting Hill	10	64,407	0.16
Chelsea	6	99,637	0.06
West End Central	9	4,817	1.87
Charing Cross	5	5,707	0.88
Marylebone	7	56,460	0.12
Paddington Green	21	94,954	0.22
Fulham	13	66,644	0.20
Hammersith	27	90,277	0.30
Total	109	533,265	0.20
Area 2 (North West)
Hampstead	2	85,791	0.02
Kentish Town	25	80,991	0.31
Holborn	9	22,905	0.39
Holloway	14	90,326	0.15
Islington	12	88,455	0.14
Harrow	15	210,900	0.07
Wembley	4	133,707	0.03
Kilburn	6	115,844	0.05
Hertsmere	3	193,623	0.02
Barnet	11	226,274	0.05
Ealing	18	162,175	0.11
Southall	16	136,702	0.12
Hornsey	8	109,710	0.07
Tottenham	7	110,091	0.06
Total	150	1,765,494	0.08
Area 3 (North East)
Shoreditch and Hackney	24	85,567	0.28
Stoke Newington	17	106,102	0.16
Limehouse	19	84,409	0.23
Whitechapel	9	95,425	0.09
Barkingside	3	170,783	0.02
Chingford	10	119,572	0.08
Ilford	3	133,305	0.02
Leyton	3	99,851	0.03
Havering	9	230,222	0.04
Forest Gate	11	111,700	0.10
Barking and Dagenham	16	153,755	0.10
Plaistow	9	118,826	0.08
Edmonton	11	146,905	0.07
Enfield	8	175,602	0.05
Total	152	1,830,024	0.08
Area 4 (South East)
Southwark	19	61,895	0.31
Peckham	9	105,873	0.09
Walworth	13	82,732	0.16
Catford	32	134,530	0.24
Lewisham	21	106,863	0.20
Bromley and Orpington	15	297,567	0.05
Plumstead	32	107,440	0.30
Greenwich	21	106,183	0.20
Bexley	14	217,216	0.06
Croydon	15	120,034	0.12
South Norwood	29	215,574	0.13
Epsom and Sutton	6	290,639	0.02
Total	226	1,826,546	0.12
Area 5 (South West)
Heathrow Airport	7	685	10.22
Brixton	7	89,380	0.08
Streatham	16	91,168	0.18
Vauxhall	11	84,624	0.13
Spelthorne	8	208,828	0.04
Richmond-upon-Thames	19	88,998	0.21
Hounslow	53	183,774	0.29
Kingston-upon-Thames	15	213,940	0.07
Battersea	16	183,438	0.09
Wandsworth	13	114,398	0.11
Hillingdon	18	151,101	0.12
Merton	33	249,437	0.13
Total	216	1,659,772	0.13
MPS Total	853	7,615,101	0.11

Victims of violent racial crime per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population financial year 1997–98

	Ethnicity						Per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population
Sum of COUNT crime Area/division code	White	Black	Asian	Other	Unknown	Grand total	White	Black	Asian	Other
Area 1 (CENT)
Belgravia	0	0	1	0	0	1	0.00	0.00	0.63	0.00
Notting Hill	2	3	0	0	0	5	0.04	0.47	0.00	0.00
W.E. Central	0	0	5	0	0	5	0.00	0.00	19.46	0.00
Charing Cross	1	1	3	0	0	5	0.20	0.33	12.82	0.00
Marylebone	1	1	0	0	0	2	0.02	0.46	0.00	0.00
Paddington Green	1	4	1	2	0	8	0.01	0.38	0.20	0.22
Fulham	1	1	0	1	0	3	0.02	0.21	0.00	0.41
Hammersmith	1	6	1	0	0	8	0.01	0.55	0.33	0.00
1 total	7	16	11	3	0	37	0.02	0.43	0.70	0.10

Victims of violent racial crime per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population financial year 1997–98

	Ethnicity						Per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population
Sum of COUNT crime Area/division code	White	Black	Asian	Other	Unknown	Grand total	White	Black	Asian	Other
Area 2 (NW)
Hampstead	0	1	1	0	0	2	0.00	0.22	0.30	0.00
Kentish Town	16	5	22	3	0	46	0.24	1.03	4.63	0.72
Holborn	6	1	3	0	0	10	0.35	0.70	1.20	0.00
Holloway	2	2	3	1	0	8	0.03	0.16	0.86	0.21
Islington	14	10	13	12	0	49	0.19	1.49	4.75	3.12
Harrow	10	4	11	6	0	31	0.08	0.51	0.30	0.57
Wembley	3	2	0	0	0	5	0.04	0.13	0.00	0.00
Kilburn	6	5	6	1	0	18	0.09	0.20	0.42	0.12
Hertsmere and Barnet	8	2	14	6	0	30	0.02	0.16	0.47	0.27
Ealing	1	2	4	0	0	7	0.01	0.17	0.40	0.00
Southall	4	7	8	0	0	19	0.05	0.72	0.17	0.00
Hornsey	5	3	0	3	1	12	0.06	0.29	0.00	0.53
Tottenham	1	8	4	4	1	18	0.01	0.30	0.52	0.52
2 total	76	52	89	36	2	255	0.06	0.35	0.43	0.34
Area 3 (NE)
Shoreditch and Hackney	13	14	11	6	0	44	0.23	0.70	2.43	1.50
Stoke Newington	6	4	3	1	0	14	0.09	0.17	0.40	0.16
Limehouse	31	14	46	1	0	92	0.50	1.82	4.33	0.26
Whitechapel	21	3	13	1	0	38	0.39	0.58	0.39	0.35
Barkingside	1	0	10	0	0	11	0.01	0.00	1.30	0.00
Chingford	4	2	3	1	0	10	0.04	0.26	0.43	0.29
Ilford	1	0	7	2	0	10	0.01	0.00	0.27	0.43
Leyton	8	1	6	0	0	15	0.13	0.06	0.38	0.00
Havering	2	3	13	1	0	19	0.01	1.39	4.39	0.46
Forest Gate	9	6	29	2	2	48	0.17	0.31	0.84	0.38
Barking and Dagenham	5	7	22	2	0	36	0.03	1.96	4.42	1.08
Plaistow	4	9	22	2	0	37	0.05	0.66	1.28	0.32
Edmonton	8	0	2	4	0	14	0.07	0.00	0.22	0.67
Enfield	3	3	9	2	0	17	0.02	0.66	2.54	0.72
3 total	116	66	196	25	2	405	0.08	0.45	1.06	0.43
Area 4 (SE)
Southwark	5	10	1	7	0	23	0.10	1.51	0.56	3.35
Peckham	4	3	1	2	0	10	0.05	0.13	0.39	0.12
Walworth	2	5	6	1	0	14	0.04	0.43	3.95	0.37
Catford	11	9	0	1	1	22	0.10	0.58	0.00	0.26
Lewisham	6	5	2	0	0	13	0.08	0.21	1.01	0.00
Bromley and Orpington	7	4	2	2	0	15	0.02	0.80	0.48	0.37
Plumstead	11	16	8	4	0	39	0.12	2.19	1.25	0.93
Greenwich	7	5	2	2	0	18	0.07	1.12	0.79	0.69
Bexley	6	11	8	1	0	26	0.03	5.25	1.42	0.33
Croydon	4	2	0	0	0	6	0.04	0.49	0.00	0.00
South Norwood	1	2	8	1	0	12	0.01	0.09	0.51	0.11
Epsom and Sutton	0	1	6	0	1	8	0.00	0.32	1.13	0.00
4 total	64	73	44	21	2	204	0.04	0.57	0.61	0.39
Area 5 (SW)
Brixton	10	6	2	0	0	18	0.18	0.22	0.99	0.00
Streatham	4	2	1	0	0	7	0.06	0.15	0.20	0.00
Vauxhall	3	2	1	0	0	6	0.05	0.12	0.38	0.00
Spelthorne	1	1	0	0	0	2	0.01	3.08	0.00	0.00
Richmond-upon-Thames	3	3	6	1	1	14	0.02	2.14	1.62	0.21
Hounslow	11	16	27	6	0	60	0.07	2.73	0.75	0.64
Kingston-upon-Thames	6	4	8	4	1	23	0.03	2.39	1.47	0.50
Battersea	2	8	0	2	0	12	0.02	0.49	0.00	0.45
Wandsworth	2	9	9	2	0	22	0.02	0.71	1.04	0.29
Hillingdon	6	7	19	1	1	34	0.03	1.72	0.94	0.15
Merton	7	13	27	3	0	50	0.05	1.21	2.74	0.31
5 total	55	71	100	19	3	248	0.04	0.64	1.00	0.30
Grand total	318	278	440	104	9	1,149	0.05	0.49	0.79	0.33

Victims of violent racial crime per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population financial year 1998–99

	Ethnicity						Per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population
Sum of COUNT crimeArea/division code	White	Black	Asian	Other	Unknown	Grand total	White	Black	Asian	Other
Area 1 (CENT)
Belgravia	7	29	7	1	1	45	0.16	15.83	4.40	0.35
Notting Hill	10	15	18	9	1	53	0.19	2.37	13.66	1.92
Chelsea	6	20	14	10	1	51	0.07	6.88	6.28	1.38
W.E. Central	9	23	4	6	2	44	2.25	203.54	15.56	13.70
Charing Cross	14	11	11	3	2	41	2.83	91.67	47.01	7.50
Marylebone	20	13	17	23	0	73	0.44	5.98	6.00	3.70
Paddington Green	29	36	17	31	1	114	0.41	3.40	3.34	3.41
Fulham	27	33	34	15	0	109	0.47	6.77	25.11	6.22
Hammersmith	59	65	31	20	3	178	0.83	5.91	10.15	4.10
1 total	181	245	153	118	11	708	0.41	6.13	8.52	3.08
Area 2 (NW)
Hampstead	9	11	11	1	0	32	0.13	2.44	3.28	0.15
Kentish Town	49	67	84	20	1	221	0.73	13.84	17.70	4.83
Holborn	29	17	20	6	1	73	1.67	11.95	8.03	3.63
Holloway	27	30	38	12	1	108	0.39	2.47	10.84	2.53
Islington	29	48	46	28	1	152	0.40	7.16	16.82	7.27
Harrow	31	41	85	20	2	179	0.20	5.18	2.33	1.91
Wembley	13	30	30	5	0	78	0.19	1.91	0.79	0.44
Kilburn	19	31	33	13	3	99	0.28	1.25	2.31	1.60
Ealing	35	47	59	14	1	156	0.27	4.08	5.88	1.30
Southall	14	27	67	9	1	118	0.19	2.78	1.46	1.17
Hornsey	21	26	19	9	2	77	0.24	2.54	3.26	1.58
Tottenham	35	42	32	18	8	135	0.52	1.56	4.19	2.35
Hertsmere and Barnet	74	61	106	32	4	277	0.21	5.01	3.57	1.45
2 total	385	478	630	187	25	1,705	0.29	3.22	3.08	1.78
Area 3 (NE)
Shoreditch and Hackney	52	64	30	32	2	180	0.91	3.18	6.63	7.99
Stoke Newington	34	43	32	18	0	127	0.49	1.87	4.23	2.94
Limehouse	82	29	101	8	0	220	1.32	3.77	9.52	2.10
Whitechapel	73	38	43	4	0	158	1.35	7.30	1.29	1.39
Barkingside	18	18	28	5	0	69	0.11	6.14	3.63	1.43
Chingford	20	21	31	6	0	78	0.20	2.75	4.46	1.74
Ilford	26	18	27	1	0	72	0.27	2.50	1.06	0.21
Leyton	29	41	34	7	1	112	0.47	2.42	2.13	1.41
Havering	20	20	52	7	1	100	0.09	9.29	17.57	3.24
Forest Gate	42	39	58	6	2	147	0.80	2.03	1.69	1.08
Barking and Dagenham	23	46	55	22	2	148	0.16	12.90	11.06	11.87
Plaistow	33	63	96	6	4	202	0.41	4.61	5.59	0.96
Edmonton	35	23	32	22	0	112	0.29	1.93	3.58	3.66
Enfield	20	26	32	23	0	101	0.12	5.75	9.03	8.30
3 total	507	489	651	167	12	1,826	0.35	3.36	3.54	2.88
Area 4 (SE)
Southwark	38	88	20	26	1	173	0.74	13.25	11.19	12.44
Peckham	30	53	12	1	2	98	0.40	2.28	4.68	0.21
Walworth	26	49	22	5	1	103	0.55	4.20	14.48	1.86
Catford	37	78	30	13	0	158	0.33	4.99	12.73	3.32
Lewisham	48	68	40	24	2	182	0.63	2.87	20.29	4.39
Bromley and Orpington	39	43	31	19	2	134	0.14	8.55	7.52	3.55
Plumstead	42	113	64	21	0	240	0.47	15.45	10.11	4.86
Greenwich	64	80	44	11	1	200	0.66	17.90	17.48	3.79
Bexley	24	23	49	7	0	103	0.12	10.98	8.69	2.34
Croydon	41	36	47	10	2	136	0.38	8.78	10.09	2.29
South Norwood	45	47	62	8	1	163	0.27	2.21	3.96	0.89
Epsom and Sutton	11	20	50	18	0	99	0.04	6.48	9.38	2.67
4 total	445	698	471	163	12	1,789	0.28	5.44	8.65	2.99
Area 5 (SW)
Heathrow	7	4	10	3	1	25	14.46	173.91	83.33	52.63
Brixton	29	32	14	3	0	78	0.52	1.19	6.93	0.64
Streatham	26	45	17	7	0	95	0.38	3.28	3.45	1.78
Vauxhall	45	60	31	8	2	146	0.73	3.61	11.74	1.95
Spelthorne	7	6	21	3	0	37	0.08	18.46	12.62	2.90
Richmond-upon-Thames	19	34	42	12	0	107	0.11	24.27	11.31	2.46

Victims of violent racial crime per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population financial year 1998–99

	Ethnicity						Per 1,000 head of resident ethnic population[1]
Sum of COUNT crimeArea/division code	White	Black	Asian	Other	Unknown	Grand total	White	Black	Asian	Other
Hounslow	77	88	202	38	0	405	0.49	15.00	5.64	4.03
Kingston-upon-Thames	35	35	80	24	1	175	0.18	20.88	14.73	3.00
Battersea	36	59	36	5	5	141	0.41	3.59	7.62	1.13
Wandsworth	36	56	54	10	3	159	0.29	4.43	6.26	1.43
Hillingdon	23	49	122	11	2	207	0.11	12.07	6.06	1.66
Merton	38	58	75	15	1	187	0.25	5.38	7.62	1.55
5 total	378	526	704	139	15	[illegible]	0.27	4.76	7.06	2.18
Grand total	1,896	2,436	2,609	774	75	7,790	0.31	4.25	4.65	2.42

[1] 1997 mid-year estimate based on 1991 census.

Note:

Victims are not necessarily resident in the division where the offence took place.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he made of the performance of the UK Passport Agency before deciding that the agency should administer the new Criminal Records Bureau. [86336]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The decision to ask the United Kingdom Passport Agency (UKPA) to manage the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) was taken for a number of reasons. The work of the Bureau involves similar business processes to those which the UKPA, notwithstanding its current temporary operational difficulties, has a good track record in providing. The Agency also has experience of procuring information technology using public-private partnership arrangements which will be appropriate for the setting up of the CRB, and sound financial management systems.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what this year's performance targets are for the UK Passport Agency for dealing with applicants by (a) telephone, (b) post and (c) personal attendance; and what assessment he has made of the UK Passport Agency's performance against each of these targets in the current year. [86351]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am awaiting proposals from the United Kingdom Passport Agency's Chief Executive on targets for 1999–2000 which take account of the Agency's decision on the full introduction of the new computerised issuing arrangements to all of its six passport offices. In the meantime, the Agency is working to its 1998–99 targets for dealing with applicants by telephone, post and personal attendance. These are set out in the Annexe to the Agency's 1998–99 Business Plan, copies of which are in the Library.

As I have explained in my letter of 10 June to hon. Members, the Agency has encountered some teething problems in piloting new computerised passport issuing arrangements at its Liverpool and Newport offices. Productivity has been below expectations and arrears of work have developed. In addition, the Agency is dealing with high seasonal demand for passports.

Because of the backlog of work, and recent media attention the Agency has been swamped with telephone and written inquiries, and large queues have formed outside each of the offices. Although the position is now improving, the Agency is not yet meeting its performance targets.

My letter indicated what action the Agency is taking to improve its performance.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to reduce delays and improve the service to members of the public in dealing with the Passport Agency; what plans he has to compensate customers for loss arising from failures in the Agency's service; and if he will make a statement. [86475]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As I have explained in my letter to hon. Members of 10 June, the United Kingdom Passport Agency is taking a number of measures to improve its service to customers, and reduce delays in processing passport applications.

It is prioritising applications by its customers' declared travel dates, and is meeting those dates for 99.99 per cent. of passports issued. 300 additional staff are being deployed, examination processes are being streamlined, and the Agency is working extended hours. In order to clear quickly straightforward renewal applications, certain existing passports are being extended for two years. Current delays will reduce as a result of actions being taken, and the seasonal nature of the Agency's work. The Agency's total work arrears are less than one months normal output.

As regards compensation, the Agency's policy, where it has clearly been at fault and provided unsatisfactory service, is to compensate customers for reasonable additional expenditure incurred. Each case is considered on its merits.

Schengen Information System

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the restrictions proposed to be placed on Court of Auditors auditing powers over the Schengen Information System. [86448]

Mr. Straw: It is for the Council of Ministers, as composed of the 13 Schengen States, to decide unanimously on any provision which would ensure that Court of Auditors auditing powers would apply to those budgetary arrangements which do not form part of the European Community budget, and are not therefore subject to European Community budget rules. They have done so in relation to expenditure on, inter alia, the installation and functioning of the "Help Desk Server" of the Schengen Information System Management Unit, where such a provision was required.

National Front

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the follow-up to the March 1998 police report about the arrest in Ealing of a National Front member with alleged association with a serving police officer; and if 1 Area TSG was advised. [86970]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that inquiries were carried out to establish the extent of any connection between the suspect and any police officer and that no such connection was discovered. The management of the then Number One Area Territorial Support Group were informed of these inquiries at the time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the suspect classified as CRO No. 108485/74A, born in August 1953, Ealing Police Station Custody Record 755/98, was charged with an offence; if the extent of his relationship with police officers was established; when his house was searched and how many officers were involved; and what was the nature of his work in an Islamic centre. [86968]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the Crown Prosecution Service was consulted about this case and that they declined to prosecute as they considered the evidence available was insufficient; no relationship between this suspect and any police officer was established; the suspect's house was not searched and the police are not aware of any connection with any Islamic centre.

Ealing Racial Equality Unit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations were conducted into the racist hate-mail and graffiti directed at the Ealing Racial Equality Unit; and with what results. [86969]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that on 27 April 1999, three National Front stickers had been fixed to the front door, over a 'Blair Peach' poster, at the Ealing Racial Equality Centre. Forensic examination proved to be impracticable because of the way in which the stickers had been removed before police officers were present; and examination of Closed Circuit Television tapes produced negative results.

Behavioural Orders

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the extent of the use to date of the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 relating to (a) child curfews, (b) anti-social behaviour orders and (c) parenting orders. [86921]

Mr. Boateng: The child curfew provisions were brought into force on 30 September 1998. Local authorities wishing to impose them must consult locally and seek the Home Secretary's approval. No applications have yet been received. They are available to form part of integrated local action to reduce crime and disorder, and local authorities will wish to take into account the wider crime and disorder reduction strategies currently being developed under the provisions of the Act.

The anti-social behaviour order provisions were introduced on 1 April 1999. One order has been made so far. It is for the police or local authority to decide whether to apply for one. We plan to review their use and effectiveness, and the extent to which they have been used, during their first two years.

Parenting orders have been available since 30 September 1998 and introduced progressively since then in nine youth justice pilot areas. By the end of May 1999, 67 orders had been made—a significant level of use for a pilot scheme. The results of the piloting, due to run for 18 months, will inform the process of national implementation and help to identify good practice.

Rapparee Cove, Devon

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the status of the human remains found at Rapparee Cove, Devon, in 1997. [86856]

Mr. George Howarth: The remains, consisting of a small number of bones, were removed on the authority of a Home Office licence. They are currently subject to scientific examination at the University of Bristol, where further tests to determine the origin of the remains are being planned.

Inside Out Trust

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of the Inside Out Trust with prison inmates. [86847]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave her on 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 59.

Trial By Jury

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants charged with either way offences he estimates will obtain legal representation to argue the matter (a) before the magistrates and (b) on appeal before the Crown Court; and what is his estimate of the change in costs of the proposed procedure. [86778]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave him on 15 June 1999, Official Report, columns 96–97.

Fox Hunting

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Middle Way group of hon. Members on the subject of fox hunting; and what meetings he has had with them. [86776]

Mr. Straw: I have met a variety of groups to discuss the subject of fox hunting. I met the Middle Way group on 8 July 1998.

Passports

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make temporary arrangements to enable children who have reached the age of 16 years to continue to travel on a parent's passport until the current backlog of passport applications has been processed; and if he will make a statement. [86844]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have no plans to make temporary arrangements for children who have reached the age of 16 years to continue to travel on a parent's passport. It is common international practice to require children who have reached 16 to have their own passport. This has been the very long established practice of the United Kingdom and it would be very difficult to ensure the acceptance by immigration officials throughout the world of a United Kingdom passport where a child having reached 16 remained on a parent's passport. Families could experience difficulties at exit and entry points with the relevant authorities questioning the validity of passports. Also, the numbers of children reaching 16 who are included in passports and wish to travel urgently would be relatively small and seeking to introduce temporary measures to deal with these would not be effective in easing current operational pressures.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will place on the internet, the change in instructions to staff at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate on dealing with applications from people whose children have been living in the United Kingdom for seven years, announced on 24 February. [87008]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The instructions to staff relating to the handling of deportation and illegal entry casework are being reviewed with a view to publishing those parts which are not operationally sensitive. This review will take some time to complete. I have, therefore, asked for this particular instruction to be dealt with separately and for a copy to be placed on the internet as soon as possible.

Fire Safety Legislation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding proposals for a new Fire Safety Act; and if he will make a statement. [87166]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 264. We have received a number of representations from fire service interests and others. We will bring forward legislation to consolidate and rationalise fire safety law when parliamentary time permits.

Young Offenders

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish figures for 1998 on the average time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders. [87561]

Mr. Straw: Figures on how long it took to deal with persistent young offenders in 1998 will be published on Thursday 17 June. Copies of the press notice announcing the figures, and of the statistical press notice issued by the Lord Chancellor's Department detailing the method of calculation of the figures, will be placed in the Library.

Immigration Policy

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of his review of immigration policy in relation to the unmarried partners concession. [87566]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It has been decided that, in order to demonstrate a commitment akin to marriage, it is not necessary to demonstrate a prior cohabitation period of four years, and the prior cohabitation period has, therefore, been changed to two years. The probationary period before settlement may be granted has been increased to two years, which means there will be a four year cohabitation period before the grant of settlement. Where applicable, these new arrangements will be taken into account when deciding whether or not to initiate enforcement action.

The other provisions of the concession remain unchanged.

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of his review of immigration policy in relation to overseas spouses who suffer domestic violence in the first 12 month probationary period. [87593]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have decided to introduce a concession, which will be outside the Immigration Rules, for overseas spouses who wish to remain in the United Kingdom, but who wish to leave their partner because of domestic violence before completion of the 12 month probationary period. In order to benefit under this concession, the overseas national will need to provide objective evidence that he or she has been the victim of domestic violence. This is essential if such applications are to be dealt with swiftly and with fairness and consistency.

The concession will come into force with immediate effect. An applicant whose marriage breaks down during the probationary year as a result of domestic violence may be granted indefinite leave to remain exceptionally, outside the Immigration Rules, provided the domestic violence occurred while the marriage was subsisting and the applicant is able to produce one of the following forms of evidence that domestic violence has taken place: an injunction, non-molestation or other protection order (other than an ex parte or interim order); or a relevant court conviction; and full details of a relevant police caution.

Where a prosecution is pending against the sponsor the applicant may be granted further periods of six months limited leave to remain, subject to the same conditions, until the outcome of the criminal prosecution is known. Where a hearing seeking an injunction, non-molestation order or other protection order is pending, a decision on the application will be delayed pending the outcome of that hearing.

In addition to helping victims of domestic violence, we have decided, in the interests of compassion and fairness, that where an applicant is widowed during the probationary period he or she may also be granted indefinite leave to remain exceptionally outside the Immigration Rules, provided that the Secretary of State is satisfied that the marriage was subsisting at the time of the sponsor's death.

These arrangements will also be applied to those who have been admitted to join a person settled here under the unmarried partners concession which I announced on 10 October 1997.

Overstayers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of persons subject to immigration control who (i) have overstayed for seven years or more since the expiry of their leave to remain and (ii) have otherwise overstayed for seven years or more. [87139]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at January 1999, the number of overstayers against whom deportation action had been initiated, but not completed, stood at 20,700. Some of these cases are subject to legal challenge.

There is no reliable estimate of the number of overstayers against whom enforcement action has not yet been initiated, nor of those who have overstayed for seven years or more.

Probation Service Computer Programme

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to overcome the weaknesses in the computer programme newly set up for the Probation Service. [86147]

Mr. George Howarth: The roll out to the 54 Probation Services in England and Wales of a new national Case Record Administration and Management System, (CRAMS), started in March 1997. CRAMS is designed to enable services to handle and communicate on a wide range of information relating to offenders at all stages in the criminal justice process. It is currently in operation in 37 services and a further six services are undergoing training.

Work to develop the system is on-going. Work currently in progress includes: an upgrade to make it more user friendly, to enhance reporting facilities and meet the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and a link to police criminal records.

Northern Ireland Service Review Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what ruling was provided by the Northern Ireland High Court in response to his application for judicial review of decisions taken by the Northern Ireland Sentence Review Commission; if he will place a copy of the court ruling in the Library; and what is his estimate of costs incurred in this legal action. [87157]

Mr. George Howarth: A copy of the ruling of 23 March 1999 of the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland in the matter of an application by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department for judicial review of four determinations made by the Northern Ireland Sentence Review Commissioners has been placed in the Library.

The legal costs incurred by the Secretary of State in these proceedings are estimated to be £5,000. The Secretary of State was also ordered to pay the costs of the applicants. These have yet to be finally determined. I will write to my hon. Friend when this information is available.

TREASURY

EU Directive (Taxation of Interest)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made, for the purposes of the draft EU directive on the taxation of interest payments, of the percentage of Eurobond holders who are individuals resident in the EU. [85834]

Dawn Primarolo: No reliable estimates exist, but it is known that a very large proportion of Eurobonds are held by institutional investors rather than individuals.

VAT

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what external legal advice he has received regarding the VAT treatment of (a) speculative and (b) supportive foreign exchange transactions following the judgment of the European Court in the First National Bank of Chicago case (Case C-172/96). [85676]

Dawn Primarolo: As is usual following European Court decisions, external legal advice was not sought. Internal legal advisers are on hand and the legal finding of the Court is clear.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise Business Brief 16/98, what representations he has received with regard to VAT on foreign exchange transactions following the judgment of the European Court in the First National Bank of Chicago case (Case C-172/96). [85677]

Dawn Primarolo: Following Customs' Business Brief 16/98, representations have been received from one interested trade body and one firm of Accountants.

ECOFIN

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 25 May; and if he will make a statement. [85827]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor and the Paymaster General attended the Economic and Finance Council meeting in Brussels on 25 May 1999.

Seven draft reports from ECOFIN to the Cologne European Council were considered:

(i) the 1999 BEGs were approved with a few amendments, including a revision to the text on Italian public finances to reflect the possibility of lower growth impacting on Italy's deficit;

(ii) the European Employment Pact was briefly discussed ahead of the joint SAC-ECOFIN meeting which followed ECOFIN;

(iii) the report on Implementation of the Framework for Financial Markets: Action Plan, and draft Council conclusions were approved without amendment;

(iv) the progress report on reinforced tax policy cooperation was agreed subject to amendment of a paragraph on energy taxation to make clear that the Presidency's compromise proposal was discussed but not agreed;

(v) the report on the International Financial System was approved without amendment;

(vi) an oral report from the Chairman of the Economic and Finance Committee on the HIPC initiative set out the areas of agreement and remaining difference among EU member states. It was agreed that the Cologne Conclusions should record where there was agreement;

(vii) the Commission report on Financing Investment in Infrastructure was discussed. It was agreed that further study was required after the Cologne Council.

Eight tax items were discussed:

(i) the Paymaster General presented the second interim report of the Code of Conduct Group to ECOFIN. The report was welcomed. The Group will present its final report to ECOFIN in November;

(ii) on the taxation of savings, the Chancellor said the UK would submit a paper on international bonds to a working group in June;

(iii) the draft Council conclusions on the taxation of interest and royalties were adopted without amendment;

(iv) ECOFIN requested that Coreper re-examine the Energy taxation dossier in light of the Presidency's compromise text and the views of Ministers;

(v) the Presidency's compromise proposal on tobacco excise duties was agreed;

(vi) the consensus necessary to reopen the issue of the abolition of Duty Free was not reached;

(vii) the proposal for a reduced VAT rate on labour intensive services was remitted back to Coreper for further discussion with a request for a list of eligible services;

(viii) Spain put forward a proposal for a high level group on tax fraud. The Presidency asked Coreper to look at the detail of the proposal.

The necessary regulations and decision relating to the establishment of a European anti-fraud office by the Commission on 1 June were approved. The Council thanked the Commission for its progress report on the Sound and Efficient Management initiative (SEM 2000) and welcomed the contribution made by this initiative to improving financial management. The Presidency and the Commission urged agreement in the Finnish Presidency of the renewal of the EIB's external lending mandates.

ECOFIN was followed by a joint session of the Social Affairs Council and ECOFIN. The joint Council discussed the proposal for a European Employment Pact.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Luxembourg on 14 June; and if he will make a statement. [87286]

Ms Hewitt: There was no meeting of ECOFIN on 14 June. The next meeting of ECOFIN is scheduled for 12 July. Under the standing arrangements, the agenda will be made available to the Clerk of the House of Commons European Scrutiny Committee when determined by Coreper, approximately one week before the meeting. Copies of the agenda will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [86092]

Ms Hewitt: Approximately 1,700.

European Central Bank

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason a European Commissioner is entitled to be present at the meetings of the Governing Council of the European central bank; what means will determine which Commissioner will be present; if he has voting rights; if he is remunerated; what rules of confidentiality apply to him; and if he will make a statement. [86731]

Ms Hewitt: In accordance with Article 113 (Ex 109b) of the EC Treaty, a member of the European Commission may participate, without having the right to vote, in meetings of the Governing Council of the ECB. The participation of the Commission in the Governing Council contributes to the process of inter-institutional dialogue. In line with this provision, the Commissioner for monetary affairs has attended meetings of the Governing Council, but has not received separate or additional remuneration for so doing. The participation of the Commission in meetings of the Governing Council is subject to the confidentiality regime outlined in Article 10.4 of the ESCB Statute (Protocol No.3 to the EC Treaty).

European Commission

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the pay rates of Cabinet staff of European Commissioners. [86728]

Ms Hewitt: Members of Cabinets in the European Commission are either permanent Commission staff, or employed as 'temporary agents'. If they are permanent staff, they are paid in accordance with the Commission Staff Regulations, with rates determined by their grade. If they are temporary agents, they are appointed in accordance with the Staff Regulations, their position on the pay scale being determined in line with their age and experience according to strict guidelines that apply to all community appointments. Rates of pay for individual Cabinet members are a matter for the Commission and the individual concerned.

Withholding Tax

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 338, if he will make a statement on developments at the 25 May ECOFIN Council on the withholding tax. [86770]

Dawn Primarolo: The ECOFIN Council conclusions recognise that the treatment of international bonds as provided for under the draft Directive on the taxation of savings in its present form could adversely affect the competitiveness of EU financial markets, in particular wholesale markets. It is clear that the Council and the European Commission now accept our case that this problem must be resolved.

Climate Change Levy

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage by which manufacturing industry's costs would increase as a result of his proposals for a climate change levy, in respect of changes in the cost of (a) electricity, (b) coal and (c) gas. [86771]

Ms Hewitt: The Government believe that all sectors of the economy will need to play their part in helping to meet the legally-binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto Protocol and our domestic commitment to further reductions. The climate change levy is expected to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010, thereby making a significant contribution to meeting the Government's targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

The climate change levy will entail no increase in the burden of tax on business as a whole, since the revenues will be fully recycled to business via a 0.5 percentage point reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from additional £50 million for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, such as solar and wind power.

The final incidence of the levy on particular sectors will depend on the rates set for different sectors.

The Government recognise the need for special consideration to be given to energy intensive industries given their high energy usage and exposure to international competition. We intend to set significantly lower rates of tax for energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving their energy efficiency. Negotiations are currently underway with the main energy intensive sectors.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from glasshouse growers concerning the proposed climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [86392]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has received a number of responses from glasshouse growers in the course of the consultation on the climate change levy. These will be considered along with the other responses to the consultation.

Counterfeiting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of how secure plastic bank notes are against counterfeiting; if they were considered as a replacement for the current £20 note; and if he will make a statement. [86649]

Ms Hewitt: The Bank of England continues to monitor carefully polymer (plastic) substrates for banknotes. In terms of security against counterfeiting, these type of banknotes are incompatible with certain traditional and well-proven security features (eg thread and watermark). However, the Bank are continually assessing the effectiveness of the different type of security features polymer offers.

The polymer substrate was considered for the £20 variant, but was discounted because of incompatibility with the theme of the current (Series E) note designs. The new £20 note is a variant within the existing series and is not the start of a new series of notes. It contains a number of additional security features which offer enhanced protection against counterfeiting and will cause less confusion to the public than an entirely new type of note.

Money Laundering

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the problem of cyber-laundering of money and assets; what proposals he has for (a) national and (b) international measures to combat it; and if he will make a statement. [86857]

Ms Hewitt: (a) The Government are determined to tackle money laundering in all its forms. The obligations under the Money Laundering Regulations 1993 to report all suspicious transactions, to keep records, to train staff and to establish the identity of customers apply irrespective of whether the business is carried out electronically or otherwise. The Government will be looking at whether additional measures are needed to tackle the laundering of money by electronic means in the course of discussions with other member states on a possible Second EC Money Laundering Directive. Meanwhile the Financial Services and Markets Bill will enhance the powers of the Financial Services Authority to combat money laundering carried out through financial institutions, including those offering services over the internet.

(b) The UK chaired a meeting of anti money laundering experts from the member countries of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) in November 1998. That meeting discussed, among other things, the threat from cyber-laundering and shared experiences in combating it. A report on that meeting was published by the FATF in February 1999 and is available on the FATF's internet website.

The Government are committed to the prevention of cybercrime as a whole. To this end, it is participating in the negotiation of a Council of Europe Cybercrime Convention. Domestically, the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) chairs a tripartite forum with government officials and the Internet Service Providers to develop measures for law enforcement and protection of internet users.

Offshore Betting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the potential loss of revenue from offshore betting; what plans he has to prevent such loss; and if he will make a statement. [87104]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government keep the revenue yield from General Betting Duty under constant review. The transfer offshore of a single telephone betting business will have a minimal effect on government revenues.

The extent of overseas bookmaking operations is constrained by a prohibition on them advertising in the United Kingdom. The scope of this prohibition is the subject of an impending challenge in the High Court. The Government will take the outcome of this case into account when deciding on appropriate courses of action to safeguard the revenue.

Greater Manchester Transport Submissions

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what timetable he is proposing for the announcement of decisions on allocations in the financial year 1999–2000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund with respect to the Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Executive submissions. [87003]

Mr. Milburn: I will announce decisions on first round bids from the Capital Modernisation Fund shortly.

Royal Mint

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the policy of the Government that the Royal Mint should be able to restrict the availability of special coinage to personal visitors to the Millennium Dome; and if he will make a statement. [87108]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The United Kingdom £5 Millennium coin will be struck at the Royal Mint in Llantrisant and in the Millennium Dome. Coins struck at the Royal Mint will be made generally available in line with normal practice for commemorative coins. Coins struck in the Dome will bear a special mintmark and will be available only to visitors to the Dome. No restrictions will be placed on the number that can be minted at the Dome.

Capital Gains Tax

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to take action against the avoidance of capital gains tax through the purchase of trust losses. [87559]

Dawn Primarolo: There is mounting evidence that the tax rules which provide for capital losses realised within trusts to pass to beneficiaries in certain circumstances are being widely abused for the purpose of avoiding capital gains tax. Avoidance schemes are being set up and marketed specifically to take advantage of these rules by enabling people to purchase interests in trusts with losses. In some cases very large losses are being manufactured within trusts to exploit these rules. If successful, these schemes could lead to a very significant loss of tax revenue.

The Government are not prepared to tolerate this sort of avoidance activity which undermines the integrity of the tax system and creates unfairness between taxpayers. A new clause will shortly be tabled for Report to tackle this abuse. The new Clause will restrict the circumstances in which losses accruing to trusts can be transferred to beneficiaries and the use which beneficiaries can make of such losses.

The Inland Revenue are today issuing a Press Release giving details of the new Clause.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87328]

Ms Hewitt: 74 of the 121 named day questions (61 per cent.) tabled since 15 April have been answered substantively on the due day. 78 per cent. of such questions were answered within two days of the named day.

Income Tax Form

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the Inland Revenue has introduced Income Tax Form SA106/BMSD12/98. [87137]

Dawn Primarolo: Income Tax form SA106/BMSD12/98 was introduced as part of the Self Assessment tax return to enable taxpayers to declare foreign income and claim tax credit relief.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the responsibilities of each Scottish Office Minister after 1 July. [86845]

Dr. Reid: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 98.

Dover House

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the uses that Government departments, other than his Department, will make of Dover House after 1 July. [86836]

Dr. Reid: Scottish Executive Ministers and their officials will have access to Dover House when they have official business in London.

Scottish Executive (Travel Expenses)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the estimated cost of travel expenses for the new Scottish Executive for the period up to 1 July. [86917]

Dr. Reid: It is not possible at this time to make a reliable estimate of such costs during the period in question.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Parliament

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the transfer of responsibility for the new Scottish Parliament to the Scottish Parliament Corporate Body; [86903]

(2) if he will list the contracts for work on the (a) construction, (b) design and (c) preparation for construction and related matters for the new Scottish Parliament Building, indicating when each contract was signed, which are still under negotiation and at what stage those negotiations are; and if he will make a statement. [86904]

Dr. Reid: Legal and financial responsibility for the new Scottish Parliament building at Holyrood transferred from Scottish Office Ministers to the Scottish Parliament Corporate Body on 1 June 1999. Requests for information on the Holyrood Project should in the first instance be made through the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid (Fraud)

7. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to ensure that opportunities for fraud in respect of the overseas aid budget are reduced. [85980]

Mr. Foulkes: We have strong and clear control systems designed to ensure propriety and value for money in the expenditure of our budget. Our internal auditors keep these under review and they are regularly updated.

Debt Relief

9. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the likely progress at the G7 summit in ensuring recognition that debt repayment conditions should not entail less money being available for basic health and education programmes. [85982]

11. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent progress has been made on debt relief for the poorest countries; and if she will make a statement. [85984]

27. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will support proposals to link the relief of indebtedness in developing countries to measures to invest in primary education and health care. [86001]

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals her Department has for developing new mechanisms to ensure a greater linkage between debt relief and poverty reduction. [85972]

Clare Short: We are pressing for a revised Heavily Indebted Poor Countries initiative (HIPC) to provide at least twice as much debt relief, twice as fast, and for the provision of debt relief to be more tightly linked to policies which help reduce poverty.

We are pleased that, at their meeting in Frankfurt on 12 June, G7 Finance Ministers were able to agree that a substantial improvement to HIPC is required. G7 Leaders will be discussing it further this week and we look forward to the announcement of a package on debt relief at the weekend. The final details of the new HIPC package will be settled at the annual meetings of the World Bank and IMF in September. The Chancellor and I also announced last week that we will be contributing a further $100 million to the Trust Fund in order to help the Multilateral Development Banks meet their share of the cost of the HIPC debt relief.

14. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to raise at the forthcoming G7 summit proposals to strengthen the linkage between debt relief and the 2015 international development targets; and if she will make a statement. [85987]

Clare Short: We anticipate that the discussion on debt at the G8 Summit in Cologne will build on the Communiqué from the World Bank's Development Committee in April, which noted the need for faster, deeper and wider debt relief and emphasised the link to poverty reduction. It is essential that debt relief leads to more resources being invested in programmes to eradicate poverty and achieve the international development goals. We are taking every opportunity to press this issue with our international partners.

26. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with representatives of non-governmental organisations concerning debt relief; and if she will make a statement. [86000]

Clare Short: I have had many meetings with NGOs to discuss debt relief. Most recently the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I met Comic Relief and the Director of the NGOs which form the British Overseas Aid Group (BOAG). We discussed the UK objectives on enhancing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative. We are seeking agreement to lower the debt to export ratio to 150 from 200 per cent. and the fiscal ratio to 200 from 280 per cent. We believe that this will provide heavily indebted poor countries with a permanent exit from their debt problems. We are also pressing for debt relief to be provided in a way that will free up resources for poverty eradication in the early years. We made clear the important contribution made by the Churches and NGOs in their international campaign for improved debt relief.

Afghanistan

10. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the aid made available to Afghanistan in the last two years. [85983]

Mr. Foulkes: We have made available more than £11 million in humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan over the last two years.

The assistance has been provided through agencies such as the International Red Cross and the United Nations for emergency medical assistance, demining and refugee protection. In addition, we have provided funds to non-governmental organisations working in rural development, health/sanitation and the education sector.

Humanitarian Aid

12. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for humanitarian aid for the states of the former Yugoslavia. [85985]

Clare Short: We are committed to respond to humanitarian needs wherever the need exists in the states of the former Yugoslavia and elsewhere. Our objective is and remains to enable the refugees from Kosovo to return to a safe and secure environment.

An emergency assessment team is currently in Kosovo making an evaluation of the most urgent humanitarian needs. We will continue to work closely with the UNHCR and other international organisations and donors.

Millennium Volunteers Programme

13. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussion she has had on proposals to include volunteers on overseas aid projects in the Millennium Volunteers Programme. [85986]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development provides £26 million support for the volunteers working on overseas development projects. Experience has taught us all that such volunteers should be skilled and experienced. This makes overseas volunteering largely inappropriate for the Millennium Volunteers Programme but final decisions have not yet been made.

Women's Education

15. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what priority she gives to the education of women in poor countries in the distribution of her aid budget. [85988]

Clare Short: Our education policy is focused on the achievement of the internationally agreed target of universal primary education by 2015 and gender equity in primary and secondary education by 2005. These are the two major benchmarks against which we will measure our progress.

Education is a basic human right for all children. There is also clear evidence that the education of girls, and women, leads to major improvements in family health, child survival and overall economic development.

Nigeria

16. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to assist the newly elected Government in Nigeria with (a) economic reconstruction and reform and (b) debt relief. [R] [85989]

Clare Short: We recognise the many problems facing the newly elected Government, in particular the scale of poverty which has been increasing in Nigeria for many years. President Obasano has pledged a new approach to economic issues but has yet to announce his programme. Alongside the IMF, World Bank, European Union and other partners, we are ready to support the process of economic change and rebuilding government capacity.

We are helping Nigeria rejuvenate its moribund debt recording and management system in order to reconcile its external position with creditors. The next step will be for the Government to complete the current IMF programme so that detailed discussions can begin on dealing with Nigeria's debts.

Kosovo (Environmental Consequences)

17. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to her oral answer of 12 May 1999, Official Report, column 303, concerning the organisations which will pay for clearing up the Danube, what discussions she has had with (a) the European Commission, (b) EU member states, (c) the International Monetary Fund, (d) the World Bank and (e) regional banks on this matter. [85991]

Clare Short: We are working closely with the European Commission, International Monetary Fund, World Bank, European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other EU member states to determine the reconstruction needs in the region, which will include environmental matters. We expect the costs for this to be assumed by the IFIs, EU and other donors, together with the countries of the region.

I met yesterday with Klaus Töpfer the Head of United Nations Environment Programme which is taking lead responsibility for urgently reviewing the environmental conditions of the condition of the Danube. He informed me that claims of large scale oil pollution were not substantiated.

24. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to assist in the environmental clearing-up in Kosovo and the surrounding region after the end of hostilities. [85998]

Clare Short: I met yesterday with Klaus Töpfer Head of Environment Programme which is the lead UN agency responsible for the environment. He is taking urgent steps to review and report on the environmental consequences of the conflict in Kosovo and Serbia.

Genetically Modified Foods

18. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of genetically modified foods in developing countries. [85992]

Clare Short: We are planning to commission a study of the costs and benefits to the livelihoods of poor people in developing countries arising from so-called "terminator" gene technologies. We are helping to fund an assessment by the International Crops Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics of the risks to biodiversity of introducing transgenic pigeonpea cultivars into traditional cropping systems in India and are also funding an analysis of the impact in the Philippines of genetically male fish (tilapia).

19. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received on the recent report by Christian Aid on food and genetic engineering. [85993]

Clare Short: I have not received any representations on the recent report by Christian Aid on food and genetic engineering. I have received a number of letters from the public expressing concerns about genetic engineering.

My officials recently held a consultation meeting with representatives from 10 non-governmental organisations, including a representative from Christian Aid, on our policy on GMOs and developing countries. This provided an opportunity to clarify the approach outlined in our published briefing note and to emphasise that the principle which guides all our activities is poverty elimination. The discussions were very constructive and helpful.

Hurricane Mitch

20. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's actions to help with reconstruction in the Central American countries affected by Hurricane Mitch. [85994]

Clare Short: Our contribution to the initial phase of reconstruction has totalled £4.2 million. In addition to immediate emergency assistance, we have provided grants to the United Nations Children's Fund for emergency repairs to water and sanitation infrastructure and to restore primary health and education services. We also provided funds for a programme of emergency repairs and rehabilitation to rural roads and bridges, and a cash for work incentive targeting particularly neglected municipalities. Regionally we have given grants to the Pan-American Health Organisation to support national health authorities, particularly for epidemic control, and to the United Nations Development Programme to support co-ordination.

Following our recommendation, the World Bank set up a Trust Fund to help countries affected by Hurricane Mitch meet their debt service payments to international financial institutions. We committed £10 million to this purpose. Bilateral Governments have also agreed to forgo debt repayments for the next two years.

In the long term we plan to spend some £6 million in the region over the next two years on measures to help with the long term reconstruction. This will include projects in health, capacity building and disaster prevention.

Banana Crop (Caribbean)

21. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the economic position of small farmers in the Caribbean who are dependent on the banana crop. [85995]

Clare Short: We fully recognise the considerable uncertainty and concern among banana farmers in the Caribbean as a result of recent World Trade Organisation ruling. We are collaborating closely with the European Commission and other member states to try to identify new trading arrangements which, with the endorsement of the different parties involved, will hold out the prospect of a viable future for a restructured Caribbean banana industry. This exercise is complex, given the range of different interests involved. We are continuing to consult closely with Caribbean Governments in the search for an acceptable solution. We are also actively involved, with the EC, in encouraging and supporting the necessary local restructuring of the banana industry to enable it to compete under a new regime.

Developing Countries (IT)

22. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to extend awareness of information technology in developing countries. [85996]

Clare Short: We are promoting awareness and the effective and appropriate use of information technology in developing countries as an integral part of many of our mainstream development projects, especially in the fields of education and governance. We also play an active role in the key multilateral initiatives addressing this issue.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

23. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of future prospects for the Commonwealth Development Corporation in Cuba. [85997]

Clare Short: The Commonwealth Development Corporation has been working in Cuba since 1996, and we expect it to continue to do so. The focus of its work will continue to be on its financing business, undertaken as a joint venture with a local bank, which is expanding its activities. CDC will also look for equity investment opportunities on a selective basis.

IMF

25. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the role of the IMF in leading the international community's efforts to help poor countries meet the 2015 international development targets. [85999]

Clare Short: Following last year's review of the IMF's Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, it was agreed that the IMF should take more account of the social impact of their programmes, consider the quality of Government expenditure and protect budgets in high priority areas such as health and education. We are encouraging the IMF to work more closely with the World Bank to ensure that, in designing structural adjustment programmes, they take account of the impact on the poor. Following proposals put forward by the UK, the World Bank is developing good practices of social policy, in consultation with the IMF. We envisage that these principles will be drawn upon by the World Bank and the IMF in the design of programmes. We continually emphasise the need for the IMF to build consensus for reform programmes, through discussion and consultation with civil society, so that they lead to economic growth which benefits the poor.

Porta Farm, Harare

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial or other assistance has been provided by her Department for the Porta Farm Development near Harare, Zimbabwe. [85990]

Clare Short: Through our Small Grants Scheme, we have provided £3,700 for construction of classrooms for pre-school and primary school children, and improved water and sanitation facilities at Porta Farm.

Kosovar Refugees

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has for provision for the Kosovar refugees during the winter; and if she will make a statement. [85978]

Clare Short: The UNHCR is the internationally designated lead agency responsible for co-ordinating provision for the refugees from Kosovo and also for the return of the refugees to Kosovo. We have worked to try to support and improve their efforts. We have provided £40 million of assistance to date and on Monday we announced a further £50 million to support the process of return to Kosovo. Details of our spending which has been channelled through the most effective agencies are available in the Library. Provision is being made for the advent of winter conditions from October onwards.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sportsmark

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those schools which have received (a) a Sportsmark and (b) an additional Gold Star award since May 1997. [86694]

Mr. Chris Smith: I am very pleased to say that over a thousand schools have now achieved a Sportsmark or Sportsmark Gold award. A full list of successful schools has today been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to extend the Sportsmark scheme to primary schools. [86693]

Mr. Chris Smith: We have no plans to extend the specific Sportsmark scheme to primary schools. However, Sport England are currently working on an Activity award for primary schools. The scheme will give national recognition to schools offering a quality programme of physical activity. They hope to introduce the award during the autumn term 1999.

Tourism

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the net effect on the balance of payments of British visitors going abroad and overseas visitors coming to the United Kingdom in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998. [86697]

Janet Anderson: The Office for National Statistics has estimated, using data from the International Passenger Survey and other sources, that the direct contribution to the UK balance of payments arising from tourism activities is as shown in the table. This is not a full account of the balance of payments effects of tourism, which would need to include, for example, overseas trade in tourism goods and the international investment flows of tourism companies.

£ million

	1996	1997	1998
Exports: earnings from overseas visitors to UK	13,770	13,805	14,432
Imports: expenditure by UK residents going abroad	16,729	17,402	20,008
Balance of trade in services	−2,959	−3,597	−5,576

Source:
Office for National Statistics 1996, 1997, 1998.

Holiday Statistics

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many British individuals took holidays abroad in the first three months of (a) 1998 and (b) 1999; and what their estimated expenditure was in these two periods. [86696]

Janet Anderson: The estimates currently available from the International Passenger Survey, conducted by the Office for National Statistics (ONS), are shown in the table. A breakdown of 1999 visits by main purpose of visit, to reveal holiday visits, is not yet due to be published by ONS.

	January-March 1998	January-March 1999
Total number of visits abroad by UK residents	9.1 million	10.3 million
Total expenditure	£3.7 billion	£4.2 billion
of which:
Holiday visits abroad by UK residents	5.1 million	n/a
Holiday expenditure	£2.1 billion	n/a

Source:
International Passenger Survey, Office for National Statistics

Millennium Experience

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps have been taken to involve communities across the UK in the Millennium Experience. [87393]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company has established a series of initiatives, as part of their National Programme of events and activities, which reaches across the UK. This includes McDonald's Our Town Story which invites towns everywhere to tell their story locally and to the world on the Our Town Story stage at the Dome during 2000. A list of all participating education authorities and library boards was placed in the Libraries of the House on 19 May.

Sport England

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the percentages of Sport England's grant-in-aid which was spent on (a) staff costs, excluding national centres, (b) administrative expenses, (c) publicity, promotions and communications, (d) grants to national governing bodies, (e) grants to the National

Coaching Foundation, (f) sports science, (g) sports medicine, (h) national centres, (i) grants to other national sports bodies, excluding NGBs and (j) regional support in 1998–99. [86695]

Mr. Chris Smith: The information the hon. Member requested on Sport England's grant-in-aid expenditure is included in the following table.

Sport England grant-in-aid expenditure

	Actual 1998–99 percentage
rrRegional Field Staff	12
National Field Staff	5
Public Information/Communication/Research	3
Corporate services (Finance/IT/Audit/Human Resources/Office Services)	5
(a) Total Staff Costs	25
(b) Administrative Expenses
Rent/Rates/Running costs	11
(c) Publicity/Promotion/Communications
Communications Programme	4
(d) Grants to National Governing Bodies
Complementing grant-in-aid provided by UKSC	16
(e) Grants to National Coaching Foundation
Complementing grant-in-aid provided by UKSC	5
(f) Sports Science/Sports Medicine
(g) Complementing grant-in-aid provided by UKSC
Sports Medicine	1
(h) National Centres
Total net costs	10
(i) Grants to other National Sports Bodies excluding NGB's
Includes the following:
Central Council for Physical Recreation
Sports Aid Foundation
Commonwealth Games Council for England
Community Sports Leadership Award Scheme
Youth Sport Trust
English Federation of Disability Sports
National Youth Games
Panathlon Foundation	7
(j) Regional Support
Includes the following:
Regional Grants
Facility Planning and Development
Equity (including Disability Grants)
Volunteer and Community Development Work	21
Total	100

SOCIAL SECURITY

"Support in Bereavement"

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide an analysis of responses made to the "Support in Bereavement" consultation document (Cmd 4104). [86126]

Angela Eagle: A summary of responses to the consultation document "A new contract for welfare: Support in Bereavement" is available in the House Library, together with a list of those organisations who responded to the consultation paper.

Copies of responses are available on request from The Widows' Benefit Consultation Team, 3rd Floor, The Adelphi, 1–11 John Adam Street, London, WC2N 6HT.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the level of earnings which would be defined as gainful employment for the purpose of claiming invalid care allowance if it had been increased in line with inflation in each year since the last increase; and what the additional cost to public funds would have been in the current year. [86852]

Mr. Bayley: The level of weekly net earnings below which it could be possible to be eligible for Invalid Care Allowance would currently be £59 if it had been increased in line with inflation since the last increase. It is not possible accurately to estimate the level of additional public expenditure which would have been incurred as a result.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the level of earnings which is defined as gainful employment for the purpose of claiming invaljd care allowance was last increased. [86851]

Mr. Bayley: The level of earnings defined as gainful employment for the purpose of claiming Invalid Care Allowance was last increased on 12 April 1993.

Benefit-related Mail

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects every local authority to have an agreement with the Post Office for preventing redirection of benefit-related mail. [86902]

Angela Eagle: Our aim is for all local authorities to operate the "do not redirect" service. The Department has written to every authority strongly encouraging them to take up this initiative but it is a matter for individual authorities to decide whether to take part based on local circumstances. To date, 90 local authorities have signed up to the service and a number of other authorities are in the process of doing so. If the current take-up rate were to continue we would expect the majority of local authorities to be operating the service within 12 months.

Earnings Top-Up

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made for renewing awards when the Earnings Top-Up pilot ends. [87594]

Angela Eagle: Earnings Top-Up (ETU) is a three-year pilot which was introduced in October 1996 to explore the effects of an in-work benefit for people without dependent children. The pilot was designed to run from 8 October 1996 to 4 October 1999 in eight areas and full evaluation findings will be available during 2001.

When the pilot was first set up, the plans included three renewal awards for people receiving Earnings Top-Up when it closed down. However, since May 1997, a range of new initiatives to help low paid workers has been introduced. Measures already introduced include the National Minimum Wage and Tax and National Insurance Contribution changes. In view of this, ETU renewals at the end of the pilot will be restricted to a single six month award.

Benefits Agency (Computerisation)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which companies the Government have made payments for consultancy regarding the computerisation of the Benefits Agency in the last three years; how much was paid to each company; what the current status of the project is; and if he will make a statement. [85437]

Angela Eagle [pursuant to her reply, 8 June 1999, c. 306–07]: The information is in the table.

Companies the Government have made payments to for consultancy regarding the computerisation of the Benefits Agency in the last three years

Project	Contract dates	Contract award value (£)	Successful company	Current status
Programme Accounting Group (PAG)—Consultancy Support	12/11/1996 to 31/12/1996	36,450	KPMG	Finished
Programme Accounting Group/Programme Accounting	21/10/1996 to 21/12/1996	63,508	SEMA	Finished
Computer System (PACS)—Consultancy Support	21/10/1996 to 31/12/1996	138,300	KPMG
Programme Design Authority (PDA)—Implementation Group Support	—	135,000	Andersens	Finished
Card Access Payment System (CAPS)—Programme and Card Payment Delivery Review	11/11/1996 to 28/2/1997	122,800	Ernst & Young	Finished
Card Access Payment System (CAPS)—Migration Conformance Manager	1/4/1997	78,000	PA Consulting	Finished
Programme Accounting Group (PAG)—IT Consultant	1/4/1997 to 30/6/1997	31,500	PricewaterhouseCoopers	Finished
Card Access Payment System (CAPS)—Consultancy Support	9/6/1997 to 8/6/1999	19,767,220	Andersens	Ongoing
		613,662	A.S.E.	Ongoing
Financial and Management Information System (FAMIS)—Study of Private Sector Partnership potential	20/5/1997 to 27/6/1997	34,900	KPMG	Finished
Card Access Payment System (CAPS)—Migration Strategy	3/2/1997 to 31/3/1997	263,221	Andersens	Finished
Programme Accounting Group	12/2/1997 to 28/3/1997	29,750	KPMG	Finished
Audit Trail Analysis System (ATAS)—Tool Development	17/3/1997 to 11/4/1997	30,000	ICL	Finished
Programme Accounting Group (PAG)—Consultancy Support	14/7/1997 to 31/1/1998	63,000	KPMG	Finished
Programme Accounting Group (PAG)—Technical Architect	15/9/1997 to 30/4/1998	135,240	A.S.E.	Finished
Banking and Accountancy Branch (BAB)—Implementation Management	3/2/1998 to 31/3/1998	76,150	SEMA	Finished
Review of BA IS/IT Strategy	11/8/1998 to 4/9/1998	16,500	PA Consulting	Finished
Card Access Payment System (CAPS)—Review of Change Management	2/2/1999 to 8/3/1999	18,800	Admiral	Finished
Banking and Accountancy Branch (BAB)—IT Consultant	15/2/1999 to 26/3/1999	29,023	PA Consulting	Finished
BA Decision Making and Appeals Implementation Programme	8/6/1998 to 30/11/1999	360,000	Andersen Consulting	Ongoing

HEALTH

Health Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outcome of the Health Council held in Luxembourg on 8 June; and if he will make a statement. [86639]

Ms Jowell: I attended the Health Council on 8 June in Luxembourg, on behalf of the United Kingdom.

The Council reached political agreement on the draft Recommendation on limitation of exposure of the general public to electromagnetic fields. This will be adopted at a future Council, subject to the lifting of the UK's Parliamentary scrutiny reserve. The Council also adopted Resolutions on antibiotic resistance and on future Community action in the field of public health and held an initial exchange of views on priorities and resources for the latter. It also adopted Conclusions on health protection requirements in Community policies. The Commission reported on the progress of the European Union—United States Task Force on Communicable Diseases and on the Community's own communicable diseases surveillance network. The Commission also presented a paper on health and enlargement, following which the Council went into an informal session to which Health Ministers from the accession candidate countries had been invited. They identified common health problems, particularly increased levels of communicable diseases, smoking, and drug and alcohol misuse.

In formal session again, the Commission said that publication of its report on the state of migrants' health in the Community would be delayed to include the health needs of refugees, in the light of the Kosovo crisis. Both the Commission and Belgium gave an oral update on the current situation following the contamination of food with dioxins in Belgium. After an oral report from the Commission on Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies in the Community, the UK updated the Council on the number of cases of variant Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease in the UK. The Council also stated its support for the World Health Organisation's "Tobacco Free Initiative".

Gynaecologists (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place for the recruitment of consultant gynaecologists in North Yorkshire NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement. [86476]

Mr. Denham: The standard National Health Service recruitment procedures are in place.

Central Public Health Laboratory

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the present recruitment and retention position at the Central Public Health Laboratory; and if he will investigate the feasibility of bringing medical laboratory staff within the pay and conditions arrangements of the Pay Review Body structure. [86920]

Mr. Denham: Medical Laboratory Scientific Officer staff at the Central Public Health Laboratory are employed by the Public Health Laboratory Service Board. Their recruitment and retention is a matter for that body.

These staff are employed under the Professional and Technical Staffs B Whitley Council terms and conditions, which apply to all similar staff within the National Health Service. The management side of the Whitley Council has made a pay offer for 1999–2000 based on issues specific to these staff, including recruitment and retention, affordability, NHS output targets and the economic context.

We are also discussing with all NHS unions proposals to modernise the NHS pay system published on 15 February 1999 in "Agenda for Change".

St. Dunstan's

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he has refused the application for financial assistance from St. Dunstan's Charity for Service War Blinded under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. [86923]

Mr. Hutton: No application for Section 64 funding has been received from St. Dunstan's in relation to its own work of providing training and long-term care for men and women who lost their sight while serving in the armed forces. However the Diana Gubbay Trust for the Blind, which is administered by St. Dunstan's to provide care to former members of the armed forces and the civilian forces whose blindness is not attributable to service, has applied for core funding in each of the last two years.

The funds available under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 are finite and many more applications are received from voluntary organisations than it is possible to meet. We considered both applications from the Diana Gubbay Trust very carefully, but concluded that other applications were stronger.

DTP Vaccine

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the batch of DTP vaccine withdrawn by the Bath and West Community NHS Trust was (a) whole cell or (b) acellular vaccine; which pharmaceutical company supplied the vaccine; and when the vaccine batch was manufactured. [86862]

Ms Jowell: This batch was a combined diphtheria/tetanus/whole cell pertussis vaccine manufactured by Behring and distributed in the United Kingdom by Wyeth Vaccines. It was manufactured on 18 June 1998.

Calendar Packs

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the practice among pharmacists of dispensing calendar packs instead of the doses prescribed by doctors. [87014]

Mr. Denham: Calendar packs are typically produced for medicines taken over long periods or for defined course lengths. Because the days of the week are printed alongside the tablets, splitting the packs could result in patients receiving partial strips of tablets labelled with confusing and inappropriate assortments of days of the week. It is long-standing practice, as permitted by their terms of service, for community pharmacists to dispense the nearest number of complete packs or sub-packs in situations where the quantity prescribed differs from the quantity in the pack and where, in their opinion, it was not the intention of the prescriber that only the exact quantity be dispensed. We have had no reports that this has caused any clinical difficulties.

NHS Pensions Agency

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the key targets for 1999–2000 for the NHS Pensions Agency. [87398]

Mr. Denham: We have agreed the Agency's key targets for 1999–2000, and have placed copies in the Library.

Written Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87330]

Ms Jowell: Since 15 April 1999, 172 parliamentary questions have been tabled to this Department for answer on a named day. Of these 151, or 88 per cent., have been answered substantively on that day.

Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses there were in the Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust Area on 31 March (i) 1997 and (ii) 1999; and what was the capital spending in the Trust area in (1) 1996–97 and (2) 1998–99. [87045]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Year	Doctors	Nurses	Capital spend (£ million)
1997	240	1,310	12.0
1999	—	—	7.3

[1] Data are for 30 September 1997 as the census is taken each year at 30 September. Data for following years are unavailable because they have not yet been published, or, in the case of 1999, not yet collected.

[2] No data available.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to his Department for each year since 1996 of support for asylum seekers who are not eligible for social security benefits. [86891]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has paid grants to local authorities in respect of support for asylum seekers under the Children Act 1989 and National Assistance Act 1948 in 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. Details of the total amounts paid are shown in the table.

£ million

	Grant paid
	1996–98	1997–98	1998–99
Unaccompanied children	3	1.587	20.157
Families with children	4.137	28.440	80.074
Single adults	5.627	39.577	89.813

PRIME MINISTER

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what measures he is planning as part of a general settlement on Kosovo, to encourage displaced persons to return to their homes. [86367]

The Prime Minister: NATO's KFOR is helping to create a secure environment in which refugees and displaced persons can return home. The United Kingdom is working closely with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to facilitate such returns, including by helping to carry food and other essential supplies into Kosovo.

Kashmir

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if he proposes to discuss the issue of Kashmir at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in November. [86993]

The Prime Minister: The draft agenda for the next meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government has not yet been circulated. We are not aware of any plans to discuss Kashmir.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Links

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total income of Business Links nationally broken down by (a) his Department's grants, (b) EU and other public funding, (c) charges to customers and (d) grants from Business Link national partners for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and what estimate he has made for 1999–2000. [86637]

Mr. Wills: The total amount of funding provided for the Business Links programme by the Department in the periods 1997–98 and 1998–99 were £129.2 million and £121.1 million respectively. For 1999–2000, the Department has earmarked £139 million for Business Links programme funding, which includes an element of funding specifically for developing services of the new Small Business Service.

Business Links are private, independent organisations and the Department does not collect statistics on income from EU and other public funding or on grants from Business Link national partners. But we estimate that total Business Link company fee income from customers to be of the order of £21 million in 1997–98, £31 million in 1998–99 and £36 million in 1999–2000.

Information Society Local Support Centres

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many departmental Information Society Initiative Local Support Centres have been established; and how many more are planned. [86635]

Mr. Wills: Eighty Information Society Initiative (ISI) Local Support Centres have been established. A further 20 are planned and these should be open by the end of 1999 to give a UK wide network of 100 Local Support Centres.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from industry concerning the proposed climate change levy. [87031]

Mr. Battle: My Department is having extensive discussions with business on the impact of the climate change levy, and the accompanying reduction in employer National Insurance Contributions (NICs), which were announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget, 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–90.

Tax forms part of the Government's strategy on climate change. However, we have said that we wish to implement the climate change levy in a way which minimises any adverse impact on the competitiveness of UK business. The Government will continue to listen to the views of business and as raised in response to HM Customs and Excise's consultation on the levy, which ended on 28 May. Final decisions on the design of the levy, including its rates, will be taken for inclusion in the Finance Bill 2000 in the light of these representations.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact on jobs of the proposed climate change levy. [87032]

Mr. Battle: My Department has received many representations from business on the impact of the climate change levy, some of which have raised concerns about its impact on employment.

The levy will form part of our strategy on climate change. We are also developing negotiated agreements and emissions trading as means by which business can contribute to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. We want to give business the chance to develop the cost-effective solutions to emissions reductions and to make the most of the new business opportunities which should flow from climate change in the years to come: new markets and new goods and services, which may have positive implications for employment.

Benefit Swipecard

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the reduction in revenue to post offices under the proposed swipecard. [86929]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The Horizon platform, which is planned to be installed throughout the Post Office network by 2001, is compatible with both magnetic swipecard and smartcard technology.

As announced on 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 21, the project will no longer incorporate the magnetic swipe benefit payment card. Existing paper based methods of paying benefits in post offices will continue until 2003 after which the Benefits Agency intends to move over a period of two years to a more modern and efficient way of paying benefits using the existing automated credit transfer system. This will enable payments to be made into bank accounts. A number of banks already allow access to personal accounts at post offices, and the period to 2003 will allow the Post Office to develop its relationship with the banking industry and the range of services it offers to personal customers.

The contractual arrangements between the Post Office and its banking partners for providing access to bank accounts at post offices will remain a commercially confidential matter between the parties.

Company Law

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the need to amend company law to provide for the validity of meetings and their subsequent decisions conducted by tele-conferencing and related technology. [87135]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The DTI's view is that the general law already provides for general meetings of shareholders to be held in more than one physical site, provided that these are appropriately linked. Subject to the company's Articles, meetings of directors may be conducted in a medium the directors think fit, for example, by telephone or by video conference.

In March 1998, the DTI launched a fundamental review of company law which is being taken forward by an independent Steering Group. The Steering Group is considering all wider policy issues surrounding the role and place of the general meeting of shareholders and the mechanisms for company decision making, including the implications of modern technologies for statutory rules for meetings.

Written Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87325]

Mr. Battle: Between 15 April and 15 June, 126 questions for answer on a named day were tabled to this Department, 49 per cent. of these received a substantive answer on the named day.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department has taken to increase co-ordination between the various regional development agencies following the implementation of devolution. [87046]

Mr. Wills: The Chief Executive of the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB), which is jointly managed by the DTI and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, continues to chair the Committee on Overseas Promotion (COP). The role of COP is to co-ordinate UK promotion of inward investment and avoid unnecessary duplication of effort by publicly funded promotional bodies. Members include representatives from the agencies for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, the eight Regional Development Agencies in England and London First Centre. We are also encouraging the Regional Development Agencies in England to continue to explore and build on closer collaboration on overseas marketing and representation with neighbouring regions.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to integrate the grant for reducing infant class size into the rate support grant to local education authorities to enable this funding to be provided through the local management of schools formula. [86682]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 14 June 1999]: We are providing specific grant funding to enable Local Education Authorities to meet our pledge to limit the size of infant classes to 30 or below by September 2001. No decisions have yet been taken on the mechanisms for funding smaller infant class sizes beyond 2001–02 but revenue funding will continue to enable schools to continue to employ teachers taken on as a result of the class size policy.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 21 May 1999, Official Report, column 474, on the New Deal for Young People, when he expects to be able to provide the number of New Deal trainees in various sectors of industry. [85559]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 8 June 1999]: Improved information on the number of New Deal job starts by employers should be available by October, depending on progress on upgrading the Labour Market System. For the longer term, the Employment Service is working with its IT supplier to enhance further the full range of its management information systems.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the (a) median and (b) average length of time spent on the Gateway of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds by those for whom no eventual destination is known. [85863]

Mr. Andrew Smith: For the period ending March 1999 the median length of time spent on the New Deal Gateway by those young people who leave for an unknown destination is 71 days. The mean average length of time is 85 days.

Secondary Schools (Leicestershire)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each secondary school in Leicestershire for the academic year 1999–2000 (a) its official pupil capacity, (b) the number of pupils actually at the school, (c) the average cost per pupil and (d) the number of (i) teachers and (ii) full-time equivalents employed. [86641]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information for individual schools is not published centrally. Information for 1999–2000 has not yet been collected. The most recently available information is shown in the following table.

LEA maintained secondary schools only. Leicestershire Local Education Authority area. Academic Year 1997–98

	Numbers
Total pupil capacity	43,224
Total number on roll	38,981
Average cost per pupil	£2,296.70
Total number of teachers	2,695
FTE number of teachers	2,279.9

Provisional data

Employment Action Plan

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place copies of the United Kingdom's Employment Action Plan in the Library. [87396]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Copies of the UK Employment Action Plan, which sets out the Government's policies for implementing the 1999 Employment Guidelines agreed at the European Council held in Vienna in December 1998, have been placed in the Library. The Plan contains the latest information on policies for employment, encouraging entrepreneurship and labour market adaptability, lifelong learning and equal opportunities.

European Union Youth Council

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Youth Council meeting on 27 May. [87397]

Mr. Mudie: I attended the Council of Youth Ministers in Brussels on 27 May 1999.

The Council adopted common positions on the Commission's proposals to establish a new Youth programme, and the next phase of the Daphne programme of measures to combat violence against women and children. Council also considered a Presidency Memorandum stressing the importance of addressing youth issues in the context of employment policy, and noted that the Commission will adopt a Communication on implementing measures to combat child sex tourism.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many broiler chickens were dead on arrival at UK poultry slaughterhouses in (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998. [86207]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Dead on arrival
1997
Great Britain	709,291,374	1,350,338
Northern Ireland	60,270,049	172,701
1998
Great Britain	713,047,348	1,128,655
Northern Ireland	61,774,233	115,176

Please note that the total throughput figures provided for Great Britain for 1997 and 1998 are not directly comparable, owing to the method for collecting these data having changed slightly.

BSE (USA)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to investigate reports of the presence of BSE in the USA. [86872]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 June 1999]: We have asked the United States Government to comment on the recent reports of the presence of BSE in the USA. The United States has not reported any cases of BSE to the international veterinary organisation, the OIE.

Genetically Modified Foods

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the antibiotic marker genes, and the antibiotics to which they convey resistance, that have been used in the genetic modification of crops from which genetically modified foods available in the United Kingdom have been produced. [86318]

Mr. Rooker: Of the GM foods available in the UK, the npt II gene which confers resistance to kanamycin is present in the tomatoes used to produce tomato paste, but is not detectable in the paste itself. There are no ARMs in Monsanto's GM soya bean. The GM maize developed by Ciba Geigy (now Novartis) contains the ampr gene, which confers resistance to ampicillin, although the gene is degraded and thus no longer capable of functioning when processed into food ingredients.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what food safety tests were carried out on Monsanto's genetically modified Round-up Ready soya bean after spraying with Round-up herbicide; what was the nature of the tests; what data has been supplied by Monsanto; and on what date the information was supplied; [86320]

(2) what tests have been conducted to assess the safety of feeding genetically modified Round-up Ready soya beans to animals; who conducted the tests and when; and what data has been supplied on the feeding of Round-up Ready soya bean following spraying of the crop with Round-up. [86319]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes considered data provided by Monsanto on its genetically modified Round-up Ready soya bean, including that obtained from feeding studies on animals, over the period 1994–96. The information that was assessed also encompassed the results of proximate analysis, including an analysis of phytoestrogen levels, on seeds obtained from field trials of GM soya which had been treated with the herbicide Round-up.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if all foods on sale which contain genetically modified soya beans have had those soya beans subject to safety testing after being sprayed with the herbicide they are designed to resist; and if he will make a statement. [86747]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 June 1999]: Yes. In 1996, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes considered data supplied by Monsanto on its genetically modified Round-up Ready soya bean after spraying with Round-up herbicide and, contrary to recent reports in the press, found that levels of phytoestrogen were comparable to those in conventional soya beans. The data have been deposited in the British Library (SUP No.11093).

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government are taking to assist dairy farmers who are suffering as a result of low milk prices. [86437]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 June 1999]: Apart from the operation of the Common Agricultural Policy, the price milk producers receive for their products is a commercial matter.

Written Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87322]

Mr. Morley: One hundred and five. Of those eligible for answer on or before 15 June 1999, 51 per cent. received a substantive reply on the named day.

CABINET OFFICE

Monsanto

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the trips, facilities, gifts and other offerings of a financial value provided by Monsanto to civil servants since 1 May 1997. [85962]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The information requested in respect of all civil servants is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. As far as I am aware, since 1 May 1997 no civil servant working in the Prime Minister's Office or the Cabinet Office and its agencies, has accepted any trips, facilities, gifts or other offering provided by Monsanto.

Archway Tower

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) what is the total expenditure on the refurbishment of Archway Tower, Junction Road, N19 over the past three years; what rental income has been received over that period; and what rental income is expected for the duration of the current lease; [86897]

(2) what expenditure has been made on rent for Archway Tower, N19, in each year since 1995; and what rent he expects to pay for the remaining period of the lease. [86898]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 16 June 1999:

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Cabinet Office, Peter Kilfoyle, has asked me to reply to your questions about expenditure and rental income on Archway Tower.

Further to my letter of 4 March 1999 I can advise that capital expenditure from 1 April 1998 to date now totals £4.3 million. Refurbishment work to ten floors was completed in April 1999 and PACE have recently let the contract for the final phase of work, following competitive tendering.

In my previous letter, I outlined the impracticality of re-using the building until after completion of the first phase of refurbishment. There was therefore no income during this period. However, there are now ten floors available for sub letting and our agents DTZ Debenham Thorpe are currently marketing them on our behalf. These floors total 4,210 sq m (45,230 sq ft) for which PACE are seeking a rent of £134.56 per sq m (£12.50 per sq ft). The floors are being offered to Government Departments as well as the private sector with the aid of brochures, advertisements, mail-shots and distribution of CD Roms. Once the final phase of five floors (1,684 sq m 18,092 sq ft) is complete and the building fully let, the total rental income should amount to £791,525 pa. This level of income should be achievable for the duration of the Secretary of State's Lease, which is subject to rent review.

Rental expenditure for each year since 1995 has been £884,000 pa for the building, with an additional £29,400 pa for 49 car parking spaces. The Secretary of State's Lease is subject to two further rent reviews at 25 December 1999 and 25 December 2004. At the next review, the landlord may seek an uplift in rent and Property Consultants, DTZ Debenham Thorpe are currently advising PACE on rental value for the review. The expectation is that the current rent paid of £884,000 pa should not increase, but it is not possible to forecast whether there is likely to be an increase from the rent review in December 2004.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 17 June 1999

PRIME MINISTER

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the agenda of the planned Intergovernmental Conference of Spring 2000. [87307]

The Prime Minister: The Cologne European Council took decisions about the timing, scope and preparation of the next Intergovernmental Conference. These are set out in the Presidency conclusions, which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government received prior communication from Russian sources of an intent to occupy areas of strategic importance in Kosovo independently of NATO. [87300]

The Prime Minister: We and NATO have long made clear that we looked forward to a substantial Russian contribution to KFOR, the NATO-led peacekeeping force in Kosovo. Russia did not notify NATO in advance that it intended to deploy a small unit to Pristina airfield but, as the commander of KFOR has explained, this Russian unit had not affected either the deployment of NATO forces or the implementation of the Kosovo peace agreement. NATO is working with Russia on detailed command and control arrangements for Russian forces in KFOR.

Security and Intelligence Services

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under the Security Service Act 1989 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [87661]

The Prime Minister: A copy of the annual report of the Commissioner, Lord Justice Stuart-Smith, for 1998 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 4(6) of the Security Service Act 1989. The confidential annex to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 4(7) of the 1989 Act and in line with the Commissioner's recommendation. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issues of warrants under the Intelligence Services Act 1994.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under the Intelligence Services Act 1994 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [87662]

The Prime Minister: A copy of the annual report of the Commissioner, Lord Justice Stuart-Smith, for 1998 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(6) of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. The confidential annexe to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(7) of the 1994 Act. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants and authorisations, and in providing assistance to the Tribunal as provided for in the Act.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under section 8(1) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [87663]

The Prime Minister: A copy of the annual report of the Commissioner, Lord Nolan, for 1998 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential annexe to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the 1985 Act and in accordance with the Commissioner's recommendations. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants during the year. I note in particular the Commissioner's view that interception of both postal communications and telecommunications remains an effective and an essential operation in the interests of national security and the economic well-being of the United Kingdom, and the prevention and detection of serious crime.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 283–84, if he will (a) list Government expenditure on ministerial overseas visits at current prices for the financial years 1993–94 to 1998–99, (b) list all visits overseas undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing in excess of £500 between 2 May 1997 and 31 March 1999 including the cost, destination and purpose of the visit and (c) publish the rules governing travel by Ministers. [87665]

The Prime Minister: Expenditure on Ministerial overseas visits for the periods requested is estimated as follows:

Year	£ million
1993–94	6.5
1994–95	6.6
1995–96	6.9
1996–97	7.8
1 May 1997–31 March 1998	6.1
1998–99	4.8

The figures for 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 do not include some expenditure falling to the Scottish Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Welsh Office because the information was not recorded centrally or is incomplete. Full costs are available from 1996–97 onwards. All figures are in 1997–98 prices. The figure for 1998–99 reflects payments made so far for travel undertaken in this period; a few bills have yet to be submitted to departments for payment.

A list of all visits overseas undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during the period 2 May 1997 and 31 March 1999 has been placed in the Libraries of the House. The list provides details of the date, destination and purpose of all such visits and the cost of Ministers' travel and accommodation where appropriate. Comprehensive listings for earlier years is not available.

Guidance on travel by Ministers is set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers. The rules on travel by Ministers are the same as those that applied under the previous Administration. Travel by Ministers has always been an internal guidance document. However, in line with this Government's commitment to greater openness, I have decided to publish the document and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The Ministerial Code is already in the public domain.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many fraud cases the Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service have brought to a successful conclusion in this financial year; and if he will break this figure down by administrative region. [86900]

Mr. Timms: Operational matters are the responsibility of the Benefits Agency Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 16 June 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many fraud cases the Benefit Agency Security and Investigation Service has brought to a successful conclusion in this financial year; and if he will break this figure down by administrative region.

As at 31 May 1999, the BASIS has brought to a successful conclusion thirty one cases in the Southern Area and thirty six in the Northern Area.

I hope that this is helpful.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

China Western Poverty Reduction Project

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from the Chinese Ambassador concerning the Qinghai component of the China Western Poverty Reduction Project. [87124]

Clare Short: None.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from (a) Tibetans in Dulan county and (b) other interested parties concerning the Qinghai component of the China Western Poverty Reduction Project. [87122]

Clare Short: We have not received any representations from Tibetan or other ethnic groups living in Dulan county. A number of UK non-governmental organisations have written to me.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what assessment she has made of the impact on the indigenous population of the Qinghai component of the China Western Poverty Reduction Project; [87118]

(2) if she will make a statement on the World bank category B environmental status given to the China Western Poverty Reduction Project; [87120]

(3) if she will make a statement on the consultation process undertaken by the World bank with the people currently living in the move-in area of the proposed China Western Poverty Reduction Project; [87121]

(4) if she will provide details of the World bank's environmental impact assessments of the Qinghai component of the China Western Poverty Reduction Project. [87123]

Clare Short: The World bank's staff appraisal report on this project was made available at the end of last week. I will write to the hon. Member when we have had an opportunity to study this.

Southern Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current humanitarian situation in southern Sudan. [87114]

Clare Short: Southern Sudan has some of the worst malnutrition and mortality rates in the world. While the situation in the south this year is significantly better than in 1998, it is essential that a long term and just peace is achieved in Sudan. Until it is, crises on the scale of last year are liable to reoccur at any time.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current harvest and food levels in southern Sudan. [87115]

Clare Short: The best estimates available indicate that total productive efforts, that is from fishing and livestock as well as the last harvest production, should be sufficient to meet about 90 per cent. of needs in southern Sudan this year. The actual ability of the rural population in southern Sudan to meet their own needs remains dependent on external factors such as the level of insecurity and internal displacement.

World Bank Projects

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the World bank projects involving (a) the construction of dams and (b) population resettlement, which have been given category "B" status. [87119]

Clare Short: The World bank informs us that according to the information in its database, there are 95 projects currently under implementation which are listed as having significant dam components. Of these, 41 are listed as Environmental Assessment category "B" projects. According to the report "Inventory of Projects with Involuntary Resettlement" dated 14 June 1999, the bank has 234 projects with resettlement which are currently under implementation. Of these, 122 projects are classified as category "B" projects.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if another member state of the European Union were to license the commercial planting of genetically modified crops by a company there would be any bar to that company proceeding with commercial planting in the United Kingdom. [86135]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 June 1999]: Commercial growing of a genetically modified crop can be approved only at community level, not by an individual member state. The relevant legislation is Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). Under Part C of this Directive, applications for consent for placing on the market products containing or consisting of GMOs must be considered and cleared by all member states at the Community level. Once a GM crop has Part C (marketing) consent under the Directive, it applies across all member states, including, of course, the United Kingdom.

However, before any new variety of a crop, including GM varieties, can be grown commercially, it also has to have passed the necessary tests and be placed either on the UK national list of seeds or the EU common catalogue. If the crop is herbicide tolerant, the use of that herbicide on the GM crop may also require specific approval under the pesticides legislation.

Specific conditions may be attached to consents issued under the Directive, for example to limit the geographical area in which the GM crop is grown or used. But in absence of any such restrictions and subject to the other necessary approvals for any crop being in place, there is no bar to commercial planting in the UK.

A safeguard clause, Article 16, in the Directive allows a member state provisionally to restrict or prohibit the use and/or sale on its territory of a GMO that has been given consent if there are justifiable reasons to consider that the product constitutes a risk to human health or the environment. In such circumstances a decision on whether or not to uphold the consent is subsequently taken at Community level after consideration of the new evidence.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has obtained about the use of antibiotic marker genes in genetically modified plants which provide raw materials for the production of cosmetics and perfumes. [86316]

Mr. Meacher: All releases of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are governed by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 as amended. Under the Regulations, the possible effects of using antibiotic marker genes in a GM plant on human health or the environment are considered as part of the approvals process. However, once any GM plant material had been processed for use in products such as cosmetics and perfumes, it would not come under the scope of these Regulations because it is no longer a living organism, i.e. not capable of replication or of transferring genetic material. The products would, however, be assessed under the Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations 1996 to ensure that they are not harmful to human health.

The Government welcome the European Commission's plan to develop harmonised guidelines for GMO risk assessments for cosmetic products and will push in Europe for their adoption.

Asbestos Imports

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, columns 170–71, when he expects to make a decision on the recommendation of the Health and Safety Commission to implement a ban on white asbestos; and when he expects the European Commission to ratify the vote of their Technical Committee to tighten the restrictions on the import of white asbestos; and if he will make a statement. [86651]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are determined to apply further necessary restrictions to the importation, marketing and use of white asbestos. I have received advice from the Health and Safety Commission about those new restrictions in the form of draft regulations. I will act on that advice as soon as the European Commission has ratified the vote of their technical committee on 4 May to adapt to technical progress Council Directive 76/769/EEC. Under European law, it would be illegal for new domestic restrictions to be introduced before this has happened. I am hopeful that the European Commission will ratify the adaptation directive this month. The UK continues to encourage the European Commission to act swiftly on this vitally important measure.

House Adaptations

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the research conducted by Age Concern and RADAR into the performance of local authorities in meeting their duties to provide adaptations for older and disabled people. [86918]

Mr. Raynsford: I have read with interest the initial findings of the research undertaken by Age Concern and RADAR. We are currently consulting on "You and Your Services", a draft charter for long-term care, and would encourage Age Concern and RADAR in their response to consider how that charter could be used as a basis for setting targets for performance on housing adaptations. My Department is addressing other issues of local authority performance in this area in the work we are doing to develop the Best Value regime, and in our guidance to local authorities on the Housing Investment Programme. We will consider these issues further in the light of our consideration of the recent report by the Royal Commission on Long Term Care.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to update the joint Department of Health and Department of the Environment Circular 10/90 (LAC (90)7), on house adaptations for people with disabilities. [86919]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has no plans to update the Circular. It was replaced in December 1996 by a new Circular, Department of the Environment Circular 17/96, which contained guidance on changes made by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 to local housing authorities' responsibilities. The parts of Circular 17/96 which updated Circular 10/90 were written in consultation with the Department of Health, and that Circular was sent to all local authorities, including those responsible for the provision of social services.

Right to Roam

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with English Nature on the environmental impact of a right to roam in (a) national nature reserves, (b) Ramsar sites, (c) special protection areas under the EU Birds Directive, (d) special areas of conservation under the EU Habitats Directive, (e) sites of special scientific interest and (f) other environmentally sensitive areas. [86421]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 14 June 1999]: Before reaching our decision to legislate for a new statutory right of access to open countryside, we consulted a wide range of organisations, including English Nature. In addition to that, I have regular quarterly meetings with English Nature, where we have exchanged views on the Government's access proposals.

Access on foot is generally compatible with the conservation of wildlife. Indeed, many sites protected under national and international legislation are already open to public access. However, we recognise that restrictions on access may, in some cases, be necessary to protect particular wildlife interests. We shall, therefore, be looking to English Nature to provide advice on the need for closures and restrictions on conservation grounds.

Rent Levels

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's system of monitoring the rent levels of local authority (a) leased property and (b) allocated bed-and-breakfast accommodation. [86890]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 16 June 1999]: Our system of monitoring local authority rents does not cover these types of property, which would fall outside an authority's Housing Revenue Account.

South West Water

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take action to ensure that South West Water reduces its increase in consumer bills. [87138]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 16 June 1999]: Under the Water Industry Act 1991, the regulation of water and sewerage undertakers' price limits is for the Director General of Water Services. Changes in average charges for water and sewerage services must remain within limits set by the Director General for each company for each year. The price limits governing South West Water in 1999–2000 are those determined on appeal in 1995 by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (RPI + 1% on average).

The Director General is currently conducting his periodic review of prices for the period 2000 to 2005. The Government have given guidance to the Director General on the environmental and water quality improvements to be delivered by 2005. We believe that these can be secured while offering reductions of around 10 per cent. in average water and sewerage bills. The Director General expects to announce draft price limits for each undertaker in July.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the Regional Development Agencies. [86510]

Mr. Meale: The Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) inherited the main part of their staff and programmes on 1 April 1999, so it is too early for a formal assessment of their impact. However, early indications are that the RDAs are making good progress on building partnerships with regional stakeholders. They are also on target for producing draft regional strategies for consultation over the summer.

British Waterways

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to appoint a new Chairman for British Waterways; and if he will make a statement. [87636]

Mr. Meale: Dr. George Greener, ex-group chief executive, Hillsdown Holdings, will succeed Bernard Henderson as Chairman of British Waterways (BW) on 10 July. The appointment will be for three years.

The new Chairman's main priority will be to steer BW in its new direction following my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's announcement on 18 February about the Government's decision on the future status and direction for BW. Dr. Greener will need to ensure that BW develops successful and innovative partnerships with the public, private and voluntary sectors and maximises its contribution towards the Government's objectives for transport, regeneration, conservation and amenity.

Dr. Greener's strong commercial background and previous experience of strategic leadership will be invaluable at what is a significant time for BW. He will continue to hold a small number of non executive directorships.

I would like to acknowledge the commitment and enthusiasm Bernard Henderson has brought to BW over the past five years and the important contribution he has made during the Government's review of options for the future of BW.

I am issuing a news release today announcing Dr. Greener's appointment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Businesses

17. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his proposals for reducing the burdens on small businesses. [86511]

Mr. Wills: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced a number of deregulatory measures which will benefit small business:

the draft National Minimum Wage regulations were amended to reduce record keeping requirements;

supplementary guidance will be produced on the Working Time Regulations to make it clear that for the vast majority of British businesses, existing documentation and systems already meet the record-keeping requirements;

we will consider using sunset clauses in some future regulations causing them to lapse after a fixed term unless renewed; and in addition I have today published a consultation paper which sets out our proposals for a new service to help small employers get to grips with running a payroll.

These measures will benefit thousands of businesses, in particular small businesses, and significantly reduce their costs. My right hon. Friend has made clear his intention to announce further measures to reduce burdens on business over the coming weeks.

Renewable Energy

18. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in response to his Department's paper on renewable energy. [86512]

Mr. Battle: We have received well over 200 written responses from a wide variety of interests including Members of Parliament, the renewable energy and electricity industries, renewable energy trade associations, academia and business institutions, developers and designers, environmental lobby groups, and members of the public. The responses are presently being analysed.

Part-time Work Directive

19. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress his Department has made on the implementation of the part-time work directive. [86514]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Employment Relations Bill contains powers for the Secretary of State to make regulations and issue codes of practice which will implement the Directive. The Department will consult on implementation over the summer, with a view to bringing the measures into force by the deadline of 7 April 2000.

EU Energy Markets

20. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that United Kingdom companies can compete in European Union energy markets. [86515]

Mr. Battle: We are driving forward the agenda to create a single European market in gas and electricity. At the Energy Council on 11 May I stressed the importance of creating a single open and competitive market in Europe rather than 15 individual and separate open markets for each member state. I also stressed the need for the Council to regularly review progress and the Commission resolved to provide progress reports.

Competition

21. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure fair and open competition between companies in the United Kingdom. [86516]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Competition Act 1998 will introduce tough new powers to deal with anti-competitive agreements and abuses of market dominance when its main provisions are brought into force on 1 March 2000. These include strong powers of investigation, a power to take interim measures where necessary pending the completion of an investigation, powers to direct undertakings to bring infringements to an end and powers to impose penalties for breaches of the prohibitions. The Director General of Fair Trading has the main responsibility for enforcement of the new Act and extra resources have been provided to the Office of Fair Trading for that purpose.

British Manufacturers

22. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he plans to improve the international competitiveness of British manufacturers. [86517]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The 77 commitments of Government action in the Competitiveness White Paper published last December are aimed at increasing the competitiveness of all business and many are directly relevant to manufacturers. Fifteen commitments have already been delivered and work is well underway on all the others, which collectively represent a long-term agenda for Government and industry. Manufacturing will play a key role in this work.

European Directives (Business Costs)

23. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates his Department has made of the cost of the (a) social chapter's parental leave directive, (b) works councils directive and (c) part-time work directive to British business. [86518]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Employment Relations Bill estimated the recurring compliance costs to business of the Parental Leave to be £28.8 million.

A Compliance Cost Assessment was attached to the Explanatory Memoranda submitted to this House and another place on 28 October 1997 in relation to the European Works Councils Directive. The Government are carrying out further work to update and refine those estimates which will be published shortly as part of a consultation exercise on the implementation.

A Compliance Cost Assessment was attached to the Explanatory Memorandum submitted to this House on 17 March 1998 in relation to the part-time work directive. As stated in the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Employment Relations Bill, there is evidence to suggest that discrimination is not wide spread and costs should therefore be low. A Regulatory Impact Assessment will accompany the draft Regulations.

National Minimum Wage

24. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure the prosecution of employers paying their staff less than the national minimum wage. [86519]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Inland Revenue enforce the national minimum wage on behalf of this Department. Inspectors have powers to inspect records and to issue enforcement and penalty notices. They can prosecute the worst offenders for the criminal offence of 'refusal or wilful neglect' to pay the minimum wage, and for offences relating to record keeping and obstruction of officers. The decision to prosecute in a particular case will be a matter for the Revenue.

Enforcement Officers respond to complaints from workers and from other employers, and will shortly begin targeted inspections of low-paying employers.

25. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his actions to enforce the minimum wage. [86521]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Secretary of State has made arrangements with the Inland Revenue to enforce the national minimum wage on behalf of this Department. Enforcement is carried out through a helpline, a compliance co-ordination team and by a network of minimum wage inspectors in the regions.

Officers respond to complaints from workers and employers, and will shortly begin proactive inspections of low-paying employers.

E-commerce

26. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about Government proposals in respect of encryption in electronic commerce. [86522]

Mr. Wills: Encryption technology, whether used for authentication or confidentiality purposes, has a significant role to play in the emerging importance of electronic business and electronic government. I intend to give a boost to the use of these important technologies in the legislation on electronic commerce I will shortly bring before the House.

27. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his plans to regulate electronic commerce. [86523]

Mr. Wills: I am pleased to say our recent consultation—Building Confidence in Electronic Commerce—announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 5 March 1999, Official Report, columns 928–29, resulted in over 240 responses, from industry and other interested parties.

The Government intend to introduce legislation on electronic commerce during the current session.

British Steel Industry

28. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on recent developments in the British steel industry. [86525]

Mr. Battle: The UK steel industry remains one the most productive and competitive in the world.

If my hon. Friend's question refers to the recent announcement by British Steel that it intends to merge with the Dutch steel producer, Koninklijke Hoogovens, I should advise him that the proposed merger is likely to be subject to European competition rules. Given the UK's part in any competition investigation, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

British Aerospace

29. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with British Aerospace on future prospects for the aircraft industry; and if he will make a statement. [86527]

Mr. Battle: I and my officials maintain regular contact with British Aerospace and other companies involved in the aerospace and defence industries. Indeed I was happy to attend the Paris Air show earlier this week when I enjoyed constructive discussions with many of industry's key players. Our discussions cover a wide range of issues relevant to the future success of these sectors, including the need to play a leading role in international restructuring and to maintain global competitiveness.

Manufacturing Competitiveness (English Regions)

30. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to increase the (a) export success and (b) manufacturing competitiveness of the English regions. [86528]

Mr. Wills: The Competitiveness White Paper published last December set out 77 commitments for Government action aimed at increasing the export success and competitiveness of all businesses, including manufacturing, throughout the UK. We recognise that each region has different needs. The Regional Development Agencies have therefore been asked to identify measures in their forthcoming economic strategies which are aimed at improving business competitiveness. I have made funds available to Regional Development Agencies to address the priorities they identify. Pending the establishment of the London Development Agency next year, my Department is supporting similar work being undertaken by the London Development Partnership.

British Trade International, the new unified DTI/FCO operation for trade promotion, will place greater emphasis on effective delivery of export services in the English regions. The regional and local network, currently in Government Offices and Business Links, will be integral to the new service and under the effective control of the Chief Executive, Sir David Wright. British Trade International will work closely with the Small Business Service and Regional Development Agencies as the new trade promotion organisation takes shape.

I have also given my backing to the CBI's "Fit for the Future" campaign which aims to help to improve business competitiveness by the adoption of "best practice" techniques.

Small Business Service

31. Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in implementing the Small Business Service. [86529]

Mr. Wills: The Government announced their plans to set up the Small Business Service in the Budget statement. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry reinforced this in his statement to the House on 10 March, 1999, Official Report, columns 367-69.

We will be publishing a consultation document shortly on the specific role and functions of the Small Business Service. I will be welcoming views from all interested parties.

Car Prices

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress made with his inquiry into UK car prices. [86496]

Dr. Howells: The Director General of Fair Trading referred the market for new cars to the Competition Commission on 17 March this year. The conduct of the inquiry is entirely a matter for the Commission. The Commission is due to report on 16 December; the Government await its conclusions with interest.

Ministerial Visit (USA)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which companies the Minister for Science visited during his most recent visit to the USA; and what was discussed. [87034]

Mr. Battle: My noble Friend, Lord Sainsbury, visited Boston on 8–10 June as part of a fact-finding mission to examine the growth of biotechnology clusters and how Britain can improve its competitive position.

Details of all the organisations visited by my noble Friend and the accompanying team of leading business people and academics were set out in a DTI Press Notice of 8 June (P/99/45) which was sent to the right hon. Member. A copy of the DTI Press Notice was also provided automatically to the Library of the House.

Lead-free Solders

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance his Department has given to the Welding Institute in relation to research into lead-free solders. [87268]

Mr. Battle: The Department has no record of recent support having been given to the Welding Institute, TWI as it is now known, to carry out such research but in the past my Department has given considerable support to TWI for research work in many areas.

Tin

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to aid the International Tin Research Institute in its development of (a) the use of tin as an alternative to lead-based products and (b) lead-free solders [87267]

Mr. Battle: My Department has no current plans to provide assistance to the International Tin research institute to develop either the use of tin as an alternative to lead-based products or lead-free solders. There is no sound scientific evidence, or comprehensive analysis, that clearly shows a need to replace uses of lead with tin but I am aware there are some environmental concerns about the continuing use of lead-based solders in electrical and electronic equipment.

TUPE

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of public sector employees who may be eligible for compensation because of the delay in implementing the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. [87279]

Mr. Ian McCartney: This will depend on how many people can show that they suffered damage as a result of the breach of the Directive. Legal action was brought on behalf of 1,473 people. However, no statement has yet been made of any damage caused to any of them, or the circumstances in which it may have been caused, which could lead to a decision on whether they are due compensation.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he plans to take to reduce the administrative burdens placed on manufacturing industry. [86910]

Mr. Battle: Earlier this month my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a number of new measures to reduce burdens on business, including the manufacturing sectors. These measures include consultation on raising the audit threshold for companies and new guidance on the Working Time Regulations which will make it clear that for the vast majority of British businesses, existing documentation and systems already meet the record-keeping requirements. They are part of our ongoing effort to reduce burdens on business.

Small Employers (Payroll Service)

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for providing the payroll service for small employers, announced at the time of the Budget. [87068]

Mr. Wills: I have today published a consultation paper, 'Developing a Payroll Service for Small Businesses', which sets out our proposals for a new service to help small employers get to grips with running a payroll. Comments are being sought from a number of interested parties and the closing date for responses is Tuesday 7 September.

Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Parental Leave Directive

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evaluation he has made of the use by each member state of the European Union of the protective provisions for small businesses under the Parental Leave Directive. [87361]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Information we have been able to access suggests that there are some limited variations on some aspects of the provisions for small businesses across EC member states. For example, in Belgium, where there is a requirement to allow employees to take their leave on a part-time basis for six months, there is an exemption applying to companies with fewer than 10 employees. In the Netherlands, parental leave can be postponed in a small company if a replacement cannot be found.

Energy Use

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into trends in energy use in the office and commercial business sectors. [87362]

Mr. Battle: My Department and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) have commissioned work on services sector energy consumption in recent years.

At the request of officials in my Department the Building Research Establishment (BRE) has been commissioned to investigate methods for estimating energy consumption in the office and commercial business sectors. The report on this work is in progress and is expected to be completed during the summer of 1999.

In order to assess the pattern of energy end uses and what emission reductions may be achieved to tackle climate change the DETR has commissioned BRE to carry out work to improve the understanding of energy use in non-domestic buildings. This ongoing project resulted in the publication in January 1998 of the "Non-Domestic Building Energy Fact File". The results of this project underpin the work described in the previous paragraph.

Statisticians in DTI have produced an analysis of trends in services sector energy consumption. This provided information for the private commercial sector as a whole and was published in December 1997 by the Stationery Office in "Energy Paper 66: Energy Consumption in the United Kingdom". Information on services sector energy consumption is also routinely published in the "Energy Report Volume 2" and in the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics".

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years in supporting British Nuclear Fuels plc's efforts to secure foreign contracts (i) in total and (ii) for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel in the United Kingdom. [86967]

Mr. Battle: There is no specific financial assistance for BNFL to support its efforts to secure foreign commercial contracts.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure that adequate match funding arrangements are in place in Objective 1 areas. [86508]

Mr. Wills: Match funding will continue to be the responsibility of the grant applicant. This ensures local ownership and commitment to the projects. There are numerous possible sources for match funding including local authorities, TECs, government schemes, the voluntary sector and also the private sector. Organisations such as the European Investment Bank can make loans to local authorities for use as match funding. In some areas innovative loan and equity funds such as the Merseyside Special Investment fund have been set up to draw in resources from commercial banks.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mrs. Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers of what ranks and from which police force make up the inquiry team into the murder of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson. [85452]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 May 1999]: The make-up of the team investigating Rosemary Nelson's murder is a matter for Deputy Chief Constable, Colin Port. He is leading the investigation. The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has given him authority to draw together whatever team he requires. The number of officers making up the inquiry team varies as the needs of the investigation dictate. Officers from up to nine police forces, other than the Royal Ulster Constabulary, have been involved in this investigation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Royal Ulster Constabulary sought the permission of Mr. Paul Nelson, husband of the late Rosemary Nelson, before publishing on the RUC web site, the home address of the Nelson family. [85454]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 May 1999]: The RUC judged it as essential to give these details, which were already in the public domain, to attract possible witnesses with the aim of catching those responsible for murdering Mrs. Nelson.

Housing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what rules and guidelines govern the decision-making process of the Northern Ireland Housing Council in its nominations to the board of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; what was the breakdown of those nominated by (a) perceived community origin and (b) gender in each year that nominations have been made; and what actions she will take to promote parity of esteem and equality in this area. [87170]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 16 June 1999]: Under paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 to the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, three members of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (the Executive) shall be persons nominated by the Northern Ireland

Housing Council (the Council) from its members. Under paragraph 2 of Schedule 2 of the same Order, the Council may regulate its own proceedings.

Since its inception in 1973, except in 1995 when an SDLP member, perceived to be from the minority community was nominated, the Council has always nominated Unionist members, who are perceived to be from the majority community. In 1996, the first woman member, perceived to be from the majority community, was nominated for appointment, was re-nominated in 1997, and served until the Department received notification of her resignation on 2 June 1998, to stand in the election to the new Northern Ireland Assembly. In 1998, all three nominations were male, perceived to be from the majority community.

Draft legislation in preparation would allow the Department to regulate the nomination process in order to achieve a broader balance. Progress of any legislation will, however, be a matter for consideration by the devolved Administration.

Parades Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Donaldson) of 29 March 1999, Official Report, column 479, if she will provide a breakdown of the moneys spent under the heading, media and publicity advice and services, listing the consultancies and individuals providing services and the moneys received by each and describe the process of selection of consultants and purchased services. [87169]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 June 1999]: (a)

£

Item (financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99)	Amount
Fees	103,170.90
Expenses	3,683.70
Printing	2,353.97
Work relating to the website/database	5,544.23
Hire of locations (for press conferences, etc.)	3,511.72
Transportation (Commission briefings in USA)	2,466.27
Sundries	1,595.73
Total	122,326.52

(b) The Media Adviser contracted to the Parades Commission is Gordon Corporate Communications Ltd. The firm arranges for all the Commission's work relating to media and publicity advice and services, sub-contracting work as necessary.

(c) The Parades Commission uses the services of the Government Purchasing Agency in establishing contracts for the provision of goods and services. Standard procedures are used for all aspects of the contracting process.

Reconciliation (Funding)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to meet the Irish Prime Minister to agree a joint British-Irish funding body for organisations involved in reconciliation between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. [86151]

Marjorie Mowlam: None. I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 67.

Nursery Units

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which locations nursery units have been provided under the first tranche of the childhood funds; how many of these units are associated with the Council of Catholic Maintained Schools; and what assessment she has made of the extent to which the EU peace package for peace and reconciliation is being used for cross-community nursery units. [86312]

Mr. McFall: 19 nursery units have been provided in the following locations:

West Winds Primary School, Newtownards
Kilcooley Primary School, Bangor
Old Warren Primary School, Lisburn
Bushmills Primary School
Harpur's Hill Primary School, Coleraine
St. James' Primary School, Whiteabbey
St. John's Primary School, Carnlough
College Farm Nursery School, Armagh
St. Patrick's Primary School, Newry
St. Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon
St. Patrick's Primary School, Crossmaglen
St. Patrick's Primary School, Cullyhanna
St. Joseph's Primary School, Newry
Barrack St. Boys Primary School, Strabane
St. Ronan's Primary School, Lisnaskea
St. Patrick's Primary School, Castlederg
Ashlea Primary School, Londonderry
Enniskillen Nursery School
Glendermott Primary School, Londonderry

Twelve of the units are located at schools in the Catholic-maintained sector.

All nursery provision is open to all children regardless of religious denomination and a number of the projects under tranche 1 of the EU Peace and Reconciliation Programme have been approved with the specific aim of making cross-community provision. Several have been developed on neutral sites and through partnerships in order to secure places which can be attended by children from all religious backgrounds, and management structures have been established to reflect this.

DEFENCE

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when (a) HMS Fearless and (b) HMS Intrepid will be taken out of service; and if he will make a statement. [85961]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 June 1999]: On current plans, Fearless and Intrepid are due to be payed-off in 2001 and 2002, respectively. However, the pay-off dates are linked to the acceptance of the LPD(R)s, the replacement vessels, HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark. In the light of delays to the LPD(R)s, the pay-off dates for Fearless and Intrepid are under review.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on HMS Brave over the last two years; what is the cost of holding her in a state of extended readiness over the next 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [86372]

Mr. Spellar: Maintenance work on HMS Brave in the two years to June 1999 has cost about £1.9 million. This includes the cost of preparations for extended readiness and the cost of the tow from Devonport to Portsmouth where the ship is now berthed. The estimated cost of maintaining HMS Brave at extended readiness for the next 12 months is about £0.4 million.

Medical Officers Pay

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces. [87664]

Mr. George Robertson: The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has made recommendations on the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces. In view of the particular retention difficulties in the Defence Medical Services, the Review Body recommends that all medical and dental officers should receive a general 4.5 per cent. increase in basic pay. The Review Body also recommends, in order to achieve greater comparability with equivalent personnel in the NHS, an increase to Trainers' Pay and the activation of a Distinction Award scheme.

The Government have decided to accept the Review Body's recommendations and these will be payable in full from 1 April 1999.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Family Law Act 1996

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to implement Part II of the Family Law Act 1996. [87637]

Mr. Vaz: The Government will not now implement Part II of the Family Law Act 1996 in 2000. Before implementing Part II, the Government must be satisfied that the new arrangements for divorce which it would put in place will work. The pilot projects which have been run to test the provision of information meetings under Part II were concluded at the end of May. The preliminary research results are disappointing, in view of the Government's objectives of saving saveable marriages and encouraging the mediated settlement of disputes. A summary of the research results so far will be published today, and copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The full research results from the pilots will not be ready until early next year, when the Government will consider whether further research is necessary.

The Government will therefore bring forward amendments today to the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill currently before Parliament to ensure that its pension sharing provisions can take effect under the existing divorce law or under the divorce law as reformed by Part II of the Family Law Act. A set of supplementary explanatory notes for the Bill will be available from today.

SCOTLAND

Human Rights Act 1998

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Government have taken to ensure that the Judiciary and the Procurator Fiscal Service is equipped to deal with the implementation of the Human Rights Act 1998; what material has been produced to assist with this process; and if he will place copies of it in the Library. [86209]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The Judicial Studies Committee established in 1997 under the Chairmanship of the right hon. Lord Ross has undertaken a comprehensive programme of training on human rights issues for all Judges, Sheriffs Principal, Sheriffs and Temporary Sheriffs. This includes the provision of specially commissioned briefing material, texts and reports produced by commercial publishers and a series of seminars held at various locations for all Judges and Sheriffs, with particular emphasis on the human rights issues arising immediately in Scotland as a result of the Scotland Act 1998. The normal programme of Court business has been adjusted to allow attendance at these events. Following the Government's recent announcement of the commencement date of the Human Rights Act 1998, the Judicial Studies Committee will shortly be embarking on the detailed planning necessary to ensure that appropriate further Judicial education is provided in good time before that date.

The Lord Advocate is responsible for the Procurator Fiscal Service. His Department is now trained and equipped to deal with the implementation of the Human Rights Act 1998. Early last year his officials prepared a detailed action plan for his Department on implementation of Convention rights in Scotland. A full time Working Group of 4 senior lawyers was established in June 1998 and has conducted a comprehensive review of prosecution policy and practice in Scotland. The most extensive training exercise in the history of the Department commenced in February 1999 and was completed on 3 June 1999 with all lawyers in the Department receiving three days training on the European Convention on Human Rights, the Scotland Act and the Human Rights Act. Further practical workshops and training for support staff will take place during the summer of 1999 and the Human Rights Act will, in future, form part of the core training of all prosecutors in Scotland. This training was accompanied by detailed and extensive training material and guidance. The materials produced for the Procurator Fiscal Service contain prosecution policy and are confidential.

Since 20 May 1999 prosecution in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

The other matters will also be for that Parliament from 1 July 1999.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87318]

Dr. Reid: Since 15 April, thirty-two parliamentary questions have been tabled to my Department for answer on a named day. Of these, forty-seven per cent. received a substantive reply on the nominated day.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect devolution will have on ministerial responsibilities for forestry. [87666]

Dr. Reid: From 1 July 1999, Scottish Ministers in the Scottish Parliament will have responsibility for forestry in Scotland, the National Assembly for Wales will have responsibility for forestry in Wales, while the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will continue to have responsibility for forestry in England.

The Prime Minister has agreed that the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will also, from 1 July, assume responsibility for forestry issues affecting Great Britain as a whole. The Minister will, of course, consult Scottish Ministers and the National Assembly on such matters.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has responsibility for forestry in Northern Ireland.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 14–15 June; and if he will make a statement. [87373]

Mr. Nick Brown: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the European Union Agriculture Council in Luxembourg on 14–15 June.

Concluding a negotiation launched under the UK Presidency last year, the Council reached a unanimous landmark agreement (Spain abstaining) on battery cages for laying hens, the farming system which is most heavily criticised on grounds of animal welfare. From 1 January 2003, any new battery cages must meet new and more welfare-friendly standards. Conventional battery cages will be banned altogether after the end of 2011.

One of my aims was to accommodate non-cage systems of the kind which many UK producers have voluntarily adopted out of concern for animal welfare, and I am pleased to have secured terms which will allow producers who have such systems to keep them, without significant change also until 31 December 2011.

I regard it as important that, as we raise standards of animal welfare in the European Union, our producers should not be undermined by producers in third countries operating on lower standards. This week's agreement includes a firm undertaking from the Commission to seek wider international agreement on animal welfare standards in the next round of World Trade Organisation negotiations which starts early next year.

The Council also reached unanimous agreement on standards for organic livestock, ending nearly three years' discussion. Consumers and producers will benefit from knowing that all livestock products sold as organic must in future conform to a minimum set of requirements applicable throughout the EU. It remains open to each member state to set stricter (but not less strict) standards for its own producers. I intend that there should be early discussion between Government and UK organic farming organisations about the implementation of the new rules.

In the light of the problem of dioxin contamination in Belgium, the Council agreed on the urgent need to improve the monitoring and control of foodstuffs, and in particular invited the Commission to carry out a thorough review of feedingstuffs legislation and labelling.

The Council also agreed the 1999 CAP price proposals by qualified majority, Italy voting against. This largely prolongs the status quo for the 1999–2000 marketing year, in advance of the Agenda 2000 price cuts beginning next year. As part of the deal, I secured an important Commission commitment to allow member states to apply more flexible set-aside rules where this brought environmental benefits, as well as their agreement to correct an anomaly which prevented fruit and vegetable producer groups including non-grower members on their Boards.

Ministers also registered the importance they attach to milk consumption by school children and undertook to reflect further on how to encourage such consumption in a cost-efficient way.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the report on organic farming and gene transfer from genetically modified crops commissioned from the John Innes Centre will be published. [87296]

Mr. Rooker: The report is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Quarantine

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the criteria he used to exempt the pet of William Dowell from quarantine and (b) the powers under which the exemption was granted. [86629]

Mr. Rooker: This is a wholly exceptional and very tragic case, and in the circumstances it would have been heartless not to make an exemption from the quarantine rules.

The power to be used is contained in Article 2(1) of the Animals (Miscellaneous Provisions) Order of 1927 (SR & O 1927, No. 290).

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list total United Kingdom permitted landings, in tonnes, of fish under the present Common Fisheries Policy distributions; and if he will estimate discards, by tonne, of each fish type in the past 12 months. [86730]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom's quota share of the Total Allowable Catch (which need not be landed in the UK) for 1999 is set out in the table:

Tonnes

Stock and ICES reporting area	1999 UK quota
Sandeels IIa, IV	20,000
Herring I, II	25,190
Herring IVa, b	40,570
Herring IVc, VIId	1,693
Herring Vb, VIaN, VIb	39,240
Herring VIa (Clyde)	1,000
Herring VIIa	4,880
Herring VIIe, f	500
Herring VIIg-k	30
Herring IIa, IV Industrial by catch	550
Cod IIa, IV	56,260
Cod Vb, VI, XII, XIV	5,690
Cod VIIa	1,585
Cod VIIb-k, VIII, IX, X	1,570
Megrim IIa, IV	2,880
Megrim Vb, VI, XII, XIV	1,520
Megrim VII	3,210
Dab and Flounder IIa, IV	2,590
Anglers IIa, IV	17,960
Anglers Vb, VI, XII, XIV	2,650
Anglers VII	4,800
Haddock IIa, IV	57,045
Haddock Vb, VI, XII, XIV	15,110
Haddock VII, VIII, IX, X	2,220
Haddock VIIa	2,390
Whiting IIa, IV	24,590
Whiting Vb, VI, XII, XIV	4,060
Whiting VIIa	1,720
Whiting VIIb-k	2,680
Hake IIa, IV	350
Hake Vb, VI, XII, XIV	5,550
Lemon sole and Witch IIa, IV	7,330
Blue Whiting IIa, IV	1,070
Nephrops IIa, IV	13,165
Nephrops Vb, VI	12,305
Nephrops VII	7,545
Plaice IIa, IV	28,070
Plaice Vb, VI, XII, XIV	1,450
Plaice VIIa	885
Plaice VIId, e	2,150
Plaice VIIf, g	205
Plaice VIIh, j, k	170
Pollack Vb, VI, XII, XIV	400
Pollack VII	2,960
Saithe IIa, IIIb, c, d IV	8,830
Saithe Vb, VI, XII, XIV	3,125
Saithe VII, VIII, IX, X	1,350
Turbot and Brill IIa, IV	1,390
Skates and Rays IIa, IV	3,920
Mackerel IIa (EC) III, IV	1,390
Mackerel IIa (non EC), Vb, VI, VII, VIIIa, b, d, e, XII, XIV	165,480
Sole II, IV	945
Sole Vb, VI, XII, XIV	30
Sole VIIa	200
Sole VIId	905
Sole VIIe	410
Sole VIIf, g	270
Sole VIIh, j, k	120
Sprat IIa, IV	5,900
Sprat VIId, e	6,300
Horse mackerel IIa, IV	5,840
Horse mackerel Vb, VI, VII, VIIIa, b, c, d, e, XII, XIV	25,310

International Council for the Exploration of the Sea

Information on discards is not collected on a comparable stock by stock basis. From research work involving observers on fishing vessels, scientists estimate that the level of discarding varies according to number and age of fish available, season, mesh size used and anticipated market conditions as perceived by fishermen. We understand that discarding tends to be very low for pelagic species and for some demersal fish such as sole but can be significantly higher for gadoids such as cod, haddock and whiting.

MAFF is contributing funds to an international project to study the economic causes of discarding at sea and to consider alternative management measures to reduce discarding in EU fisheries. The majority of fish discarded is undersize or considered uneconomic.

Sandeels

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards sandeel conservation; what are the present estimated total stocks in UK waters; and what is the present allowable catch. [87342]

Mr. Morley: I remain concerned to ensure that an appropriate Total Allowable Catch is established each year for sandeels. I am also concerned to ensure that effective conservation measures are put in place to ensure that sandeels are available to those sea birds that depend on them at certain times of the year.

Figures for estimated total sandeel stocks in UK waters are not available. The main sandeel fishery off the UK is in the North Sea. In October 1998 the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea advised that the North sea spawning stock biomass of this short lived species stood at 1.8 million tonnes. On this advice the Council of Ministers set a Total Allowable Catch of 1 million tonnes. A further 7,000 tonnes may be taken in the tightly regulated local fishery at Shetland.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Communications Regulation

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how the Government are implementing the proposals in the Green Paper regulating communications, approaching convergence in the information age. [87773]

Mr. Chris Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I have today published a report 'Regulating Communications: The Way Ahead', setting out the way forward on the regulation of the converging industries.

The Government's proposals for an evolutionary approach to the regulation of the converging communication sectors to take account of convergence proposed in last July's Convergence Green Paper received widespread support in the consultation it initiated.

The new statement makes clear the Government's determination to ensure that the UK can take advantage of the opportunities convergence of telecommunications, broadcasting and informatio chnology will bring. It shows how the Government are adapting the UK's regulatory framework to take account of changes in markets and technology, notably through modernisation and strengthening of competition law and deepening co-operation between OFTEL, the ITC and the Office of Fair Trading.

Changes in these fast moving markets will eventually amount to a transformation and so demand new approaches to regulation to achieve policy goals. But the pattern and timing are far from clear. Our rejection of a big bang approach to reforming communications regulation in favour of the evolutionary approach outlined in last year's Convergence Green Paper has received widespread support. Most of those who commented supported this approach, recognising the uncertainties about the pace and direction of change. We believe that the changes we have made and continue to make will ensure that consumers and businesses alike are well served by flexible and effective regulation.

The document announces a number of important new initiatives to promote UK competitiveness and protect the consumer interest in the converging communications sectors. In particular it:

proposes new models for a reformed system of telecommunications regulation, including the possibility of ending licensing, to take account of the fact that we now have many different operators;

announces a detailed assessment of the regulation of commercial TV broadcasting to ensure that the differences in regulation between different commercial broadcasters are no more than is necessary to protect the public interest; sets out a number of measures to take account of developments in commercial radio broadcasting;

details the steps to be taken in implementing the lifting of restrictions on BT's provision of entertainment services including the amendment of local cable licenses to remove "build obligations" in certain circumstances.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Attorney-General what steps have been taken to implement Recommendations 4 and 9 of the Review of the Crown Prosecution Service in respect of research on discontinuances and downgrading of charges by the CPS. [86908]

The Solicitor-General: Recommendations 4 and 9 of the Glidewell Report are being considered by the CPS with the inter-agency Criminal Justice Information Working Group. The first part of Recommendation 9 was accepted by the Government in November 1998, and has been implemented. The Attorney-General will be announcing the Government's decisions on Recommendation 4 and the second part of Recommendation 9 later this month as part of a wider statement on the Glidewell Report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

CS Spray

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people required hospital treatment following the application of CS spray by a police officer in the most recent year for which figures are available. [87347]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not maintained centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Arrangements are being made by the Association of Chief Police Officers to gather information from forces on the use of CS spray, as part of their monitoring of police use of force.

Carnivals (Police Cover)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has issued to police forces on providing police cover for carnival processions. [87357]

Mr. Boateng: None. The assessment of the policing needs of carnivals and similar events is an operational matter for chief officers of police, who will generally consult event organisers, local authorities and other agencies.

The Association of Chief Police Officers issued advice and guidance on public safety at organised events in April 1999, which recommends a multi-agency approach to public safety issues.

Jury Trial

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) of the defendants who exercised their right to elect jury trial in 1998, how many were (a) acquitted in the Crown Court of all the charges against them, (b) convicted in the Crown Court following a jury trial and (c) convicted in the Crown Court on pleas of guilty and without going to jury trial; [86909]

(2) in respect of the most recent period for which information is available, what proportions of defendants tried in the Crown Court following election for jury trial were (a) acquitted, or otherwise not convicted, in relation to all of the charges against them, (b) convicted, following jury trial, on all or some of the charges against them and (c) convicted, following pleas of guilty, and without going to jury trial, on all or some of the charges against them; [86960]

(3) in respect of the most recent period for which information is available, what proportions of defendants convicted in the Crown Court following an election for jury trial were (a) convicted on all of the same charges with which they were originally charged and (b) convicted of fewer or lesser charges than those with which they were originally charged. [86961]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally.

Age of Consent

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive to ensure that any changes to legislation relating to the age of consent in Scotland are introduced and proceeded with simultaneously in the House of Commons and the Scottish Parliament. [87172]

Mr. Straw: I have discussed this issue with my right hon. Friend the Scottish First Minister. This is a devolved issue, but one which is complicated by the consideration being given by the United Kingdom Government to the use of the Parliament Acts 1911 and 1949. I fully support the conclusions reached on this by the Scottish Executive, as set out in the First Minister's statement to the Scottish Parliament on 9 June 1999, Official Report of the Scottish Parliament, columns 358–60, in which he said:

"The Sexual Offences (Amendment) Bill is a United Kingdom measure designed to equalise the age of consent for homosexuals and heterosexuals, and to introduce a new offence of abuse of trust. It was introduced to the Westminster Parliament in December last year and defeated in the House of Lords in April this year. The United Kingdom Government is likely to reintroduce the Bill, making use of the Parliament Acts to ensure its passage. That means that the Bill that is re-introduced would have to be identical to the one that was defeated. Therefore, even if it were thought desirable, it will not be possible to remove Scotland from the Bill's scope if the Parliament Acts are invoked. Until the United Kingdom Government and Parliament have concluded the existing legislative process, it is logical to regard it as unfinished Westminster business. However, these are devolved matters of some sensitivity. It is essential that this Parliament should have the opportunity to debate the Scottish provisions of the Bill. We shall therefore provide for a debate in Executive time. I and my colleagues in the Executive will argue in that debate that the powers under the Parliament Acts should be used if that is thought appropriate by the United Kingdom Government. We have reached that conclusion in the knowledge that this Parliament will have the power, if it so wishes, to amend or repeal any Scottish provision enacted by the passage of the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Bill."

Firearms Compensation Scheme

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much compensation has been paid out under Option A Code 3001 of the Firearms Compensation Scheme to (a) Firearms Certificate holders and (b) firearms dealers; and what proportion of the amount paid out under that part of the scheme this represents; [86905]

(2) how many claimants under Option A Code 3001 of the Firearms Compensation Scheme (a) are still awaiting payment and (b) have been paid, broken down by (i) Firearms Certificate holders and (ii) firearms dealers; [86906]

(3) how much compensation has been paid by the Firearms Compensation Scheme under the Large Calibre Handgun Compensation Scheme; [86907]

Mr. Boateng: A total of £80.87 million has been paid in compensation under the large calibre scheme. Of this, £51,450 has been paid to 536 firearm certificate holders and £1.23 million has been paid to 475 registered firearms dealers under Option A Code 3001 of the scheme. These payments represent 9.2 per cent. of the total paid under Option A. There should be no qualifying claims outstanding under this code.

Criminal Inquiries Compensation

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims were submitted to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (i) in total and (ii) by the victims of rape and incest; and what percentage in each case were (a) processed, (b) awarded and (c) rejected, in each of the last five years. [83266]

Mr. Boateng [pursuant to his reply, 5 May 1999, c. 377–78]: The figures for the total number of claims received under the criminal injuries compensation schemes in 1996–97 and 1997–98 should have read 75,414 and 77,743 respectively.

TREASURY

Foreign Exchange Executory Contracts

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy with regards to longer term foreign exchange executory contracts following the judgment of the European Court in the First National Bank of Chicago case (Case C-172/96). [85678]

Dawn Primarolo: Following the judgment of the European Court in the First National Bank of Chicago case, policy is that all foreign exchange transactions are supplies of services. Where these transactions take place within the EU, the services are exempt from VAT and therefore taxpayers are not able to recover the VAT incurred on related costs. Where the transaction is with a party belonging outside the EU, however, the VAT incurred is recoverable. The recoverable amount is determined on a basis agreed between the taxpayer and Customs.

Financial Services and Markets Committee Reports

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government expects to respond to the first and second reports from the Joint Committee on Financial Services and Markets. [87669]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are today publishing their response to the Joint Committee's reports to coincide with the introduction of the Financial Services and Markets Bill in the House of Commons. Copies of the Government's response are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. It will also be published on the Treasury's Internet website (http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk). The Government very much appreciate and welcome the work of the Joint Committee.

VAT

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 289, on the European Court judgment in the First National Bank of Chicago case, how many claims HM Customs and Excise have received as a consequence of the judgment; and what is their total value. [86965]

Dawn Primarolo: As at 31 May 1999 Customs and Excise had received 64 claims with a total value of £36.8 million, excluding interest.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 289, on the European Court judgment in the First National Bank and Chicago case, how many claims received from businesses as a consequence of the judgment HM Customs and Excise are monitoring; and what is the total value of the claims. [87023]

Dawn Primarolo: As at 31 May 1999 Customs and Excise had received and are monitoring 64 claims with a total value of £36.8 million, excluding interest.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with retailers about the losses sustained by their industry as a result of tobacco smuggling. [86500]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs continue to work with industry representatives on estimating the scale of tobacco smuggling and finding new ways to tackle the problem. Several retail trade associations contributed to the review of alcohol and tobacco fraud and smuggling published in July last year. The Government accepted the review findings and Customs are now progressing the recommendations in partnership with the trade.

Interest Rates

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the introduction of a statutory maximum interest rate. [86526]

Ms Hewitt: The Government gave the Bank of England operational independence to set interest rates to ensure the Government's commitment to low inflation is delivered in practice. Setting a maximum interest rate would limit the Bank of England's ability to meet the Government's inflation target.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82872]

Mr. Mudie: The Department of Education and Employment has sought prices for both fair trade and non-fair trade products from catering suppliers during a recent tender exercise. The Department will continue to do so. In line with Government procurement policy, the evaluation of tenders will take into account value for money considerations having due regard to propriety and regularity. Furthermore, we work closely with our current catering providers and encourage them to offer fair trade products as an option to customers in staff restaurants. Discussions are taking place to ensure that fair trade products are considered for inclusion in product specification sent out for tender.

Employment Service (New Deal)

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets the Government have set the Employment Service in respect of the New Deal; and if the Employment Service has passed targets on to individual employment centres and New Deal advisers. [87294]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service has been set a target of helping 100,000 young people into employment, through the New Deal, in this financial year. This national target is disaggregated to local Jobcentre level. Planning to meet local targets is the responsibility of each Jobcentre Manager, including, where appropriate, further disaggregation of office targets to New Deal personal Advisers.

DLA Claimants

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if people in receipt of disability living allowance will be exempt from attending the ONE interview for the single work-focused gateway. [87280]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In twelve ONE pilot areas from April next year, subject to the passage of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill through Parliament, anyone of working age, who is working for less than sixteen hours per week and claiming one or more of the income replacement benefits listed in the Bill, will be required to participate in a work-focused interview as a condition of receiving that benefit. Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is not specified as one of these benefits, as it is not an income replacement benefit. Accordingly, this means that anyone receiving only DLA, and no other benefits, will not be required to participate in an interview. Claimants of DLA only will continue to claim directly via the regional Disability Benefits Centre.

WALES

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated increase in the budget for the current financial year, expressed in cash and percentage terms of the Higher Education Funding Council; and if he will make a statement. [86337]

Mr. Hain: The recurrent grant for the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales for 1999-2000 is £263.341 million. This represents an increase of £32.119 million (almost 14 per cent.) over 1998-99. In addition £5.362 million of capital has been provided to support the research and teaching infrastructure and to provide new teaching equipment.

The funding represents an excellent settlement for the Welsh higher education sector.

Responsibility for higher education funding will transfer to the National Assembly from 1 July.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on higher education funding. [86342]

Mr. Hain: A very small number of representations have been received since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the funding allocation for higher education in Wales following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

The real terms increase in resources for the Welsh HE sector has been welcomed.

Responsibility for higher education funding will transfer to the National Assembly from 1 July.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86998]

Mr. Michael: The women's organisations consulted over proposed legislation during this session are: the National Federation of Women's Institutes, Welsh Women's Aid, Merched y Wawr and the Wales Assembly for Women. Some consultation exercises are ongoing. To date one response from Welsh Women's Aid has been published.

Consultation has also taken place with the Equal Opportunities Commission. This offered further opportunity for consulting women's organisations through the EOC's support of the Wales Women's National Coalition which is made up of representatives of women's organisations including, in addition to those mentioned above, Chwarae Teg, Mewn Cymru, Wales Women's Euro Network, and the Wales TUC Women's Advisory Committee.

The Welsh Office is committed to ensuring that its policies are inclusive and take account of the views and experience of those who will be affected by them. The National Assembly for Wales, through its Equalities Committee, will play a significant role in future, in co-orporation with the Office of the Secretary of State.

HEALTH

Tobacco Advertising Directive

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the draft regulations to implement the Tobacco Advertising Directive 98/43/EC; and if he will make a statement. [87363]

Mr. Dobson: I have today published draft regulations to implement Directive 98/43/EC banning tobacco advertising and sponsorship. Copies will be placed in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the maximum and minimum durations of meetings of the Joint Consultative Committee and the number of agenda items in each case. [87036]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Details of the proceedings of the Joint Consultative Committee are exempt from disclosure under the internal discussion and advice exemption of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information".

Written Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87320]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Between the period of 15 April 1999–11 June 1999 there have been 21 named day parliamentary questions tabled to my Department, of which 90.5 per cent. received a substantive reply on the day specified.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Charter of Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library the Presidency draft of an EU Charter of Rights; and if he will make a statement. [86720]

Ms Quin: No such draft exists. The Cologne European Council agreed a declaration setting out the process for developing the Charter. An initial draft will be prepared over the next 18 months according to the process described in the Cologne Conclusions (Annexe N), which have been deposited in the Library.

Sudan

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions the Government are taking to bring about a ceasefire in Southern Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [87607]

Mr. Hoon: During a visit by the late Minister of State, Derek Fatchett, to Nairobi and Khartoum last July, the SPLA and Government of Sudan agreed a three-month ceasefire in Bahr el Ghazal. This limited ceasefire has been extended and both parties again committed themselves to it at a recent meeting in Oslo.

Peace in the Sudan remains a priority. We shall continue to call for a comprehensive ceasefire in the Sudan and shall continue to be active in pursuit of peace, working closely with IGAD and the IGAD Partners Forum.

Arms Registration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom submitted its 1998 return to the UN Register of Conventional Arms; and if copies of the return will be placed in the Library. [87101]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The 1998 return to the UN Register of Conventional Arms, covering transfers during calendar year 1997, was submitted on 7 May 1998. The 1999 return, covering transfers in calendar year 1998, was submitted on 27 May 1999. Copies of both returns were placed in the Libraries of the House.

Iran

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge Iran to grant free and equal rights to all citizens. [87132]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners regularly raise our concerns with the Iranian authorities over the plight of minorities in Iran, in particular the Baha'i community. We will continue to press the Iranians for improvements. Our position was again made clear in the EU sponsored UN Commission on Human Rights resolution on Iran adopted in April.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the level of anti-semitism in Iran. [87129]

Mr. Hoon: Judaism, along with Christianity and Zoroastrianism are recognised religions under the Iranian constitution. The Jewish community are represented in the Iranian Parliament (Majles) by a Jewish MP who represents the community as a whole rather than a constituency and whose seat is reserved by the constitution. The Iranian authorities have frequently stated that they recognise Judaism but not Zionism, a position also adopted by the Iranian Jewish community. The Jewish community in Iran has shrunk to approximately 27,000 from around 100,000 since the revolution in 1979. Those remaining do so through choice and have experienced occasional problems mainly related to the clash of cultures between Judaism and Islam (Jewish shopkeepers wishing to open on the Islamic weekend and other similar incidents). We welcome President Khatami's statement following the recent arrests of members of the Jewish communities that he is responsible for individuals of very religious persuasion in Iran.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the Government of Iran to state the conditions under which the group of thirteen Jews from Shiraz who have been arrested are being held. [87130]

Mr. Hoon: We have sought assurances that the detained will be treated fairly under Iranian law.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take concerning the arrest and proposed trial of 13 members of the Jewish community in Iran; and if he will make a statement. [87159]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners are concerned at reports of the arrest of 13 Iranian Jews. The German EU Presidency on a visit to Tehran on 20 May expressed the concern of EU member states at these detentions. This was before news broke of the detainees being charged with espionage on 7 June. This will be followed up with an EU demarche to the Iranian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We have also told the Iranians of our concern bilaterally, both in London and Tehran, and have pressed for the detainees to be treated fairly under Iranian law, as have many of our EU partners. We will continue to watch developments closely and will take further action as necessary.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions he has given to the British Ambassador in Teheran concerning the situation of members of the Baha'i community in Iran. [87128]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our concerns over the plight of the Baha'i community in Iran. I most recently raise the issue with the Iranian Ambassador on 24 May. Last October our then Chargé (now Ambassador), with partners in the EU Troika, spoke to the Iranian Ministry of Foreign Affairs about two Baha'is under sentence of death. So far that action appears to have been effective in preventing those executions. He and his EU colleagues regularly report on human rights issues including the Baha'is. I discussed these issues with Barnabas Leith, the Secretary General of the Baha'i Community of the United Kingdom, when we met on 14 June.

British Nuclear Fuels Plc

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years in supporting British Nuclear Fuels plc's efforts to secure foreign contracts (i) in total and (ii) for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel in the United Kingdom. [86966]

Mr. Hoon: My Department, working with the DTI as British Trade International, provides wide-ranging, non-discriminatory support for all British companies, provided their products and services are mainly of UK origin and are legal. That support ranges from tailored market information to high-level political lobbying and multilateral work to liberalise markets.

British Nuclear Fuels plc has, like other British exporters, benefited from Government export support. The international market within which it operates is framed by inter-governmental nuclear co-operation agreements covering the export of nuclear materials and contracts for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel in the United Kingdom. No charge is made for the work necessary to conclude these. Records of this work and other support are not collated centrally and cannot be quantified in the way requested.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 18 June 1999

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department gives to persons who (a) need a passport urgently and (b) have not received their passport and are due to travel in the immediate future. [86971]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency is currently processing applications by customers' declared travel dates, and is meeting those dates for 99.99 per cent. of passports issued.

In circumstances where a passport has not been received and an applicant is travelling within four days, the Agency's advice is to attend personally at the office to which the application was made. This should not be left to the last day in case there are problems with the application.

Where the travel need is less pressing but still urgent my letter to hon. Members of 10 June gave contact telephone and fax numbers that should be used for urgent inquiries by passport applicants. Alternatively and as indicated in the Agency's any problems leaflet, applicants can write to Kevin Sheehan, the Agency's Director of Operations at Passport Agency Headquarters, Room 201, Clive House, Petty France, London SW1H 9HD.

The Agency's policy is to reimburse applicants if unsatisfactory service causes them additional expense, for example through having to call personally at a passport office.

Postal Votes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the incidence of doctors (a) refusing to authenticate applications for postal votes on medical grounds and (b) charging a fee for signing postal votes; and if he will make a statement. [87463]

Mr. George Howarth: There is no way in which such an assessment could be made. The legal position is that, under paragraph 37 and Schedule 9 of the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, a doctor must issue certain certificates to his or her patients free of charge. These include attestations for absent votes, provided that they are required on grounds of physical incapacity. Anyone who has been charged a fee should in the first instance discuss the situation with the doctor concerned to determine if a refund is appropriate. If the matter cannot be resolved satisfactorily in this way, the patient should contact the local Family Health Services Authority, which has powers to investigate such complaints.

Ballot Papers

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory requirements which require the Electoral Roll number to be written on the ballot paper at elections; and if he will make a statement. [87504]

Mr. George Howarth: The provisions of Rule 37 of the Parliamentary Elections Rules (Schedule 1 of the Representation of the People Act 1983), which is also applied to European Parliamentary and local elections, requires a voter's electoral registration number to be written on the counterfoil of the ballot paper issued to that voter. Writing that number on the ballot paper would cause the voter to be identified. Under rule 47(1)(c), such a ballot paper would be liable to be declared void when the votes were counted.

Deportation Orders

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were enforced in May. [87011]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is not currently available from central data sources and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Nationality Act 1981

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the British Nationality Act 1981 to allow those born abroad to British women prior to 1 January 1983 to be deemed to have British nationality; and if he will make a statement. [87356]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since February 1979, minors born abroad to British mothers have been able to acquire British nationality on application. Those born after 1 January 1983 are automatically British citizens at birth. It was decided in 1981 not to make these changes retrospective. We have no plans to alter the position.

Cycling (Fixed Penalty Offence)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to implement the fixed penalty offence of cycling on the pavement; and if he will make a statement. [87358]

Mr. Boateng: We intend that it will come into force in August this year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Robert Hamill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date investigators ordered a transcript of police radio messages in the Portadown area on the night of the attack on Mr. Robert Hamill; what measures have been taken to ensure the security of the original tape; if the transcript was made available to (a) prosecution lawyers and (b) defence lawyers, (c) the legal representatives of the Hamill family and (d) herself; and if she will place a copy in the Library. [86141]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 9 June 1999]: The RUC have advised that the investigators obtained the original radio tape on 9 May 1997 and this was made available to the Director of Public Prosecutions as part of the RUC prosecution case. Transcripts were made available to the DPP and, under disclosure rules in criminal cases, to defence lawyers in the case R -v- Hobson. No transcripts have been made available to any other parties, including the Secretary of State's office. The original tape will be secured for future reference by the Chief Constable on its return to the RUC.

Mrs. Rosemary Nelson

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates US Federal Bureau of Investigation personnel have been in Northern Ireland in connection with the investigation of the death of Rosemary Nelson; and what has been their role in the investigation. [86142]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 9 June 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 140.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 5 June the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [87161]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 30 May-5 June 1999 are shown:

	Number
Deaths	1
Shooting incidents	2
Bombing incidents	7

The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	2	2
Shootings	0	1
Total	2	3

Notes:

1. The shooting and bombing incidents cannot as yet be firmly attributed to a grouping.

2. Figures may be subject to minor amendment.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 29 May the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [87163]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 23–29 May 1999 are shown:

	Number
Deaths	0
Shooting incidents	1
Bombing incidents	2

The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	0	0
Shootings	0	1
Total	0	1

Notes:

1. The shooting and bombing incidents cannot as yet be firmly attributed to a grouping.

2. Figures may be subject to minor amendment.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 29 May the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [87164]

Mr. Ingram: The number of paramilitary attacks during the period 23–29 May are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	0	0
Shootings	0	1
Total	0	1

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 5 June the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [87162]

Mr. Ingram: The number of paramilitary attacks during the period 30 May-5 June are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	2	2
Shootings	0	1
Total	2	3

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to her Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87317]

Marjorie Mowlam: Between 15 April and 15 June my Department dealt with 58 named day questions of which 30, or 51.6 per cent., were given substantive answers on the day specified.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sites of special scientific interest there were in Northern Ireland on 31 March; and what was their total area in hectares. [87269]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service under their acting chief executive, Mr. J. R. Lamont. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. R. Lamont to Mr. John Randall, dated 17 June 1999:

As Acting Chief Executive of the Environment and Heritage Service, I am responsible for operational aspects of protection of the natural heritage on behalf of the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland. I am responding to the Parliamentary Question you put down on 23 June 1999 about the number of Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) in Northern Ireland as at 31 March and their total hectarage.

In Northern Ireland SSSIs are known as Areas of Special Scientific Interest and at 31 March 1999 there were 159 covering a total area of 83441 hectares.

I trust you will find this helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid Payments (Northern Ireland Solicitors)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the range of sums paid per hour to solicitors in Northern Ireland in respect of legal aid payments; and what is the average taxed rate. [87377]

Mr. Vaz: The hourly rate ranges from £24.25 in respect of travelling and waiting time for a Legal Advice and Assistance case to £64.50 in respect of advocacy by a senior solicitor in a Crown Court criminal case. The current hourly rate in civil cases is £66.50. Additionally for care and conduct these rates are subject to a percentage uplift which is normally in the range of 50 per cent. to 100 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lindane

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the use of lindane as a pesticide. [87944]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have noted the concerns raised about this compound and the assessment made by the Austrian authorities under the EU review of agricultural pesticides. The Government therefore asked the independent experts of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides to examine all the issues which have been raised.

The Committee advised that lindane does not pose an unacceptable risk to consumers but that the exposure of operators using lindane to treat seed was above acceptable levels. Ministers have therefore decided that the use of lindane as a seed treatment should cease immediately and that further conditions should be applied to some other agricultural and non-agricultural uses. Companies have until 28 June to make representations on the action proposed.

The Committee advised that more data are needed on the environmental effects of lindane. This point will be pursued as a priority.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86994]

Angela Eagle: We are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment, published in November 1998, commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

We are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women. We routinely consult a wide variety of organisations on policy proposals. Within that process we are committed to including women's groups to ensure that the women's perspective is taken into consideration. As an example, a number of women's organisations, including the Women's National Commission, were consulted in connection with our proposals for ONE (formerly the Single Work-focused Gateway) and a summary of responses has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many ministerial cars there were for the use of his Department's Ministers in May 1997; and how many ministerial cars there currently are for the use of (i) his Department's Ministers and (ii) the Ministers of the new Scottish Executive; [86458]

(2) how many cars have been purchased for the use of Ministers of the new Scottish Executive. [86394]

Dr. Reid: The Government Car Service in Scotland provides or arranges the provision of transport for Ministers of UK Government Departments when in Scotland, senior members of the Scottish judiciary, and the most senior Departmental officials. Following the establishment of the Scottish Parliament and the appointment of Ministers of the Scottish Executive, the service has been made available also to the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament, to Ministers of the Scottish Executive, and to Deputy Ministers.

No cars have been purchased for the sole use of any users of the Government Car Service in Scotland. In May 1997 the Government Car Service in Scotland comprised 8 cars. However, to handle increased demand for services the fleet was expanded earlier this year by the addition of 3 cars, taking the total number to 11.

From 1 July the provision of cars for the Scottish Executive by the Government Car Service in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (i) written and (ii) oral questions were answered by his Department in 1998; and how many of them were on matters which will be the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament. [86360]

Dr. Reid: 2,131 written and oral questions were answered by my Department in 1998. A breakdown in the format requested is not readily available and could be provided only by incurring disproportionate cost.

My Department has indicated in written and oral replies to parliamentary questions answered after 26 January 1999 whether, following the transfer of functions, the issue will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

WALES

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his future role. [86341]

Mr. Michael: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) on 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 358.

Correspondence

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will reply to the letter dated 30 March addressed to him and other Ministers by the hon. Member for Solihull. [86848]

Mr. Michael: After a thorough search, I regret that my Department could find no record of my having received a letter dated 30 March from the hon. Member.

I have written to the hon. Member inviting him to send me a copy of the letter. I will then ensure that it is answered as quickly as possible.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87332]

Mr. Michael: Forty five, of which 87 per cent. received a substantive response on the named day.

Inward Investmen (American Companies)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies based in the USA which have a presence in Wales indicating in each case the location and number of workers employed. [87459]

Mr. Hain: I have asked for the information to be prepared. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Waterhouse Inquiry

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the findings of the Waterhouse Inquiry into Child Abuse in North Wales. [87457]

Mr. Michael: The Tribunal of Inquiry has not yet submitted its report. It will be presented to Parliament as quickly as possible as soon as it is received.

Tourism

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in rank order by country the number of international overnight visits to Wales in each of the past 10 years. [87458]

Mr. Hain: The readily available information is for the years 1990 to 1997. The figures are estimates compiled by the Wales Tourist Board, based on sample survey results from the International Passenger Survey supplemented with estimates for the Irish Republic.

Top 10 generating countries	Number
1990
Total overseas visits to Wales	680,000
1. USA	145,000
2. West Germany	96,000
3. Australia	75,000
4. Canada	51,000
5. Republic of Ireland	50,000
6. France	47,000
7. Netherlands	37,000
8. New Zealand	19,000
9. Italy	16,000
10. Belgium/Luxembourg	14,000
1991
Total overseas visits to Wales	650,000
1. USA	122,000
2. Germany	101,000
3. France	54,000
4. Republic of Ireland	54,000
5. Netherlands	48,000
6. Australia	48,000
7. Canada	33,000
8. Belgium/Luxembourg	22,000
9. Italy	20,000
10. New Zealand	13,000
1992
Total overseas visits to Wales	670,000
1. USA	131,000
2. Germany	103,000
3. France	69,000
4. Republic of Ireland	53,000
5. Australia	47,000
6. Canada	36,000
7. Netherlands	33,000
8. Belgium/Luxembourg	26,000
9. Switzerland	16,000
10. Spain	14,000

Top 10 generating countries	Number
1993
Total overseas visits to Wales	690,000
1. USA	131,000
2. Germany	107,000
3. France	78,000
4. Republic of Ireland	52,000
5. Netherlands	43,000
6. Australia	42,000
7. Canada	36,000
8. Belgium/Luxembourg	24,000
9. Italy	24,000
10. Sweden	17,000
1994
Total overseas visits to Wales	680,000
1. USA	140,000
2. Germany	109,000
3. France	53,000
4. Republic of Ireland	53,000
5. Australia	48,000
6. Canada	40,000
7. Netherlands	35,000
8. South Africa	18,000
9. Belgium/Luxembourg	17,000
10. Italy	17,000
1995
Total overseas visits to Wales	730,000
1. USA	143,000
2. Germany	101,000
3. France	66,000
4. Republic of Ireland	64,000
5. Australia	45,000
6. Netherlands	41,000
7. Canada	36,000
8. Italy	25,000
9. Belgium/Luxembourg	20,000
10. Switzerland	16,000
1996
Total overseas visits to Wales	830,000
1. USA	148,000
2. France	87,000
3. Germany	79,000
4. Australia	67,000
5. Republic of Ireland	66,000
6. Netherlands	61,000
7. Canada	41,000
8. Spain	25,000
9. Italy	22,000
10. New Zealand	14,000
1997
Total overseas visits to Wales	920,000
1. USA	154,000
2. Germany	145,000
3. France	84,000
4. Republic of Ireland	80,000
5. Australia	77,000
6. Netherlands	66,000
7. Canada	45,000
8. Belgium/Luxembourg	27,000
9. Italy	27,000
10. Spain	25,000

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Foreign Consulates

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the countries which have (a) established consulates in Wales and (b) made inquiries about establishing consulates in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [87460]

Mr. Hain: The Republic of Ireland has recently established a Consulate in Cardiff. The following countries have established Honorary Consulates in Wales: Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Tunisia, and Turkey. I understand there are no requests at present from other countries to establish a Consulate in Wales.

The establishment of a Consular presence in Wales by a particular country is a matter for the Government of that country. I can see that a Consular presence could bring many advantages to both countries. I would welcome any proposals to establish Consulate offices in Wales.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a participant on a European Social Fund course of training is covered by the Department's Analogous Industrial Injuries Compensation Scheme. [85755]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Unemployed people participating in DfEE funded work-based training schemes which are receiving ESF assistance are covered by the DfEE's Analogous Industrial Injuries Scheme. Unemployed people who are participating in Work Trials, or the new deal, programmes supported by the Employment Service, are also covered by the scheme.

The Analogous Industrial Injuries Scheme applies only to ESF courses where the matched funding comes from DfEE funding for programmes for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already decided it may apply. People participating in other courses supported by ESF are not covered by the scheme.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the maximum number of hours per week that a trainee on a European Social Fund training course can undertake without affecting his entitlement to receive jobseeker's allowance. [85752]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A jobseeker may undertake a training course, whether or not part-funded by ESF, providing he is not a full-time student and he continues to meet the Jobseeker's Allowance entitlement conditions. An Employment Service Adjudication Officer will determine, in each case, whether the jobseeker is a full-time or a part-time student.

Under the Jobseekers Act 1995, a person must be available for employment in order to be entitled to JSA, and under regulation 11 of the Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations 1996, a part-time student may, in prescribed circumstances, be available for employment. The maximum number of hours of study a student can undertake and still be considered a 'part-time' student is not fixed by the Regulations in every case. 'Full-time student' is defined in regulation 1(3). Paragraph (b)(ii) of that definition specifies an FEFC funded course of more than 16 hours a week, but paragraph (b)(i) which deals with non-FEFC funded courses, does not specify a number of hours.

Class Sizes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, by local authority, (a) the number of pupils in classes of more than 30, (b) the percentage of pupils in classes of 31 or more, (c) the average class size and (d) the total number of pupils in maintained (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in January 1997. [86975]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is shown in the following table:

Number and percentage of pupils in classes of 31 or more taught by one teacher and pupils on roll in maintained primary and secondary schools by Local Education Authority area in England January 1997

	Primary schools Pupils in class				Secondary schools Pupils in class
	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)	Average size of class	Pupils on roll	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)	Average size of class	Pupils on roll
England	1,344,231	33	27.5	4,429,043	245,420	9	21.7	3,041,584
North East	68,173	30	27.2	248,434	14,665	9	22.0	177,905
Hartlepool	2,833	30	28.0	10,538	413	7	22.0	6,176
Middlesbrough	3,700	24	26.5	17,267	349	4	22.0	8,608
Redcar and Cleveland	4,576	31	27.4	16,680	549	6	22.2	10,161
Stockton-on-Tees	4,507	24	26.8	20,531	415	3	22.2	12,517
Durham	21,429	41	28.5	57,442	3,398	10	22.5	37,976
Northumberland	8,314	43	27.0	21,839	3,959	15	22.6	30,052
Gateshead	2,112	13	25.8	18,566	662	6	20.4	11,745
Newcastle upon Tyne	6,904	34	27.6	22,220	1,569	10	21.5	17,378
North Tyneside	4,779	31	27.1	17,027	1,419	11	21.9	14,369
South Tyneside	3,996	28	27.0	16,175	758	8	22.7	9,724
Sunderland	5,023	18	26.0	30,149	1,174	7	21.3	19,199
North West and Merseyside	242,764	39	27.9	686,676	42,673	10	21.8	437,763
North West	201,712	41	28.1	539,526	34,935	11	22.0	341,745
Cheshire	33,630	39	27.5	92,808	7,140	12	21.3	65,767
Cumbria	11,984	29	26.3	44,895	3,406	11	21.2	32,372
Bolton	11,422	49	28.9	28,512	2,324	14	22.1	17,798
Bury	7,178	44	28.3	18,095	1,510	14	23.1	11,100
Manchester	10,615	25	27.2	46,356	1,801	9	22.4	22,233
Oldham	10,645	48	29.3	25,111	1,048	7	22.2	16,676
Rochdale	9,004	45	29.6	22,354	1,325	11	22.8	13,168
Salford	7,043	31	27.3	23,828	501	4	22.1	12,078
Stockport	9,446	37	27.8	26,941	947	6	23.1	15,677
Tameside	11,566	53	29.3	23,830	1,195	9	23.0	14,220
Trafford	9,693	50	28.9	21,462	609	5	21.7	13,225
Wigan	11,098	42	28.5	30,276	1,311	7	21.5	19,984
Lancashire	58,388	47	28.8	135,058	11,818	14	22.5	87,447
Merseyside	41,052	31	27.1	147,150	7,738	9	20.9	96,018
Knowsley	5,820	33	27.7	19,788	579	6	22.1	9,670
Liverpool	12,581	27	26.8	49,345	2,936	10	21.1	31,767
St. Helens	6,270	41	27.8	18,027	1,265	11	19.9	11,873
Sefton	9,634	38	27.6	28,115	1,269	7	21.1	19,630
Wirral	6,747	23	26.3	31,875	1,689	8	20.5	23,078
Yorkshire and Humberside	159,744	37	27.9	482,447	27,167	9	21.9	334,065
East Riding of Yorkshire	10,254	40	28.3	27,126	1,148	6	21.0	20,789
City of Kingston-upon-Hull	10,164	39	28.8	28,446	1,345	9	24.3	15,082
North East Lincolnshire	6,228	40	28.1	17,265	1,445	14	23.2	11,185
North Lincolnshire	4,932	36	27.7	14,972	1,281	13	22.5	10,398
York	4,961	35	27.6	14,905	670	8	21.6	9,320
North Yorkshire	15,129	34	26.3	47,927	2,174	6	20.6	37,039
Barnsley	9,082	44	28.9	22,216	726	6	23.2	12,932
Doncaster	10,052	35	28.1	31,343	979	5	21.5	20,734
Rotherham	8,094	34	27.7	25,822	1,276	8	21.6	19,150
Sheffield	11,261	28	26.9	46,380	2,054	8	22.7	27,447
Bradford	13,443	39	28.3	42,327	5,771	14	23.2	46,179
Calderdale	6,185	33	28.0	20,605	884	7	20.9	14,067
Kirklees	15,730	48	29.0	38,649	2,504	11	22.5	25,564
Leeds	22,031	35	28.3	71,508	2,819	7	20.7	44,423
Wakefield	12,198	41	28.2	32,956	2,091	11	22.2	19,756
East Midlands	133,725	39	27.8	377,257	18,359	7	21.6	272,020
Derbyshire	44,864	55	29.3	89,507	6,067	11	22.2	58,890
Leicestershire	22,862	30	26.7	83,027	3,489	6	22.3	61,800
Lincolnshire	14,644	29	26.9	53,619	1,525	4	20.2	39,997
Northamptonshire	13,015	26	27.0	54,701	2,034	5	21.0	45,934

Number and percentage of pupils in classes of 31 or more taught by one teacher and pupils on roll in maintained primary and secondary schools by Local Education Authority area in England January 1997

	Primary schools				Secondary schools
	Pupils in class				Pupils in class
	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)	Average size of class	Pupils on roll	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)	Average size of class	Pupils on roll
Nottinghamshire	38,340	44	28.7	96,403	5,244	9	21.7	65,399
West Midlands	152,230	33	27.4	511,667	37,160	11	22.0	350,644
Hereford and Worcester	12,527	25	26.0	52,887	6,286	14	22.0	47,636
Shropshire	13,545	38	27.4	38,067	2,778	12	21.9	26,109
Staffordshire	31,492	35	27.5	96,437	9,818	15	22.2	71,712
Warwickshire	17,493	43	28.5	43,662	2,397	9	22.2	30,280
Birmingham	24,848	26	27.7	109,673	7,776	13	21.8	66,867
Coventry	8,641	31	27.6	30,478	1,846	10	22.6	19,738
Dudley	6,904	27	26.5	30,884	671	4	23.1	18,912
Sandwell	12,606	44	28.9	32,962	1,343	7	21.7	19,087
Solihull	8,478	43	27.9	21,581	1,141	8	21.9	14,387
Walsall	7,527	32	26.2	28,743	1,813	10	20.7	20,078
Wolverhampton	8,169	38	26.9	26,293	1,291	9	21.0	15,838
Eastern	121,738	29	26.9	448,359	22,874	7	21.3	348,217
Bedfordshire	12,890	33	27.4	44,748	3,330	8	22.5	46,378
Cambridgeshire	20,831	36	28.2	60,924	3,793	10	22.1	42,018
Essex	38,831	30	27.3	136,385	8,263	9	21.7	97,649
Hertfordshire	27,264	33	27.1	92,397	5,291	8	20.3	70,982
Norfolk	13,402	22	25.9	66,666	919	2	20.2	41,583
Suffolk	8,520	19	25.9	47,239	1,278	3	21.1	49,607
London	117,578	22	27.1	624,655	22,096	7	21.7	375,145
Inner London	15,393	8	26.3	226,370	3,992	4	22.4	117,536
City of London	0	0	26.0	208	—	—	—	—
Camden	698	8	27.1	11,294	188	2	20.3	10,932
Hackney	824	6	26.1	18,141	312	5	22.3	7,347
Hammersmith and Fulham	1,106	14	25.3	9,365	511	10	22.6	6,040
Haringey	851	5	26.9	21,610	290	3	21.6	10,069
Islington	702	5	26.6	16,232	270	4	24.0	7,580
Kensington and Chelsea	219	4	25.3	6,568	161	6	20.2	3,313
Lambeth	1,192	8	25.2	19,193	252	4	21.9	6,589
Lewisham	1,207	7	26.1	21,984	0	0	20.7	10,857
Newham	3,021	13	27.9	28,543	313	2	24.5	15,655
Southwark	1,748	9	26.4	23,182	639	8	24.4	9,157
Tower Hamlets	1,047	6	26.2	22,472	197	2	24.0	13,060
Wandsworth	2,299	15	25.8	17,874	691	9	22.6	9,280
Westminster	479	7	24.2	9,604	168	3	21.5	7,657
Outer London	102,185	30	27.5	398,285	18,104	8	23.4	257,609
Barking and Dagenham	2,022	13	27.0	17,883	840	9	20.8	10,143
Barnet	2,456	11	26.2	25,981	689	4	19.8	19,783
Bexley	9,314	45	28.8	22,223	1,982	14	21.8	15,317
Brent	2,383	13	26.5	22,478	353	3	20.5	13,565
Bromley	13,110	55	28.5	24,292	1,844	11	20.4	18,648
Croydon	7,042	26	28.3	30,432	1,339	9	22.2	15,481
Ealing	5,258	22	27.1	27,213	894	7	22.4	14,182
Enfield	9,965	46	29.1	26,028	1,751	10	20.7	18,959
Greenwich	2,126	12	26.0	21,608	469	4	22.5	13,644
Harrow	3,663	22	27.5	19,971	98	1	22.9	8,304
Havering	5,763	29	27.9	21,001	981	7	21.7	14,703
Hillingdon	5,212	28	27.2	22,440	1,457	10	21.1	15,010
Hounslow	4,907	29	26.8	19,828	1,052	8	21.0	15,286
Kingston-upon-Thames	6,682	66	29.4	11,530	912	12	20.2	8,184
Merton	3,676	29	27.3	16,159	542	8	22.7	7,619
Redbridge	8,074	46	28.4	21,103	1,415	10	21.0	16,842
Richmond-upon-Thames	2,671	25	27.2	12,074	194	3	24.0	7,688
Sutton	5,222	40	28.1	14,630	791	7	20.7	12,416
Waltham Forest	2,639	15	26.6	21,411	501	5	23.6	11,835
South East	205,178	33	27.5	653,419	32,106	8	21.3	454,813
Berkshire	18,680	32	27.5	64,851	3,846	8	20.7	49,652
Buckinghamshire	23,085	38	27.9	66,291	3,453	10	21.3	38,312
East Sussex	23,330	46	28.2	55,821	2,093	6	21.4	36,281
Hampshire	47,671	36	27.9	139,425	5,211	6	22.2	86,211
Isle of Wight	1,639	23	25.9	7,387	853	8	22.3	10,969
Kent	47,339	36	28.0	137,962	4,523	5	20.3	104,812
Oxfordshire	13,090	31	27.2	44,733	3,975	12	22.2	36,531
Surrey	15,007	20	26.2	78,781	4,846	10	21.7	51,703
West Sussex	15,337	27	26.8	58,168	3,306	9	21.6	40,342

Number and percentage of pupils in classes of 31 or more taught by one teacher and pupils on roll in maintained primary and secondary schools by Local Education Authority area in England January 1997

	Primary schools Pupils in class				Secondary schools Pupils in class
	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)[1]	Average size of class[2]	Pupils on roll[3]	Pupils in classes of 31 or more	(%)[1]	Average size of class[2]	Pupils on roll[3]
South West	143,101	38	27.5	396,129	28,320	10	21.7	291,012
Bath and NE Somerset	3,579	29	27.0	13,111	766	7	20.7	11,483
City of Bristol	9,905	32	27.2	33,642	672	4	21.1	16,518
North Somerset	4,675	33	27.8	14,775	816	8	20.4	11,882
South Gloucestershire	9,563	45	28.5	22,596	1,599	12	21.5	15,216
Cornwall	16,082	40	27.3	41,862	2,756	10	22.0	29,815
Isles of Scilly	33	21	17.3	160	0	0	21.0	108
Devon	31,181	38	27.4	84,938	6,039	11	21.4	62,047
Dorset	22,462	50	28.2	48,479	4,544	11	21.8	43,583
Gloucestershire	15,280	34	27.4	46,248	3,677	11	21.5	34,961
Somerset	14,096	38	27.6	38,509	3,840	14	23.2	28,854
Wiltshire	16,245	32	27.2	51,809	3,611	11	21.7	36,545

[1] Pupils in classes of size 31 or more expressed as a percentage of all pupils in classes taught by one teacher
[2] All classes taught by one teacher
[3] Includes pupils in classes taught by more than one teacher and pupils not in class
[4] Not applicable (no schools of this type)

Departmental Expenditure

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals there are to amend the departmental expenditure limit and gross running costs limit for 1999–2000. [86982]

Mr. Mudie: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services and Vote 4 (Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools), the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 1999–2000 (excluding Welfare to Work) will be decreased by £30,800,000 from £15,702,326,000 to £15,671,526,000.

The decrease is the result of a transfer of £30,800,000 to Class XIV, Vote 1 (the Welsh Office) to take account of the change to student support arrangements following the Dearing Review.

The voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £46,200,000 from £14,350,774,000 to £14,396,974,000 as a result of the transfer mentioned above and a switch of £77,000,000 from credit approvals to Class 1, Vote 1 in connection with the provision of schools capital. The increase of £77,000,000 will be offset by a matching reduction in the non-voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit from £1,351,552,000 to £1,274,552,000.

The Supplementary Estimates also include a transfer of £500,000 from Vote 1 to Vote 4 in connection with the inspection of nursery education for three-year olds. This transfer has no effect on the Departmental Expenditure Limit.

The Departmental running costs limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be reduced by £200,000 from £1,042,410,000 to £1,042,210,000 as a result of a switch of that amount into the Youth Advocates programme.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87329]

Mr. Mudie: Between 15 April and 15 June, 132 parliamentary questions have been tabled to the Department for written answer on a named day; 81 per cent. received a substantive reply on that day.

Higher Education (International Students)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans there are to promote overseas the quality of further and higher education in the United Kingdom and ease arrangements for international students to enter the United Kingdom and support themselves while studying. [87667]

Mr. Blunkett: My Department has been co-ordinating the Prime Minister's initiative to attract more international students to the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have joined with me to develop a strategy that will help our institutions to compete in an increasingly competitive global marketplace, enhance the image of the UK overseas and help position the UK as a knowledge-driven economy.

The strategy includes four main components. The first is the development of a "UK Education Brand" and marketing materials to promote the high quality of UK education. A world-wide marketing campaign will begin early in 2000. Second, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs aims to expand the Chevening Scholarship Scheme, increasing by at least 500 the number of scholarships awarded each year. Third, we will ease procedures on permission for students to work part-time and in vacations. With effect from 21 June 1999 international students will no longer be required to seek permission from Jobcentres to work part-time and in vacations, and sandwich course students will no longer require a work permit from my Department for their placement year. Fourth, updated guidance notes, designed to make entry requirements clearer, will be available for students and posted on the Internet. The British Council will work with entry clearance posts in a number of countries to streamline the visa application process for students who qualify to come here for study.

Through this package of measures the Government will help UK education institutions to increase their marketing capability overseas and thereby increase international student enrolments. For international students from outside the European Union, the Government hope that these measures will allow institutions to increase the UK's market share of higher education students in relation to the major competitors of USA, Australia and Canada from 17 per cent. in 1996–97 to 25 per cent. in 2005 and to increase the number of further education students by 100 per cent. from some 25,000 in 1996–97 to 50,000 by 2005.

Consultants (Teacher Appraisal)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the consultants employed over the past 18 months in connection with the Government's plans for teacher pay and teacher appraisal, indicating the terms of reference in each case and the total sum of consultancy fees paid; and how many of the consultants were paid over £50,000 for carrying out a research project. [87596]

Ms Estelle Morris: Two consultancy contracts have been let in the last 18 months. The first was let to PricewaterhouseCooper. I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 25 May 1999, Official Report, columns 101–02. The cost of this work is commercial in confidence.

We have subsequently issued a letter of intent to Hay McBer in respect of research into teacher effectiveness pending finalisation of the contract. This sets out the work to be undertaken. I have arranged for an extract from the letter to be lodged in the Library.

The cost is commercial in confidence.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

River Access

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to increase access to non-tidal navigable rivers by non-motor-powered river craft. [86863]

Mr. Meale: The Government sponsored Environment Agency and British Waterways, which between them are responsible for the majority of the country's navigable rivers and canals, continue to manage their waterways with all users in mind, as do other navigation authorities.

The Environment Agency has successfully acted as honest broker on a number of rivers in England and Wales to help secure access agreements. The Agency continues to encourage the development of access agreements and currently chairs the Angling and Canoeing Liaison Group, which is developing a guide to the negotiation of access agreements. The guide will provide information for all likely parties who are seeking to achieve new access for canoeists, and other water sports and activities, to private waters. The Liaison Group expects to publish the guide in July.

The Countryside Agency, Countryside Council for Wales and the Forestry Commission have been asked to consider access to other categories of open countryside, including river and canal banks, as part of the Government's commitment to introducing a statutory right of access on foot to the countryside. Their reports are expected to focus on the case for an extension of access on foot, but may also take into account access for other types of recreational users in the countryside, such as people using boats, cycles or horses.

London Economics

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will name the non-governmental consultees and advisers engaged by his Department to advise on the conduct of the research by London Economics into the Environmental Costs and Benefits of Aggregate Supply; and what his Department has paid to each for their services. [87098]

Mr. Caborn: Following the recommendation of an independent review of the initial work by London Economics, the Phase 2 research was assisted by an international group of experts on those aspects of research design involving contingent valuation techniques.

The group comprised: Ian Bateman of the University of East Anglia; Nick Hanley of the University of Edinburgh; Michael Hanemann of the University of California at Berkeley; Susana Mourato of Imperial College; Richard Ready of the University of Oslo; Toby Taper of MORI; and Ken Willis of Newcastle University.

The total amount paid to members of the group was £41,898 including fees and travel expenses. Their contracts do not provide for publication of their individual remuneration without consent.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he received the final report by London Economics on the Environmental Costs and Benefits of Aggregates Supply. [87097]

Mr. Caborn: Copies of the final report were submitted to the Department on 26 May 1999.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many contracts were awarded to London Economics for their study of the environmental effect of mineral extraction; and what has been the total sum of money, including expenses, paid by his Department to London Economics for each of the contracts. [87195]

Mr. Caborn: London Economics was paid £107,815 under a contract to carry out the study of the Environmental Costs and Benefits of the Supply of Aggregates published in April 1998. Further research, Phase 2 to be published in July 1999, has been undertaken under two contracts. £108,495 was paid under the first of these and £301,665 under the second contract. The latter includes over £200,000 paid to sub-contractors for survey work. The contract sums exclude VAT.

Airbags

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of cars sold in Britain in each of the past five years have been fitted with (a) airbags in the driver's seat only, (b) airbags in the driver's and front passenger seats, (c) airbags for rear passengers and (d) side-impact air bags. [86999]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Vehicle registration statistics do not yield this information. I understand that the majority of new cars sold in the UK now have drivers airbags fitted as standard equipment.

Tele-conferencing

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the need to amend the law to provide for the validity of meetings of public bodies, and their subsequent decisions, conducted by tele-conferencing and related technology. [87134]

Mr. Meale: I am not aware of any problems in this area at present, but I will keep the position under review.

Recycling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to increase the recycled content in soft tissue paper products. [87253]

Mr. Meale: In July 1998, the Government established a Market Development Group to consider the measures that could be taken to enhance the markets for recycled materials, including paper, and to develop proposals to help overcome any barriers. The Group considered a range of measures, including the use of economic instruments, quality standards and specifications for recycled goods and materials, and whether it is desirable to set mandatory levels of recycled content for specified goods.

The Group has now finished its work and its report and recommendations for action will be published for consultation at the same time as the draft waste strategy.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the new membership of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment; and if he will make a statement. [87766]

Mr. Meacher: The new Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) has been appointed today. The committee consists of highly regarded scientists and technical experts (listed). Together they will form a well-balanced committee with the necessary range of expertise and views to provide sound advice on the risks to the environment and human health from the release of genetically modified organisms.

I announced my intention to review the membership and remit of ACRE in a statement to the House of Lords on 21 October 1998. The remit of the committee was subsequently widened—5 November 1998, Official Report, column 638—and the new committee now has an extended range of expertise. This has strengthened ACRE in areas such as ecology, wildlife/biodiversity and farming practice. These extensions to ACRE's competence will allow it to advise in greater depth on the possible impacts of widespread cultivation of GM crops on our countryside and wildlife. In addition, I will also be including for the first time on ACRE a place for the Chair of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes in an ex-officio capacity. This is in recognition of the importance of close communication between our key advisory committees.

The selection of the new Chair of ACRE is being conducted as a separate appointment and will be announced in the Autumn. Additional members will be appointed in due course and details published in line with guidance from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

I have placed further details of the new Members in the House of Commons Library and the information is also published on the DETR Website (www.environment.detr.gov.uk/acre/wildlife/index.htm).

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the outgoing members of ACRE for their hard work and sound advice. My fellow Ministers and I are very grateful.

New Members of ACRE

Dr. Mark Bailey

Institute of Virology and Environmental Microbiology

Expertise: Molecular biology, Microbiology

Principle Scientist and Leader of the Molecular Microbial Ecology Group at the NERC[1] Institute of Virology and Environmental Microbiology. Dr. Bailey is a member of the BBSRC[2] Microbial Genetics Working Party, and until recently served as a member of the NERC Terrestrial Sciences Peer Review Committee and the Society for General Microbiology's Environmental Microbiology Group. He has been an adviser for HSE[3] and the former DOE[4] as well as working for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Edward Cross

Farmer, Abbey Farm, Norfolk

Expertise: Farming practice

Mr. Cross currently jointly manages a substantial farming concern in the East of England. He has a strong commitment to farming and the Environment and is Director of the Farmer's Link Sustainable Agriculture & Rural Development Working Group.

Professor Alan Gray (acting ACRE Chairman)

Institute of Terrestrial Ecology—Furzebrook

Expertise: Farmland ecology

Head of ITE Furzebrook and, from next year, of the combined Institute of Terrestrial Ecology and the Institute of Freshwater Ecology's Laboratory in Dorset, Professor Gray has been a highly regarded and productive member of ACRE for five years. He has more than 30 years' research experience in pure and applied ecology and genetics. He is a past Vice-President of the British Ecological Society and holds a Visiting Professorship at Southampton University.

Dr. Susan Hartley

Institute of Terrestrial Ecology—Banchory

Expertise: Ecology, Entomology

Principle Scientific Officer and Head of the Community Ecology Section at the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology's Banchory Research Station. Dr. Hartley is a leading plant ecologist specialising in herbivory and is on the Science Advisory Board for Scottish Natural Heritage, the Steering Committee of the Heather Trust and an Honorary Senior Lecturer at the Department of Plant and Soil Science at the University of Aberdeen.

Dr. Penelope Hirsch

Institute of Arable Crop Research, Rothamsted

Expertise: Molecular Biology, Microbiology

Principal Research Scientist at the Institute of Arable Crop Research, Rothamsted. Dr. Hirsch is recognised as an outstanding molecular biologist whose current area of research concentrates on soil microbial ecology. Dr. Hirsch is a member of the Technical Sub-Committee of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Manipulation.

Dr. Mike Mayo

Scottish Crop Research Institute, Dundee

Expertise: Plant virology

Senior Principal Scientist at the Scottish Crop Research Institute. Dr. Mayo is a leading research scientist working on the molecular biology of plant viruses. He is a member of the Executive Committee of International Committee on Taxonomy of Viruses.

Professor Christopher Pollock

Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research, Aberystwyth

Expertise: Plant breeding, Molecular biology

Research Director at the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research. He is a member of the BBSRC's Strategy board and Chair of the Plants and Microbial Sciences Committee. In 1996 he was a member of DOE's Climate Change Impacts Review Group. Professor Pollock is currently Chair of the steering committee for the programme of farm-scale evaluations.

Mr. Jules Pretty

University of Essex

Expertise: Sustainable development

Director of the Centre for Environment and Society, University of Essex. Mr. Pretty is an acknowledged expert on sustainable agricultural systems and farming practice. He is a Consultant for DfID[5] projects and the US Agency for International Development. He is also a Member of the advisory committee for DfID on Biodiversity Policy and Practice Project.

Dr. Mark Rees

University of London

Expertise: Weed ecology, Plant biology

Lecturer at Imperial College, University of London. Dr. Rees has an excellent international reputation for his research on plant population dynamics and its application to the biological control of weeds. Dr. Rees was awarded the Founders Prize of the British Ecological Society in 1997.

Dr. Christopher Spray

Northumbrian Water

Expertise: Biodiversity and Conservation

Environmental Manager at Northumbrian Water responsible for conservation and Biodiversity issues. Dr. Spray has produced Northumbrian Water's environmental strategy and Biodiversity Action Plan. He is a member of DETR's Conservation, Access and Recreation in the Water Industry committee, a member of the England Local Issues Subgroup (of the England Biodiversity Group) and Chairman of Water UK's Network on Conservation, Access and Re creation in the Water Industry.

Professor Ingrid Williams

Institute of Arable Crop Research-Rothamsted

Expertise: Entomology

Principle Research Scientist at the Institute of Arable Crops Research at Rothamsted. Professor Williams is currently the entomology expert on ACRE, Chair of the International Commission for Plant-Bee Relationships and Council member of the International Bee Research Association.

Chair of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ex-officio seat)

Professor Janet Bainbridge

University of Teesside

Professor Bainbridge is the Director of Science and Technology at the University of Teesside. She is Chair of Advisory Committee on Novel Food and Processes (ACNFP) and their sub group on Long Term Monitoring. Professor Bainbridge has many years experience of committee work and is a leading authority on GM Food Safety.

[1] National Environmental Research Council

[2] Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council

[3] Health and Safety Executive

[4] Department of the Environment

[5] Department for International Development

Planning Regulations (Telecommunications Development)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend planning regulations for telecommunications development. [87776]

Mr. Caborn: I have today laid before Parliament an Order to make the amendments to the telecommunications permitted development rights granted under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO), which I announced on 16 November 1998, Official Report, column 343, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, East and Mexborough (Mr. Ennis). These include a new 42-day prior approval procedure for ground based masts and strengthened planning controls in Sites of Special Interest. Subject to Parliamentary procedures, the Order will enter into force on 9 July 1999.

A Departmental circular, "Planning for Telecommunications", is being issued to accompany the changes made to the GPDO. The circular sets a clear policy framework for planning for telecommunications development to keep environmental intrusion to a minimum. We look to both local planning authorities and the industry to adopt a proactive approach to identifying the best environmental solutions for telecommunications development. Pre-application discussions between the parties will allow a constructive examination of different siting and design solutions for accommodating telecommunications development at the least environmental cost. The guidance also explains the scope of telecommunications permitted development rights and the operation of the revised procedures.

Copies of the Order, the accompanying Regulatory Impact Assessment and the circular have been placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Disabled Children

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways Quality Protects management action plans will improve the quality of services for children with disabilities in England and Wales. [86377]

Mr. Hutton: Last September, we announced new Government objectives for children's social services, one of which addressed the needs of disabled children. In their Quality Protects Management Action Plans (MAPS), local authorities were required to set out how they would address these national objectives and to set their own local objectives. All MAPs have now been evaluated by regional social services inspectorate. We shall shortly be publishing a National Overview Report setting out the key messages from this evaluation.

We also consulted on the detailed sub-objectives supporting the main Government objectives, and I am grateful to those parents, voluntary and strategy organisations that responded. We plan to publish revised sub-objectives, including more addressing the needs of disabled children, later in the summer.

The Department has commissioned the Council for Disabled Children to analyse this year's MAPS from the perspective of services for disabled children with a view to recommending further work to enable local authorities to achieve their Quality Protects targets. We are determined to raise standards in the provision of services for disabled children under the Quality Protects Programme. This is an important means of achieving the successful implementation of the Carers National Strategy as it affects parents and carers of disabled children.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what performance indicators his Department has developed to quantify improvements in services for disabled children. [86382]

Mr. Hutton: Later this year, the Department will publish sub-objectives for children's services as part of the implementation of Quality Protects. These will include sub-objectives for disabled children. Performance indicators for disabled children will be developed in partnership with all those with an interest, as improved statistical information becomes available. The Department is introducing a new data collection around children in need from February 2000, which could provide the basis for such indicators.

Children's Homes

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children's homes accommodating fewer than four children there are in (a) the Somerton and Frome constituency and (b) Somerset. [87047]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 June 1999]: Statistics are collected once every three years on the numbers of children's homes. At 31 March 1997, the most recent date that statistics were collected, there were no children's homes accommodating fewer than four children in the former shire county of Somerset. We do not have more recent information on voluntary children's homes in this category. Our latest information is that there are seven homes in Somerset, two of which are in the town of Somerton.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the arrangements are for the inspection and registration of children's homes accommodating fewer than four children; to whom the reports of routine and unannounced inspections are made available; how many unresolved concerns have arisen in such reports since May 1997, and what steps are taken to notify home authorities of concerns arising from such inspections which would affect children who are the legal responsibility of the home authority. [87048]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 June 1999]: Children's homes accommodating fewer than four children are not registered and inspected if they are run for profit by private organisations. Homes which are run on a not-for-profit basis by voluntary organisations are registered and inspected by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Voluntary children's homes are inspected by the social services inspectorate at least twice a year. One visit is announced in advance. The report of the announced inspection is published annually and the letter to the home reporting on the last unannounced visit is included in this publication. If there are any concerns about a home, additional inspections may be made.

Statistical records are not kept of the unresolved concerns that have arisen in the reports of individual inspections of voluntary children's homes. The social services inspectorate follows up any unresolved concerns with the home concerned. Social services inspectors may inform the local authority which is looking after the child of any concerns which subsequently remain outstanding.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions at a children's home accommodating fewer than four persons powers under section 47 of the Children Act 1989 have been used so that a child has been returned to the care of the home authority or to another institution. [87049]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 June 1999]: The Department is not aware of any such occasions. A child that is looked after by a local authority and is placed in a children's home remains the responsibility of that local authority, irrespective of whether the child is placed in a children's home within or outside that local authority. The local authority may move a child without the need to refer to these powers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fishing (Southern Oceans)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter of 6 January, what action has been taken to prevent illegal and unregulated fishing in the Southern Oceans by means of (a) direct action through management of the fisheries around South Georgia and (b) the United Kingdom's involvement in the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources with particular reference to the South Atlantic tooth-fish. [87182]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) continue to enforce rigorously the fisheries licensing regime in the waters of its maritime zone, through a variety of means, including the presence of Fisheries Protection Vessels and aerial surveillance. The GSGSSI incorporates into its fishing licence conditions regulatory measures agreed under the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources (CCAMLR).

New measures adopted in November 1998 at CCAMLR XVII, to address illegal and unregulated fishing, came into effect in time for the current fishing season in South Georgia. CCAMLR Parties are negotiating a catch documentation scheme to track international trade in tooth-fish and prevent imports of fish taken illegally. This scheme, plus additional measures, will be discussed further at CCAMLR XVIII in October. The UK has been actively involved in these negotiations. We will press for an early introduction of such a scheme.

Sudan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan about separatism in south Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [87505]

Mr. Hoon: Although we do not currently have British staff permanently in Khartoum, we maintain a regular dialogue with the Government of Sudan on a wide range of issues. The peace process in the Sudan is a priority for us and the issue of separatism arises in that context.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on reported bombing raids in southern Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [87117]

Mr. Hoon: We have recently received reports by NGOs of aerial bombing in southern Sudan by Government of Sudan aircraft.

In Oslo on 25–26 May, the Government of Sudan and the SPLA both confirmed their commitment to maintain the current humanitarian ceasefire in Bahr el Ghazal. We shall continue to press the case for peace in Sudan.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning raids by Arab militia in southern Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [87116]

Mr. Hoon: We have had a number of reports from UN agencies and other NGOs working in the field, of raids conducted by Arab militia groups in southern Sudan.

In Oslo on 25–26 May, the Government of Sudan and the SPLA both confirmed their commitment to the basic humanitarian principles of Operation Lifeline Sudan as well as the need to maintain the current humanitarian ceasefire in Bahr el Ghazal. We shall continue to press the case for peace in Sudan.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many employees of British Nuclear Fuels plc are employed by, or attached to, the British Embassy in the United States. [86959]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No employees of British Nuclear Fuels plc are employed by, or attached to, the British Embassy in Washington.

Iran (Human Rights)

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Iran concerning the arrest of thirteen rabbis, teachers and other members of the Jewish community of Shiraz. [87126]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners are concerned at reports of the arrest of 13 Iranian Jews. We have made our concerns known to the Iranian authorities and have stressed that we expect the detainees to be treated fairly under Iranian law. We and our EU partners will continue to watch developments closely and will take further action if necessary.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make improved relations with Iran dependent on the release of the group of thirteen Jews from Shiraz arrested by the Iranian Government. [87133]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners regularly raise human rights issues with the Iranian authorities. We have made our concerns about the recent arrest of 13 Iranian Jews known to the Iranian government and sought assurances that they will be treated fairly under Iranian law. We will continue to use our improved relationship with Iran to press for improvements in Iranian policies, on human rights and other issues, which cause us concern.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the actions he has taken since March to secure the release of the group of thirteen Jews from Shiraz who have been arrested. [87127]

Mr. Hoon: We first heard some weeks ago that a number of Jews had been detained without charge in Iran. We have been in regular contact with the Agudas Israel Organisation, both here in the UK and in the US through our mission in New York, and with other agencies involved. The more reliable accounts now agree that 13 people have been detained. Last week it became apparent, first through media reports from Iran and then officially, that they had been accused of espionage.

Before this news broke on 7 June, the German EU Presidency on a visit to Tehran on 20 May had already expressed the concern of EU member states at these detentions. This was followed up with an EU demarche on 16 June. We have also told the Iranians of our concern bilaterally and pressed for the detainees to be treated fairly under Iranian law, as have many of our EU partners. We and our EU partners continue to monitor the situation, and will take further action as necessary.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of human rights abuses in Iran. [87131]

Mr. Hoon: We and our EU partners continue to have serious concerns over certain human rights issues in Iran. We continue to raise these concerns with the Iranian authorities both bilaterally and multilaterally.

We remain particularly concerned over the continued use of torture and the lack of transparency in the judicial system; both are at odds with the stated aim of the Iranian government to establish a civil society based upon the rule of law. We shall continue to engage the Iranian authorities on these issues with the intention of securing further improvements.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments he received from the Iranian Government concerning human rights prior to the exchange of ambassadors between the United Kingdom and Iran. [87125]

Mr. Hoon: The exchange of ambassadors with Iran was agreed in principle during my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's meeting with his Iranian counterpart, Dr. Kharrazi, at the United Nations on 24 September last year, when Dr. Kharrazi gave important assurances that the Iranian government would take no action to threaten the life of Mr. Salman Rushdie, or encourage or assist anyone else to do so.

We and our EU partners remain concerned over certain human rights policies in Iran. We shall continue to raise these concerns with the Iranian authorities.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87188]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The FCO has not introduced any new legislation during this session.

EC Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of the European Community's working groups, stating in each case the number of times each group has met, the nature of the UK delegation, the documents submitted to the Council and the working group's purpose. [86761]

Ms Quin: A full list of European Community's working groups will be placed in the Library once it has been received from the Council Secretariat.

There is no centrally held record of the number of times that working groups have met. The UK is usually represented in working groups by officials from the relevant government department or the UK's Permanent Representation.

Working groups make reports and recommendations on legislative proposals from the Commission. These are then passed to the Council of Ministers for a final decision. The working group reports are not normally published, but the legislation, once enacted, is published in the Official Journal and is also available on the CELEX database.

Stability Pact

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the draft Stability Pact for South-East Europe. [86721]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A copy of the Stability Pact for South-East Europe is being placed in the Library of the House.

Supervision of Children (USA)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review the guidance given to British families when visiting the USA, relating to the supervision of children. [86679]

Mr. Hoon: FCO Travel Advice warns British nationals of the risks to their personal safety when travelling overseas. The situation in each country is monitored closely and the advice revised when necessary. However, FCO Travel Advice is not intended to reflect all the laws and customs of a country and travellers should not rely exclusively upon it.

British Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the previous chairmen of the British Council and their salaries since 1969; [87264]

(2) what salary has been agreed for the current chairman of the British Council. [87265]

Mr. Hoon: The position of the chair of the British Council has never been salaried, though an honorarium has been paid in the past. The honorariums paid to the last Chairman, Sir Martin Jacomb, have been declared in the British Council's annual report and accounts since 1995–96 and amounted to:

1997–98: £10,850
1996–97: £10,560
1995–96: £10,250

I understand that an honorarium for the current chair is under discussion, but not yet agreed.

DEFENCE

Health Trusts

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was paid by his Department to each of the health trusts in which MDHUs operate for the treatment of military personnel in each of the last three years. [80572]

Mr. Doug Henderson [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1999, c. 718–19]: In respect of the amounts paid to health trusts for the treatment of military personnel, I regret that some of the information given was incorrect. For the year 1997–98 the amount my Department paid to Plymouth Hospitals NHS Trust (Derriford) was £1.558 million not £1.381 million.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of departmental personnel treated at NHS hospitals; how many operations were carried out on them; and what was the cost to his Department in each of the last five years. [65780]

Mr. Doug Henderson [pursuant to his reply, 4 February 1999, c. 732]: In respect of the cost of treating departmental personnel at NHS hospitals, I regret that some of the information given was incorrect. Treatment costs for 1996–97 were £10.304 million not £12.050 million, and for 1997–98 treatment costs were £9.297 million not £8.622 million.

Duke of York's Headquarters

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Duke of York's Headquarters, Chelsea. [87836]

Mr. Spellar: On 8 July 1998, in connection with the publication of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) we announced that the Duke of York's HQ in Chelsea would be sold and that its occupants, primarily the Territorial, Auxiliary & Volunteer Reserve Association for Greater London and Territorial Army units, would be re-accommodated as necessary. Since then, my Department has been considering how it might secure the optimum receipt for this prestigious site.

Following negotiations, and supported by advice from independent consultants, we have decided to proceed with a private treaty sale of the freehold of the site to Cadogan Estates, who own the principal adjoining site and are a special purchaser. The sale contract will be subject to Cadogan Estates achieving planning consent for an agreed planning application.

The agreed terms specify vacation of a considerable part of the site by March 2000. We require a longer period to finalise and prepare alternative locations for the affected units and we will vacate a further part of the site over the three years to 2003. Under the deal we have negotiated with Cadogan Estates, MOD retains an option for TA and cadet occupation in a small enclave within the site beyond 2003. However, we have not come to a decision yet on whether or not to exercise this option.

Military Deployment

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current proportion of (a) the Army and (b) Land Command (i) committed and (ii) warned to deploy for operations. [85913]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 June 1999]: As at 11 June, some 47 per cent. of the Army and some 72 per cent. of Land Command personnel were committed to operations. These figures include those preparing for and recovering from operations.

Figures for those "warned to deploy" do not meaningfully reflect the current level of operational commitment because the notice given to units depends on the circumstances of the individual unit and the commitment involved. They are a reflection of the current state of the administrative planning process used to identify suitable units to replace those currently on operations and some would be included in the figures for those committed to operations. However, if calculated on the same basis as my Answer of 22 April 1999, Official Report, column 633, the figures for those warned to deploy on operations would be some 24 per cent. of the Army and some 37 per cent. of Land Command.

Women (Armed Forces)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on (i) retention and (ii) deployment of women in the armed forces. [86368]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All three Services are wholly committed to maximising employment opportunities for women in the armed forces, except where it is assessed that this could undermine combat effectiveness. 73 per cent. of posts in the Naval Service, 70 per cent. of posts in the Army and 96 per cent. of posts in the Royal Air Force are open to women.

The Secretary of State commissioned a review into those posts closed to women on the ground of combat effectiveness; that is, the Royal Marines General Service, the Infantry, the Royal Armoured Corps and the RAF Regiment. Following the review it was decided that 1,300 specialist posts in the Royal Marines filled by Royal Navy and Army personnel would be opened to women. The results of the review were set out in the report of the Strategic Defence Review (Comd 2999) published in July last year.

Studies are also being undertaken to assess the impact on combat effectiveness of increasing, to 70 per cent. the number of posts open to women in the Army and of allowing women to serve in "attached billets" in the Royal Marines. This work is due to complete in 2001.

As I said on 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 300–01, we have decided that, following a review into the employment of women in submarines and in mine clearance diving branches, posts in these areas should remain closed on medical grounds.

Servicewomen currently represent around 7.7 per cent. of the total strength of the armed forces. In the 12 months to 1 April 1999, 12 per cent. of all new recruits were women; exit rates for women have remained relatively stable at 10 per cent.

Navy Crews

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy ships currently at sea or operational have a shortfall in crew size broken down by (i) ship and (ii) discipline; and if he will make a statement. [86380]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The shortfalls for the Royal Navy Surface Flotilla ships currently at sea or operational as at 11 June 1999 are:

		Gaps by branch
HM Ship	Complement	Total Warfare	Engineering	Supply	Ship's company
Alderney	38	2	—	—	36
Atherstone	42	1	—	—	41
Bicester	41	1	—	—	40
Birmingham	241	9	1	—	231
Boxer	238	7	—	1	230
Bridport	33	3	—	—	30
Campbeltown	226	7	1	—	218
Cardiff	241	6	2	—	233
Chiddingfold	44	—	1	—	43
Cottesmore	38	1	—	—	37
Coventry	229	8	—	—	221
Cromer	36	2	—	—	34

HM Ship	Complement	Gaps by branch: Total Warfare	Engineering	Supply	Ship's company
Dasher	2	1	-	-	1
Dumbarton Castle	53	1	-	-	52
Exeter	232	8	1	-	223
Fearless	535	13	5	6	511
Glasgow	239	3	3	-	233
Gloucester	244	9	1	-	234
Grafton	163	5	-	-	158
Grimsby	35	1	-	-	34
Guernsey	40	3	-	-	37
Hurworth	40	1	-	-	39
Illustrious	643	13	6	2	622
Inverness	36	-	1	-	35
Invincible	670	7	4	1	658
Iron Duke	165	1	1	-	163
Leeds Castle	40	4	1	-	35
Lindisfarne	39	-	-	1	38
Marlborough	166	3	-	-	163
Middleton	43	1	-	-	42
Monmouth	166	3	-	-	163
Montrose	166	4	1	-	161
Newcastle	226	11	-	-	215
Norfolk	165	3	-	-	162
Northumberland	165	6	-	-	159
Orwell	26	2	-	1	23
Pembroke	35	-	-	1	34
Penzance	36	1	1	-	34
Quorn	40	4	-	-	36
Richmond	165	2	1	-	162
Sandown	37	1	-	-	36
Sheffield	229	16	3	1	209
Shetland	39	1	-	-	38
Sutherland	163	6	-	1	156
Walney	37	1	-	-	36
Westminster	165	2	1	-	162

There are no submarines operating below their full crew complement.

Royal Navy Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy ships have been deployed for more than six months in the last two years and in each case for how long they were deployed; and if he will make a statement. [86383]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Royal Navy ships deployed for more than six months in the period 31 May 1997 to 31 May 1999 are as follows:

Ship	Days deployed
HMS Brave	220
HMS Coventry	217
HMS Liverpool	195
HMS Newcastle	196
HMS Nottingham	214
HMS Westminster	198
HMS London	194
HMS Northumberland	199
HMS Leeds Castle	284
HMS Alderney	188
HMS Guernsey	199
HMS Shetland	188
HMS Cumberland	234
HMS Grafton	204
HMS Sheffield	203
HMS Sutherland	204
HMS Dumbarton Castle	365
HMS Scott	219
HMS Orkney	188

These figures represent the total number of days that the various ships were deployed, but in a number of cases the crews were changed during the course of the deployment.

Army Complement

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by regiment and other section headings (a) the official complement and (b) the actual numbers in post in the Army. [87005]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Different Service Arms attach the term "Regiment" to varying sizes of formation, and not all of them further divide their "official complement" (referred to internally as the Liability, or the "Manpower Planning Target"). The following information is provided in terms of Arm/Service.

The following table provides details of each Service Arm's Strength and Liability, and the difference between the two, as at 1 April 1999. In line with our normal practice, the figures provided include the UK Trained Adult Personnel and Gurkhas, but exclude the Royal Irish (Home Service) Regiment and officers and soldiers under training. The figures shown for the Gurkhas include some three hundred men who form the Gurkha reinforcement companies which are attached to three infantry regiments, and a number of Gurkhas held over Liability to fill key posts elsewhere. I should also point out that the figures do not include 98 officers and 485 soldiers from the Reserves who are mobilised in Bosnia, or 226 Full Time Reservist Service personnel.

The liability and trained strength, by Arm/Service, of the Army

Arm/Service	Liability[1]	Strength	+/-
Staff Officers	689	725	+36
Household Cavalry/Royal Armoured Corps	5,949	5,492	–457
Royal Artillery	8,621	7,869	–752
Royal Engineers	8,336	8,653	+317
Royal Signals	9,045	8,174	–871
Infantry	27,321	24,972	–2,349
Army Air Corps	1,706	1,540	–166
Royal Army Chaplain's Department	137	135	–2
Royal Logistic Corps	15,860	15,224	–636
Royal Army Medical Corps	2,720	2,720	–328
Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers	10,069	9,560	–509
Adjutant General's Corps	6,954	7,034	+80
Royal Army Veterinary Corps	165	132	–33
Small Arms School Corps	140	149	+9
Royal Army Dental Corps	428	350	–78
Intelligence Corps	1,216	1,095	–121
Army Physical Training Corps	393	386	–7
Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps	882	667	–215
Corps of Army Musicians	1,161	1,051	–110
General List	0	2	+2
Unallocated	0	125	+125
Long Service List	597	573	–24
Gurkhas	2,882	3,374	+492
Total	105,271	99,674	–5,597

To implement the Post-SDR force structure the Army's Manpower Requirement (Liability) for Regular Forces (including Gurkhas, but excluding R IRISH (HS) Full Time, Territorial Army and Full Time Reserve Personnel) will increase to 108,439 by 1 April 2005.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the shortfall in the official complement of the Army on 1 May (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [87035]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The shortfall of UK Trained Army Personnel as at 1 May 1997 and 1 May 1998 was 5,406 and 5,438 respectively, and for Gurkha Trained Personnel, a surplus of 473 existed on both dates. These figures exclude Royal Irish (Home Service), and reserve personnel mobilised for duties associated with Bosnia, Full Time Reserve Personnel and Locally Employed Personnel.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the potential cost savings from co-operation between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and Government-funded defence research and development organisations based in NATO member states. [86332]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency is involved in programmes with agencies of NATO Governments which provide access to complementary research which, if carried out unilaterally, could be unaffordable. These programmes may also provide access to novel technology and techniques, scientific peer review of UK activities, and access to broader technology-based relationships.

International collaboration in defence research brings substantial benefit to MOD financially, technically and operationally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what brief the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency has been given for joint defence research and development with organisations from other member states of NATO. [86333]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, DERA, is encouraged to seek opportunities for research collaboration with other nations, and for specified activities in support of Memoranda of Understanding between UK Government and other nations.

Army Cadets (Safety)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements will be in place for the safety of cadets at the army cadets' annual camp in July. [86355]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Cadet safety is of paramount importance to my Department. Cadet training activities are strictly governed by rules and regulations, which are in line with Health and Safety at Work practice, and which stress the need for supervision by adults suitably qualified or authorised to plan, organise and conduct the activity concerned. Detailed instructions are distributed to every Combined Cadet Force (CCF) Contingent, each Army Cadet Force (ACF) Detachment, and personally to every cadet officer, Staff Sergeant Instructor and Adult Instructor in the CCF and ACF. These instructions are to be carried at all times during training and this will remain the case for all Cadet Camps in 1999.

Colchester Garrison

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the name of the preferred bidder for the Colchester Garrison PFI project. [87006]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The detailed evaluation of the bids from the three shortlisted consortia, competing for the Colchester Garrison PFI project, is now complete. A recommendation for the preferred bidder is currently being considered by my Department and I hope to be in a position to make a formal announcement sometime later in the summer.

Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport West of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 482, if he will list the countries from which buyers will be invited to the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition being held in Chertsey and London Docklands from 14 to 17 September. [87136]

Mr. Spellar: The full list of official invitees is still being completed. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as it has been finalised and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87276]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No women's organisations have been consulted so far this session on any legislative proposals.

Regimental Insignia

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules and guidelines govern the use of Army regimental insignia; in what circumstances regimental insignia may be used for commercial and political advertising; and what penalties may be incurred by use of insignia for such purposes without permission. [87158]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 16 June 1999]: The Badges, Crests and Insignia of Her Majesty's Armed Forces are subject to Crown Copyright. The rights associated with Crown Copyright are vested by Royal Letters Patent in the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office personally. Specific nominees in individual Government Departments, including the Ministry of Defence, have authority to act on behalf of the Controller to give or withhold permission to reproduce certain categories of Crown Copyright material, and to collect fees levied according to a scale of charges set by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The infringement of all Crown Copyright is investigated fully, and should legal action be pursued, penalties could include the seizure of all infringed goods, patterns and designs, payment of Royalties due and damages.

Dublin and Monaghan Bombings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will release documents and records covered by the Official Secrets Acts in order to assist an investigation of allegations of British and Irish military intelligence involvement in the 1974 Dublin and Monaghan bombings. [87462]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We would give consideration to a request for assistance from the appropriate authorities.

Political and Security Committee

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature, formation and activities of the Political and Security Committee established at the Cologne Council. [87304]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The proposal for a Political and Security Committee was made in a Presidency report on strengthening of the common European policy on security and defence to the Cologne European Council. The European Council approved and adopted the report. The report notes that for the EU to decide and conduct effectively the so-called "Petersberg tasks", it may require a permanent body in Brussels (Political and Security Committee) consisting of representatives of member states with political/military expertise. No decisions have yet been taken on the nature, formation and activities of such a Committee.

EU Institute for Security Studies

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy towards the proposed establishment of an EU Institute for Security Studies. [87299]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The proposal for an Institute for Security Studies was made in a Presidency report on strengthening of the common European policy on security and defence to the Cologne European Council. The European Council approved and adopted the report. The report notes that for the EU to decide and conduct effectively the so-called "Petersberg tasks", it may require an Institute for Security Studies. There is, at present, an Institute for Security Studies established in the WEU. This might be taken over by the EU as appropriate.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 21 June 1999

HOME DEPARTMENT

Kosovan Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is planning to prepare for the return of Kosovan temporary asylum seekers to their original places of residence. [87303]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Officials in my Department and other Government Departments are meeting today with representatives from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organisation for Migration, the Refugee Council, the British Red Cross and Refugee Action to discuss how best to facilitate the voluntary return of Kosovar Albanians back to Kosovo. A number of these organisations in the voluntary sector have played a leading role in the reception, care and resettlement of the Kosovar Albanians and are, therefore, clearly well placed to advise on a number of the issues involved in returning them home. I believe we will be in a better position to devise a strategy for return once these initial discussions have taken place.

Prisoner Costs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual cost of keeping (a) adults and (b) juveniles in prisons and young offenders' institutions broken down by category of prisoner. [87255]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service does not calculate separately the cost of imprisonment by category of prisoner.

The information in the table shows the average establishment cost per place in 1998–99 broken down by category of prison. Prisons with multiple functions (for example an adult male prison with a separate young offender wing) are categorised according to their dominant category.

Establishment costs exclude capital expenditure and head office overheads. For this reason, the figures in the table are not comparable with the provisional Prison Service cost per place Key Performance Indicator figure for 1998–99 of £25,096.

Figures are provisional and subject to validation by prisons.

Cost per place for prison establishments

£

Establishment function type	Average cost per place 1998–99
Male local	23,257
Dispersal	32,991
Category B	20,819
Category C	17,142
Male open	14,753
Male remand centre	21,582
Male closed young offender	18,186
Male open young offender	18,975
Male juvenile	26,079
Female local	28,443
Female closed	26,860
Female open	16,018

Mental Health Act 1983 (Deportations)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detained patients have been removed from the United Kingdom since 1983 under Section 86 of the Mental Health Act 1983. [87468]

Mr. George Howarth: Up to the end of 1995, 25 detained patients in all categories had been removed under section 86. Since then, one restricted patient has been removed. Figures for the removal of other categories of detained patients in the same period are not held, and the information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoner Drug Testing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales where mandatory drug testing of inmates takes place. [87289]

Mr. George Howarth: All prisons in England and Wales undertake mandatory drug testing of prisoners.

European Committee for the Prevention of Torture

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture responded to his request for clarification regarding its report on the handling of deaths in police custody; and when he expects the reports to the published. [87343]

Kate Hoey: The President of the Committee replied on 8 March 1999 to a letter of 16 October 1998 from a Foreign Office official. We expect the report to be published if and when we have reached agreement with the Committee on the publication of material subject to legal professional privilege; and we are actively pursuing this.

Police Helicopters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to chief constables concerning the use of police helicopters over built-up areas during the hours of darkness. [87345]

Mr. Boateng: None. Regulations covering the use of police helicopters are set out in the Police Air Operations Manual (POAM) issued by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved at each meeting and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [87383]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is given in the table. There will additionally have been meetings, such as European Union Justice and Home Affairs Council meetings, at which both Home Office and Irish Ministers and officials would also have been present.

Ministerial meetings with Irish ministers and officials since 1 January 1998

	10 July 1998	10 December 1998	19 May 1999
Minister:	Lord Williams of Mostyn	Paul Boateng	Lord Williams of Mostyn
Location:	Home Office	Home Office	Home Office
Irish Minister:	Mr. Frank Fahey	Mr. Frank Fahey
Irish officials:	Mr. Mulligan (Irish Embassy in London)	Mr. David Smith (Department of Health and Children) Mr. John Kelly (Department of Education and Science) Mr. Paul Murray (Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform) Ms Caitriona Ryan (Private Secretary to Mr. Fahey)	Mr. Gerry Kearney (Department of Finance)
Purpose of meeting:	Meeting to discuss death of Edward Walsh	Meeting to discuss youth justice and child prostitution	Meeting of Freedom of Information Advisory Group

Drug Treatment Programmes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year for which information is available, how many arrested persons were (a) referred to and (b) entered drug treatment programmes; and if he will make a statement. [87434]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not currently held centrally. At present, there are around 127 face-to-face arrest referral schemes in England. The targets set recently under the drugs strategy by the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator include doubling the number of such schemes in the current year.

European Elections (Costs)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of publicity for the European Elections Vote Encouragement Project; what amount was spent on the Balloon Project; and what plans he has for the future use of the balloon. [87336]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of the Government publicity campaign prior to the European Parliamentary elections was £3.5 million. The money was spent on television and press advertising and the leaflet drop to every household.

The campaign did not include a balloon. The London Office of the European Parliament ran separate publicity events in which a balloon was used.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Down High School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for the school year 1998–99, how many pupils were enrolled at Down High School; how many were (a) Protestants, (b) Roman Catholics and (c) of other religions; and how many applicants for entry to the High School at the beginning of this year were refused. [87184]

Mr. McFall: The information derived from the Annual School Census as at October 1998 in relation to Down High School is as follows:

School year 1998–99

	School census
(a) Protestant pupils	698
(b) Roman Catholic	46
(c) Other pupils	69
Total enrolment	813

Thirty-three applicants were refused admission in September 1998.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in the transfer procedure for 1999, how many pupils from (a) integrated, (b) controlled and (c) maintained primary schools have been accepted into Down High School; and how many of these pupils were in each of the grades of the transfer procedure. [87183]

Mr. McFall: The information in relation to admissions to Down High School in September 1999 is as follows:

(a) 2 pupils from integrated primary schools, 1 Grade A, 1 Grade B1;

(b) 114 pupils from controlled primary schools; 97 Grade A, 12 Grade B1, 1 Grade B2, 1 Grade C2;

(c) 9 pupils from maintained primary schools, 8 Grade A, 1 Grade B1; and 3 pupils from independent schools, 3 Grade A.

Bloody Sunday Inquiry (Solicitors' Rates)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the hourly rate paid to solicitors acting for the families of those persons killed by the Army in Londonderry on 30 January 1972; by what procedures this sum was negotiated and agreed, and under which budget sub-headings provision for these sums is made. [87376]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 18 June 1999]: Hourly rates for the work of the solicitors acting for the families of those killed by the Army in Londonderry on 30 January 1972 have yet to be agreed. The Bloody Sunday Inquiry's independent costs assessor is currently in negotiation with the solicitors, and the Tribunal awaits his advice on reasonable rates.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87274]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has brought forward no legislation during the current session.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87324]

Mr. Chris Smith: Between 15 April 1999 and 16 June 1999, a total of 61 named day parliamentary questions were tabled for answer by my Department. Of these 27 (44 per cent.) received a substantive reply on the day requested.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

MMC Reports

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list each Monopolies and Mergers Commission report received by his Department since June 1994 and give in each case (a) the date on which it was received, (b) the date on which it was published and (c) the date on which the Secretary of State's decision was announced, where it is different from (b). [87313]

Dr. Howells: I am placing in the Library of the House a list of the reports received in the Department from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and the Competition Commission since June 1994, together with the dates on which they were received and the date on which they were published and a decision was announced.

I am also making available a list of reports delivered by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to sectoral regulators during the same period of time.

Plutonium and Uranium Stocks

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish figures for the United Kingdom's stocks of plutonium and uranium at 31 December 1998. [87837]

Mr. Battle: I have today placed in the Library of the House figures for the United Kingdom showing national holdings of civil plutonium and uranium at 31 December 1998. These figures are published as part of the UK's continued commitment to improve transparency and openness in its management of our national holdings of civil plutonium and uranium.

In accordance with our commitment under the international "Guidelines for the Management of Plutonium"—an agreement among an informal group of nine countries to publish national holdings of plutonium—I have today sent a copy of the figures to the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, who will be circulating it to member states in due course.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86991]

Dr. Howells: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment, published in November 1998, commit policy makers to assess how proposals affect different groups of people.

Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments. Within this Department we increasingly make use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women. As an example, over 300 respondents commented on the family friendly employment rights proposals in the White Paper "Fairness at Work", including women's organisations and other groups with a strong interest in women's issues such as the Equal Opportunities Commission, Maternity Alliance, the Fawcett Society and the Women's National Commission. Responses were not made public but a list of respondents was placed in the Libraries of the House.

Informal consultation is continuing prior to publishing the Parental and Maternity Leave regulations. Maternity Alliance, Parents at Work, the Equal Opportunities Commission, and TUC Equal Opportunities representatives have contributed to this process. There will be further public consultation on the draft regulations.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has held with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on extension of the Working Time Directive to include maritime sectors; what assessment he has made of the impact of the Directive on fisheries; and if he will make a statement. [87341]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The DTI has overall policy responsibility for working time and co-ordinates the Government's response to EC proposals in this area.

DETR, which is responsible for marine safety issues including fishing vessels, has been extensively involved in developing Government policy on the proposals to extend the Working Time Directive to seafarers and sea fishing. MAFF has been extensively involved in developing Government policy on the proposals to extend the Working Time Directive to sea-fishing.

A copy of the Regulatory Impact Assessment produced for the Working Time Directive has been laid in the Libraries of the House. That was an assessment of the impact on all sectors of the UK economy, including sea-fishing.

Anglo-Irish Trade

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department takes to encourage businesses to trade with Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. [87626]

Mr. Wilson: The services of British Trade International are available for exporters to the Republic of Ireland as they are for exporters to other West European countries. Activities include the Export Explorer scheme to encourage first-time exporters to visit the Republic; an Export Promoter to inform companies of the opportunities in the market and encourage them to trade with the Republic; and sectoral activities such as the provision of information stands at trade fairs in Ireland. Northern Ireland companies are eligible to use these services.

British companies trade with Northern Ireland as they would with other parts of the United Kingdom.

Plutonium Sea Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 5, relating to sea shipment of MOX fuel, if he will list (a) the dates on which the meetings to which he referred were held and (b) the officials who participated in the meetings. [87424]

Mr. Battle: Preparation of the transport plan took place over a period of several years and involved many meetings between officials of the Government Governments involved. It would not be possible to provide a detailed list of these meetings without incurring disproportionate cost. The UK officials who participated were drawn from the DTI, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Directorate of Civil Nuclear Security.

Oil and Gas Industry Task Force

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to change the membership of (a) the Oil and Gas Industry Task Force and (b) its working groups. [87510]

Mr. Battle: We do not expect to change the membership of the Oil and Gas Industry Task Force, which is now preparing its report for publication in September. The Task Force has agreed that a successor group will be needed to ensure that continuing progress is made with the initiatives it is pursuing and it will be discussing what membership would be appropriate for its successor. The discussions will involve those with an interest in the Task Force's work. The Task Force will of course take account of representations made about membership.

The membership of the workgroups is a matter for their joint industry and Government sponsors from the Task Force. Changes are made from time to time to reflect the particular issues that a workgroup is addressing.

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are in place to ensure representation on the Oil and Gas Industry Task Force of parties working in the southern sector of the North Sea oil and gas industry. [87511]

Mr. Battle: The persons invited to join the Task Force were chosen to ensure the membership included a wide range of oil companies, contractors, supplies companies and trade unions active in all sectors of the UK Continental Shelf (UKCS). This certainly includes the southern North Sea, where a number of the members have significant interests.

The Task Force is developing proposals for reducing the cost base of UK oil and gas operations against the background of low oil prices and the particular characteristics of the various sectors of the UKCS. The initiatives developed and advantages gained will be relevant to oil and gas activity in all sectors and, furthermore, will improve the international competitiveness of the UK industry.

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the criteria for the selection of personnel serving on the Oil and Gas Industry Task Force. [87509]

Mr. Battle: The Task Force has a high level membership drawn from industry and key Government Departments, including oil companies, contractors, suppliers, unions, DTI, Treasury, DETR and the Scottish Office. The membership was intended to reflect the broad spectrum of interest, while also being of manageable size.

A key objective of the Task Force is to stimulate new oil and gas projects on the UK Continental Shelf; it was therefore necessary to ensure the participation of different types of oil companies with significant UK interests. The choice of the contractors and supplier companies reflects the breadth of the industry, with large, medium and smaller companies contributing at managing director level.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many staff and contracted staff have benefited from the introduction of a national minimum wage. [87613]

Mr. Kirkwood: All House of Commons rates of pay are higher than the national minimum wage. Therefore, no staff of the House have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage. It is not possible to state how many contractors staff may have benefited, as the House does not keep records of the rates of pay of staff employed by contractors.

Staff Salaries

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the largest percentage increase in

(a) salary and (b) bonus payments paid to staff earning over £50,000 in the House of Commons in the last year for which figures are available. [87464]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 18 June 1999]: (a) In the year 1999–2000, the highest percentage increase in salary to a member of staff earning over £50,000, including a special performance award, was 10.2 per cent. (b) The highest bonus or special performance award was equal to 5.4 per cent. of salary.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many House of Commons staff in the £50,000 to £200,000 salary range in the financial years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1997–98 received percentage pay awards in excess of those given to non-Senior Civil Service grades. [87466]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 18 June 1999]: There are four groups of House of Commons staff covered by separate pay settlements each year. They are the Senior Commons Staff (SCS), staff in the main structure (Pay Bands A to E), the Refreshment Department Catering Staff and the Works Directorate Craft Staff.

The pay of the Senior Commons Staff is directly linked to that of the Senior Civil Service. The pay of the other groups is kept broadly in line with civil service rates of pay. The pay awards for staff in the SCS and Pay Bands A to E are performance related, whereas staff in the Craft and Catering Bands are paid a rate for the job.

In the years 1997–98 and 1998–99, the percentage increases for most of the staff in Pay Bands A to E were higher than those for the SCS Staff. No staff in the SCS pay bands received a percentage increase higher than the highest percentage increases paid in Pay Bands A to E.

In 1997–98 and 1998–99, the average percentage increases for staff in the Catering and Craft pay bands were higher than the average non-performance (new money) increases, excluding the self-financing performance elements, for the SCS and Bands A to E. Because of the operation of the performance systems, it is not possible to make meaningful comparisons of percentage increases on an individual basis.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many House of Commons staff earn more than £100,000 per year. [87465]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 18 June 1999]: Only one member of staff of the House earns more than £100,000 a year. This information is published in the Commission's Annual Report.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Debt Write-offs

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox), of 19 April 1999, Official Report, columns 420–21, regarding debt write-offs for outstanding loans, if she will list the loans written-off for Indonesia, in each case stating (a) the nature of the aid project, (b) the date on which the loan was written-off and (c) the reason for the loan being written-off. [85849]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer provided on 22 June 1998, Official Report, column 397. Balances of all Indonesian aid loans were written off in 1979. This was in support of a resolution by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1978, a statement on which was made to the House on 31 July 1978, Official Report, column 25. However, the consequential amount of annual debt relief is currently reported as expenditure in the year in which the payments would have been due. Details are set out in the publication 'Statistics on International Development', a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries included in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [87291]

Clare Short: The list of countries eligible for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) debt Initiative was agreed by the international community in 1996, and identified the 40 poorest, most indebted countries. However, others may be included in HIPC if a good case can be made. For example, Malawi will now be considered for HIPC debt relief. Being on the list, however, entitles a country only to be considered for HIPC debt relief. Countries which are not part of HIPC can still obtain debt relief from official bilateral creditors who form the Paris club.

Angola
Benin
Bolivia
Burkina Faso
Burma
Burundi
Cameroon
Central African Republic
Chad
Democratic Republic of Congo
Congo
Equatorial Guinea
Ethiopia
Ghana
Guinea
Guinea-Bissau
Guyana
Honduras
Kenya
Laos
Liberia
Madagascar
Malawi
Mali
Mauritania
Mozambique
Nicaragua

Niger
Rwanda
Sao Tome Principe
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Somalia
Sudan
Tanzania
Togo
Uganda
Vietnam
Yemen
Zambia.

WALES

Parliamentary Questions (National Assembly)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) written and (ii) oral questions were answered by his Department in 1998; and how many of them were on matters which will be the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales. [86361]

Mr. Michael: Ministers at the Welsh Office answered 1,676 written and oral questions in 1998. A breakdown in the format requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In written and oral replies to parliamentary questions answered after 27 January 1999 we have indicated those matters which will become a matter for the National Assembly on 1 July.

NHS Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for reform of the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [86343]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend's vision for the NHS was set out in his statement to the House of Commons on 3 December 1998, Official Report, columns 1053–66, and in the measures that have been taken to improve the health of the population, devolve decision taking and encourage co-operation in the planning and provision of services.

From 1 July, responsibility for this issue will fall to the National Assembly for Wales.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Sites of Special Scientific Interest there were in Wales on 31 March; and what was their total area in hectares. [87270]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: On 31 March 1999 there were 962 Sites of Special Scientific Interest in Wales covering some 223,000 hectares, approximately 10.6 per cent. of the land area in Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many senior grades at the European Commission hold secondary employment; if he will list the directors-general so engaged, with the nature of their additional employment; and if he will make a statement. [86726]

Ms Quin: We do not have information about individual cases. But officials working in the European Commission may not hold any secondary employment, whether gainful or not, without first obtaining permission. Staff regulations state that permission would be refused if the nature of the work would impair the official's independence or be detrimental to the work of the Communities.

Chinese Prisoners

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reports Her Majesty's Government have received on the welfare of the following prisoners (a) Ye Kensheng (Xinyang Municipal Labour Educational Camp), (b) Xiao Minghai (Xinyang Municipal Labour Educational Camp), (c) Xu Dajiang (Xinyang Municipal Labour Educational Camp), (d) Zhang Jinchen (Xinyang Municipal Labour Educational Camp), (e) Wang Xuehua (Xinyang Municipal Labour Educational Camp), (f) Li Zhongchang (Nanhu Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (g) Zhan Guohua (Hefei Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (h) Li Liya (Nanhu Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (i) Hou Feng (Nanhu Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (j) Tian Lin (Nanhu Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (k) Meng Qingli (Shangqiu Labour Educational Camp, Anhui), (l) Wu Guifang (Urumqi Labour Educational Camp, Xinjiang), (m) Guei Chuan-Lun (Bao-feng Labour Educational Camp, Xuan-zhou, Anhui), (n) Liu Hai-Kuan (Bao-feng Labour Educational Camp, Zuan-zhou, Anhui), (o) Zhang Wan-Bao (Bao-feng Labour Educational Camp, Xuan-zhou, Anhui), (p) Lin Ke-Wei (Nanhu Agricultural Labour Educational Camp), (q) Peng Shu-Xia (Women Labour Educational Camp in Hefei, Anhui) and (r) Wang Chuan-Bing (Qing-gang Detention Centre (of the PSB), Heilongjiang); and what representations Her Majesty's Government have made on their behalf to the Chinese authorities; [87257]

(2) what reports Her Majesty's Government have received on the welfare of the following prisoners (a) Huang Dehong (Baokkang prefectural Labour Educational Camp), (b) Huan Debao (Wuwei Labour Educational Camp, Gansu), (c) Hei Qunhu (Wuwei Labour Educational Camp, Gansu), (d) Dai Chenggang (Zhenglin Labour Educational Camp, Zhaoyang, Hubei), (e) Zhang Shangkui (Zhenglin Labour Educational Camp, Zhaoyang, Hubei), (f) Li Qingshu (Zhenglin Labour Educational Camp, Zhaoyang, Hubei), (g) Zhang Jun (Local township Labour Educational Camp, Hubei), (h) Brother Song (Local township Labour Educational Camp, Hubei), (i) Hu Shoubin (Shayang Labour Educational Camp, Hubei), (j) Jia Ping, (Shayang Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (k) Huang Zhihai, (Tangshan Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (l) Fan Jinxia (Tangshan Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (m) Yang

Xiaofang (Tangshan Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (n) Liang Fujuan (Tangshan Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (o) Huang Xiaojuan (Tangshan Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (p) Zhu Qin (Tongxian Labour Educational Camp, Hebei), (q) Zheng Fang (Shibalihe (18 miles River) Labour Educational Camp, Zhengzhou, Henan) and (r) Xu Ying, (Shibalihe (18 miles River) Labour Educational Camp, Zhengzhou, Henan); and what representations Her Majesty's Government have made on their behalf to the Chinese authorities. [87258]

Mr. Hoon: It is not possible to raise with the Chinese authorities each individual case of concern that is brought to our attention, such as those of the Christian "house church" worshippers listed by my hon. Friend. But we do take every opportunity to raise individual cases, both bilaterally and in conjunction with our EU partners.

My predecessor, the late Member for Leeds, Central, did so when he visited China in April. In addition, through our continuing bilateral and EU/China human rights dialogues, we have expressed our deep concern to the Chinese authorities about the harassment and detention of Christians who worship in "house churches". We will continue to encourage China to look upon religion as fulfilling a basic human need and not as a threat.

Yugoslav Embargo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states have indicated their consent to the visit and search regime for merchant vessels suspected of breaching the Yugoslav embargo; what total proportion of global shipping tonnage this represents; what measures he is taking to increase the number of countries giving their consent; and if he will make a statement. [87335]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: NATO forces in the Adriatic continue to monitor shipping entering FRY ports, while the EU oil embargo remains in place. A number of non-EU and non-NATO states, including some of those frequently used for flags of convenience, have expressed their willingness to comply with the embargo. However, their consent to a visit and search regime will not be sought formally while NATO plans are kept under review in the light of recent political developments.

President Suharto

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to make submissions to the International War Crimes Tribunal in The Hague concerning actions carried out by order of former President Suharto of Indonesia in East Timor. [87494]

Mr. Hoon: We have no such plans.

Diplomatic Representation

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with how many countries the UK (a) exchanges ambassadors or high commissioners and (b) maintains other types of representation; and if he will make a statement. [87418]

Mr. Hoon: The UK has resident Ambassadors or High Commissioners in 143 countries. We maintain diplomatic and consular relations with a total of 183 countries.

Ambassadors for British Business

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports are submitted by the Ambassadors for British Business. [87652]

Mr. Hoon: There is no requirement for the Ambassadors for British Business to submit reports. However, Ambassadors for British Business generally provide informal feedback to Ministers and officials on the events in which they have participated.

SCOTLAND

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest there were in Scotland on 31 March; and what was their total area in hectares. [87271]

Mr. Macdonald: On 31 March 1999 there were a total of 1,448 sites of special scientific interest in Scotland, covering 919,597 hectares.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mussel Fisheries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposed extension of the Dornoch Firth and Morrich More sites as candidate special areas of conservation under the EC Habitats Directive on the Tain mussel fisheries. [87450]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Office has assured the managers of this fishery that, as currently prosecuted, it forms a sustainable part of the management of the Dornoch Firth and Morrich More candidate Special Area of Conservation.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) for what reasons the Driving Standards Agency plans to recruit a further 85 examiners in 1999; [86247]

(2) what effect current trends in demand for driving tests are having on examiner staffing levels. [86245]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency closely monitors demand for driving tests. The forecast level of demand for practical driving tests in 1999–2000 is similar to 1998–99, at 1.4 million. However, the introduction of the longer driving test, with examiners conducting seven rather than eight tests a day, means each examiner conducts 12.5 per cent. fewer tests. Taking account of retirements, the Agency estimates that it will need to recruit 80 to 85 examiners during 1999–2000. They will be recruited on a contract basis to enable the Agency to respond flexibly to fluctuations in demand.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what future changes are planned for the driving test centre estate; and what assessment he has made of the effect of these on present levels of public service. [86223]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency keeps the practical test centre estate under review as part of the business management. Any changes will be considered on their merits, with a view to increasing the efficiency of property use whilst improving customer service.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many contractual examiners are currently employed by the Driving Standards Agency; and under what circumstances they are used. [86244]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency currently employs 157 contract driving examiners nationally, on a variety of three-yearly contracts. Some staff are guaranteed a minimum of one day's work per month, while others may be working full time. The amount of work on offer is determined by local demand for driving tests and the need to cover absences in the permanent examiner workforce. The Agency plans to standardise existing contracts as they come up for renewal.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Driving Standards Agency will conduct comparative studies of driving test arrangements in other countries in order to identify and evaluate best practice. [87153]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Transport Research Laboratory is reviewing the practical car driving test. This includes an examination of arrangements in other countries. A final report is expected next year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce arrangements for self-regulation in the driving test industry. [87151]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. We regard it as essential that the public can have assurance that we issue driving licences only after candidates have passed statutory tests that are conducted in a fair, consistent and independent manner.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish mobile driving test centres for local areas whose test centres have been closed. [87152]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Occasional driving test centres are used in some of the more remote parts of the country where the demand for tests is very low. But we have no plans to use mobile centres in areas where permanent test centres have been closed. The decision to close a permanent test centre is taken only after careful consideration has been given to the availability of other centres in the locality.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make financial compensation available to approved driving instructors whose businesses have been affected by driving test centre closures. [87148]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no plans to pay compensation to driving instructors when a test centre closes. The demand for their services relates to where their pupils live, rather than the particular location of a driving test centre.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the improvements his Department has made in local services provided by the Driving Standards Agency following closures of driving test centres. [87150]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Savings achieved from restructuring the test centre estate in 1998–99 have helped pay for eight new test centres and the new driving test booking system.

Independent Complaints Advisory Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reform the Independent Complaints Advisory Service. [86263]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has appointed an independent complaints adviser to investigate complaints about the Department's agencies. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Goods Vehicle Licences

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to permit the impounding of commercial vehicles used without a goods vehicle operator's licence; and if he will make a statement. [86395]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Earl Attlee has introduced a Bill in another place which would give powers for the impounding of illegally operated heavy goods vehicles. A consultation exercise carried out by my Department last year showed that there was overwhelming support for an impounding scheme and the Government will therefore support this Bill.

Alleyways

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the provisions of Section 116 of the Highways Act 1980 to allow local authorities to apply to magistrates for the closure of alleyways to reduce anti-social behaviour. [86867]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This matter is being considered in the context of an on-going review of road traffic regulation law.

A number of representations have also been received since the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 21–33, of the Government's intention to introduce legislation to improve the rights of way system. We expect to issue a consultation paper on rights of way shortly.

Allergenic Material

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Environment Agency has made of the release of allergenic material caused by the movement of grain within the dock system at Seaforth. [86833]

Mr. Meale: It is presumed that the question relates to the release of allergenic material to air. The Environment Agency is responsible for assessing releases to air from processes requiring authorisation under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Agency confirms that at the present time there are no processes dealing with grain within the Seaforth dock area that are authorised under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Releases to the air from these processes would therefore fall within the remit of Sefton Borough Council Environmental Health Department and/or the Port Authority. The Agency is not involved in this process.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made in establishing the Strategic Rail Authority. [86989]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The shadow Strategic Rail Authority has been operational from 1 April. We are committed to establishing a statutory Strategic Rail Authority at the earliest legislative opportunity.

Lorries

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average weight of a loaded lorry as found by the weighbridge inspectors (a) in the latest year for which figures are available, and (b) (i) five years, (ii) 10 years and (iii) 20 years before that year. [87012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Enforcement officers from the Vehicle Inspectorate do not retain weight records of vehicles weighed, unless the vehicle is overloaded. The records held are not kept in a central database. It is not possible, therefore, to provide the information requested.

Railtrack

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response he has received from the Rail Regulator on the merits or otherwise of direct funding for Railtrack; and if he will make a statement. [86749]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The Deputy Prime Minister asked the Rail Regulator to advise on the advantages and disadvantages of direct funding. That advice has been received and we will announce our conclusions in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total investment planned by Railtrack, excluding moneys for maintenance and renewal, over the next five years intended to increase freight movements by rail. [86434]

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack concerning the capital development plan and public investment in it; and if he will make a statement. [86892]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answers 15 and 16 June 1999]: Railtrack's proposals for investment in the rail network over the next 10 years—for both passenger and freight—were set out in its 1999 Network Management Statement (NMS), published in March. The Rail Regulator is currently considering whether the investment proposed in the NMS meets the reasonable requirements of the industry and its funders. In doing so the Regulator will take into account the views of the industry and the shadow Strategic Rail Authority.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87326]

Mr. Meale: Since 15 April, 298 questions have to date been tabled for answer on a named day. 68 per cent. have received a substantive answer on that day.

Lapwings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reverse the decline in the lapwing population; and if he will make a statement. [87277]

Mr. Meale: My Department is working with MAFF to assess the impact of changing farming practices on the lapwing. A 5-year project, involving collaboration between MAFF and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB), Game Conservancy Trust (GCT) and the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology, is investigating the role of pesticides and other factors in the decline of farmland bird species.

The Government also fund agri-environment and other schemes to encourage farmers to provide conditions which will benefit breeding lapwing. The Government are committed to a continuing expansion of areas under the major agri-environment schemes is making an extra £40 million available over three years for these schemes in England.

In addition MAFF has commissioned research into:

the possible relationship between farming practices over the last 20 years and the changes in the populations of a number of representative farmland birds,

the effects of agricultural change on bird populations

the effects on birds of changes in lowland grassland management.

Homelessness

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many London borough councils provide housing accommodation for homeless people within their borough. [87288]

Mr. Raynsford: Under the homelessness legislation, all local housing authorities must provide accommodation for eligible households who are unintentionally homeless and in priority need, if no suitable alternative accommodation is available in the district. Accommodation provided must be within the authority's own district, so far as is reasonably practical. Information about the location of accommodation provided under the homelessness legislation is not held centrally.

Trade Associations (Landlords)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number and percentage of private sector landlords who are members of a trade association of landlords. [87350]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not have this information.

However, we know that the National Federation of Residential Landlords has 42 affiliated landlord associations covering some 10,000 members and that the Residential Landlords Association has 560 individual landlord members. Additionally, the British Property Federation has over 500 members, which include companies, individuals and associations, who own, manage and invest in and develop property in the commercial and residential sector. Overall there are some 2 million privately renting households and the median number of lettings in a landlord's portfolio is seven.

Housing Stock (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the costs of bringing up to standard the housing stock in (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle, (c) Blackburn, (d) Hyndburn and (e) Rossendale. [87351]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has not made specific estimates of the cost of bringing up to standard the housing stock in these areas.

As part of the annual Housing Investment Programme round, local authorities provides estimates of expenditure required on capital work to bring the housing stock they own into a satisfactory condition. The table provides these estimates for the above local authorities at 1 April 1998.

Authorities do not supply similar estimates for the private sector or stock owned by registered social landords.

Local Authority estimates of the need for capital work to the council housing stock, at 1 April 1998

Local Authority	£000
Burnley	35,965
Pendle	4,562
Blackburn with Darwen	90,599
Hyndburn	16,865
Rossendale	49,606

Source:
Housing Investment Programme—Annual Plan form

Unlicensed Tips

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful prosecutions have been brought against persons operating an unlicensed tip in each year since 1992. [87346]

Mr. Meale: Records for prosecutions by waste regulation authorities before their functions were transferred to the Environment Agency in April 1996 are not held centrally by the Agency. Whilst the results of prosecutions by the Agency since April 1996 are held centrally, the information is neither available on a database nor is it possible for the Agency, at reasonable cost, to distinguish between prosecutions for unlicensed tipping and other prosecutions under section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many sites of special scientific interest there were in England on 31 March; and what was their total area in hectares. [87272]

Mr. Meale: As of 31 March, there were 4,045 Sites of Special Scientific Interest in England, covering 1,035,821 hectares.

Polegate Bypass

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects work to begin on the Polegate bypass scheme. [87174]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Waterson, dated 21 June 1999:

The Minister for Transport in London, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when work is due to start on the A27 Polegate Bypass.

You will recall that Lord Whitty announced last December that we would start construction work on the scheme in the financial year 2000–2001, making it one of the first in the Targeted Programme of Improvements to start.

We are aiming to award the construction contract for this scheme next summer, although we are looking to see if a more optimistic target could be met. Some advance works have already taken place with the demolition of derelict buildings on the route and the planting of around 5,000 trees and shrubs that will help shield properties from the new road.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been paid to contractors in respect of the Polegate bypass scheme to date. [87173]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The overall levels of compensation are close to being finalised with those tenderers who submitted tenders for the cancelled Weald and Downland DBFO Project, which included the Polegate Bypass scheme among others. Interim on-account payments totalling £5.0m (including VAT) have been made.

Northumberland National Park Authority (Parish Council Representatives)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the appointments of parish council representatives are confirmed in time for the annual meeting of the Northumberland National Park Authority on 23 June. [87507]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 18 June 1999]: Results from the elections for parish council representatives in all seven English National Parks are currently being received in the Department. They will be considered by the Secretary of State as quickly as possible. It is unlikely that the appointments will be made by 23 June.

Wood Recovery

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the review of the definition of wood recovery in respect of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 from 1 January 2000. [87683]

Mr. Meale: From 1 January 2000, wood packaging—including pallets and tea chests—will be covered by the Regulations. Obligated businesses will be required to recover a specified amount of wood packaging based on the quantity which they handled in the preceding year. There is no separate recycling obligation for wood.

The Environment Agency is currently considering the types of activity which may be regarded as 'recovery' in respect of wood packaging. It is anticipated that from 1 January 2000, a number of wood reprocessors will be accredited by the Agency and be able to issue Packaging Waste Recovery Note (PRNs) as evidence of recovery.

The Environment Agency is working with the Timber Packaging and Pallet Confederation (TIMCON) to establish the weight of wood packaging, providing an average figure for each of the common pallet types. Such agreement is necessary because of the moisture content of a pallet varies throughout its life sometimes by as much as 50 per cent. An agreement on weights will help to make the Regulations easier to work with for obligated businesses and regulators alike. It is anticipated that a protocol will be agreed during the summer.

Canal Towpaths (Cabling)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of canal towpath are used by cable companies for their transmission network. [87649]

Mr. Meale: British Waterways manages 2,000 miles of canals and inland waterways in England, Scotland and Wales. There are 1,600 miles of canal towpath and around 450 miles are used by cable companies for a variety of communication purposes.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outcome was of Stage II of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Local Government Commission for England; and if he will make a statement. [87903]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the Report on Stage II of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Local Government Commission for England (LGC), which I announced on 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 9. I have also placed in the Library a copy of the Action Plan for implementation of this Report's recommendations.

The report makes a number of detailed recommendations on the internal management of the LGC and the way the Periodic Electoral Reviews are carried out. These recommendations have been accepted and are being implemented as set out in the Action Plan.

Out-of-town Shopping Developments

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend Planning Policy Guidance Note 6 in respect of out-of-town shopping developments; and if he will make a statement. [87770]

Mr. Raynsford: None.

Local Government Finance

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on reviewing the local government finance system; and in particular what research is being undertaken in support of the review. [87965]

Ms Armstrong: My Department has let five contracts. Two cover research into the use of prudential indicators to regulate local authority borrowing, and a non-statutory scheme for debt provision. The other three contracts are in support of the review of the Revenue Grant Distribution System and comprise an opinion survey of local authorities, comparative lessons from approaches and developments in other countries, and potential new data sources for use in grant distribution. Further details of these projects are given in the Department's 1999/2000 Local and Regional Government Research programme Annual Newsletter, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

The Government plan to publish a consultation paper on local government finance in spring 2000.

HEALTH

Autism

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department has allocated for each of the last three financial years for (a) research into and (b) the treatment of autism; and if he will make a statement. [87010]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not directly commissioned national research on autism recently but a new research initiative on learning disabilities will be launched in the autumn which may attract proposals for research into autism.

The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development to the NHS in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme.

Management of much of the research supported by the NHS research and development levy is devolved and details of expenditure at project level are not collected routinely by the Department.

Project details of work directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR), copies of which are available in the Library. The NRR lists over 30 projects concerning autism for which the Department will be providing support funds.

In addition, the Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

The figures for the expenditure by the MRC on autism over the last 3 years are:

Year	£000
1995-96	770
1996–97	825
1997–98	905

The MRC have also recently made 2 major awards to researchers in the field (spend for which will not yet be reflected in the figures). These are: Professor P. A. Jacobs (Universities of Cambridge and Southampton) £1,100,000 over five years; and Professor A. Bailey (Institute of Psychiatry) £1,800,000 over four years.

The Department does not specifically allocate resources for the treatment of autism. It is for health authorities to decide how best to use the resources that have been allocated to them.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to investigate the use of the drug Secretin for treating sufferers from autism; and if he will make a statement. [87009]

Mr. Hutton: I understand that Secretin has been used by a number of professionals in the treatment of autism particularly in the United States. However, it is not licensed for use for that purpose either here or in the United States. We are keeping the developing situation in the United States under review.

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS trust and health authority appointments which were not made by the due date and which remained outstanding on 1 June. [87334]

Mr. Denham: All health authority appointments due on 1 April 1999 were completed on time. A small number of appointments to National Health Service trusts and health authorities which expired in 1998 remain vacant. Details are given in the table.

List of health authority and national health service trust appointments which expired in 1998 and for which no appointment had been made by 1 June 1999

Region/Body	Number of chairs	Number of Non-executives
Eastern
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
North West
Liverpool Women's Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
Wirral Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
Northern and Yorkshire
Calderdale and Kirklees Health Authority	0	1
London
City and Hackney Community Services NHS Trust	0	1
Croydon Community Health NHS Trust	0	1
Enfield Community Care NHS Trust	0	1
Trent
Central Nottinghamshire Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Grantham and District Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
South East
East Surrey Health Authority	0	1
South West
Gloucestershire Ambulance Service NHS Trust	0	1
Royal United Hospital Bath NHS Trust	0	1
West Midlands
Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull (Teaching) Hospitals NHS Trust	0	1
Walsall Community Health NHS Trust	0	1
Total	0	14

Correspondence

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to reply to letters from the hon. Member for Colchester of 22 April, 18 May and 3 June in respect of the future of cancer services in Colchester. [87355]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the hon. Member on 17 June 1999.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research the Government have commissioned into Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia in the last three years; [87500]

(2) what money the Government have provided for research into Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia in each of the last five years; what assessment he has made of the need for further research into dementia; and if he will make a statement. [87499]

Mr. Hutton: The Government fund health and medical research in a number of ways.

The Department funds research and development to support their work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme. In addition, the Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

Priorities for departmental research and development support for the development of policy are determined through discussion with policy colleagues, the Departmental Research Committee and Ministers. In the NHS research and development programme, priorities take account of widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services, within a framework overseen by the Central Research and Development Committee for the NHS. In all cases, priorities for our budgets reflect analysis of the burden of disease, potential benefits and Government priorities, and take account of the responsibilities and work of other funders.

The MRC has recently made a number of substantial investments in the area of dementia. A new centre Development Grant in Brain Ageing has been awarded in partnership with the University of Newcastle and will examine the pathology and diagnosis of dementia—this will commence next year. In addition, the Multicentre Study of Cognitive Function on Ageing is an on-going major 10 year study funded in collaboration with Department of Health.

In addition the MRC has supported 53 projects on Alzheimer's/dementia in the last three years. Copies of the list have been placed in the Library. MRC spend has been as follows:

Year	£000
1994–95	3,795
1995–96	5,703
1996–97	4,780
1997–98	5,549
1998–99	6,050

Through the policy research programme and the NHS research and development programme the Department has invested the following amounts approximately on research into Alzheimer's Disease and other forms of dementia (excluding research related to Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and Parkinson's disease) over the last five years:

Year	£000
1994–95	236
1995–96	225
1996–97	149
1997–98	198
1998–99	287

Management of much of the research supported by the NHS research and development levy is devolved and details of expenditure at project level are not collected routinely by the Department. Total investment in this area will therefore be greater than that listed above.

Projects funded by Department include:

Older people with dementia and their carers: professional intervention in primary care.

A longitudinal study of carer burden and comprehensive costs in dementia.

Husbands and wives who care for elderly people with dementia and functional psychiatric disorder.

Re-Analysis of Dementia Data Sets.

Development of Screening Tests for Dementia and Depression in Ethnic Elders.

AD2000—A study which aims to assess the clinical and cost effectiveness of Donepezel and Aspirin in Alzheimer's Disease

Project details of work directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR), copies of which are available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects/trials funded by the MRC and other funders.

The NHS Health Technology Assessment programme is considering research looking at "new drugs for dementia". Full proposals will be considered at a specially convened meeting in June.

Solar Eclipse

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue advice to the residents in the areas from which the solar eclipse can be witnessed on the precautions to be taken when viewing it, to avoid damage to their sight. [87312]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 18 June 1999]: We have supported the optical professions in producing a leaflet "Observing Solar Eclipses—Taking care of your sight", which will be distributed to tourist information centres, libraries, optical practices and other locations places to which the public have ready access. A summarised version of the leaflet has already been made available to general practitioners and we will shortly be sending the same information to schools with details of how copies of the leaflet may be obtained.

We are collaborating with the press and other media in further publicising advice on how to view the sun safely and have let them know that they are free to reproduce the contents of the leaflet.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received regarding possible dangers to sight that may be caused by the August solar eclipse; [87469]

(2) if he will publish details on how Government information regarding eclipse safety can be accessed on the Internet; [87479]

(3) what consultations he has had with (a) broadcasters and (b) newspapers regarding publicising the dangers to ocular health of the solar eclipse; [87482]

(4) what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Employment regarding informing pupils of the dangers of the August solar eclipse before the end of the school year; [87470]

(5) what advice he has issued to family doctors and other Health Service personnel regarding the treatment of injuries caused as a result of the solar eclipse; [87471]

(6) what advice he is planning to issue to parents regarding the dangers of the solar eclipse; [87472]

(7) what plans he has to encourage the use of indirect pinhole projectors by children wishing to observe the solar eclipse; [87473]

(8) what advice he intends to issue regarding the safety of solar viewers whose safety has not been authorised by optical bodies; [87474]

(9) what plans he has to advise users about the safety of solar filters or spectacles; [87480]

(10) what plans he has to warn people about the dangers of viewing the solar eclipse through binocular projection; [87475]

(11) what public advertising campaigns he intends to commission on the dangers of the solar eclipse; [87476]

(12) what advice he has been given regarding damage to the retina caused by the solar eclipse; and what plans he has to publicise the fact that retina damage occurs in a painless manner. [87478]

Mr. Denham: The Royal College of Ophthalmologists, the College of Optometrists and the Royal National Institute for the Blind were among the first bodies to advise us of the need for guidance on viewing the eclipse. We agreed to help them with the production and distribution of a leaflet, "Observing Solar Eclipses—Taking care of your sight", which is published on 23 June for distribution to tourist information centres, libraries, optical practices and other places to which the public have ready access.

In summary, the leaflet warns that looking directly at the sun is very dangerous. The radiation could permanently damage the eye. The safest way to view the eclipse is indirectly with, for example, a pinhole projection viewer. If people ignore this advice and decide to use a solar filter or a pair of eclipse spectacles, they do so at their own risk. They would be well advised to buy the device from a reputable outlet and ensure that it had a CE mark to show it had been approved under the Personal Protective Equipment Directive and also ensure that it came with full instructions for use, that it fitted closely to the face and that the lenses were not scratched or damaged. Even with covers for the eyepiece, binoculars and telescopes are dangerous because they can still expose the eye to excessive radiation.

We have arranged with the Department for Education and Employment for a summary of the advice to be included in the July edition of the "Spectrum" journal, which is sent to all heads of schools and chairs of governors. A summarised version of the leaflet has already been made available to all general practitioners and hospital doctors.

The College of Optometrists will publish the leaflet on their web site: www.College-optometrists.org and see that reference to it is included in the main Internet indexes.

We recognise that the media have a key role in educating the public on the risks to sight from the sun and we are collaborating on a series of news items in the period up to 11 August.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the August solar eclipse will be visible in each county in the UK; and what plans he has to publicise this information more widely. [87477]

Mr. Denham: The Royal Greenwich Observatory has, by way of illustration, calculated the percentage of eclipse as follows: Cornwall and Devon 100 per cent., London 95 per cent., Manchester 90 per cent., Newcastle 85 per cent., Dundee 80 per cent., Western Isles 75 per cent., West Orkneys 70 per cent. The leaflet which the optical professions are producing notes the variable effect, but the risks from viewing the sun directly are the same whatever degree of partial eclipse.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of consultant eye surgeons who will be (a) on duty and (b) on call during the day of the August solar eclipse. [87481]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally, but I am confident that the contingency planning undertaken by health authorities and National Health Service trusts will ensure that hospital eye departments are appropriately staffed on 11 August. However, it would be misleading to give any impression that radiation damage to the eye is treatable. In most cases there is some recovery of sight in the months which follow the injury but, if visual acuity is permanently affected, the only help available is through the prescription of an optical appliance.

Hospital Food (Waste)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of hospital food which is thrown away annually in England and Wales. [87281]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. However, National Health Service trusts have been advised to monitor food waste regularly and record the value of waste against explicit targets to demonstrate that food budgets are properly used.

Mental Health Tribunal (Removal)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases under section 86 of the Mental Health Act 1983 the Mental Health Review Tribunal has refused to give its approval to removal since 1983. [87467]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to abolish the single room rent limits for housing benefit; and if he will make a statement. [87175]

Angela Eagle: We are currently examining all the available research evidence, including our own research, to ascertain the impact of rent restrictions on tenants and the private rental market. We will take account of the findings in our current review of Housing Benefit.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the expenditure in each of the last five years on the provision of help with mortgage interest payments for (a) all income support claimants and (b) lone parents receiving income support. [87176]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Income Support (all cases) in Great Britain with mortgage interest 1993–98

Year	Number of claimants	Estimated annual expenditure £ million
1993–94	550,000	1,137
1994–95	517,000	995
1995–96	488,000	996
1996–97	377,000	671
1997–98	295,000	501

Income-based jobseeker's allowance (all cases) in Great Britain with mortgage interest 1996–98

Year	Number of claimants	Estimated expenditure £ million
1996–97	94,000	99
1997–98	67,000	144

Income Support (lone parents) in Great Britain with mortgage interest 1993–98

Year	Number of claimants	Estimated annual expenditure £ million
1993–94	120,000	280
1994–95	120,000	274
1995–96	116,000	291
1996–97	101,000	233
1997–98	86,000	201

Income-based jobseeker's allowance (lone parents) in Great Britain with mortgage interest 1996–98

Year	Number of claimants	Estimated expenditure £ million
1996–97	2,000	2
1997–98	2,000	4

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample in May 1993 and a 5 per cent. sample thereafter.
2. Figures are based on an average of payments and numbers of claimants in the inquiry week using an average of the four quarters of the financial year.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand, and the estimated annual expenditure is rounded to the nearest million pounds.
4. Prior to November 1995 figures on amounts of Income Support Mortgage Interest paid to claimants were published in the Quarterly Statistical Enquiry. From November 1995 onwards these have been replaced by figures on housing costs payable to claimants with mortgage interest payments. This change is due to alterations in Income Support rules and provides a more accurate reflection of the help actually provided to claimants under the housing cost rules. From 1993–94 onwards, the estimates that have been used for this answer have been based on amounts of housing requirements payable to claimants with mortgage interest payments, and will include amounts for ground rent and other miscellaneous housing costs, although the majority of the amount is paid for mortgage interest.
5. Income Support figures exclude the unemployed from October 1996, as Income Support for the unemployed was replaced by Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance from this point.
6. The February 1998 quarterly figure used in the annual 1997–98 Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) figure include nil mortgage cases (i.e., cases with housing requirements only). JSA estimated expenditure for 1996–97 represents a six month estimate from the introduction of Income-based JSA, the 1997–98 is an annual estimate.
7. Lone parents have been defined as single people with dependants not in receipt of a disability or pensioner premium.

Source:

1. Jobseeker's Allowance Statistics Quarterly Enquiries, November 1996-February 1998.
2. Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiries, May 1993-February 1998.

Widows

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 303, on widows, what advice he has received on the availability of full-time paid work for widows aged 45 to 60 years entering the job market in different parts of the country. [86940]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The availability of full-time paid work for widows aged 45 to 60 years will depend on local labour market conditions. Nationally, the total number of people in work has reached 27 million and unemployment has fallen to its lowest level in 19 years with 1.285 million out of work and claiming benefits.

We are committed to tackling age discrimination in employment and have recently published its code of practice on "Age Diversity in Employment". The impact of the code will be evaluated and this will inform future plans for legislation in this area.

War Pensions

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for what reasons travel expenses to medical examinations for war pension claimants were changed; [84857]

(2) when he plans to review travel expenses to medical examinations for war pension claimants. [84856]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of the War Pensions Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Mr. Gordon Hextall. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Gordon Hextall to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 21 June 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions, about the reasons why travel expenses to medical examinations for war pension claimants were changed and when he plans to review travel expenses to medical examinations for war pension claimants.

I should explain that the War Pensions Agency uses the medical services of the Benefits Agency with the exception of hearing tests which are arranged by contractors working direct to the War Pensions Agency. The arrangements for paying travelling expenses to medical examinations for War Pension claimants are the same as those for benefits administered by the Benefits Agency. At present medical examinations are arranged by SEMA Group Medical Services who are responsible for paying travelling expenses. The Benefits Agency took a decision from 1 July 1998 to amend the expenses rate 6.5 pence per mile for claimants using their own vehicles to attend examinations.

The change was made in order to correct the wide variations in the interpretation of previous instructions. It was concluded that the Benefits Agency was paying rates which were not consistent with existing policies and that expenses payments should be reduced from 22.5p per mile to 6.5p per mile to cover actual fuel costs. This level was consistent with paying actual public transport costs and was introduced in order to ensure that all claimants are treated in the same way regardless of where they live. The new rate was not introduced as a result of the contracting out of the Benefits Agency Medical Services but was introduced by the Benefits Agency before the private sector took over the delivery of the service.

I am advised that the Benefits Agency is currently undertaking a review of the above rate to ensure the objectives of the original change are still being met. The results of the review will be made available in due course.

I hope this is helpful and if you need any further information, I will be happy to assist.

Security and Investigation Service

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency Security and Investigation Service staff are employed in each administrative region; how many job vacancies in the Service currently exist in each region; and how many of these have existed for more than a year. [86901]

Mr. Timms: Operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 17 June 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many Benefit Agency Security and Investigation Service (BASIS) staff are employed in each administrative region; how many job vacancies in the Service currently exist in each region; and how many of these have existed for more than a year.

As of today's date, BASIS staffing levels are as follows:

	Northern Territory	Southern Territory
Complement	85	136
Current vacancies	17	50
Vacancies existing for one year	9	11

The vacancies existing for one year are part of the overall vacancies total, not in addition to it. Five of the above vacancies in the Northern Territory and thirty-one in the Southern Territory are due to the expansion of BASIS' remit.

These figures do not include the Identity Fraud Management Unit which did not become part of BASIS until January 1999.

I hope that this is helpful.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Employees

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for setting a target for employers to take on a specific percentage of disabled employees. [86626]

Ms Hodge: We have no plans to introduce such a target for employers. The 3 per cent. quota scheme, established under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, was appropriate before there was any specific legislation to give disabled people individual rights not be discriminated against in employment. Under Part II of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 disabled people can now seek redress through Employment Tribunals if they believe they have been discriminated against at work.

We are raising awareness of these rights through our current National Disability Campaign, which was launched on 9 June 1999 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. The Campaign aims to encourage more understanding of the barriers and discrimination that disabled people face, highlighting that costs can be low and benefits high when employing disabled people. We believe that these measures, along with the proposed establishment of a Disability Rights Commission, will help improve employment opportunities for disabled people.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87186]

Ms Hodge: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people. Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments. Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women.

The Government's proposals for a Disability Rights Commission, the Bill to establish which is currently before this House, have been influenced directly by the views of the Equal Opportunities Commission. They have also been the subject of extensive public consultation. Over 7,000 copies of the White Paper "Promoting disabled people's rights" were issued, including to a number of women's organisations. Five national consultation conferences on the White Paper were held in September and October 1998. An analysis of responses to the White Paper has been placed in the Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Ethical Investment Policy

40. Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what account the ethical investment working group takes of scripture in reviewing the commissioners' ethical investment policy. [86570]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The commissioners' ethical investment policy is exercised in the context of their duty to manage their inherited assets to provide financial support for the clergy of the Church of England, especially in area of need and opportunity.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the latest agenda of the Agriculture Council of 14 to 15 June, prior to the meeting. [86831]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Agenda for the June Agriculture Council covers the following items:

Approval of the list of "A" Items

Contamination of certain foodstuffs by Dioxins—Information by the Commission

Commission proposals on the prices for agricultural products (1999/2000)

Proposal for a Council Regulation supplementing, in respect of livestock production, Regulation (EEC) No 2092/91 on organic production of agricultural products and indications referring thereto on agricultural products and foodstuffs

Proposal for a Council Directive laying down minimum standards for the protection of laying hens kept in various systems of rearing

Commission Communication to the Council on Bananas

Proposal for a Council Regulation (EC) No 2377/90 laying down a Community procedure for the establishment of maximum residue limits of veterinary medicinal products in foodstuffs of animal origin.

Pet Transport Regulations

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on (a) the new vaccination and identification systems and (b) the process for approving the laboratories in the EU, which will be necessary before the introduction of the new pet transport regulations. [86239]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 120.

Genetically Modified Seeds

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his assessment is of the consequences of a ban for the time being on the placing of genetically modified seed varieties on the National Seed List. [87022]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 June 1999]: The purpose of the National List system is to establish that varieties of agricultural seeds, which are proposed for addition to the List, are distinct, uniform and stable as well as showing an improvement in agronomic performance over varieties already on the List.

The Government's policy is not to accept entry of any genetically modified variety on to the National List unless it has obtained the necessary clearances under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and regulations made under it, relating to environmental and safety aspects. It would, however, be outside the scope of the National List system to introduce a general ban on the addition of genetically modified varieties.

Raw Milk

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to publish as early as possible the results of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the selling of raw milk in Great Britain. [86699]

Mr. Rooker: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry alone is responsible for deciding when the MMC report should be published and what the Government's response to any recommendations should be. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) on 6 May 1999, Official Report, column 1069.

Genetically Modified Foods

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been undertaken into the possible effects of antibiotic resistance gene markers retained in foods produced by the genetic modification of crops on (a) humans and (b) animals; and if he will make a statement. [86315]

Mr. Rooker: As well as its two reports on the use of antibiotic resistance markers (ARMs) in foods (published in 1994 and 1996), as part of its rigorous assessment of individual GM foods, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP) always looks very carefully at the use of ARMs. It recommends against approval in those circumstances where it considers that there is a theoretical finite risk that their use might give rise to an increase in resistance against clinically important antibiotics. Studies are currently in progress to try to ascertain the exact size of such a risk, although this is expected to be very small.

Livestock Producers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) cereal, (b) sheep, (c) beef and (d) other livestock producers have gone out of business since 1 May 1997. [86473]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available. Figures are published in the Digest of Agricultural Census Statistics on the number of holdings undertaking various types of farming. Holdings can continue with the same activities even though they change ownership and conversely can change their activities while continuing in the same farming business.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pig farmers have gone out of business in the United Kingdom since 1 May 1997. [86474]

Mr. Rooker: Information in the form requested is not available. The available information relates to the number of main holdings with pigs at the June agricultural census, which were estimated to be 14,243 at June 1997 and 14,278 at June 1998. Results from the 1999 June census are not yet available. Holdings can continue with the same activities even though they change ownership and conversely can change their activities while continuing in the same farming business.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87327]

Mr. Vaz: Since 15 April 1999, 21 parliamentary questions for written answer on a named day have been tabled to the Lord Chancellor's Department; 100 per cent. received a substantive response on that day.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87193]

Mr. Vaz: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment published in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments. Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women. During this Session no women's organisation has been specifically consulted over proposed legislation.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

National Audit Office

36. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time administrative staff are employed by the National Audit Office. [86566]

Mr. Sheldon: On 31 March 1999 the National Audit Office employed 130 full-time staff involved in the delivery of support services and 18 staff working on a part-time basis. These represent 19 per cent. of all NAO staff and comprise specialists involved in the delivery of a range of key Support Services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87192]

The Attorney-General: My Department has not proposed any legislation during this Session.

DEFENCE

Royal Hospital, Haslar

6. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received on the future of the Royal Hospital, Haslar. [86535]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since 14 December 1998, my Department has received around 500 representations on the future of the Royal Hospital, Haslar. This figure includes letters and petitions from hon. Members and members of the public. Together with my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health, I have also had a meeting with the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers), my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson), the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) and the right hon. Member for Fareham (Sir P. Lloyd), plus local representatives, on the closure of the Royal Hospital, Haslar.

Territorial Army (Balkans)

15. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Territorial Army are currently serving in the Balkans. [86545]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As of 15 June 1999, 393 members of the Territorial Army were serving in the Balkans. Three hundred and fifty-five of these are deployed to Bosnia, representing some 10 per cent. of our troops in the country.

34. Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the Territorial Army is currently deployed on operations. [86564]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Three hundred and ninety three members of the Territorial Army (TA) are currently deployed on operations, and these represent some 0.79 per cent. of the overall TA. The majority of these are in Bosnia.

Iraq

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 303, on Iraqi no-fly zones, if he will take steps to investigate the Iraqi claims of civilian casualties caused on 29 and 30 April and 12 May. [86546]

Mr. George Robertson: I am aware of Iraqi claims of civilian casualties occurring on the dates in question. As we have repeatedly said, we make every effort to reduce the risk of any such casualties and very much regret if they occur. But I can confirm that on all three days, repeated and direct threats from Iraqi forces, including heavy anti-aircraft fire, forced coalition aircraft patrolling the northern no fly zone in Iraq to take defensive action.

NATO

17. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards NATO enlargement. [86547]

Mr. George Robertson: Enlargement of NATO was discussed by NATO Heads of State and Government at the Washington Summit in April. In his statement to the House on 26 April 1999, Official Report, columns 21–23, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said that he and his NATO colleagues reaffirmed the alliance's continuing openness to new members and agreed a membership action plan for countries that aspire to join the alliance.

Learning Forces Initiative

18. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's Learning Forces Initiative. [86548]

20. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's Learning Forces Initiative. [86550]

32. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's Learning Forces Initiative. [86562]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I have previously announced, Standard Learning Credits were introduced in April which increased by 25 per cent. the financial assistance available annually for Service personnel to undertake education for their personal development. Enhanced Learning Credits will be introduced next year. This major new scheme will provide a substantial source of funding for personal development both during service in the Armed Forces and for up to 10 years thereafter.

Green Transport Plans

21. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's green transport plans. [86551]

Mr. Spellar: The turbulence associated with the refurbishment of the Ministry of Defence's Main Building in Whitehall has made it impracticable to introduce green transport plans for MOD buildings in London. Work involved in their production would inevitably be largely nugatory.

Outside London, a draft green transport action plan has been prepared for MOD's Abbey Wood site at Bristol. Work on green transport plans for other MOD sites is due to start once analysis has been completed of recent pilot surveys on commuting and duty travel conducted at three representative MOD sites.

In the meantime, the Department is concentrating on more efficient fleet management, an approach which is consistent with our intention to handle green transport plans, as part of wider Environmental Management Systems.

Kosovo

22. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of the Kosovo conflict for the future military structure of NATO. [86552]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO and the UK will be looking closely at the military and other lessons to be learned from the Kosovo conflict. But because operations are continuing, it is too early to make any firm assessments of its impact on NATO's military structure.

24. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use by his Department of Antonov aircraft in the Kosovo crisis. [86554]

Mr. George Robertson: During the course of operations in connection with the crisis in Kosovo, the UK Ministry of Defence has, as of 11 June, chartered 32 Antonov 124 heavy lift aircraft. We will continue to spot-charter Antonov aircraft, among others, as required.

26. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for British forces' future involvement in the NATO operation in Kosovo. [86556]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, 21 June 1999, column 750.

30. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Britain's reserve forces will play in assisting refugees to return to Kosovo. [86560]

Mr. George Robertson: Members of the Reserve forces in Kosovo are fully integrated with the Regular units with which they are serving. They will therefore be assisting with all operational tasks required to create a safe environment in which the refugees can return to their homes.

31. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of depleted uranium and cluster bombs in the Kosovan theatre. [86561]

Mr. George Robertson: Cluster bombs have been used by the RAF in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia when suitable targets were identified, such as armoured and soft-skinned vehicles, mortar and artillery positions, and fielded forces. In every case the greatest care was taken to reduce the risk of civilian casualties.

Depleted uranium based ammunition has not been used by UK forces in Yugoslavia. But to ensure, should it be required, that British troops would have the most effective means for self-protection, I have approved the deployment of some depleted uranium based tank ammunition.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of peacekeeping in Kosovo in each of the next three years. [87103]

Mr. George Robertson: Given previous uncertainties over Milosevic's actions and the responses that would be needed, it is not possible to produce useful cost estimates. Following the recent peace agreement, we should soon have a clearer basis on which to estimate likely future costs.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to the Exchequer of the military action in Kosovo up to 10 June. [87102]

Mr. George Robertson: As at the end of May, some £43 million of additional expenditure has fallen to my Department as a direct consequence of the UK's military response to the Kosovo crisis. This figure does not include the costs of replenishing stocks of expended ordnance.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if British aircraft have used depleted uranium munitions during the bombing in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [86992]

Mr. George Robertson: DU-based ammunition were not used by the UK forces in air operations over Kosovo and Serbia.

I have approved the deployment of some depleted uranium tank ammunition to theatre to ensure that British troops would have the most effective means for self-protection, if it were required.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans NATO has to remove all combat-effective firearms from private ownership in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [87337]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO has no plans to remove all combat-effective firearms from private ownership in Kosovo. However, UNSCR 1244 demands the demilitarisation of the KLA and other armed Kosovo Albanian groups, in accordance with the requirements laid down by the commander of KFOR.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what numbers of (a) small arms, (b) man-portable and (c) larger weaponry are deemed to be held in Kosovo (i) by the KLA and (ii) in private hands. [87305]

Mr. George Robertson: We have no reliable information on the number of weapons held by the KLA, or in private hands.

We assess that the majority of the KLA's small arms are old and probably originated from Albania. During the past year, they have acquired more modern and sophisticated weapons systems, including anti-tank and anti-air. We also assess that KLA have few heavy weapons.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the Kosovo Agreement was classified as NATO Confidential. [87338]

Mr. George Robertson: The Military Technical Agreement is not classified. A copy of the agreement has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the rotation plans for troops to be deployed in Kosovo, with particular reference to the replacement of British troops by those of other nationalities. [87302]

Mr. George Robertson: The Permanent Joint Headquarters is currently drawing up plans for the rotation of UK forces involved in operations in and around Kosovo. With regard to burden-sharing with other nations, Canadian forces are already working closely with British forces in Kosovo. We are consulting closely with NATO and non-NATO allies about other possibilities for co-operation, but it is not yet clear whether this will result in arrangements which could see British troops being replaced by other national contingents.

Defence Establishments, Shoeburyness

23. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the disposal and reorganisation of the defence establishments in Shoeburyness. [86553]

Mr. Spellar: The Old Ranges and Horseshoe Barracks are still being prepared for disposal. Formal marketing will commence shortly, with a view to completing the sale by the end of the year. Informal negotiations are currently underway with several interested parties.

With regard to the New Ranges, I am pleased to announce that, with effect from 16 June 1999, a new partnership contract has been agreed with the existing supplier, SERCO. Over the course of the next few weeks the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and SERCO will be working together in order to move forward on exploiting the potential of the site, both for additional range activity and for diversification.

Macedonia

25. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops there are currently in Macedonia. [86555]

Mr. George Robertson: As of today, there were some 2,900 UK Service and civilian personnel in Macedonia.

European Defence Co-operation Initiative

27. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning closer defence co-operation between members of the European Union. [86557]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave today to my hon. Friends the Members for Harlow (Mr. Rammell), The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley) and Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith), Official Report, 21 June 1999, column 747.

Soldiers (Training)

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that soldiers in training are able to cope with the exercise regime without damaging their health. [86558]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The good health and physical well-being of all Service personnel is a priority for my Department, and personnel undergoing training are no exception.

As far as soldiers are concerned, the Army Training and Recruiting Agency, which is responsible for the initial and skill training of soldiers and officer cadets, takes all possible steps to ensure that both new recruits and trainees are carefully shown how to avoid injury while training. This includes briefing before and after specific training exercises, and a carefully graded introduction to the training regime. The Agency conducts a careful risk assessment and takes steps to ensure that appropriately trained personnel are available at all times to monitor exercises and training to reduce potential risks to a minimum. The details of any injuries that are sustained are the subject of a continuous audit to try to prevent repetition.

Peacekeeping

29. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Government intends to sign the memorandum of understanding with the UN in relation to peacekeeping and peace support operations. [86559]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government intend shortly to sign the Memorandum of Understanding with the UN, which declares UK forces as potentially available for UN peacekeeping operations.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of British forces in international peacekeeping and peace enforcement missions. [86538]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Strategic Defence Review identified that our less stable world will require more international peace support operations. The UK will play its full part in such international efforts, as we are in KFOR in Kosovo.

UK forces have particular experience and expertise in peace implementation missions such as IFOR and SFOR in Bosnia. Many of the enhancements to our military capability following the Strategic Defence Review will have a direct application in peace support operations.

MOX Fuel (Japan)

33. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he took part in regarding the shipment of MOX fuel to Japan. [86563]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 663 and the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on the same day at column 692.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the changes in Britain's defence requirements resulting from the defence pillar of the Maastricht treaty. [86539]

Mr. George Robertson: The tasks which drive our force structure are more demanding than those currently envisaged under the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy. The MOD is committed to the further development of forces that are joint, modern, inter-operable, rapidly deployable and flexible enough to tackle a wide range of militarily demanding, potentially concurrent tasks.

Harrier Programme

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will visit the British Aerospace, Dunsfold site, to discuss the Harrier programme. [86540]

Mr. Spellar: On 7 January I met four Shop Stewards from BAe Dunsfold to discuss some of their concerns and hope to visit Dunsfold in due course.

Army Statistics

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the size of the Army in terms of (a) front-line troops, (b) non-military personnel and (c) equipment. [86542]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under the plans announced as a result of the SDR, the regular Army will be strengthened by the creation of some 3,200 new posts. We are creating a sixth deployable brigade, a powerful new Air Assault Brigade, and we are strengthening our logistic support capability. New equipment entering service now and in the next few years will greatly improve our ability to conduct the hard hitting, mobile land operations of the future.

Balkan Conflict

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of Serb non-portable air defence capability remains unaffected by NATO activity; and what assessment he has made of the threat from such weapons to NATO low-flying capability. [86733]

Mr. George Robertson: During Operation Allied Force, the threat posed to low-flying NATO aircraft from man-portable air defence systems has been significant. These systems have a capability from well below 100 feet to over 14,000 feet and from a quarter of a mile to over two miles. NATO has taken appropriate counter measures which have been successful.

Reports from NATO pilots indicate that around 100 man-portable SAMs were launched by the Serb military during the now suspended air campaign. Man-portable air defence systems, by their nature, are very difficult to track. We believe that a number of these systems were destroyed during attacks against Serb military locations, but we estimate that the vast majority probably survived.

Under the terms of the Military Technical Agreement (MTA), all MANPADS held by the Serb military should now have been withdrawn from Kosovo. The risk to NATO forces from MANPADS is currently assessed to be very low.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance has been issued to troops in the Balkan theatre on measures to be taken to protect them from spent depleted-uranium weaponry. [86359]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 148.

Southport Weather Station

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the monthly (a) maximum and minimum temperatures, (b) mean daily maximum and minimum temperatures, (c) rainfall and (d) hours of daily sunshine for the weather station of Southport (Greenbank) for (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997. [87165]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas, dated 21 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about weather data for the weather station at Southport (Greenbank). This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of The Met. Office.

The data you requested is given in the attached table.

Averages for the weather station at Southport (Greenbank):

	January	February	March	April	May	June	July	August	September	October	November	December
air temperature (degree C):
1994
Highest max	10.7	9.9	13.8	19.7	21.5	25.3	26.2	25.0	19.1	17.4	15.2	14.7
Mean max	7.6	5.4	9.4	11.3	14.4	16.8	20.7	18.4	15.3	13.5	12.3	9.2
Lowest min	−2.1	−5.5	1.8	−0.3	2.7	6.2	8.5	8.2	5.9	1.4	1.5	−3.1
Mean min	2.6	0.2	4.4	4.5	6.9	10.7	12.7	12.3	9.6	7.3	7.7	3.8
Total rainfall (mm)	86.6	49.9	76.9	58.0	37.6	38.4	72.2	59.7	99.6	115.2	90.4	145.5
Total sunshine (hrs)	64.6	66.5	102.9	191.0	175.6	148.0	220.0	174.3	127.4	106.6	58.6	44.1
1995
Highest max	12.1	11.3	15.3	20.0	23.8	29.4	29.1	31.2	21.8	24.5	14.0	11.9
Mean max	7.3	8.7	8.5	11.8	15.4	17.9	22.1	23.7	17.2	16.0	10.6	4.8
Lowest min	−3.7	0.4	−2.0	1.0	−0.4	7.0	10.7	8.7	8.2	3.0	−2.0	8.7
Mean min	1.8	3.8	2.2	5.3	7.7	10.9	14.5	14.2	11.0	9.7	4.8	0.3
Total rainfall (mm)	147.5	106.1	57.6	16.2	67.3	24.0	40.8	12.6	84.7	25.2	48.6	31.9
Total sunshine (hrs)	55.7	73.5	132.4	197.4	216.0	233.3	224.2	278.1	154.6	110.5	72.6	40.8
1996
Highest max	11.4	9.5	10.5	19.4	22.3	25.7	24.9	28.2	22.1	18.8	15.2	10.5
Mean max	6.4	5.7	7.2	11.8	12.7	17.4	18.9	20.1	17.3	14.6	9.2	5.9
Lowest min	−4.9	−5.7	−1.8	−0.6	0.1	4.9	6.8	9.6	3.5	4.8	−3.2	−4.4
Mean min	3.0	−0.1	2.4	5.3	5.4	8.9	10.8	11.8	8.7	8.2	3.0	0.8
Total rainfall (mm)	19.4	58.3	30.2	59.1	38.0	31.7	40.3	74.3	42.7	112.9	105.5	47.7
Total sunshine (hrs)	21.3	94.8	87.5	121.4	211.7	249.4	218.6	181.2	158.6	103.7	85.4	57.5
1997
Highest max	12.3	12.2	16.8	17.2	25.1	22.6	25.1	29.4	18.9	19.6	16.1	13.2
Mean max	5.7	9.2	10.9	12.2	15.9	17.4	19.9	22.3	17.0	13.9	11.1	8.6

Averages for the weather station at Southport (Greenbank):

	January	February	March	April	May	June	July	August	September	October	November	December
Lowest min	–2.8	–0.4	0.4	0.1	2.1	6.1	8.5	10.5	7.3	–5.0	2.7	–4.4
Mean min	0.1	4.3	4.6	5.8	7.9	10.6	13.1	14.3	11.3	6.9	6.8	3.6
Total rainfall (mm)	2.3	77.7	35.7	23.2	65.7	74.2	63.1	46.1	62.9	58.8	86.1	105.0
Total sunshine (hrs)	50.7	79.2	104.3	121.9	244.6	141.6	237.4	228.7	136.2	123.5	27.5	27.7

European Defence and Security

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 209, on European Defence and Security, if he will list the papers relating to other WEU business which were (a) noted and (b) endorsed by ministers at the Council of 10 May. [87340]

Mr. George Robertson: At the WEU Council on 10 May, papers were considered in the following areas:

Relations between the WEU and NATO

Relations between the WEU and the EU

New WEU Associate Members (Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland)

WEU Operational Development

WEU Space Activities

At the session on 11 May, papers were considered in the following areas:

New WEU Associate Members

Multinational Advisory Police Element (training the Albanian Police Force)

WEU De-mining Assistance Mission in Croatia

Crisex (Crises Management Exercises)

Relations with Ukraine

The title and contents of these documents, which were prepared by the WEU and were endorsed or noted by Ministers at the meeting, are classified by the WEU and I must therefore withhold this information under section 1c of the Code of Practice.

Armed Forces (Manning Levels)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 May 1999, Official Report, columns 13–14, on manning levels, on the assumption that (i) progress towards full manning was as predicted in the Strategic Defence Review, (ii) the level of operational commitment was as deployed in Bosnia currently and (iii) 5,000 troops were deployed in Kosovo indefinitely, how many additional (a) major units and (b) trained soldiers the Army would require to sustain 24 month tour intervals. [86277]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a hypothetical question. It is impossible at this stage to say what the long-term force levels will be either in the Former Republic of Yugoslavia or in Bosnia. If we were to conduct planning on the basis of the assumptions in this question, as I indicated in my previous answer, many variables could affect the calculation of the number of major units and trained soldiers required.

TREASURY

Charitable Giving

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount which has been contributed annually to the charitable sector (a) overall and (b) through the gift-aid scheme since the scheme's introduction; what these are as proportions of the total turnover of the charitable sector; and what is the total cost to his Department of the tax refunds resulting from the gift-aid scheme. [86690]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 June 1999]: Charities received some £760 million under the Gift Aid scheme in 1997–98, of which £177 million were repayments of basic rate income tax, on donations by individuals and companies. Additional relief claimed by higher rate taxpayers for donations under the Gift Aid scheme is provisionally estimated at £40 million for 1997–98.

Consistent and reliable annual estimates for total donations to charities and for the income and expenditure of this sector are not available centrally. However, the Charities Aid Foundation estimates overall income donated by individuals to be around £5 billion to £6 billion per year. In addition to this charities also benefit from donations by companies and other organisations.

The Charity Commission's Register showed at the end of March 1999 that the total annual income of all registered charities in England and Wales was about £21 billion. This does not cover charities in Scotland and Northern Ireland, nor does it include non-registered charities.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend the availability of reduced rates of vehicle excise duty for vehicles with (a) small engine capacity and (b) fuel efficient engines. [87038]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 June 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer detailed current vehicle excise duty policy in his March Budget Statement, 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–90. He announced that from June 1 vehicles of 1100cc. or less would pay a reduced rate of vehicle excise duty of £100. Around 1.8 million cars will have qualified for the £55 reduction in their vehicle excise duty from the start of this month.

The Chancellor also announced that a system of graduated vehicle excise duty for new cars would be introduced in Autumn 2000. This will be based primarily on their carbon dioxide emissions, which are the most accurate indicator of fuel efficiency.

Financial Crises

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department has had with British investors on their role and responsibilities in financial crises in emerging markets; and what part British investors have agreed to play in preventing and resolving future financial crises. [86943]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 June 1999]: We have been working with our G7 partners to develop a new approach to the involvement of the private sector in financial crisis prevention and resolution. This is designed to help promote more orderly crisis resolution and therefore be of mutual benefit to debtors and creditors. Methods of achieving this could include establishing investor networks and the inclusion of collective action clauses in sovereign bond issues. Private sector investors have been involved in the debate on this issue and we expect an appropriate response from them to any proposals which are agreed.

Currency Speculation

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce a tax on currency speculation; and if he will make a statement. [85620]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have received proposals for a tax on international currency exchange. This idea has a number of practical difficulties, including the problem of achieving global coverage and the scope for avoidance. We have considered carefully whether these difficulties can be overcome, but our work so far suggests that they cannot. Consequently, we have doubts that the tax would achieve our shared objective of a stable international financial system.

Recycling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for hypothecated taxes to encourage recycling, with particular reference to the packaging sector. [R] [87000]

Ms Hewitt: The Government currently have no plans to introduce a new tax to encourage recycling.

However, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has commissioned work on the policy instruments which might be used to correct market failures in the demand for secondary raw materials, and products made from secondary raw materials.

In addition, the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations which set targets for recovery and recycling of packaging waste, will almost double the UK's packaging recovery rate (including recycling) to 50 per cent. by 2001.

Finally, in the Budget, 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–90, the Government announced increases in the rate of landfill tax which will provide an incentive for further recycling. To promote further the development of more sustainable waste management, explicit provision will be made for "recycling" in the list of approved projects which can benefit under the landfill tax environmental bodies tax credit scheme.

EU Expenditure

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to support the expenditure covered in the EU budget lines listed under the heading (a) social contacts between staff, (b) early childhood centre and other creches and (c) entertainment and representation expenses; and if he will make a statement. [86657]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's policy on all spending by the institutions of the European Communities is to push for the same principles of rigour and cost-effectiveness as we apply to the UK budget.

Pesticides Tax

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the proposed tax on pesticides; and if he will make a statement. [87293]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations on the design of a possible tax or charge scheme for pesticides. Many of these have been received through the current consultation exercise. The deadline for responses to that consultation is 24 June.

IMF Gold Stocks

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with IMF officials concerning the sale of IMF gold stocks in order to finance debt relief; and if he will make a statement. [85720]

Ms Hewitt: The UK has taken the lead in calling for the sale of $1 billion-$2 billion (approximately 10 million ounces) of IMF gold to meet the costs of an enhanced HIPC initiative falling to the Fund and to deliver faster, wider, deeper debt reduction to the world's poorest countries.

Aviation Fuel Duty

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax yield resulting from imposing duty on aviation fuel at the same rate as on motor vehicle fuel, assuming a similar rate of tax is imposed by other countries. [86698]

Mrs. Roche: Imposing duty on aviation fuel at the same rate as unleaded petrol would raise approximately £5 billion, assuming no alteration in demand.

Lund Humphries Pension Scheme

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department was first contacted regarding the winding up of the Lund Humphries Pension Scheme; and on what date the relevant information regarding guaranteed minimum pension was supplied to the (a) scheme administrators and (b) independent trustee. [87771]

Ms Hewitt: The former Occupational Pensions Board was first notified on 22 December 1994 that the employer had gone into liquidation and that the Lund Humphries Pension scheme was to be wound up. However, it was not until 2 February 1996 that the Receiver contacted the former Occupational Pensions Board confirming the discontinuance date of 14 October 1994. Formal action to cancel the scheme was finalised on 23 April 1996. The former Contributions Agency supplied the relevant scheme membership listings and guaranteed minimum pension calculations to the scheme administrator on 9 September 1996. It is normal practice to supply the scheme membership listings and guaranteed minimum pension calculations to the scheme administrator appointed by the trustees unless otherwise instructed.

PRIME MINISTER

E-Envoy

Mr. Chope: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to appoint the e-Envoy; and if he will make a statement. [87055]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The Government are committed to appointing an e-envoy to lead their drive to develop the United Kingdom as the best place in the world for e-commerce. The Government will announce their plans for the e-envoy post shortly.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 403–79, on disarmament by the KLA, to which KLA officials he was referring. [87359]

The Prime Minister: I was referring to my meeting with KLA officials during my visit to Albania on 18 May. I met Mr. Krasniqi, KLA Spokesman, Mr. Sherifi, Political Adviser to Mr. Thaqi, and Mr. Haliti, KLA representative in Tirana.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if letters written on his behalf to those who have opposed the military action have changed in content since the successful allied campaign in Kosovo. [87310]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1999]: All replies to letters about Kosovo have sought to reflect current circumstances, but have been consistent throughout in setting out the legal and moral justification for NATO's military action.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what information was provided to him by the Leader of the Opposition at the time of his request for an inquiry into the start of the military campaign over Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [87353]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1999]: None.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he has received correspondence from Mr. H. Pinter over the military campaign in Kosovo. [87309]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1999]: Over the last two months, I have received an enormous quantity of letters on Kosovo. I have been unable to reply to each letter individually, but all correspondence has received an acknowledgement.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will examine the various records of Ministers in replying to letters from hon. Members and instruct all ministerial heads of departments to set up specific structures within their departments and private offices for effective and speedy response to such letters. [87696]

The Prime Minister: The fast and effective handling of correspondence from hon. Members is an issue to which I attach great importance. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, has recently published statistics showing how individual departments perform against target in handling correspondence from hon. Members, 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 403–06. My right hon. Friend has also written to Cabinet colleagues inviting those whose Departments performed poorly to take urgent remedial action, if they have not already done so.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 22 June 1999

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Structural Funds

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to negotiate a share of the EU population coverage under the urban strand of Objective 2 of the EU Structural Funds for the United Kingdom which reflects the degree of urbanisation in the United Kingdom. [87786]

Mr. Wills: A maximum of 18 per cent. of the European Union's population will be covered by the new Objective 2. The suggested breakdown by strand for Objective 2 of 10 per cent. to industrial areas, 5 per cent. to rural, 2 per cent. to urban and 1 per cent. to fisheries is purely indicative across the EU.

The UK's overall population coverage under Objective 2 is defined by the safety net which limits the reduction in coverage to one-third of the existing Objective 2 and 5b population.

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that areas designated in the United Kingdom under the urban strand of Objective 2 of the Structural Funds will be densely populated areas made up of contiguous units with a minimum population of 100,000. [87787]

Mr. Wills: The public consultation on the determining UK areas for Objective 2 eligibility ended on 25 May. The Government are carefully considering all the submissions received and the eligibility criteria suggested.

Before the UK propose their Objective 2 areas to the Commission, the Government will define, through discussions with the Commission, the geographical unit to be used to express urban areas within the UK.

Small Business Service

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress made to establish the Small Business Service. [87797]

Mr. Wills: The Government announced plans to set up the Small Business Service in the Budget statement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry reinforced this in his Post-Budget statement to the House on 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 367–79.

We will be publishing a consultation document in the near future on the specific role and functions of the Small Business Service. I will be pleased to hear the views of all interested parties.

National Minimum Wage (Riding Schools)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the national minimum wage on riding schools and equestrian centres; and if he will make a statement. [87810]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have made no such assessment. We have asked the Low Pay Commission to evaluate the impact of the national minimum wage, with particular reference to the effect on pay, employment and training. They will soon be gathering evidence and will no doubt invite this sector, along with many others, to provide information.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will exempt riding schools from the national minimum wage. [87811]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. Under the provisions of the National Minimum Wage Act, individual sectors of employment cannot be excluded from coverage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Car Park Charges

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if the Commission will introduce workplace car park charging within the Parliamentary Estate. [87611]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission has no plans at present to introduce charges for parking in the parliamentary estate. But the Greater London Authority Bill contains provisions which would allow the authority or the London borough of Westminster to introduce a levy on parking in the Palace of Westminster. The Commission will consider the position if and when either authority makes proposals for the introduction of a levy.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Land (GM Trials)

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what his policy is in respect of the use of church land to grow trial genetically modified crops. [87608]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The issue of whether Government trials of genetically modified crops should take place on land owned by the Commissioners is being initially considered by the Church's Ethical Investment Working Group (EIWG), which develops a co-ordinated ethical investment policy for the Church. The EIWG is made up of representatives of each of the central Church investing bodies and the General Synod's Board for Social Responsibility.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maria Bamieh

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the case of Maria Bamieh and the Crown Prosecution Service. [87808]

The Attorney-General: The decision of the Employment Tribunal in the case brought by Maria Bamieh against the Crown Prosecution Service is long and detailed and needs to be studied carefully. The Crown Prosecution Service takes the decision very seriously and is giving it urgent consideration.

Hayes v. Attorney-General

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General what were the terms of settlement of the case of Hayes v. Attorney-General; and if he will make a statement. [87807]

The Attorney-General: The proceedings brought by Ms Hayes were of historical interest only. I had put in hand a review of the system of appointing barristers to act for the Crown, with the intention that it should be made more open and transparent, before Ms Hayes commenced her proceedings. I have followed this wholly new system for making appointment, since July 1998. Settling the case has brought the matter to a close and has saved further expenditure of public money on a lengthy hearing.

The terms of my agreement with Ms Hayes were as follows:

Appointments Procedure

1. The Attorney-General confirms that he will maintain the principles of transparency and open competition followed since July 1998 in appointments to the Panels of Treasury Counsel, including First Junior Counsel to the Treasury, namely:

   (a) that vacancies are advertised;

   (b) that applications and written references are considered by a selection board who make recommendations to the Attorney-General on the basis of those applications and references only;

   (c) that the Attorney-General does not appoint any candidate who has not been recommended to him by the selection board;

   (d) that the Attorney-General does not seek opinions from persons other than the selection board and the candidate's referees.

Jurisdiction

2. In the event of any future dispute, the Attorney-General will accept the jurisdiction:

   (a) of an employment tribunal in the case of appointments as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and First Junior Counsel to the Treasury (Chancery);

   (b) of a county court in the case of appointments of other counsel.

The Applicant's Case

3. The Attorney-General does not accept that the Applicant or any other prospective appointee has, in fact, been subjected to discrimination. Nevertheless, he readily accepts that it was unsatisfactory that, until he changed the appointments system in 1998, although several women barristers had been appointed to the Supplementary Panels and as standing counsel to other departments, only one had been appointed to the main Chancery and Common Law panels of Treasury Counsel. Informal consultation may have a tendency to result in the recommendation of people known personally to the consultees and the purpose of the new system set up by the Attorney-General is to end such consultation. He recognises that the system of appointments which was previously in place may have contributed to the under-representation of women on the main panels. In recognition of this, he has agreed to make a donation of £5,000 to the Fawcett Society.

4. On the above basis, the parties agree that the Applicant will:

   (a) withdraw her county court claim;

   (b) withdraw her application to the employment tribunal

in each case with no order as to costs.

Crown Prosecution Service

Ms Moran: To ask the Attorney-General what measures he proposes to ensure that the Crown Prosecution Service communicates with families affected by their decisions in child abuse cases. [87456]

The Attorney-General: Currently, the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) provides to the police information about prosecution decisions for them to forward to victims, or their families, as appropriate. How much information can be given may depend on the circumstances of individual cases. The CPS must balance openness with victims with the interests of others in the case. In particular cases senior CPS lawyers will be available to meet with victims and their families to explain in general terms reasons for CPS casework decisions.

I am aware that a particular case of child abuse in the hon. Member's constituency has prompted this question and that the local Chief Crown Prosecutor will be meeting the victim's family to explain the decision to discontinue proceedings.

As to the generality of cases in the future, the CPS is presently considering whether or not to take from the police the responsibility for informing victims of the reasons for CPS prosecution decisions. This stems from one of the recommendations of Sir Iain Glidewell's report into the Crown Prosecution Service on which I intend to make a statement shortly.

HEALTH

CJD

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding the safety of medical appliances in respect of the transmission of CJD. [86030]

Ms Jowell: Measures are in place to minimise the risk of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease of any type in known and suspect sufferers being passed on to other patients via surgical instruments. These are set out in the joint guidance of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens and the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee published in April 1998 entitled "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies: safe working and the prevention of infection". This guidance says that no instruments used on a known or suspect patient, whatever the procedure, should be re-used. In addition, for patients regarded as potentially at risk of CJD (for example recipients of human pituitary derived growth hormones), instruments used in procedure involving brain, spinal cord or eye cannot be re-used. This is kept under constant review and new findings are assessed as a matter of priority.

We have commissioned research into ways of detecting proteins on surfaces and improving decontamination and inactivation techniques. Meanwhile, current procedures give a high degree of protection and people should not be deterred from undergoing surgery where this is clinically necessary. The benefit to the patient must be weighed against any theoretical risk from CJD.

Junior Doctors

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the rest requirements for an on-call rota for junior hospital doctors, pursuant to the Health Service Circular 1998/240; and if he will list those health authorities and hospitals in which the requirements of that circular are being observed. [86708]

Mr. Denham: Doctors employed on an on-call rota are contracted to work a maximum average of 72 hours per week, 40 standard hours and up to 32 additional duty hours, with the expectation that they should not actually work more than 16 of the additional duty hours.

Health Service Circular 1998/240, issued on 23 December 1998, provided further national guidance to trusts on rest requirements. Doctors should spend at least one half of the out-of-hours duty period at rest between 5pm and 9am Monday to Friday or 9am to 9am Saturday and Sunday. Within these periods there should be a minimum continuous 5-hour rest period between the hours of 10pm and 8am.

We have not collected specific data on compliance solely within the terms of HSC 1998/240. However, trusts who comply fully with the New Deal are entitled to apply for accreditation. As at 31 March 1999, out of a total of 343 trusts in England, 67 trusts have been granted accreditation, and 77 are under consideration for accreditation.

Paediatric Cardiac Care (Bristol)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications of the costs of (i) participation in the inquiry into paediatric cardiac care in Bristol and (ii) any consequent compensation for the resources available to the United Bristol Healthcare Trust and the Avon Health Authority. [86358]

Mr. Dobson: The costs of participating in the Bristol inquiry, like unforeseen costs which affect other large trusts, fall to be borne by the United Bristol Healthcare Trust. The majority of likely implementation costs will, however, be borne by funds set aside nationally to meet such settlements and are likely to be spread over some years.

Cancer

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will invite cancer research bodies to plan and share research and expertise. [87368]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are currently considering plans to take this forward. Details will be announced shortly.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will set up a national survey of cancer patients' experiences. [87365]

Mr. Hutton: Officials are currently working with the relevant professional and patient groups to design a survey to take place later this year.

Royal Commission on Long-term Care

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans for the implementation of the report of the Royal Commission on Long-Term Care. [87627]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 4 May 1999, Official Report, columns 360–61.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take measures to ensure the uniform availability of infertility treatment from all health authorities. [87848]

Ms Jowell: We have pledged to tackle unacceptable levels of geographical variations in access to IVF treatment and have set in motion a programme of work to achieve that aim. A Departmental survey of current health authority infertility service provision is taking place at the moment to enable the cost implications of any policy changes to be estimated. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists aim to complete their third, and final, set of evidence-based clinical guidelines on infertility this autumn and these will indicate the circumstances in which infertility treatment can be most clinically effective. We can then move towards fairer access to National Health Service infertility services, where those most able to benefit from such treatment receive it.

NHS Regions (Chairman)

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the appointments to the posts of chairman of the eight NHS regions once the terms of office of the incumbent comes to an end. [88062]

Mr. Dobson: The terms of office of the chairmen of the eight National Health Service regions end on 1 November 1999. Professor Alasdair Breckenridge has already agreed to stand down to concentrate on his role as chairman of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines. Philip Hammersley, chairman of Trent Region has indicated that he does not wish to be considered for re-appointment.

Of the remaining chairmen, I have re-appointed the following for a further three-year term:

Ian Mills: London Region

Janet Trotter: South West Region

Sir William Wells: South East Region.

The following have been re-appointed for a four-year term:

Zahida Manzoor: Northern and Yorkshire Region

Rosie Varley: Eastern Region

Clive Wilkinson: West Midlands Region.

The rigorous, open and transparent appointment procedures set down by the Commissioner for Public Appointments are followed for these posts, although they do not fall within the Commissioner's remit. Advertisements will therefore be placed in the national press shortly to recruit new chairmen for the North West and Trent Regions.

Medicines Control Agency

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Medicines Control Agency. [88110]

Mr. Denham: We have published the report of the Quinquennial Review of the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). Copies have been placed in the Library. The Review confirms that the MCA is a world leader in its field, with an international reputation for professional excellence. It has performed well against its targets, and has secured more work under the European licensing system than any other national authority. The Review also shows that the MCA has used Executive Agency status well, and recommends that it should retain that status. We accept that recommendation.

In the light of the Agency's excellent performance, we are pleased to announce that Dr. Keith Jone's appointment as Chief Executive of the MCA has been extended for a further three years.

PRIME MINISTER

Joint Consultative Cabinet Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring to an end the Joint Consultative Cabinet Committee. [87631]

The Prime Minister: No.

Lords Lieutenant (Appointment)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will describe the process by which Lords Lieutenant are chosen; and what are the qualifications required, the responsibilities involved and the length of time for which an appointment is made. [87960]

The Prime Minister: The prime duty of Lords Lieutenant is to be The Queen's representatives in their county or area. Other than in four Scottish cities (where the Lord Provost is Lord Lieutenant by virtue of his/her office) Lords Lieutenant are appointed under the Royal Prerogative by The Queen on the recommendation of the Prime Minister of the day. In Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland the consultations that precede an appointment are carried out by the relevant territorial Department. In England, consultations are carried out by the Prime Minister's Secretary for Appointments. Those appointed as Lords Lieutenant are people of standing in their local communities, most frequently on account of their record of voluntary activity for the good of the community. Lords Lieutenant may serve until they are 75 years of age.

Pro-euro Campaign

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will be attending the forthcoming launch of the pro-euro campaign. [87822]

The Prime Minister: My forward diary will be announced in the usual way. The Government's policy on membership of the single currency remains as set out by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in October 1997. The determining factor is whether the economic benefits to the UK from joining are clear and unambiguous.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Chief Superintendent Barry Mason

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a transcript of the trial at Birmingham Crown Court of former West Midlands Police Chief Superintendent Barry Mason in April. [87701]

Mr. Vaz: No. Parties in cases may place an order for transcript (at their own expense) with the court reporters responsible for taking the verbatim record of the case. The contractor can provide transcripts to anyone else only once they have received approval in writing from the court. In this case the transcript runs to about 70 pages and would cost approximately £350.

Hayes v. Attorney-General

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the case of Hayes v. Attorney-General for the secret soundings system in the appointment of silk; and if he will make a statement. [87806]

Mr. Vaz: There is no 'secret soundings' system for the appointment of silks, and the Hayes case has no implications for the silk system.

The vacancy for Treasury Junior, for which Ms Hayes complained that she should have been considered, was not advertised. Applications for silk, however, are openly invited by published advertisement and all applicants are judged equally, on their merits alone, according to published criteria. The list of successful applicants is published, together with a complete statistical breakdown of applications and appointments. Unsuccessful applicants are invited to speak to a senior member of the Lord Chancellor's Department for feedback on their application; nearly 140 have already taken up this invitation this year. In addition, officials are always willing to discuss the principles, policies and procedures of the silk system.

The information which, together with the application forms, informs the Lord Chancellor's decisions on silk is gathered through a comprehensive and detailed consultation system. The guide for consultees is publicly available; this explains the Lord Chancellor's policies and criteria, according to which consultees are asked to comment. A list of all those whom the Lord Chancellor consults is also published, and applicants may nominate additional consultees if they feel that the wider consultation community is not able to give the Lord Chancellor sufficient information about their suitability for silk. Almost all consultation is carried out in writing, to ensure that consultees focus on the published criteria. As an indication of the scale of this exercise, this year's silk round involved consultation with over 425 general consultees and correspondence with over 500 nominated consultees, who in total submitted over 4,600 comments to the Lord Chancellor.

The silk system is not, therefore, secret. The comments are, of course, confidential, for reasons which Parliament accepted in the Home Affairs Select Committee Report on Judicial Appointments Procedures in 1996 and in the Data Protection Act 1998. Even given that, however, applicants will be invited to respond to any comment which alleges misconduct, even if this involves identifying the accuser (if the accuser is unwilling to stand by his accusation in this way, the Lord Chancellor will ignore the allegation). In addition, the substance of the comments will, while respecting their confidentiality, be freely discussed with unsuccessful applicants who ask for feedback on their application.

Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the members of the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk. [87801]

Mr. Vaz: The membership of the Joint Working Party on Judicial Appointments and Silk is currently as follows:

Lincoln Crawford Esq. OBE (Chairman, Bar's Race Relations Committee)
Mrs. Pamela Bhalla (Equal Opportunities Officer, Bar Council)
Mrs. Kathryn Hamylton (Equal Opportunities Officer, Bar Council)
Raj Joshi Esq. (Society of Black Lawyers)
Gelaga King Esq. (African, Caribbean and Asian Lawyers' Group)
Ms Margaret McCabe (Barrister—Woman Lawyer Forum founder)
Oba Nsugbe Esq. (African, Caribbean and Asian Lawyers' Group)
Miss Eileen Pembridge (Council of The Law Society)
Miss Jacqueline Perry (Association of Women Barristers)
Ms Jenny Staples (Association of Women Solicitors)
Miss Sangita Unadkat (Society of Asian Lawyers)
John Cavanagh Esq. (The Bar's Sex Discrimination Committee)
Richard Wilson Esq. (African, Caribbean and Asian Lawyers' Group)
Ms Marcia Williams (Equal Opportunities Officer, The Law Society).

The Working Party's secretariat is provided by officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The representation of some of the groups has changed during the life of the Working Party.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress of the work of the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk. [87803]

Mr. Vaz: The Joint Working Party on Judicial Appointments and Silk was initiated by the legal profession, not by the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord Chancellor has no direct control over its progress.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk to report. [87805]

Mr. Vaz: I understand that the Joint Working Party is producing a report for submission to the Lord Chancellor. The timing of the report is a matter for the Joint Working Party itself.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he proposes to publish the report of the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk. [87809]

Mr. Vaz: The decision as to whether or not to publish its Report would be a matter for the Joint Working Party itself, not for the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the dates on which the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk met. [87802]

Mr. Vaz: The Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk has met on the following dates:

23 July 1997
22 September 1997
20 October 1997
3 December 1997
28 January 1998
28 April 1998
9 June 1998
16 July 1998
22 September 1998
27 October 1998
17 May 1999.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reasons the Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk was set up. [87804]

Mr. Vaz: The Joint Working Party on Equal Opportunities in Judicial Appointments and Silk was set up at the instigation of the Bar. The Lord Chancellor agreed to officials of his Department taking part in the Working Party's deliberations and providing its secretariat.

The purposes of the Joint Working Party are to consider and propose action to increase the number of applications for judicial appointment and Silk from women and black and Asian lawyers with the appropriate seniority and relevant experience; to consider and propose possible changes to judicial appointments and Silk procedures for further consideration by the Lord Chancellor; and (where appropriate) to advise and assist in the implementation of action.

TREASURY

European Taxation (Veto)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the use of the veto in relation to European taxation measures. [86587]

Dawn Primarolo: All EC proposals on tax require unanimity before they can be adopted. We will not accept any proposals which are not in the national interest.

German EU Presidency

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress made on tax and currency matters during the German Presidency of the EU. [86610]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the German Presidency of the EU the emphasis has been the need to make tax systems in Europe more employment-friendly and to combat harmful tax competition.

Brazil (Financial Assistance Package)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review and audit the UK contribution to the financial assistance package for Brazil; and if he will take into account the impact of the adjustment policies agreed by the Brazilian Government in negotiations with the IMF on the poor and vulnerable. [87585]

Ms Hewitt: Financial tensions in Brazil have eased significantly, following the IMF-led international financial support package agreed last year. The UK Government will continue to play an active role in monitoring Brazil's performance under its IMF programme. Continued adherence under the IMF programme, together with an appropriate contribution from private sector creditors, underpins the BIS co-ordinated credit line, to which the UK has also contributed.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has consistently stressed the importance of preserving investment in the health, education and social programmes which are essential for growth and poverty reduction. He has pressed for the World Bank's work on good practices in social policy to be drawn upon by the World Bank and the IMF when designing adjustment programmes. In Brazil, the IMF and the World Bank and the INTER American Development Bank worked together closely to ensure that the impact of the adjustment programme on the poor and vulnerable was minimised. Both banks have undertaken a number of projects in Brazil with a social dimension. Economic recovery in Brazil should benefit all sections of society.

DEFENCE

Research (GM Organisms)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the research projects which have been commissioned by his Department from (a) universities, (b) research institutes and (c) industry which involve genetically modified organisms since 1995 indicating the places involved and the value and purpose of the contracts. [84211]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Joan Ruddock, dated 22 June 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about research involving genetically modified organisms as part of the research programme which the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) undertakes on behalf of the Ministry of Defence (MOD) uses techniques of this nature.

The Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) sector of DERA, which is based at Porton Down, uses genetic modification techniques as a scientific research tool to develop protective measures for the UK and its Armed Forces in the event of exposure to biological weapons. CBD also commissions other research establishments to undertake some of this work. Since 1995 seven universities and six institutes have been involved in this type of work at a total cost of some £4291000. To provide details of the universities and institutes taking part in this research may break confidentiality agreements. I am, therefore, withholding this information under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

I hope this is helpful.

Operational Areas

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the operational areas opened since 1 May 1997 indicating the impact on the defence budget in each case; and if he will make a statement. [86443]

Mr. George Robertson: Details of expenditure by operational area since 1 May 1997 are set out in the following table. In both financial years the impact on the defence budget has been offset by claims on the Government's Contingency Reserve, in accordance with established practice.

£ million

Operational area	Outturn Financial year 1997–98	Provisional outturn Financial year 1998–99
Bosnia	180.9	147.1
Gulf/Iraq	15.6	35.4
Kosovo	—	23.2
Total	196.5	205.7
Relief from Reserve	178.0	85.0

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the incidences of failure of FADEC systems which have caused safety-critical accidents in Chinook helicopters. [86445]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since the Chinook's introduction into service, there have been no accidents caused by malfunction of the FADEC units.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the Computer Weekly investigation report into the Chinook helicopter crash on the Mull of Kintyre, a copy of which has been supplied to him; and if he will make a statement. [86444]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Although I have yet to receive an official copy of the report from Computer Weekly themselves, my officials have obtained a copy of the document from the internet and are analysing its content.

Once this work is complete, I will write to the hon. Member with our findings and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent review his Department has undertaken of the FADEC software fitted to Chinook helicopters; and if he will make a statement. [86378]

Mr. Doug Henderson: FADEC, like any other in-service component, is subject to regular review to ensure it remains reliable and supportable throughout its service life. As a result of this process, MOD has recently initiated a software update which incorporates a number of minor changes in order to maintain the software's long-term supportability.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports have been (a) made and (b) assessed by his Department relating to the computer FADEC used on Chinooks since Air Vice Marshall Jenner's statement to the Defence Committee last year; and if he will make a statement. [86438]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since the HCDC evidence session in March last year, there have been no reports from RAF personnel expressing flight safety concerns over FADEC.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds his Department took legal proceedings against Textron Lycoming in respect of the FADEC computer system. [86362]

Mr. Doug Henderson: MOD took legal action against Boeing Helicopters and Textron Lycoming who were both responsible for an engine overspeed during ground testing of a pre-production FADEC system at the Boeing facility in Wilmington, Delaware which resulted in damage to the MOD owned Chinook helicopter on which the FADEC had been fitted. Following the Wilmington incident, the FADEC software was redesigned before it was introduced on to the Chinook Mk2 and it was therefore of a very different standard from that installed on ZD576 which crashed on the Mull of Kintyre.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received requesting the reopening of the inquiry into the loss of the RAF Chinook on the Mull of Kintyre in 1994; and if he will make a statement. [86393]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since the beginning of this year, there has been a representation from the Lord Chalfont and, following some recent media coverage, my officials have also received a handful of letters from members of the public.

Kosovo

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to ascertain if United States or other NATO forces, other than those from the United Kingdom, used depleted uranium weapons in Kosovo. [87412]

Mr. George Robertson: The United States has confirmed that it used depleted uranium based ammunition during the Kosovo air campaign. Whether or not other nations used such ammunition is a matter for them.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pieces of ordnance were used by UK forces in the Kosovo conflict. [87814]

Mr. George Robertson: UK aircraft used a total of 1,005 bombs and missiles in operations against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. I am withholding details of UK cruise missile firings under exemption 1*a* of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the proportion of the ordnance used in Kosovo which has been millennium non-compliant. [87821]

Mr. George Robertson: None of the ordnance used by UK forces in recent operations in the Balkans has been affected by Year 2000-related problems.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on how AWE Aldermaston intend to treat and dispose of the plutonium-contaminated rainwater that has accumulated on-site following heavy rainfall on 19 May. [87709]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the treatment of contaminated rainwater at AWE Aldermaston. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

During a storm on 19 May, an inch of rain fell within an hour taking up about one third of the capacity of the North Ponds Water Management System. It is standard procedure for the contents of full tanks to be analysed before discharge and on this occasion, low levels of plutonium were detected in two of them.

The silt suspended in the water has now had time to settle and it has become apparent that while the silt does contain low, but detectable, levels of plutonium, the water itself is not contaminated. AWE intend to decant the water from the two tanks and then retest it. Once they are satisfied that the water is clean, it will be discharged. The silt remaining at the bottom of the tanks will be collected and dealt with by proven methods. This will be done with the approval of the Environment Agency.

This incident has proved that the North Ponds system works as intended, in allowing flood water to be collected on site, then tested and, where appropriate, treated before discharge.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many gloveboxes are in storage at AWE Aldermaston awaiting treatment and disposal. [87711]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about storage of gloveboxes at AWE Aldermaston. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

There are at present forty two gloveboxes stored at AWE Aldermaston awaiting treatment and disposal.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the plant for conditioning the plutonium-bearing sludges currently stored in stainless steel tanks at AWE Aldermaston commenced operations. [87708]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence which asked about operation of plant for the conditioning of plutonium-bearing sludges at AWE Aldermaston. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Options for dealing with the plutonium-bearing sludges are still being evaluated by AWE. In the meantime, the sludges remain safely in the tanks, whose integrity is regularly monitored. The tanks are made of rubber lined mild steel rather than stainless steel.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much storage space for intermediate and low-level nuclear waste awaiting a final repository will be left at AWE Aldermaston once the unsuitable waste stores have been emptied and the plutonium-bearing sludge has been conditioned and stored. [87712]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about storage space for intermediate and low-level nuclear waste at AWE Aldermaston. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

There are currently nine ILW stores at AWE and all are fit for purpose. However, two of the stores were converted from laboratories and these will be emptied and their contents transferred to modern facilities in a programme scheduled to start in September. A contract has recently been placed for a new store which is expected to be brought into service in 2001. This will enable the contents of an ageing store to be emptied and the building decommissioned. Seven stores will remain in use and will provide sufficient capacity for holdings of ILW, and such Low Level as cannot be disposed of to the BNFL site at Drigg, for the period up to 2005/2006.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the submarine nuclear emergency plan that covers berths in Gibraltar. [87710]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the Gibraltar Public Safety Scheme, which provides background information and guidance on the action to be taken in order to protect the public in the event of an accident involving the reactor of a nuclear powered submarine in Gibraltar. A copy of this document is already held in the Library of the House.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the results of his Department's review of its decommissioned nuclear submarine storage and disposal policy. [87713]

Mr. Spellar: The outcome of the initial phase of the review into options for the interim storage of the decommissioned nuclear submarines should be announced later this year. The purpose of this initial phase is to review all practical options and determine the most viable. During the next phase of the review, these options will be developed, involving industry experts as appropriate, and detailed costing work will be undertaken.

SCOTLAND

Women's Organisations (Consultations)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86995]

Dr. Reid: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them including the assessment of the potential for differential impact on particular groups in society. In Scotland full use is made of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women. The Scottish Office Good Practice Guidance on consultation advises including the Women's National Commission in all consultations. In addition we have set up the Women in Scotland Consultative Forum whose members cover a wide spectrum of women's organisations and which regularly meets officials and Ministers.

We have also developed a database now numbering over 600 organisations with a women's issues remit who are available for consultation. For example our Action Plan on Violence Against Women was sent to all organisations on the database. All responses to Scottish Office consultation papers are made publicly available unless the respondent has indicated otherwise.

Genetically Modified Fish

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what advice he has received concerning the farming of genetically modified fish in Scotland; [87260]

(2) which organisations he has consulted in connection with the licensing of farming of genetically modified fish in Scotland. [87261]

Mr. Macdonald: None. No applications for consent to release GM fish into the environment have been made under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 (as amended). Unless there is a consent to release, any work with GM fish would have to be undertaken in contained premises which had been notified under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 (as amended).

Further Education

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish his report on the discharge of his duties in relation to Further Education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [87989]

Dr. Reid: My report on Further Education in Scotland for 1998 was published today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The Report, entitled "Further Education in Scotland 1998: Report by the Secretary of State for Scotland", details this Government's commitment to widening access to further education and providing lifelong learning opportunities for all.

During 1998 that commitment was backed by a Comprehensive Spending Review settlement identifying an additional £214 million for investment in further education over three years. We also set a new target for the expansion of FE provision. In three year's time the Government expects to see at least 40,000 more students embarking on courses in further education colleges, and from groups which to date have been under-represented among student numbers.

New initiatives and new resources will help both to stabilise and modernise the FE sector, ensuring that it can fulfil its role at the heart of the Government's lifelong learning agenda for the new millennium.

Our vision for further education is focused and clear. So too is our expectation that the FE colleges will work together in partnership in rising to meet the challenges which lie ahead.

WALES

CADW

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which committee within the National Assembly for Wales will be responsible for the activities of CADW; and if he will issue revised guidelines on its responsibilities. [85541]

Mr. Michael: This is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in his Department and its associated bodies and agencies have benefited from the introduction of a National Minimum Wage. [86091]

Mr. Michael: Eighty five casual Welsh Office staff had their pay increased as a result of the introduction of the National Minimum Wage.

Information about salary levels in NDPBs is not collected centrally.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital beds in Wales are occupied by patients of pensionable age who could be discharged from hospital if alternative care provision existed; and if he will make a statement. [86843]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The latest available information relating to delayed discharges from hospital is shown by NHS trust in the following table. An age breakdown is not available. Information relates to a chosen day in January 1999 (usually 31 January 1999), as reported in local authority responses to the Survey of Delayed Discharges from Hospital. The survey requested information on the number of hospital patients known to local authority social services departments, who were medically fit to be discharged, but were still occupying a hospital bed. All patients medically fit to be discharged are counted; this may include patients whose delay came within agreed timescales for the discharge process.

NHS trust	Number of delayed discharges January 1999
Bridgend and District	5
Cardiff Community Healthcare	8
Carmarthen and District	12
Ceredigion and Mid Wales	4
Clwydian Community Care	17
East Glamorgan	1
Glan Clwyd General Hospital	16
Glan Hafren	111
Glan-y-Môr	31
Gwent Health Care[1]	27
Gwynedd Community[2]	26
Gwynedd Hospitals	7
Llandough Hospital	12
Llanelli Dinefwr	20
Morriston Hospital	69
Nevill Hall and District	31
North Glamorgan	28
Pembrokeshire and Derwen	5
Powys Health Care	12
Rhondda Health Care	32
Swansea	38
University Hospital of Wales Healthcare	68
Velindre	1
Wrexham Maelor Hospital	9
Total	590

[1] As reported by Caerphilly County Borough Council on post April 1999 trust basis

[2] Includes 6 patients with delayed discharges at February 1999

Following the transfer of functions this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87187]

Mr. Meale: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment published in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual departments. Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women. On the transport side, for example, we are conducting an audit of women's transport requirements and developing a checklist for transport providers. Similarly, in housing, we are reviewing the support and accommodation provided by local authorities to households experiencing domestic violence to see if it fits women's needs. This project has an advisory group with representation from women's groups.

Rent and Service Charges

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average rent and service charge for registered social landlord housing in the south west for (a) general needs rented housing, (b) shared ownership housing, (c) sheltered housing and (d) supported or special needs housing in 1998–99. [87616]

Mr. Raynsford: For all self-contained general needs properties (including sheltered housing) owned by registered social landlords (RSLs) in the south-west region the average weekly rent and service charge as at 31 March 1998 (the most recent data available) was £54.24. These data are collected by the Housing Corporation in the Regulatory and Statistical Returns completed by RSLs.

Information about rents and service charges for shared ownership and supported or special needs housing is not currently collected for all lettings. Average rents and service charges on all new shared ownership and supported housing lettings during the year ending 31 March 1998 will be published shortly in the CORE Annual Report. The most recent data available from CORE show that the average monthly rent on new shared ownership properties in the South (which includes south-east and south-west regions) during the period April to September 1998 was £114.00; and the average weekly rent and service charge on new supported housing lettings in the south west during the period April to September 1998 was £110.91.

Housing Grants

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much (a) social housing grant, (b) supported housing management grant and (c) local authority social housing grant, was paid to registered social landlords in the south-west in 1998–99. [87615]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Corporation paid the following amounts to registered social landlords in the south-west region for the financial year 1998–99:

	£ million
Social Housing Grant	42.29
Supported Housing Management Grant (SHMG)	[1] 1.5
Local Authority Social Housing Grant	46.09

[1] This figure includes all projects which were entitled to claim SHMG. A few of these projects will not have claimed SHMG during 1998–99 because they were still in development. They will claim as soon as the schemes are occupied by tenants.

Environment Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent meetings he has had with officials of the Environment Agency to discuss (a) implementation of the Agency's corporate plan, (b) concerns over employment conditions raised by staff trades unions and (c) levels of resources available to support the Agency's statutory responsibilities. [87496]

Mr. Meacher: I shall be meeting the Chairman, Chief Executive and other officials of the Environment Agency shortly to discuss the Agency's corporate plan for 2000–01 and I will be raising employment conditions and levels of resources at these meetings.

MOX Plutonium Fuels Plant (Sellafield)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library copies of the documents submitted (a) to and (b) by his Department in response to the recommendation by the Environment Agency that Government departments should be involved in considering the wider national and international matters arising from the proposal to operate the new MOX plutonium fuels plant at Sellafield. [87502]

Mr. Meacher: On 11 June, my right hon. Friends the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced the go-ahead for uranium commissioning and a further round of consultation into the economic case for the Mixed Oxide (MOX) fuel fabrication plant at Sellafield. A final decision on the full operation of the MOX plant will not be made until after the consultation finishes on 23 July and all responses have been considered.

Once a final decision has been taken on the operation of the MOX plant, we will place it in the Library of the House:

(a) all documents on the MOX plant submitted to my Department in response to our further consultation on the plant's economic case, except those which we have been specifically requested not to make public; and

(b) all documents published by my Department as part of that final decision.

Oil and Fat Waste

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the extent of oil and fat waste being put down sewers and drains. [87622]

Mr. Meale: The Department has not commissioned any research on this issue and has no plans to do so.

Genetically Modified Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what permission has been given to grow genetically modified oil seed rape at Stanton, Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement. [87508]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 18 June 1999]: No consent to release a genetically modified crop has been issued in respect of Stanton, Gloucestershire.

Dioxins

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the revised World Health Organisation tolerable daily intake for dioxins (1–4 pg TEQ/Kw bw day). [87843]

Mr. Meale: The Department of Health Advisory Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) has not yet had the opportunity to review the data used by the recent WHO consultation which recommended the Tolerable Daily Intake (TDI) for dioxins of 1–4 pg TEQ/kg bw/day. Therefore this TDI has not been adopted formally by the Government. The COT will undertake a review when a full report of the consultation is available. In the interim, current exposure data will be considered using both the current UK TDI (10 pg TEQ/kg bw/day) and the recently recommended WHO TDI.

TCDD

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the conclusion of the International Agency for Research on Cancer at their meeting in Lyon, February 4 to 11, 1997, on the classification of TCDD as a known human carcinogen. [87842]

Mr. Meale: The Department of Health Advisory Committee on the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COC) reviewed the conclusion of the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) to classify 2,3,7,8-TCDD as a known human carcinogen in 1998. The COC concluded that there are insufficient epidemiological and toxicological data on TCDD to conclude a causal link with cancer in humans, but it would be prudent to consider TCDD as a 'probable weak human carcinogen'. A copy of the full COC statement is being deposited in the Library of the House.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many new lettings, in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available, by (a) local authorities and (b) other social landlords were to (i) lone parents and (ii) teenage lone parents. [87777]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested for local authorities is not collected centrally. For other social landlords the information for England in 1997–98 is as follows:

	General needs accommodation	Support accommodation
Total lets to lone parents	33,048	4,992
of which:
Lone parent aged 16–19	2,656	394

Source:
Housing Corporation Continuous Recording (CORE) system administered by the Joint Centre for Scottish Housing Research (JCSHR).

GM Poplars (Zeneca)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment of potential environmental impact he undertook before permission was given to Zeneca to plant genetically modified poplar trees near Bracknell. [87604]

Mr. Meacher: Two consents have been issued to Zeneca Ltd. to plant small scale trials of genetically modified poplar trees in the Bracknell area. Each application included a pre-planting environmental audit and risk assessment that were assessed by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment. The trees for both trials are derived from female clones and will not therefore produce pollen. The trees will be coppiced after four years to ensure that they remain in a juvenile phase and do not flower and the trials will be terminated prior to flowering after a further four years. In addition there is specific monitoring at both sites for precocious flowering each spring and any flower buds are removed to prevent pollination. A copy of the consent documents and the environmental risk assessment is available on the public register at the Department.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum percentage of lead permitted in unleaded petrol. [87606]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Directive 85/210/EEC limits lead in unleaded petrol to a maximum of 0.013 grammes per litre. This limit will be lowered to 0.005 grammes per litre from 1 January 2000 in accordance with directive 98/70/EC.

Rented Dwellings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of new dwellings to be completed for (a) housing association rent and (b) local authority rent in each London borough in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [87818]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not forecast the volume of new housebuilding at local level.

Social Housing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the proportion of social housing on new developments in each London borough in the current year; and if he will make a statement. [87820]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest available information on the proportion of housebuilding completions that were of social housing in each London borough is for 1998–99, as follows:

London borough	Percentage
Barking and Dagenham	—
Barnet	11
Bexley	9
Brent	37
Bromley	—
Camden	19

London borough	Percentage
City of London	0
Croydon	58
Ealing	27
Enfield	45
Greenwich	25
Hackney	45
Hammersmith and Fulham	15
Haringey	72
Harrow	3
Havering	10
Hillingdon	51
Hounslow	3
Islington	17
Kensington and Chelsea	21
Kingston upon Thames	0
Lambeth	57
Lewisham	46
Merton	54
Newham	58
Redbridge	5
Richmond upon Thames	1
Southwark	—
Sutton	6
Tower Hamlets	—
Waltham Forest	73
Wandsworth	4
Westminster	15

[illegible]available

Source:
Local authority P2 returns; NHBC

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of single people who are unable to be placed on local authority housing waiting lists and are in need of affordable rented housing in each London borough. [87816]

Mr. Raynsford: No estimates are held centrally.

Private Hire Vehicles (Plymouth)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what steps he is taking to persuade Plymouth City Council to adopt the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 in its regulation of Plymouth-based private hire vehicles; [87824]

(2) what discussions his officials have had with Plymouth City Council officers in the past six months concerning the regulation of Plymouth-based private hire vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [87825]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The decision as to whether to adopt the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 is a matter for the City Council. They will no doubt take into account the fact that (once the relevant provisions of the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998 have come into effect) adoption of the 1976 Act will enable private hire vehicles licensed by the City Council to pick up passengers in London. My officials have corresponded this year with officers of Plymouth City Council about these issues.

Housing Revenue Account Consultation Paper

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the response was to the consultation paper, "A New Financial Framework for Local Authority Housing: Resource Accounting in the Housing Revenue Account"; and if he will make a statement. [88061]

Ms Armstrong: Our proposals for reforming the Housing Revenue Account (HRA) were intended to make local authority housing management more efficient. Responses to the consultation generally welcomed the proposals to introduce resource accounting. I confirm that we intend to move to a new form of accounts with:

- a cost of capital charge, linked to stock values, showing the resources tied up in local authority housing;
- a major repairs (or depreciation) allowance, paid through the subsidy system, to meet the costs of keeping the stock in good condition; and
- a requirement to prepare a business plan as the framework for managing the stock.

The proposal to remove rent rebates from the HRA, making it a pure landlord account, was also welcomed in principle. This will go ahead, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation. We will then have to redistribute surpluses to ensure that resources go to councils with the greatest need. We will be consulting on the detailed arrangements later in the year.

Other areas on which we will be consulting further include: the method by which valuations are to be carried out, the calculation of the major repairs (or depreciation) allowance, business plans and the detailed form of accounts. In response to points made in consultation, we intend to make the new form of accounts simpler.

On the question of the basis to be adopted for valuing housing stock for the cost of capital charge in the account, respondents overwhelmingly favoured existing use value as social housing, rather than open market value. I confirm that this will be the basis for valuation.

Authorities expressed concern that the timetable for moving to the new system was too ambitious. So we are now giving them some extra time to prepare. Authorities will be required to keep the HRA in the new form (including business plans) from 2001–02. As long as they have completed the necessary preparatory work satisfactorily, including producing satisfactory business plans, they will be eligible for additional subsidy for the major repairs allowance from that year. Rent rebates will be removed from the HRA at the same time or, if the necessary legislation has not been passed by then, as soon as it is in place.

Authorities were also concerned about the costs of the work needed to prepare for the changes, particularly valuations and the preparation of business plans. We will be making an extra £15m available through the HRA subsidy system in 2000–01 and a further £15m in 2001–02 to help with these costs, and will consult authorities on proposals for doing so later in the year.

I am grateful to all those who responded to the consultation paper. I am placing a list of the respondents, excluding any who requested confidentiality, in the House Library together with a report providing an analysis of the responses. The list and specific responses are available in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions Library, Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1E 6DE, telephone 0171 890 3039. We will shortly be writing to authorities setting out our response and the next steps in more detail. I believe that, working with local government, we can move forward to a new financial framework for local authority housing which is more suitable for the modern, high-quality tenant-focused service which we want to see.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Tuition Fees

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of exempting all university students aged over (a) 21 and (b) 25 years living in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) England from tuition fees. [84063]

Mr. Mudie: [holding answer 13 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 June 1999, Official Report, column 385.

Special Measures

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools in England currently under special measures, identifying for each school (a) how long it has been under special measures and (b) the percentage of its pupils receiving free school meals. [87018]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 June 1999]: Information for each school on special measures at 21 April 1999 is shown in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

In June last year the Government announced a tough new policy to stop prolonged failure in schools. Since September 1998, schools which fail an Ofsted inspection must be turned around by local education authorities within two years. If a school is not out of special measures within two years it must be given a fresh start or closed. There are too many schools which failed under the previous administration and are still failing over two years later. We have made it clear that this must not continue and of the 46 such schools on the list provided, 12 have published or had closure proposals approved (three of which will close and Fresh Start schools open), and a further nine have been removed from special measures during the Summer terms already. The rest are now making good progress and we expect virtually all of them to be removed from special measures either this term or next.

The decisive action we have taken to tackle failure in our schools since May 1997 has cut the average turn-around time from 25 months to 18 months. We are moving from laying the foundations for improvement to delivering the benefits.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for improving employment opportunities for people with disabilities. [86625]

Ms Hodge: Disabled people are already benefiting from the New Deals and other changes that the Government have introduced in the last two years. The New Deal for Disabled People is piloting a range of initiatives, to help disabled people and those with long-term illness on incapacity benefits into work and training through the Government's Welfare to Work approach, at a cost of £195 million. In addition there are a range of existing employment programmes targeted at people with disabilities. They include the Supported Employment Programme, Access to Work and the Job Introduction Scheme. Last October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that a further £30 million would be spent over 3 years to expand these programmes. This will bring planned spending on specialist disability measures to some £570 million for the next three years.

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce funding for higher education in England for year three of the Comprehensive Spending Review settlement 2001–02. [87360]

Mr. Mudie: The guidance to the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) on 8 December 1998 announced £250 million for investment in capital and research in 2001–02, and told the Council to plan on the basis that funds would be made available in that year to sustain quality and standards, and to provide for continuing growth in student numbers.

The Department will provide further details of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review for 2001–02 in due course.

Drugs Education

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools had policies on drug education in line with his Department's guidance at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [87440]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The latest figures, which are provided by Ofsted following a survey in 1997, show that 86 per cent. of secondary schools and 61 per cent. of primary schools have drug education policies. We strongly encourage those schools who have not developed an agreed policy to join those who have already taken that step. Our drug education good practice guidance, issued in November last year, provides important advice on the value of schools developing such policies and guidance on the key components for those policies.

Technology College Status

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the next round of applications for technology college status is to be invited; and what advice and guidance is to be offered to previous unsuccessful applicants to assist resubmission of their applications. [87630]

Ms Estelle Morris: The closing date for the next round of applications for Technology College status is Friday, 8 October 1999. A new guidance document for schools wishing to apply in the autumn competition will be available to schools in July. Schools unsuccessful in the March competition will be sent the guidance automatically. These schools receive feedback on the main reasons why they were not approved and a wide range of advice and support is available to applicant schools from the Technology Colleges Trust which is grant aided by the DfEE.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects the Further Education Funding Council to inform colleges of the amount of access funds to be made available for students for 1999–2000. [87140]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 18 June 1999]: The Further Education Funding Council plan to issue their Access Funds circular, including allocations to colleges, later this month.

Science Teaching

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to raise standards of teaching in the sciences (a) in schools and (b) in higher education establishments. [87366]

Ms Estelle Morris: The initial teacher training National Curriculum for primary and secondary science, which comes into effect this September, will ensure that all newly qualified teachers are fully prepared to teach science. We are also encouraging more specialist science graduates to apply for teaching through the £5,000 financial incentive announced last October.

The Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education is testing new procedures for assessing quality and safeguarding the standards of all higher education qualifications, including science qualifications. The new Institute for Learning and Teaching will accredit training programmes for higher education teachers, including science teachers.

Academic Salaries Review

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to publish the Bett review on academic salaries. [87841]

Mr. Mudie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) on 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 316.

Family Responsibilities (Employment)

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the benefits to the economy of policies which allow employment to be combined with family responsibilities. [86503]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 17 June 1999]: Family-friendly policies can help to boost the economy by increasing the number of skilled people in the labour market, and increasing the numbers returning to education and training. These policies can enhance financial independence—especially for women—both immediately as they benefit from a higher standard of living, and after retirement as a result of building up a better pension entitlement. And these policies can help increase the sustainable level of employment, and improving productivity, leading to an increase in overall living standards.

Islington Education Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what monitoring he is undertaking of the Islington Education Service; and what meetings he has held with representatives of the education service; [87817]

(2) what is the expenditure by his Department on the contracting out of part of Islington Education Service. [87819]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department and Islington Local Education Authority have commissioned PricewaterhouseCoopers to advise on contracting out of most or all services to Islington schools and their pupils, to draw up specifications for such services and to advise on the suitability of interim arrangements. Officials are in regular contact with the authority's officers, and I met head teachers in Islington on 16 June. The Department will contribute towards the cost of PricewaterhouseCoopers' consultancy but has made no payments to date.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much (a) revenue support and (b) capital allocation was provided to Islington Education Service for education up to the age of 16 years in each of the past five years. [87815]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table gives, for each financial year from 1995–96 to 1999–2000, the amounts allocated to the Islington local education authority for revenue support and for capital.

Islington revenue and capital funding

£ million

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Education SSA	80.442	81.095	81.230	87.980	91.713
of which
Nursery/Primary/Secondary	70.883	72.211	73.145	80.035	84.257
GEST/Standards fund	1.143	1.375	1.589	2.473	6.274
Nursery education grant	—	—	2.076	0.343	—
Capital
ACG/SCA/VA grant	—	0.250	0.531	0.588	1.210
NDS capital	—	—	0.296	1.174	0.656
Energy efficiency	—	—	—	0.049	—
Total capital	0.000	0.250	0.827	1.811	1.866

Note:

1997–98 figures were reduced by £2.068m in respect of nursery voucher scheme.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998 indicating the dates and locations, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials in each case. [87430]

Mr. Chris Smith: I met the Irish Culture Minister, Sile de Valera, on 17 June 1999 at my office—at the Department. She was accompanied by Tadhg O hEalaithe, Secretary General to the Department for the Arts, Heritage, Gaeltacht and the Islands.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting met Seamus Brennan TD, Government Chief Whip and Minister of State at the Taoiseach's office, on Monday 5 October 1998, again at the Department. Mr. Brennan was accompanied by Richard Holland from that office.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport met Chris Flood, the Irish Junior Minister for Sport, at the Annual Dinner of London GAA (Gaelic Athletic Association) at the Emerald Rooms at the Emerald Gaelic Grounds, West End Road, Ruislip on 13 February 1999, and Dr. James McDaid, the Irish Minister for Sport, at the Sports Industry Exhibition, Earls Court on 24 February 1999. My hon. Friend met Dr. McDaid again at the EU Sports Ministers conference in Paderborn on 31 May 1999.

Millennium Dome (Voluntary Work)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures will be taken to enable voluntary organisations to promote their activities within the Dome. [86932]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company receives many requests from a very large number of different organisations concerning events in the Dome. It is not possible for the company to accede to all these requests, but it is considering how some voluntary organisations might be incorporated during the millennium.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps will be taken to promote the issue of volunteering within the Dome. [86933]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company is finalising details of a National Programme initiative that addresses issues of volunteering in the broad context of good citizenship. An announcement will be made in due course.

Lost Theatre

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with Hammersmith and Fulham Council regarding the future of the Lost Theatre; and if he will make a statement. [87812]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have not discussed the future of the Lost Theatre with representatives from the London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham.

BBC

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 88, if he will place in the Library copies of the external audit reports on BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources for the years 1997–98 and 1998–99. [87823]

Janet Anderson: The 1998–99 Annual Reports of BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The Reports will include opinions by the external auditors on the financial statements and on corporate governance matters. Publication of the full external audit reports on BBC Worldwide and BBC Resources is a matter for the BBC.

BBC Worldwide's 1997–98 Annual Report was laid before Parliament on 14 July 1998. The 1998–99 Annual Report is the first for BBC Resources.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of the demands of relief aid in Kosovo and Albania upon other areas of development support. [83277]

Clare Short: The Government have recently announced a further commitment of up to £50 million for humanitarian aid to Kosovo bringing the total commitment to £90 million. This is in addition to our share of EU assistance.

The commitment for Kosovo, and for any other major humanitarian emergencies later in the financial year, will be found from the Department for International Development's Contingency Reserve and from the Government's Central Reserve.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what resources, additional to existing commitments, will be made available by the United Kingdom for mine clearance and education about mines in Kosovo. [87375]

Clare Short: Mines are a serious problem in Kosovo and could prove a severe constraint to refugee return. Twenty or more incidents have been reported in the first few days alone—resulting in several casualties.

As part of the Government's recently announced package of £50 million for humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Kosovo, £5 million has been allocated for mine clearance and mine awareness education. We have provided grants and practical assistance for UN Mines Advisory Service (co-ordination and oversight), Halo Trust (region wide survey), and clearance teams from Mines Action Group.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what programmes have been curtailed as a result of the £50 million extra money for Kosovo. [87590]

Clare Short: No programmes have been curtailed. The £85 million of the £90 million commitment to the needs of Kosovar refugees has been funded from the Department for International Development contingency reserve and the Government central reserve. The remaining £5 million was already committed to the area.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has for giving aid to those households in Macedonia and Albania which are currently housing Kosovan Albanian refugees. [87401]

Clare Short: Our humanitarian assistance during the Kosovo crisis has included support for communities and families in the region who are hosting refugees in their own homes, with priority given to the poorest and most vulnerable.

DFID is helping to fund a range of international organisations and NGOs. We have given £2.5 million to the Red Cross movement, whose work includes provision of support to host families. In Albania, we are funding Children's Aid Direct and Catholic Relief Services to provide education for both refugees and the local Albanian population. In Macedonia, DFID is funding CARE to provide assistance for vulnerable people, mainly elderly and handicapped, among both refugees and host families. Although many refugees are now returning to Kosovo, I have made it clear that DFID will continue to honour the commitments it has made to the local communities and the refugees that remain in Albania and Macedonia.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by her Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87191]

Clare Short: We have proposed no legislation during the current session. But we make strong efforts to ensure that our international development work priorities women's interests and views.

Written Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to her Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87323]

Clare Short: Sixty-two parliamentary questions have been tabled to my Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April 1999. 71 per cent. received a substantive response on that day.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the current percentage of GDP spent on overseas aid; and if she will make a statement. [87422]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to my written answer on 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 413, for details.

Genetically Modified Terminator Seeds

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of genetically modified terminator seeds in Third World countries; and if she will make a statement. [87567]

Clare Short: We are commissioning a study to assess the potential impacts on developing countries of so-called "terminator" gene technologies. The study will examine the potential effects which such technology can have on economic, social and environmental aspects of farming systems important to poor people. We recently published a Background Briefing on genetically modified organisms and developing countries. Copies are in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87190]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office consults regularly with a wide range of organisations on both proposed changes to legislation and the development of policy. It also issues public consultation documents on which both organisations and individuals are invited to comment. One such document is "Supporting Families" and, on 8 June, I published details of the responses to it.

Europol/Interpol Co-operation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on promoting co-operation between Europol and Interpol; and if he will make a statement. [87449]

Kate Hoey: Once Europol takes up the full range of activities, we hope it will be able to quickly establish formal co-operation arrangements with non European Union members and bodies such as Interpol as outlined in Article 42 of the Europol Convention. We are encouraging close co-operation between the two organisations, with both of whom the United Kingdom has good working relations.

Conventions on Refugees

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to propose changes to the international conventions on refugees; and if he will make a statement. [87381]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have no present plans to propose changes to the main international instruments on refugees. We are strongly committed to the principle of protection for those genuinely fearing persecution. In the longer term, it will be necessary to ensure that the totality of international law and agreements continues to support this principle effectively, taking account of the many developments since the Geneva Convention of 1951, in particular the growing problem of false claims for protection being used to circumvent legitimate controls on immigration.

Drugs (Repeat Offending)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of repeat offending among drug-misusing offenders; and if he will make a statement. [87439]

Mr. George Howarth: The most recently available relevant information relates to reconvictions in samples of prisoners discharged from prison in 1995 and of offenders commencing community penalties in 1995.

Reconviction rates for offenders sentenced for drugs offences[1] within two years for prisoners discharged from custody in 1995 or commencing community penalties[2] in 1995

	Original disposal
	Custody	Community penalties[2]
Total sampled	3,377	1,556
Percentage reconvicted[3]	36	50
Percentage reconvicted for any drugs offence[1]	17	29

[1] All indictable drug related offences. The offence categorisation is based on the most recent offence recorded on the Offenders Index prior to discharge from prison or commencement of a community penalty.
[2] Combination orders, community service and probation. Figures relate to offenders sentenced in the first quarter of the year.
[3] All standard list offences, this includes all indictable offences and some of the more serious summary offences.

The source of this information on reconvictions is the Home Office Offenders Index. This does not contain information on cautioning of offenders. It should be borne in mind that this information relates to reconviction rather than reoffending and is restricted to offenders who have been sentenced to custody or a community penalty. It also relates to offenders convicted for drugs related offences, rather than offenders who commit other forms of crime to pay for drugs.

Base line levels of repeat offending among drug misusing offenders are currently being established. The targets set recently by the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator include reducing levels of such offending by 50 per cent. by 2008 and 25 per cent. by 2005.

Prostitute Cards

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consultations on the placing of cards in telephone boxes by prostitutes. [87595]

Mr. Boateng: We have asked for comments on our consultation paper "New Measures to Control Prostitutes Cards in Phone Boxes" by 18 August 1999.

Prisoner Employment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners held in each of the London prisons were employed within the prison on a daily basis as at 1 June. [87453]

Mr. George Howarth: The information my hon. Friend requested is contained in the table.

Name of prison establishment	Number of prisoners employed as at 1 June 1999
Belmarsh	[1]580
Brixton	214
Holloway	414
Pentonville	[2]335
Wandsworth	854
Wormwood Scrubs	443

[1] No prisoners actually attended for work on 1 June as a result of lightning striking, although 580 were scheduled to attend and normally did so before and after this interruption.
[2] 472 prisoners were normally employed at Pentonville around this time. There was reduced work on 1 June following the bank holiday.

Cycling Convictions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted of riding a bicycle without lights in each of the last three years. [87452]

Mr. Boateng: Available information for the years 1995 to 1997 is given in the table. 1998 data will become available later this summer.

Number of persons cautioned or convicted for pedal cycle lighting and reflector offences[1], England and Wales, 1995–97

Year	Disposal
	Cautioned	Convicted
1995	339	293
1996	379	333
1997	406	377

[1] Offences under Road Traffic Act 1988 s81 and Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1989

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend his investigation into police integrity to include Cleveland Police Force; and if he will make a statement. [87572]

Mr. Boateng: We are not conducting an investigation into police integrity. However, I was pleased to launch Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary's (HMIC) report on police integrity on 14 June. That report dealt with integrity in its widest sense, encompassing issues such as fairness, probity, behaviour and equal treatment. Its 11 recommendations, in areas such as training, recruitment, vetting, management and financial accounting, are relevant to all forces including Cleveland.

The practical guidance offered by the HMIC report gives us a framework in which chief officers can tackle integrity problems and ensure corrupt and unacceptable practices are rooted out.

Paedophiles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions apply to the distribution of information between departmental Agencies on paedophiles about to be released back into communities. [87413]

Mr. George Howarth: Section 115 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 put beyond doubt the power of any person to disclose information, where necessary or expedient for any provision of the Act, to a chief officer of police, a police authority, local authorities, probation service or health authority. Such disclosure is, however, not a duty and must take account of the common law duty of confidence and statutory restrictions on disclosure, including date protection legislation.

Last year, the Home Office and the Data Protection Registrar issued a joint statement on information sharing under the Act.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role is played by (a) local area child protection committees, (b) local authority social services, (c) the Probation Service, (d) the Prison Service, (e) Customs and Excise, (f) the NSPCC and (g) the Police in (i) sharing of information on and (ii) measures taken against predatory paedophiles. [87497]

Mr. George Howarth: Multi-agency co-operation is essential for the proper assessment and management of the risk that sex offenders pose in the community, the working of area child protection committees and risk assessment panels and the setting up of written protocols for protecting the public. The composition of these bodies can be agreed locally and may include a wide range of organisations.

Section 115 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 gives an explicit power to disclose information for the purposes of the Act, and we are currently working with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), the Association of Chief Officers of Probation (ACOP) and others to produce guidance on the disclosure of information about sex offenders who might pose a risk to children and others.

Released sex offenders are supervised by the probation service within a national framework. Such offenders may also be monitored by the police. The Crime and Disorder Act empowers courts to impose an extended period of supervision and provides for a sex offender order where the present conduct of a released sex offender gives rise to concern.

Drug Treatment Programmes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people, including prisoners, participated in publicly funded drug treatment programmes in the latest period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [87442]

(2) how many people in drug treatment programmes reported (i) injecting drugs and (ii) sharing needles in the latest period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [87441]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

In the six month period ending 31 March 1998, 23,916 people were reported to the Regional Drug Misuse Databases in England as presenting for treatment at drug misuse agencies in the community. It is not possible to give precise figures for only those participating in publicly funded drug treatment programmes. However, it is estimated that around two thirds of those reported as presenting for treatment attended statutory services; most of the remainder attended voluntary services, although a small number attended private agencies.

Of those 23,916 people, 46 per cent. of drug users whose injecting status was known had injected in the previous four weeks. Of those who had injected in the previous four weeks, 15 per cent. of drug users whose sharing status was known had shared injecting equipment in the previous four weeks.

No information is yet available centrally on prisoners participating in drug treatment programmes. A monitoring system to record such information is being established as part of the Prison Service's implementation of its Drugs Strategy.

The questions relate to the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's First Annual Report and National Plan. A statement was made by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office in the House on 25 May 1999, Official Report, 161–63. New research is to be commissioned to establish more robust baselines this year.

Hillgrove Farm Cattery

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the treatment of cats at Hillgrove Farm, Oxfordshire. [87673]

Mr. George Howarth: I have received a number of letters via hon. Members and directly from members of the public; I have received a petition calling for the establishment to be closed; and I have answered a number of questions in this House on this subject.

The scientific community has also made its concerns known to me with regard to:

(i) the damage that could be caused to important medical and veterinary research should the establishment close; and

(ii) the increased welfare costs to cats if they have to be obtained from overseas sources.

I understand that representatives of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have visited the establishment, have seen the animals and have reviewed copies of some of the breeding records sent to them by members of the public. They have not made any formal representations to me on this issue.

Animal Procedures Committee

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the latest annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee. [88129]

Mr. George Howarth: I have placed the committee's annual report for 1998 in the Library today. I am grateful to the committee for its valuable work over the year and welcome this latest report. I wish the committee well in tackling the continuing agenda of work which the report identifies.

Communications (Interception)

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his proposals for updating the legislation on interception of communications. [88130]

Mr. Straw: I announced last September that I had put in hand a comprehensive review of the interception regime and that a consultation document would be published in due course. The review is now complete and I am today publishing a consultation paper "Interception of Communications in the United Kingdom" in which our proposals are laid out in detail. A copy has been placed in the Library (copies are available in the Vote Office).

The extraordinary pace of change in the communications industry, particularly in the last decade, has revolutionised communications and brought benefits to us all. This new technology, however, brings new opportunities for criminals and terrorists, which they have been quick to exploit. The law has not kept pace with these developments. We need to bring our interception law up-to date to ensure the continued success of this essential investigative tool.

There are also some areas in which we need to improve the protection offered to the individual. There is currently no basis in law, for example, for the interception of communications on private telephone networks. We intend to put such interception on a statutory footing for the first time. This will ensure that the privacy of those who use these networks is respected, and that they have a means of redress if their communications are intercepted unlawfully.

The Government are committed to building a safe, just and tolerant society. In the field of interception, there is a difficult balance to be struck. I believe our proposals strike the right balance and will be grateful for views on any of the proposals in the consultation paper.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Portadown)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which units of (a) the Army and (b) the Royal Irish Regiment were available for call out by Portadown RUC Sub-Division to assist with security problems between 11 p.m. on Saturday 26 April 1997 and 4 a.m. on Sunday 27 April 1997. [85500]

Mr. Ingram: Soldiers from three Royal Irish and one Argyll and Southern Highlanders would have been the most immediately available for call out by Portadown RUC Sub-Division during the period in question. Military assistance was not requested, however, as sufficient police resources were available.

Robert Hamill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of the Royal Ulster Constabulary investigation into the murder of Robert Hamill. [86272]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 June 1999]: The RUC interviewed a number of people suspected of being involved in the murder of Robert Hamill. Although charges against five were subsequently withdrawn at the direction of the DPP, a sixth man was convicted of affray and sentenced to four years' imprisonment. The RUC have advised that all available lines of inquiry have been pursued fully. Whilst the investigation remains open, further progress is dependent upon new information or evidence coming to light.

Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present role of the Chief Constable of Kent Constabulary in the police investigation into the murder of Rosemary Nelson. [86175]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 June 1999]: The Chief Constable of Kent continues to provide advice, when requested by Deputy Chief Constable Colin Port, who is directing and controlling the investigation. Mr. Port speaks to him on a regular basis.

Internet Public Service Website

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the submissions to the Patten Commission that have been posted on the internet public service website for press releases. [87484]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 June 1999]: Publication of submissions to the independent Commission on Policing on the internet or otherwise is a matter for it and those making the submissions.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she will take to encourage a public debate on the future of policing in Northern Ireland by means of the NIO internet public service website. [87485]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 June 1999]: The independent Commission on Policing has been established under the Good Friday Agreement

> "to make recommendations for future policing arrangements in Northern Ireland including means of encouraging widespread community support".

The Commission has consulted widely and has its own website at: www.belfast.org.uk

The e-mail address is: PolComm B @ belfast.org.uk

The Commission's report will be made available on the internet.

Higher Education Places

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide details of the allocation to each college of further and higher education of the 600 additional full-time higher education places to be made available over the next two years. [87886]

Mr. McFall: The additional 600 full-time higher education places over the next two academic years have been allocated to further education colleges as follows:

College	1999–2000	2000–01	Total
Belfast Institute of F&HE	62	62	124
North West Institute of F&HE	26	26	52
North Down and Ards Institute of F&HE	33	33	66
Lisburn Institute of F&HE	13	13	26
Upper Bann Institute of F&HE	22	22	44
Newry and Kilkeel Institute of F&HE	48	48	96

College	1999–2000	2000–01	Total
North East Institute of F&HE	45	45	90
East Antrim Institute of F&HE	14	14	28
Fermanagh College of F&HE	12	12	24
NI Hotel and Catering College	13	13	26
East Down Institute of F&HE	12	12	24
Total	300	300	600

Omagh Bombing

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been charged with offences in connection with the bomb explosion in Omagh, County Tyrone on 15 August 1998. [87891]

Mr. Ingram: On 24 February, Colm Murphy was charged in the Republic of Ireland with membership of an illegal organisation and with conspiracy to cause an explosion between 13–16 August 1998. The RUC and Garda Siochana continue to co-operate fully in their painstaking investigations. I pay personal tribute to both police services for their complete dedication and tenacity in this investigation.

Ministerial Visits (RUC)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the visits she has made to (a) RUC Headquarters and (b) RUC stations since she took office as Secretary of State stating the duration of each such visit; and if she will provide the same information in respect of each of the Ministers in her Department. [87597]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is as follows:

(a) RUC Headquarters:

Private office have details of two visits to RUC Headquarters; one by Mr. Ingram on 12 May 1997 which was scheduled to last 1 hour and one by Mr. Murphy which took place on 8 January 1998, lasting one hour.

(b) RUC Stations visited

Station	Date	Duration
Secretary of State
Strand Road	9 May 1997	30 mins
Lurgan	17 June	30 mins
Newtownabbey	26 September 1997	40 mins
Dungannon	8 October 1997	30 mins
Musgrave Street, Belfast	24 October 1997	30 mins
Balleymoney	7 November 1997	30 mins
Enniskillen	13 February 1998	30 mins
Waterside	13 March 1998	30 mins
Strand Road	12 May 1998	45 mins
Antrim	18 May 1998	30 mins
Mahon Road	10 July 1998	30 mins
Coleraine	10 February 1999	1 hr
Woodbourne	18 May 1999	40 mins
Cookstown	24 May 1999	40 mins
PRRT Maryfield	7 June 1999	30 mins
Mr. Ingram
Shantallow	6 June 1997	45 mins
Edward Street, Portadown	25 June 1997	2 hrs 20 mins
Garnerville	3 July 1997	3 hrs
Lisburn Road, Belfast	22 September 1997	50 mins
Magherafelt	20 November 1997	40 mins
Castlereagh Holding Centre	26 January 1998	1 hr 30 mins
Bangor	9 March 1998	15 mins
Aughnacloy	27 April 1998	Joint Visit
Ballygawley	27 April 1998	1 hr 30 mins
Coleraine	11 May 1998	2 hrs
Armagh	20 May 1998	3 hrs
Newtownards	26 May 1998	45 mins

(b) RUC Stations visited

Station	Date	Duration
Downpatrick	26 May 1998	30 mins
Hillsborough	7 November 1998	15 mins
Castlecourt Post	16 December 1998	30 mins
Omagh	8 March 1999	1 hr 15 mins
Strandtown	19 May 1999	1 hr
Newcastle	17 June 1999	45 mins
Downpatrick	17 June 1999	40 mins
Mr. Murphy
Oldpark	9 January 1998	20 mins
Ballymena	30 April 1998	30 mins
Omagh	21 May 1998	30 mins
Tennent Street, Antrim Road	3 June 1999	Joint visit 1 hr 25 mins

Mr. McFall—Nil return

Lord Dubs—Nil return.

It should be noted that the durations shown have been taken from the programme schedules arranged prior to each visit, as opposed to exact times on the day (which are not readily available). Visits of this kind regularly exceed the arranged times.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

16. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy that Kosovo should remain a part of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [86589]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), column 917.

Russia (Anti-semitism)

20. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on anti-semitism in Russia. [86593]

Ms Quin: We continue to be concerned at anti-semitic incidents in Russia. But it is the anti-semitic comments by Duma deputies Makashov and Ilyukhin last year which caused outrage in Russia and beyond. At our instigation the EU Presidency made representations to the Russian authorities on this subject in January and my right hon. Friend raised the issue with the Russians during his visit to Russia in March. We remain ready to take further action if necessary, including in co-ordination with our EU partners.

Qualified Majority Voting

21. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek to extend the scope of qualified majority voting in the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement. [86594]

Ms Quin: The possible extension of qualified majority voting will be one of the subjects covered in the Inter-Governmental Conference starting in early 2000. We will look at options on a case by case basis. Where it makes practical sense to extend QMV, we will support it. But where key national interests need to be protected, such as on border controls, Treaty change, taxation, defence and social security, we will insist on retaining unanimity.

Middle East Peace Process

22. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the middle east peace process. [86597]

30. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for the middle east peace process. [86606]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon), column 913.

Entry Clearance Officers (Training)

23. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training is given to entry clearance officers on issues relating to the sexuality of applicants for visas. [86598]

Mr. Hoon: One of the main objectives of the initial three-week training course for Entry Clearance Officers is to ensure that they treat all applicants with courtesy and respect, and without any form of discrimination or prejudice. This course includes guidance on the handling of Settlement applications under the same-sex concession.

Kosovo

24. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kosovo. [86599]

Mr. Robin Cook: KFOR initial deployments are complete. There are now about 19,000 KFOR forces in Kosovo. The Serbs have complied with the Military Technical Agreement and all Yugoslav and Serb forces have now withdrawn from Kosovo. Sergio Vieira de Mello, the UN Interim Special Representative in Kosovo, is now in Pristina and is developing arrangements for the interim civilian administration. According to UNHCR, 73,500 refugees returned to Kosovo last week from Albania and Macedonia.

However, there is still much to be done to ensure a secure environment in Kosovo and to help returning refugees and internally displaced people to rebuild their lives. Britain will continue to take a leading role in these efforts.

28. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the US Secretary of State to discuss developments in Kosovo. [86604]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is and will remain in very regular contact with the US Secretary of State, Mrs. Madeleine Albright, about Kosovo.

29. Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for refugees from Kosovo being able to return to their homes. [86605]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: An estimated 140,000 refugees have returned spontaneously to Kosovo from Albania and Macedonia to date and the flow of refugees back to Kosovo continues. The UNHCR will shortly begin a programme of organised returns, once they are sure that the areas to which the refugees are returning are safe. Her Majesty's Government will continue to work closely with the relief agencies to assist the return process.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to protect the historic Serb religious and cultural sites in Kosovo. [87254]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UN Security Council Resolution 1244 provides that after the withdrawal of Yugoslav and Serb forces from Kosovo, an agreed number of Yugoslav and Serb military and police personnel will be permitted to return to Kosovo to perform certain functions. These functions include maintaining a presence at Serb historic, religious and cultural sites.

More generally, KFOR has been tasked with establishing a secure environment throughout Kosovo.

Iran

25. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit Iran to discuss the upgrading of diplomatic relations. [86601]

Mr. Hoon: There are no immediate plans for the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to visit Iran.

Indonesia

26. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to assist progress towards democracy in Indonesia; and if he will make a statement. [86602]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham), column 917.

Economic Reconstruction (Balkans)

27. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his plans for economic reconstruction in the Balkans. [86603]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Her Majesty's Government are actively pursuing, with partners, a range of initiatives to promote stabilisation and prosperity in south eastern Europe. The offer of new Stabilisation and Association Agreements for the countries of the region, once they meet the conditions, will help accelerate the EU integration process and make it more inclusive.

We actively supported the EU presidency initiative for a Stability Pact for south-east Europe, which was launched on 10 June and will provide a new form of co-operation, including on reconstruction issues. We warmly welcome current EU and World Bank efforts to assess the reconstruction needs in Kosovo and the impact of the crisis on the neighbouring region. We will continue to play our part in all efforts designed to overcome the consequences of the crisis and bring the countries of the region into the European mainstream.

European Common Foreign and Security Policy

31. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European counterparts about the future development of common foreign and security policy. [86607]

Ms Quin: I have regular meetings with my European counterparts, at which the future development of the Common Foreign and Security Policy has been a frequent topic of discussion.

European Union (Reform)

32. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of the European Commission to discuss the reform of European Union institutions. [86608]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed institutional reform with Mr. Prodi when he presented his plans for reform of the Commission to the Cologne European Council on 3–4 June. Like us, Mr. Prodi sees a need to overhaul financial and personnel management within the Commission. We shall work with him to help him achieve his plans.

Kashmir

33. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [86609]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge), column 920.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will assess the impact on the territorial integrity of (a) Pakistan and (b) India of Kashmir becoming an independent state; and if he will make a statement. [87670]

Mr. Hoon: Such an exercise would not be helpful. It is for India and Pakistan to find a solution to this issue. Any lasting solution must involve, and reflect the views of, the people of Kashmir.

West Bank (Human Rights)

34. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the latest human rights situation in the occupied territories of the west bank. [86611]

Mr. Hoon: We follow closely the human rights situation in the Occupied Territories. We have repeatedly expressed our concern to the Israeli Government about settlement activity, house demolitions and land confiscation. These activities are in breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention, an obstacle to peace and worsen the climate for final status negotiations.

We have also supported a project to promote human rights within the Palestinian community through the Palestinian Rights Programme, which has been funded by the FCO Human Rights Project Fund and managed by the British Council.

European Parliaments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts on improving communication between the national parliaments of Europe. [86578]

Ms Quin: The Government believe the national Parliaments have a crucial role to play in giving the European Union legitimacy, and in ensuring that Europe's agenda is set by concerns of Europe's citizens. Improving communications between the national Parliaments will help them to play that role more effectively.

The Amsterdam Treaty has enhanced their role. We welcome the new six-week minimum scrutiny period for EU legislation, and for a new consultative role for COSAC. These steps will complement the steps we have taken to improve our own scrutiny system.

In particular, we have extended the scheme for hon. Members to visit EU institutions to include visits to the national Parliaments of our European partners.

These improved links will help Westminster's voice be heard more clearly in Europe.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 April 1999, Official Report, column 405, on special advisers, if he will give the total travel cost of each occasion when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997 and the place visited. [82413]

Mr. Robin Cook: For the period 2 May 1997 to 24 April 1999, special advisers in my Department have travelled overseas in an official capacity on 31 occasions. The total cost of travel amounted to £28,475. On most of these visits, special advisers, accompanying Ministers, travelled aboard charter RAF flights at no extra cost to Her Majesty's Government.

All travel complied with the requirements of the ministerial code and the Civil Service Management code.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Government Ministers have visited Gibraltar since May 1997. [87290]

Ms Quin: Since May 1997, the following Government Ministers have visited Gibraltar: Mr. Doug Henderson, the then Minister for Europe, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (7–8 October 1997); Mr. John Spellar, Under-Secretary of State for Defence (16–17 October 1997).

I am planning to visit Gibraltar on 22–23 July. My visit was originally planned for 13–14 May, but was postponed following the tragic death of the right hon. Derek Fatchett MP.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed issues concerning Gibraltar and Spain with the Spanish Government; and if he will list the issues discussed. [87287]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend has regular contact with the Spanish Foreign Minister. We last discussed such issues on 22 March in the margins of the General Affairs Council and 24–25 March in the margins of the Berlin European Council. We covered border delays, allegations of criminality, and preparations for the UK/Spain summit.

EC Research Projects

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library project summaries on European Communities research contracts (a) SOE1-CT95–1005, (b) SOE2-CT95–3004, (c) SOE2-CT95–3009, (d) SOE2-CT96–3006, (e) SOE2-CT97–3042, (f) SOE2-CT97–3045, (g) SOE2-CT97–3048, (h) SOE2-CT97–3050, (i) SOE2-CT97–3059 and (j) SOE2-CT97–3060, indicating their sponsoring DGs in each case and the reason for the project's commissioning; how many research projects are currently funded by the Communities; and if he will make a statement. [87380]

Ms Quin: The project reference numbers provided are not familiar. If the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) would care to provide further details, I will endeavour to answer his question in full.

Strategic Export Controls

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish the 1998 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. [87448]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will publish the Report as soon as possible.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to assist in measures to reduce the level of corruption in Zimbabwe. [87699]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Department for International Development, through its projects with the Zimbabwe Republic Police, the Ministry of Local Government and the Privatisation Agency, is assisting in measures to combat corruption in Zimbabwe; and will continue to support initiatives aimed at improving accountability and tackling corruption.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government support and advice is provided to police forces in Zimbabwe to assist and encourage them to (i) police by consent and (ii) maintain a politically neutral position. [87767]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Under a project funded by the Department for International Development, the Zimbabwe Republic Police receive support and advice from British police forces on many issues, to help them protect individual rights and improve public confidence in police services.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the level of political violence in Zimbabwe; what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [87700]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I receive regular reports of political developments in Zimbabwe from our High Commission in Harare. We made representations to the Government of Zimbabwe over the illegal arrest and torture of two newspaper journalists in January 1999. I raised our concerns about human rights with President Mugabe when he visited London in December 1998 and when I visited Harare in February 1999.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government support is provided to the Zimbabwean human rights organisation ZimRights. [87698]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government supported an organisational/development conference for ZimRights in December 1997. The Westminster Foundation for Democracy, which is largely funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, is currently supporting a three-year ZimRights education programme for domestic and commercial farm workers.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports have been received from the EU-funded election monitoring programme in Zimbabwe (a) in general and (b) on the preparations for this year's urban elections; and if he will make a statement. [87697]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The EU is funding an election monitoring training programme in Zimbabwe, run by the non-governmental organisation, ZimRights. They started work in May 1999. The main objective is to build a team of independent national election monitors to be in place for the 2000 General Election and the 2002 Presidential Election. The team will also monitor by-elections and local council elections. They have not produced any reports yet.

FCO Establishment (Morwenstow)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of his Department's establishment at Morwenstow, Cornwall. [87601]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Composite Signals Organisation Station at Morwenstow is part of GCHQ. It is longstanding policy not to provide details about the operations of the security and intelligence services.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit the Falkland Islands to discuss the recent talks with Argentinian officials. [86579]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I visited the Falklands in April last year and have made no plans for a further visit. British and Argentine delegations met in London on 25–27 May to discuss South Atlantic issues. Talks were held on issues such as air links, Argentine access to the Falklands, and our common interest in combating illegal fishing.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases involving claims for jobseeker's allowance in the Lancaster and South Cumbria district Regulation 13(b) of the Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations 1996 was applied. [85490]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Miss Geraldine Smith, dated 17 June 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Minister of State has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question concerning the number of cases involving claims for Jobseeker's Allowance in the Lancaster and South Cumbria district where the provisions of Regulation 13(4) of the Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations 1996 have been applied. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Employment Service. I am replying in his absence.

I regret that the information you have requested is not available. Details of decisions given by Employment Service Adjudication Officers on labour market questions are recorded in a quarterly summary—the 'Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions', a copy of which is held in the Library. The statistics include the number of decisions made in respect of jobseekers who restrict their availability to less than 40 hours a week. Unfortunately, decisions where the only consideration was whether the provisions of regulation 13(4) applied are not recorded separately. Nor are figures separately recorded for individual Employment Service Districts.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional cost to public funds of increasing the level of weekly earnings which are defined as gainful employment for the purpose of claiming invalid care allowance to (a) £55, (b) £60, (c) £65, (d) £70, (e) £75 and (f) £100. [86850]

Mr. Bayley: It is not possible to cost any of these measures as sufficiently accurate data are not available.

Housing Benefit (South-West)

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much housing benefit was paid for the tenants of housing associations, local housing companies and other registered social landlords living in the South West in 1998–99. [87614]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The estimated Housing Benefit paid for tenants of housing associations for the South West area in 1997–98 is £155 million.

Note:

The data used refer to Housing Association tenants only but may include data for local housing companies and other registered social landlords.

Sources:

1. Housing Benefit Management Information Systems Data (May 1997 and May 1998)
2. Local Authorities' final subsidy claims (1997–98).

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the income levels are of those current incapacity benefit recipients who first made their claim after April 1995 and who have been excluded from the transitional protection provided to former invalidity benefit claimants. [87587]

Mr. Bayley: When Incapacity Benefit was introduced transitional arrangements allowed those already in receipt of Invalidity Benefit to continue to receive their previous rate of benefit. This is standard procedure following a major change in Social Security legislation.

It is not possible to provide figures on income levels just for Incapacity Benefit recipients whose claims began after April 1995. Such information as is available is in the table.

The number and percentage of all Incapacity Benefit recipients (including those formerly on Invalidity Benefit) in each quintile of the income distribution

Income quintile	Number in quintile (BHC)	Percentage in quintile (BHC)	Number in quintile (AHC)	Percentage in quintile (AHC)
Bottom	330,000	19	350,000	20
2	570,000	34	550,000	32
3	390,000	23	380,000	22
4	290,000	17	300,000	17
Top	130,000	8	150,000	9

Notes:

1. BHC = Income quintiles calculated before adjusting for housing costs. AHC = Income quintiles calculated after adjusting for housing costs.
2. Columns may not sum due to rounding.
3. These figures are estimates for the latest year available, which was the financial year 1996–97. The data has been derived from the Department of Social Security's Households Below Average Income dataset, which in turn is based upon the Family Resources Survey for the same period.
4. The income figures are based on household income, adjusted for household size and composition. This reflects the commonsense notion that a household of five adults will need a higher income than a person living alone in order to enjoy the same standard of living. The process of adjusting income in this way is known as equalisation and is needed in order to make sensible income comparisons between households. Each income quintile contains 20 per cent. of the population of Great Britain.
5. The equivalence scales make allowance for factors such as household size and the age of any children but not for any extra costs that people with disabilities may have. Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance, which are paid to help with the extra costs of disability are included as income in these estimates. Removing Attendance and Disability Living Allowance from income reduces the proportion of Incapacity Benefit recipients in the top half of the income distribution by about 5 or 6 percentage points.

Retirement Age

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to equalise the retirement age for men and women; and if he will make a statement. [87421]

Mr. Timms: The Pensions Act 1995 equalised State pension age for men and women from a future date. Women's State pension age will be increased gradually from 60 to 65 between the years 2010 and 2020. State pension age will be equalised at 65 for both men and women from 6 April 2020.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Appointments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office since 1 May 1997, how many (a) Grade One, (b) Grade Two and (c) Grade Three equivalent civil servants have been appointed; how many in each category came from (i) within the Civil Service and (ii) outside the Civil Service; and if the posts were advertised in media available outside the Civil Service. [87600]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Since 1 May 1997, 19 former Grade 1 and 54 former Grade 2 equivalent appointments have been made.

At Grade 1 six appointments were filled through open competition advertised in the press (two from outside the Civil Service and four from within). The other 13 appointments were made through internal arrangements.

At Grade 2 equivalent ten appointments were filled through open competition advertised in the press (four from outside the Civil Service and six from within). One appointment was made on secondment. The other 43 appointments were made through internal arrangements.

Figures are not held centrally for all appointments made at former Grade 3 level. However, 33 appointments at this level were filled through open competition advertised in the press. Twenty of the appointees came from outside the Civil Service and 13 from within.

Class A Drugs

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if he will estimate the current average age of first use of class A drugs; and if he will make a statement; [87436]

(2) what estimate he made of the number of 11 to 16-year-olds who use class A drugs; and how many reported so doing in the latest year for which figures are available. [87438]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There are no reliable figures at this time which relate to illegal drug use specifically for Class A drugs in this age group. We are commissioning new research to establish robust baselines this year.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of people under 25 years reported using (i) heroin, (ii) cocaine and (iii) any illegal drug in the last (a) month and (b) year for which figures are available. [87437]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There are no reliable figures at this time which relate to illegal drug use specifically among the under 25 age group. We are commissioning new research to establish more robust baselines this year.

The 1996 British Crime Survey (England and Wales) percentage figures for 16 to 19-year-olds and 20 to 24-year-olds who indicated they had taken these drugs are as shown.

	Heroin	Cocaine	Any Drug
Last Year
16–19	under 0.5	1	31
20–24	under 0.5	2	27
Last Month
16–19	0	under 0.5	19
20–24	under 0.5	under 0.5	18

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 23 June 1999

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what was the (a) volume and (b) value of tourism from (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the Republic of Ireland to the north-west region for each of the last five years for which information is available; [87624]

(2) what was the (a) volume and (b) value of tourism to Britain from (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the Republic of Ireland for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [87625]

Janet Anderson: Information on tourism by residents of Northern Ireland is provided by the annual United Kingdom Tourism Survey, which is designed to monitor domestic tourism within the UK involving one or more nights away from home. The following table shows estimates for the underlying trend in the volume and value of tourism from Northern Ireland to (a) North West Tourist Board area of England and (b) Great Britain as a whole for the 5 most recent years for which data are available.

Tourism (1+ nights) by residents of Northern Ireland

	To north-west England		To Great Britain as a whole
Year	Number of visitors	Expenditure (£ million)	Number of visitors	Expenditure (£ million)
1994	83,420	18.9	658,800	215.9
1995	104,640	22.2	762,300	181.4
1996	110,240	27.8	635,000	202.9
1997	83,440	25.2	587,840	205.1
1998	79,540	25.9	561,120	215.9

Note:
Figures are 3-year moving averages: eg the 1998 figure shown is the average of the survey results for 1996 to 1998
Source:
UKTS (National Tourist Boards)

Information on tourism trips from the Republic of Ireland to the UK as a whole is published annually in Travel Trends. Totals for 1993 to 1997 are as follows:

Tourism by residents of the Republic of Ireland to the UK

Year	Number of visits (thousand)	Expenditure (£ million)
1993	2,225	460
1994	2,491	545
1995	2,809	620
1996	3,169	705
1997	3,613	764

Source:
Travel Trends (Office for National Statistics)

Currently, no information is available from this source on the volume and value of tourism to specific areas within the UK from the Republic of Ireland. However, from April this year the International Passenger Survey has started to collect information on routes to and from the Republic of Ireland which will lead to more detailed information on the areas of the UK visited becoming available in the year 2000.

BBC

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the applications since 1 May 1997 made by the BBC for his prior approval under (a) Article 3(b), (b) Article 3(c) and (c) Article 3(u), giving in each case the date of the applications; and if the application was approved or rejected. [87592]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 18 June 1999]: The following applications have been made under these articles:

Article 3(b)

Carriage of the Parliamentary Channel on analogue cable. Application dated 14 April 1998; approval given by 18 May 1998.

Launch of the BBC Online service (phase one). Application dated 9 October 1997; approval given 10 November 1997.

BBC Online (on a permanent footing). Application dated 9 October 1998. Approval given 28 October 1998.

Article 3(c)

BBC Worldwide joint venture with Discovery Corporation (approval also granted under article 3(u)). Application dated 3 September 1997; approval given 6 March 1998.

Launch of BBC News 24 on analogue cable. Application dated 16 September 1997; approval given 9 October 1997.

Article 3(u)

BBC Worldwide joint venture with Tele Alliance Ltd. Application dated 22 October 1997; approval given 10 November 1997.

Establishment of BBC Resources Ltd. Application 30 January 1998; approval given 16 June 1998.

Incorporation of a new subsidiary company (Centre House Productions Ltd.) for the purposes of entering into sale and leaseback transactions. Application dated 11 September 1998; approval given 28 October 1998.

Establishment of the Pro-MPEG Forum. Application dated 16 September 1998, approval given 30 September 1998.

Setting up of a subsidiary company to enable BBC Knowledge to be launched on Digital Terrestrial Television Multiplex A. Application dated 7 April 1999; approval given 6 May 1999.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living in the London Borough of Wandsworth were on income support on 1 June. [87451]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 22 June 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of people living in the London Borough of Wandsworth on Income Support (IS) on 1st June.

This information is not available in the format requested, the Benefits Agency does not hold collate information by local authority boundary. However, a figure can be obtained by identifying the postcode of customers living in the area.

The number of IS claims from within the London Borough of Wandsworth is approximately 18,000. This represents the number of IS claims, not the total number of beneficiaries of those claims. It is rounded to the nearest thousand cases, and is subject to a degree of sampling error. The sample size was 5% of the IS live load, taken from the IS Statistics Quarterly Enquiries, November 1998.

I hope this is helpful.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed invalid care allowance in each of the last three years. [87612]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. I have therefore asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Goggins, dated 22 June 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many people claimed Invalid Care Allowance (ICA) in each of the last three years.

The total numbers of claims for ICA received during each of the financial years 1996/97, 97/98 and 98/99 are as follows:

1996/97: 165,092
1997/98: 162,130
1998/99: 152,283.

I hope this is helpful.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new claims for council tax benefit have been subject to the cap on properties above Band E since the new rules were introduced. [87813]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 22 June 1999]: Provisional data are expected to be available from late January 2000 on the number of cases affected by this restriction, based on information from the annual 1 per cent. sample of cases which were receiving Council Tax Benefit on 14 May 1999.

We are committed to monitoring the effects of these changes, in partnership with local authorities. Research is now under way, the findings of which will be published in due course.

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the poorest 20 per cent. of pensioners receive (a) a full basic pension and (b) a partial basic pension. [87982]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the form requested as there is no data source that includes information on both the amount of basic pension received and total income which would enable the poorest 20 per cent. of pensioners to be identified. Such information as is available is in the table.

The table provides a similar analysis based on total amount of State Retirement Pension received including additions such as additional pension (SERPS), graduated retirement benefit and increments.

State Retirement Pension receipt among the poorest 20 per cent. of pensioners in Great Britain in 1996–97

Gross weekly income from State Retirement Pension	Percentage
Poorest 20 per cent. of single pensioners
None	4
Less than £61.15	23
£61.15 or over	74
All	100
Poorest 20 per cent. of pensioner couples
None	1
Less than £97.75	16
£97.75 or over	83
All	100

Notes:

1. The State Retirement Pension consists of basic pension, graduated retirement benefit and additional pension (SERPS).
2. In 1996–97, £61.15 was equal to the level of the full basic pension for a single person; £97.75 was equal to the level of the full basic pension for one person plus adult dependant.
3. Gross weekly income from State Retirement Pension is measured in current (1996–97) prices.
4. Estimates should be treated with caution since results are based on survey respondents' identification of different elements of benefit income and therefore may be subject to misreporting.
5. The distribution of pensioners' incomes, used to identify the poorest 20 per cent. is calculated using unequivalised net income before housing costs. The distribution is calculated separately for single pensioners and pensioner couples.
6. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 1 per cent. although they are not necessarily accurate to that level. Columns may not sum to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

Source:
Family Resources Survey 1996–97

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those aged 80 years and over are in each quintile of the income distribution for the population as a whole. [87981]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Percentage of people aged eighty years and over by quintile of the income distribution of the population as a whole

	Percentage of people aged 80+
Quintile (total population)	Before housing costs	After housing costs
1 (Bottom)	29	21
2	33	39
3	20	18
4	11	14
5 (Top)	6	8
All 80+ (percentage)	100	100
All 80+ (millions)	1.8	1.8

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set which is based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available.
2. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say 'actual' income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household).
3. Results may be sensitive to the choice of equivalence scale.
4. It is standard HBAI practice to give results for income both before and after housing costs, in order to allow for the effect of variations in housing costs between households.
5. Component percentages may not sum to one hundred due to rounding.

6. It should be noted that the FRS only covers those individuals living in private households. Therefore the figures quoted above do not include those individuals living in institutions (in this case, for example, hospitals and retirement/nursing homes).
7. It should also be noted that analyses of quality of the survey suggest that response rates are likely to be lower for those aged over 80 and therefore any survey data based on this age group may be more prone to bias than that for the population as a whole.
Source:
Family Resources Survey 1996–97

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of pensioners who will be receiving (a) a full basic pension, (b) a partial basic pension and (c) no basic pension in (i) 2010, (ii) 2020, (iii) 2030 and (iv) 2040. [87980]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Table 1: Estimated percentage of GB population over state pension age with and without some basic Retirement Pension in payment

Percentage

	With basic RP			Without basic RP
Year	Men	Women	Total	Men	Women	Total
2010	98.7	96.6	97.4	1.3	3.4	2.6
2020	98.7	98.5	98.6	1.3	1.5	1.4
2030	98.7	99.1	98.9	1.3	0.9	1.1
2040	98.8	99.2	99.0	1.2	0.8	1.0

Table 2: Estimate average percentage rate of standard Category A Retirement Pension (RP) for those with RP

Percentage

Year	Men	Women	Total
2010	97.4	81.8	87.6
2020	96.8	85.5	90.6
2030	96.6	89.4	92.7
2040	96.5	91.3	93.7

Notes:
1. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.
2. Estimates have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
3. Figures relate to GB only—overseas cases are excluded.
4. In table 1, the percentage without RP includes those deferring retirement, who have entitlement to RP but who are not actually in receipt; and married women with no entitlement of their own but who will become entitled when their husband reaches State pension age.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners claiming a category A retirement pension are living with another pensioner claiming a category A retirement pension. [87978]

Mr. Timms: The pensions administrative computer system only collects information on individuals, it does not hold information on other household members. None of the household surveys available collect full information of the category of pension.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of raising (i) the level of income support paid to pensioners and (ii) the basic state pension and related benefits by (a) £5 per week, (b) £10 per week and (c) £20 per week. [87983]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the tables.

The estimated cost in 1999–2000 of raising the level of Income Support (IS) paid to pensioners by £5, £10 and £20 per week

£ million

Option	Income Support	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit	Total cost
£5 per week	390	110	50	550
£10 per week	820	210	100	1,120
£20 per week	1,800	370	170	2,350

Notes:
1. Costs are derived from the June 1999 PSM model based on the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1999–2000 prices with IS administrative adjustments and ASD4's pensioner forecasts.
2. All costs exclude RCNH cases.
3. Costs are rounded to the nearest £10 million and therefore may not sum.

The estimated cost, net of means-tested benefits, of increasing Basic State Pensions (category A rate) and related benefits by £5, £10 and £20 per week from April 1999 onwards

£ million

Amount of increase in category A rate	Net cost 1999–2000
£5 per week	2,110
£10 per week	4,240
£20 per week	8,570

Notes:
1. Estimates of costs are rounded to nearest £10 million and in 1999-2000 benefit rates. Costs include related benefits with a statutory link to Retirement Pension (for example, Incapacity Benefit and Widows Pension).
2. Contributory benefit effects have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
3. Means-tested benefit offsets were estimated using the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey and the May 1997 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.

Appeals

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department is taking to improve clearance times for appeals. [88212]

Angela Eagle: The new Executive Agency of the DSS responsible for the administration of appeals will be set up from April 2000, for which demanding targets will be set. In preparation for this change, responsibility for the administration of appeals passed to the Secretary of State from the President of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) on 1 June. The phased implementation of the new appeals procedures introduced in the Social Security Act 1998 will continue during the rest of the year and preparations will be made for Agency launch.

Appeals have been taking, on average, around 7 months to be heard and this is wholly unacceptable. During the past year, ITS has taken action to improve the situation and in 1998–99 began to make significant in-roads into its backlog of cases, ITS figures showing a record case clearance of 370,008 cases. However, there remains much to do before ITS/The Appeals Service reaches an acceptable level of performance.

A dual strategy to achieve the necessary improvements during 1999–2000 has been agreed with the new Chief Executive of ITS/The Appeals Service. First, ITS/The Appeals Service is mounting a systematic assault on its backlog of older and oldest appeals (defined for this exercise as any case lodged with ITS before 1 October 1998). Secondly, and in parallel, tackling this finite backlog of cases, ITS/The Appeals Service is seeking to reduce both the numbers of all other cases outstanding and the length of time individual appellants have to wait for their appeals to be dealt with.

In assessing performance during the coming year we have therefore agreed to monitor two new performance indicators. First, we will be monitoring the number of cases in the backlog and the length of time for which these cases have been outstanding. It is the intention that the vast majority of these cases should be cleared by the end of 1999–2000. Secondly, for cases not in the backlog, we will be monitoring the age profile of outstanding cases, by month; and the age profile of cases which have been cleared, by month. This will give a clear picture of how long appellants still in the ITS/The Appeals Service queue have been waiting, and how long those cases have just been cleared actually had to wait. While efforts are being concentrated on the backlog in the early part of the year, progress here will not be as quick as we would like, but the intention is that both waiting times and clearance times will have been reduced by the end of 1999–2000.

The use of average clearance times as the key indicator of performance has not provided appellants, commentators, or ITS itself with a true picture of the levels of performance being achieved. First, average clearance times mask a wide range of performance and, in past years, did not expose the full extent of the backlog of cases which was building up. Secondly, average clearance times actually provide a perverse incentive not to clear backlog cases—the more effective ITS/The Appeals Service is in tackling its backlog of older cases, the less successful it appears in terms of average clearance times as cases which have been outstanding for too long are brought to account. Thirdly, the new performance indicators will provide a better picture of exactly how the caseload is being affected by the changes, which are being phased in over the coming months. And, additionally, the new appeals processes presently being introduced would in any event mean that future clearance times statistics were not directly comparable with those for past years.

This dual strategy has already paid dividends in terms of performance in the last few months. At the end of February, ITS/The Appeals Service figures showed that the backlog contained 70,348 cases and represented almost 50 per cent. of the caseload. By the end of May, the backlog had been reduced to 34,194 cases. During April and May, a total of 64,647 cases were cleared. Due to the changes which came on stream in April, the intake of appeals in April and May has been much lower than usual—ITS/The Appeals Service has taken full advantage of this opportunity and the cumulative effect of the record clearances and lower intake has been that, by the end of May, the outstanding caseload has fallen below 100,000, to 99,410, for the first time since November 1995.

Means Tests

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net public expenditure cost of changing the rate of deemed income from capital for means-tested benefits to £1 per week for (a) each £300 of capital, (b) each £400 of capital and (c) each £500 of capital. [87979]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Cost of changing the tariff income rule

£ million

Option	Income support	Jobseeker's allowance (income based)	Housing benefit	Council tax benefit	Total cost
£1 per week of every £300	10	Less than £2.5m	20	10	40
£1 per week of every £400	15	Less than £2.5m	45	25	85
£1 per week of every £500	20	Less than £2.5m	65	30	115

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran (Organ Transplants)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iran concerning the role of the Iranian state in procuring for cash body parts from living donors for use in transplants. [87648]

Mr. Hoon: We have not, so far, made any such representations to the Iranian Government.

Mozambique (Elections)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is offering Mozambique in connection with the forthcoming presidential and parliamentary elections. [87858]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Presidential and parliamentary elections are due to take place in Mozambique before mid-December. The EU has committed 21 million euros (£13 million) to the election process, of which around 15 per cent., or 3.2 million euros (£2 million), will come from the United Kingdom's contribution to the EU budget. Our High Commission in Maputo is actively involved in the international donor group which is working closely with the Mozambican authorities, including the National Elections Commission, to co-ordinate international support for the elections.

The United Kingdom is ready to consider sending election observers, if invited to do so by the Government of Mozambique.

The Gambia

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights record of the present Gambian Government. [87947]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regularly review the Gambian human rights record, on a bilateral basis, and as a member of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group which has a standing remit to monitor the situation in The Gambia. We have consistently made it clear that developments in the bilateral relationship, not least in the UK's development assistance programme, depend on Gambian observance of human rights and commitment to good governance.

There have been some improvements in recent months: harassment of the independent media has declined and the UDP opposition party has managed to hold regular rallies without interference. Nonetheless, we continue to press for Decrees which proscribe certain politicians and which place heavy burdens on the independent media to be repealed.

We have also raised the recent abduction of Mr. Nyassi of the opposition UDP party and are pressing for an independent inquiry into the incident.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Gambia with regard to the arrest and disappearance of Mr. Shyngle Nyassi of the United Democratic Party. [87945]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our High Commissioner in Banjul pursued the matter with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 27 and 28 May. He called on the Foreign Minister on 31 May and tried repeatedly to obtain a response from the Gambian Government.

He carried out a UK-inspired demarche on behalf of the EU on 9 June, urging the Government to take urgent action to secure Mr. Nyassi's release and punish those responsible for his detention. He pursued the matter again with the Foreign Minister on 11 June and, with other Diplomatic colleagues in Banjul, met President Jammeh on 18 June.

I am pleased to report that Mr. Nyassi was subsequently released on 21 June.

WALES

Physiotherapists

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to encourage recruitment of physiotherapy staff to the NHS in Wales. [87799]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The recruitment of physiotherapists is essentially a matter for the service but we commission training numbers to meet service need. There are two modes of training currently—full-time and mixed mode—to ensure as wide an entry gate as possible is available.

The links between career development opportunities and positive recruitment of staff were identified in the J. M. Consulting Ltd. report entitled "PAMs Career Development Project". NHS Trusts and Health Authorities have been encouraged to take forward its recommendations. Also my officials are currently working with the NHS Staff College to develop a Clinical Leadership Programme, which should provide further opportunities for physiotherapists and other Professions Allied to Medicine (PAMs) staff groups.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passport Agency (Compensation)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much compensation the Passport Agency has paid to applicants who made complaints in (a) each of the last 12 months and (b) each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [87435]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency's compensation policy is to reimburse the reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred by customers as a direct consequence of clear operational errors, or failure to provide an acceptable level of service by means of an ex-gratia payment. Each case is considered carefully on its merits. It is not the Agency's normal policy to make compensation payments for distress and inconvenience arising from such errors and failures.

The information requested on compensation payments made by the Agency is shown in the table.

Year	Total number of complaints where compensation paid	Total compensation paid (£)
1996–97	1,517	42,357
1997–98	1,622	43,876
1998–99	2,313	76,311

Within the last 12 months the position is as follows:

Date	Number of complaints where compensation paid	Total compensation paid (£)
June 1998	160	5,256
July 1998	266	7,460
August 1998	244	6,079
September 1998	188	7,234
October 1998	194	7,453
November 1998	180	8,127
December 1998	179	7,166
January 1999	181	5,785
February 1999	196	7,955
March 1999	245	5,453
April 1999	256	7,748
May 1999	219	7,551

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87331]

Mr. Straw: Between 15 April 1999 and 18 June 1999, a total of 173 "Named Day" parliamentary questions were tabled for answer by my Department. Of these, 96 per cent. (166) received a substantive reply on that date.

Correspondence

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the location of an Ethiopian asylum seeker whose identity has been provided to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for asylum in a letter dated 15 June. [87423]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have written to my hon. Friend.

London River Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 332–33, on the London River Police, what operational assessment the Commissioner for the Metropolitan Police has made of the workload increase for the river police over the millennium public holiday; and if he will make a statement. [87403]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that his operational planning assumes there will be a high level of activity on the river over the millennium public holiday. However, organisers of many proposed events have not yet confirmed the extent of these events. There will be a need for maximum operational deployment of river police both to police the areas involved and to support other agencies, such as the Port of London Authority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 332–33, on the London River Police, if the river police are currently deployed on a 24-hour shift pattern; and what changes to the current pattern are proposed for the millennium public holiday. [87404]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the river police are currently deployed on a 24-hour shift pattern; and that 24-hour cover will be provided throughout the millennium period, with the number of officers on duty at any time reflecting the operational demand.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been put in place to ensure public safety on London rivers over the millennium public holiday. [87406]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that there are ongoing discussions on the joint measures that may be necessary between the Port of London Authority, who are responsible for river safety, and the Metropolitan Police Service. It would be premature to make final decisions on the total resources to be deployed, or on operational plans.

Paedophiles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of the multi-agency strategy to deal with the monitoring and observation of paedophile activity. [87498]

Mr. Boateng: On 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 601–13, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced the Government's intention to consider the case for legislation in relation to dangerous people with severe personality disorder. A consultation paper on this will be published shortly. He also said that we would look to the national steering group on dangerous offenders to help the various agencies working with sex offenders to plan together for the safe resettlement of offenders into the community. The Steering Group has met twice and I can report the following progress: an early warning system has been put in place to allow proper time to prepare for a dangerous person's re-entry into the community; and a support group made up of staff from the operational services will begin work in July to support the Steering Group in its work.

Young Offenders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 30, on young offenders, for what reasons he will not seek funding from local education authorities for the education of young offenders who are in custody. [87640]

Mr. George Howarth: It would be extremely complex, costly and time consuming to seek funding from local education authorities for the education of young offenders who are in custody.

Young people are often in prison for a very short time and school budgets are set for the whole year, dependent generally on the number on roll in January.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 32, on education at Feltham Young Offenders' Unit, for what reasons the number of teaching hours purchased for 1999 is less than in 1998. [87643]

Mr. George Howarth: Although there has been a small reduction of 105 in the number of teaching hours purchased for 1999, the number of education hours has not decreased. The new education contract which came into effect on 1 January 1999, allows the governor to also purchase testing and assessment of prisoners from the education contractor to ensure that education programmes are focused on their needs. 192 such hours will be purchased in 1999. Previously this assessment was included in the teaching hours.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of young juvenile and young offenders convicted of sexual offences are enrolled under a sex offender treatment programme; and what was the percentage in each of the last three years. [87621]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the expected number of offenders under 21 convicted of sex offences who will complete an accredited sex offender treatment programme (SOTP) in 1999–2000 is 36.

The number of such offenders under 21 received into the prison system and the number of completions of a sex offender treatment programme by such offenders are given in the table.

	Receptions of offenders under 21 convicted of sex offences	Completions of SOTP by offenders under 21 in young offender institutions
1996–97	145	37
1997–98	191	48
1998–99	[1]96	48

[1] Provisional

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of young offenders and juveniles were held on remand in (a) Feltham young offenders' unit and (b) other young offenders' units for eight weeks or more in each of the last three years and in the period from November 1998 to May 1999. [87619]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information is given in the table.

Percentage of young offenders in Her Majesty's Offender Institution Remand Centre (HMYOI/RC) Feltham and other young offender institutions by length of time since first reception, 1996–99

Percentage

Length of time since first remand into prison	Juveniles[1]		Young offenders[2]
	HMYOI/RC Feltham	Others	HMYOI/RC Feltham	Others
30 June 1996
Up to 8 weeks	54	62	49	51
8 weeks or more	46	38	51	49
30 June 1997
Up to 8 weeks	59	61	46	53
8 weeks or more	41	39	54	47
30 June 1998
Up to 8 weeks	53	60	53	53
8 weeks or more	47	40	47	47
30 November 1998
Up to 8 weeks	57	60	52	52
8 weeks or more	43	40	48	48
30 April 1999[3]
Up to 8 weeks	61	62	54	54
8 weeks or more	39	38	46	46

[1] Persons aged 15–17 years
[2] Persons aged 18–20 years
[3] Latest available provisional figures

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 30, on young offenders, when the revision of the selection criteria for staff working with offenders aged under 18 years will be completed; and if he will make a statement on the revised criteria. [87639]

Mr. George Howarth: The particular skills required by new entrant prison officers who will work with young offenders aged under 18 include, tolerance, commitment and the ability to deal with and positively influence the behaviour of young people. These requirements have been reflected in additions to the competence questionnaire which forms part of the application form and in additional exercises at the job simulation assessment centres used in the recruitment of prison officers.

The recruitment process for new prison officers to work in the under 18 estate in preparation for the introduction of the Detention and Training Order in April 2000 began earlier this month, and incorporates these additional selection criteria.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what part education plays in rehabilitation programmes for young offenders and juveniles in young offenders' units. [87618]

Mr. George Howarth: The main thrust of the Prison Service education policy is the improvement of basic and key skills through the prison education core curriculum which includes basic skills, information technology, social and life skills and English for speakers of other languages. The curriculum's emphasis on improving the employability of young offenders and juveniles increases their rehabilitation prospects.

The Prison Service is a co-signatory to the National Framework Document to assist in the development of local agreements to improve the employment prospects of offenders.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the studies he has commissioned into rehabilitation programmes for juveniles and young offenders and the consequent recommendations he has made about such programmes. [87620]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office has a long established policy of developing, implementing and evaluating rehabilitative programmes for young offenders, either directly or by commissioning them from outside bodies and academics.

A wide range of such programmes have been examined over a long period of time—including programmes addressing offender behaviour (for example sex and violence offenders), particular offender problems (for example drugs and alcohol abuse problems), educational and numerical deficits, social skills deficits, parenting and other offending issues.

As a result, the Home Office has concluded that the most effective rehabilitative interventions are those carefully matched to the particular needs of offenders, those which employ a cognitive-behavioural approach to their work, and those which are closely managed and delivered by well trained staff. Programme accreditation—ensuring that programmes have to meet (and continue to meet) an established body of criteria in order to be recognised as effective programmes (and which can be supported by the prison or probation services)—is also an established way of helping to ensure effectiveness.

Wherever possible, these principles inform the development of regimes and programmes for young offenders.

Drug Smuggling (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) arrested and (b) charged for attempting to smuggle drugs into prisons in England and Wales in each of the last three years. [87653]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of visitors arrested for possible drug-related offences is given in the table. Figures for the number subsequently charged are not kept centrally.

Visitors to prison establishments arrested for possible drug-related offences

Year	Number
1996	1,317
1997	1,183
1998	1,109
1999 (to May 31)[1]	366

[1] Provisional figure

Driving (Illegal Drug Use)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been in England and Wales for driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of illegal drugs in each of the last three years. [87656]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not separately identifiable from convictions for driving under the influence of alcohol in the statistics collected centrally.

However, figures obtained from the Forensic Science Service show that 1,266 blood samples were submitted to them for analysis by police forces in England and Wales in 1996–97 and 1,863 in 1997–98, and approximately 90 per cent. of the samples submitted were found to contain one or more drugs.

The high proportion of positive findings is likely to be as a result of the absence of specific training or other aids to identifying drug impaired drivers, so that police officers arrest only motorists who are obviously and grossly impaired. Moreover, before a sample can be taken a police surgeon has to agree that drugs are an explanation for the motorist's condition.

Unlawful Proxy Voting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted since 1969 for unlawfully casting a proxy vote. [87647]

Mr. Boateng: The information is unavailable centrally as such offences are not identified separately by the Home Office Court Proceedings Database.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants have been caught while seeking to enter the United Kingdom by hiding in vehicles since 1 January. [87655]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information is not recorded centrally on the precise circumstances in which illegal entrants are detected. It is not, therefore, possible to say how many clandestine entrants are detected while concealed in vehicles and how many come to light at some later point. Regrettably, I am therefore, unable to provide the information requested.

Provisional data on persons issued with notice of illegal entry, including clandestine entrants, between 1 January and 31 May 1999 is given in the table.

Persons issued with notice of illegal entry January to May 1999[1]

Number of persons[1]

Month	All persons issued with notice of illegal entry	Of whom: clandestines
January	1,160	n/a
February	1,000	n/a
March	1,060	n/a
April	1,130	n/a
May	1,700	n/a

[1] Figures are provisional and rounded to 10 n/a = not available

Unlicensed Guns

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics he has collated regarding the use of unlicensed guns in the committing of crimes during the last three years; and if he will publish them. [87850]

Mr. Boateng: An exercise to obtain information on homicides involving firearms was carried out in 1996 covering the years 1992 to 1994. Out of a total of 196 homicides involving the use of a firearm, it was known whether the firearm was legally or illegally held in 151 cases, and of these it was illegally held in 128 cases.

From 1997, the question as to whether firearms used in crime are legally or illegally held has been routinely asked but has been provided by the police in only 6 per cent. of cases. It was decided therefore, that the information was not complete enough to be published.

Animal Experiments

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to implement European Directive 86/609/EEC. [87853]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 already implements, and in several ways, exceeds European Directive 86/609/EEC.

The most important ways in which the Act exceeds the Directive are:

the Directive requires, at Article 12, that either the experiments themselves or the details of the person conducting such experiments be notified in advance. The 1986 Act requires both that the programme of work be authorised by a project licence and that the individuals carrying out the procedures hold personal licences;

Article 12 of the Directive also requires that for experiments that might cause severe and prolonged pain, the authority must be satisfied that the experiment is of sufficient importance for meeting the essential needs of man or animal. Section 5(4) of the 1986 Act requires that, for all applications for project licences, the likely adverse effects on the animal concerned be weighed against the benefits likely to occur; and the 1986 Act regulates the production and breeding of genetically modified animals, and harmful mutants as well as their use in scientific procedures. The Directive only covers their use in scientific procedures.

LD50 Test

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to abolish the LD50 test. [87897]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 19, and to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 110.

Identity Cards

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate ways of facilitating the use of smart cards designed for electronic Government transactions as national identity cards. [86801]

Mr. George Howarth: The White Paper on Modernising Government proposes the development of a framework for the use of smart cards in support of the delivery of Government services. No decision has so far been taken on the merits of a national identity card, but the potential for using smart card technology for this purpose is something we will keep in mind.

Open Government

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make advice given to Ministers public. [86781]

Mr. Straw: Under the proposals set out in clause 14 of the draft Freedom of Information Bill, published on 20 May, Departments will be required to consider whether to exercise their discretion to disclose advice given to Ministers taking into account all the circumstances of the case including:

(a) the public interest in allowing public access to the information; and

(b) whether the disclosure to the applicant of the information in question would be in the public interest.

The proposed Information Commissioner would be able to regulate the exercise of the discretion by virtue of his powers under clause 43 of the draft Bill. As disclosure of this kind of information is discretionary he will not be able to require the Department to disclose any particular information, but he will be able to:

(a) require the Department to make a decision in accordance with that section; and

(b) specify matters to which the Department must have regard in making that decision.

Advice to Ministers is exempt from the statutory requirement to disclose information under clause 8 of the draft Bill by virtue of the exemption set out in clause 28.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to establish courts dedicated to dealing with cases of domestic violence in the north-east of England. [87680]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

The listing of cases is the responsibility of each of the courts in the area. The magistrates court in Leeds has recently started an experimental project using one courtroom on one afternoon each week exclusively to hear cases of domestic violence. This will ensure that those with the necessary expertise will be available to deal with these cases. HALT, the local voluntary agency supported by National Lottery funding, and the Probation Service will have a representative in court.

HEALTH

Medicines (Bovine Material)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 280, concerning precautionary measures in respect of medicines in whose manufacture bovine material was used, whether the precautionary measures enacted also required manufacturers to prevent the further use of existing supplies of medicinal products which in their early stage of manufacture had used bovine material (i) prohibited for use in human food at that point and (ii) subsequently prohibited for use in human food. [86773]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 15 June 1999]: The precautionary measures introduced in 1989 and subsequent amendments to them did not require manufacturers to prevent the use of existing supplies of medicinal products which had used bovine material in their early stage of manufacture. Neither did the later guidelines issued by the European Commission in 1992.

Managerial Suspensions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chief executives and their deputies of (i) health authorities and (ii) NHS trusts are currently suspended on full pay; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of persons in these categories, respectively. [86878]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 14 June 1999]: One National Health Service trust chief executive is currently suspended on full pay. There are 402 NHS trusts and 100 health authorities. Deputy chief executives are not formally recognised in NHS trusts or health authorities, although arrangements will normally be made for a director post to deputise.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the procedures to be adopted by the Medicines Control Agency under the provisions of the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999 (S.I., 1999, No. 267) accord with principles of natural justice and transparency. [86939]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 14 June 1999]: The Regulations clarify and strengthen existing procedures in the control of medicines advertising. We have clear legal advice that the proposals are compatible with both Community law and the European Convention on Human Rights.

There are specific circumstances under which notices may be issued to advertisers under the procedures in the amending Regulations. These are:

Under paragraph 1—to request a copy of an advertisement;

Under paragraph 3—to advise an advertiser that Health Ministers are "minded to" make a decision that an advertisement is in breach of the Advertising Regulations;

Under paragraph 4—to advise an advertiser that an advertisement would not be in breach; and

Under paragraph 5—to advise an advertiser that, after consideration of the advice of the Independent Review Panel Health Ministers have decided an advertisement is in breach.

Notices under paragraphs 1 or 3 may require an advertiser to cease advertising on an interim basis. At any stage, the recipient of a notice can seek judicial review of the decision to issue that notice.

The issue of notices under the Schedule will not be automatic—the Medicines Control Agency will continue, as now, to discuss problems with advertising with the company concerned so as to secure acceptable changes. The formal procedures will come into play only when informal negotiation fails to reach an appropriate outcome.

As regards transparency, reports of the Review Panel meetings will be publicly available. The MCA has also established a working group, the Medicines Advertising Liaison Group, to provide a forum for all regulatory and self-regulatory bodies concerned with the advertising of medicines to exchange information and opinions on issues.

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions ministers in his Department have held meetings with ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations, the ministers involved and the names of the Irish ministers and officials in each case. [87382]

Ms Jowell: Once, I met Dr. Tom Moffatt, the Irish Deputy Minister for Health, at the Council of Europe Ministers meeting in Athens on 22 April 1999. I was accompanied by my Private Secretary.

Human Embryos (Research)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Minister of State's letter (DOH/3/5437/71), on cloning tissue, what action he is taking to permit research into mitochondrial diseases and treatment for diseased or damaged tissues or organs; and what research he has commissioned into the use of cells or tissue, derived from human embryos, for the treatment of diseased or damaged tissues. [87181]

Ms Jowell: The joint Human Genetics Advisory Commission and Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority report "Cloning Issues in Reproduction, Science and Medicine" recommends, among other things, that regulations should be made under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 to extend the purposes for which human embryos may be used in research. This would enable research to be conducted into a number of serious disorders including the so-called mitochondrial diseases and for the treatment of diseased or damaged tissues. The Government are considering the recommendations in the Report very carefully indeed. A response is expected shortly.

The Government provide funding for many research projects both directly and indirectly. The Medical Research Council receives most of its funding from the Department of Trade and Industry, with smaller amounts from various other sources including the Department. I understand that the Council currently funds one major research programme, at the University of Edinburgh, which is looking at the development potential of embryonic cells. This is being undertaken under the terms of a licence from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority in accordance with the provisions of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Eye Damage (Solar Eclipse)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made from previous solar eclipses of eye damage caused by exposure to the sun's rays; and if such evidence was used as the basis for Government guidelines. [87446]

Mr. Denham: Anecdotal evidence suggests that, in 1927, 13 people lost their sight due to retinal burns caused by viewing the sun directly during the last total eclipse visible from the United Kingdom. More recently, the Manchester Royal Eye Hospital carried out a study of patients presenting for treatment following the partial eclipse that occurred on 30 May 1984. They identified 11 patients of whom 7 suffered some enduring deterioration in visual acuity.

This evidence prompted us to collaborate with the optical professions in preparation of a guidance leaflet which is about to be published. It warns that looking directly at the sun is very dangerous. The radiation could permanently damage the eye. The safest way to view the eclipse is indirectly with, for example, a pinhole projection viewer. If people ignore this advice and decide to use a solar filter or a pair of eclipse spectacles, they do so at their own risk. They would be well advised to buy the device from a reputable outlet and ensure that it had a CE mark to show it had been approved under the Personal Protective Equipment Directive and also ensure that it came with full instructions for use, that it fitted closely to the face and that the lenses were not scratched or damaged.

Mixed-sexed Wards (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals covering the greater London area have mixed-sex wards. [87399]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. However, the Government are committed to eliminating mixed-sex accommodation. The National Health Service Executive has set three specific targets for the NHS, and is monitoring progress. It will issue a monitoring report, which will contain results of health authorities' progress towards achievements of the objectives, shortly.

Salt

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to encourage people to reduce their levels of salt consumption; [87411]

(2) what action he is taking to inform the public of risks associated with a diet with a high salt intake. [87645]

Ms Jowell: The Government have issued healthy eating advice which mentions the risks associated with high salt intakes. It includes the recommendation to reduce levels of salt consumption by cutting down on salty foods and using less salt in cooking and at the table. To enable consumers to make an informed choice, the Government are encouraging manufacturers to include the level of both sodium and the salt equivalent on the labels of all pre-packed foods and pressing for this to become a requirement throughout the European Union.

The Government are also discussing with the food industry the scope for reducing the levels of salt in processed foods. Following initial discussions between the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food/Department of Health Joint Food Safety and Standards Group and the Food and Drink Federation ((FDF) acting for the food and drink manufacturing industry as a whole) the FDF has announced that it will be conducting a systematic review of the purpose and usage of sodium in manufactured foods. We welcome this review.

Physiotherapy (Recruitment)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to encourage recruitment of physiotherapy staff to the NHS. [87800]

Mr. Denham: The Government are ensuring that effective recruitment and retention policies are in place to make the best use of trained staff and that training levels are sufficient to get a better match between supply and demand.

The Government are taking a number of steps which will help to address the issue of recruitment and retention of physiotherapists. These include the publication of the framework for the management of human resources for the whole of the National Health Service, "Working Together: Securing a quality workforce for the NHS", which sets targets for local employers to improve recruitment and retention year on year. We have issued guidance to the service on improving working lives and we will shortly be issuing guidance on Lifelong Learning and Continuing Professional Development. In addition, physiotherapy staff are to get their biggest real terms pay increase in the last 10 years, and, for the first time in 5 years, the award is being paid nationally, in full and with no staging.

GP Lists (Removals)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the responsibilities of health authorities regarding the removal of patients from GPs' lists. [87972]

Mr. Denham: The responsibilities health authorities have regarding the removal of patients from a general practitioner's list are contained in the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, copies of which are available in the Library.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evaluation he has made of the effect on the (i) capital and (ii) running costs of (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes of the introduction of rules and regulations affecting the running of these homes in the last three years; [87893]

(2) what Fiche d'Impact was undertaken by the EC on each of the legislative initiatives affecting (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes introduced in the last three years; [87895]

(3) if he will list the European Union (i) legislation and (ii) other rules introduced in the last three years which relate to the running of (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes. [87894]

Mr. Hutton: The responsibility for the organisation and delivery of health care and social care in the European Union, including residential homes, lies with member states. As such, there is no European Community legislation or other rules for which the Department is responsible which relate to the running of residential homes and nursing homes and no fiches d'impact have been undertaken.

In the last three years, there have only been two regulations introduced by the Department which relate specifically to residential and nursing homes.

The National Health Service (Health Authorities) (Open Reporting of Nursing Home and Mental Nursing Home Inspections) Directions, made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under Section 17 of the NHS Act 1977, required health authorities, from 1 April 1998, to make their inspection reports on nursing homes available to the public. This matched the existing requirement for local authorities to publish their residential care home inspection reports. This change involved no increase in costs to nursing homes.

With effect from 1 May 1998, Health Service Circular 1998/057 and Local Authority Circular (98)12 increased the registration and annual fees which residential care homes and nursing homes are required to pay to the local or health authority with which they are required to register. The purpose of the fees is to cover the cost to local and health authorities of registering and inspecting homes. Prior to last year, there had been no increase in fees since October 1992.

For a residential care home with 20 beds, the increase in fees would cost an extra £100 a year. For a nursing home, the increase would cost an extra £480 a year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by her Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86997]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. The Northern Ireland Act 1998 makes statutory provision for two proposals in the White Paper, "Partnership for Equality"—an obligation on the public sector to promote equality of opportunity and a unified Equality Commission. This will replace the existing Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment (PAFT) guidelines.

Consultation has taken place with the following women's organisations during this Parliamentary session:

Ardoyne Women's Group
Ballybeen Women's Centre
Belfast Women's Training Services
Falls Women's Centre
Footprints Women's Centre
Lisburn Women's Centre
NI Women's Coalition
Soroptomist International for Northern Ireland
Training for Women Network
Upper Andersonstown Women's Network
Windsor Women's Centre
Women in Politics
Women's Information Group
Women's News
Women's Resource and Development Agency
Women's Support Network.

None of the responses has been published.

Imports

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the (a) volume and (b) value of imports to Northern Ireland for each of the last five years for which information is available. [87650]

Mr. Ingram: Official statistics on imports relate to the United Kingdom as a whole. It is therefore not possible to provide information on the volume and value of imports by Northern Ireland or any other UK region.

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland Planning Appeals Commission. [87689]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Following the transfer of responsibility for planning from local to central government in 1973, The Planning Appeals Commission (PAC) was established under the Planning (NI) Order 1972, to provide an independent appeals mechanism for decisions made by the then Ministry of Development (later to become the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland).

The Commission also has a hearing/reporting role where it holds hearings and inquiries as requested by the Department in respect of specific matters. In this role, the Commission hears evidence and reports its findings and recommendations to the Department. The final decision on these matters is taken by the Department following consideration of the Commission's report.

The PAC conducts its business using the principles of impartiality, openness and fairness.

Internet

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when and for what reasons, officials responsible for the internet public service website for press releases were authorised to include information provided by the Police Federation for Northern Ireland in an equivalent position to that of the Police Authority and the RUC. [87483]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 June 1999]: The inclusion of information provided by the Police Authority and RUC was a mistake. This was done by a technical grade at 11.30am on 8 June 1999 in response to an urgent request from the Police Federation and was done in good faith. The situation was rectified at 2.00pm on 16 June 1999.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those non-Governmental organisations which are itemised with links on the public service Internet web site. [87487]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 June 1999]: The Northern Ireland Public Service website was developed with the intention of providing the public with a mechanism for quickly accessing information relating to the Northern Ireland Office, Departments, Agencies, Non-Departmental Public Bodies, other public bodies and Commissions. In encouraging the public to access the site, the website also provides links to a wide range of non-governmental organisations, as follows:

Educational establishments

Queen's University Belfast
NUS/USI Northern Ireland Student Centre
University of Ulster
Stran Web—Stranmillis College www
St. Mary's College
Upper Bann Institute of Further and Higher Education

Education and Library Boards

North Eastern Education and Library Board

Media

Newspapers
- Irish News—daily editions
- Belfast Telegraph—daily editions
- Andersonstown News and North Belfast News

Television
- BBC 1 and 2—BBC Northern Ireland BBC
- UTV—Ulster Television
- Channel 4—UK-wide broadcasting

Radio
- BBC Radio
- COOL FM—covers the greater Belfast area
- Downtown Radio—covers the greater Belfast area
- Q102 FM, based in Derry, covers the Derry area

Political Parties

Alliance Party
Conservative Party
Democratic Unionist Party (DUP)
Labour
Natural Law Party
Progressive Unionist Party (PUP)
Sinn Fein (SF)
Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP)

Ulster Democratic Party
UK Unionist Party
Ulster Unionist Party
Women's Coalition
Workers Party of Ireland (WP)
Northern Ireland Green Party

Tourism

Ireland's National Tourism Service
Northern Ireland Tourist Board
Hotels

Transport

Rail
NIR
Airports
Belfast International Airport
Ports
Port of Larne
Ferries
SeaCat
P&O
Stena Line
Norse Irish Ferries

Utilities

Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE)
British Telecom
CabelTel
Mercury Communications

Community Groups

CINNI—Community Information Network Northern Ireland

Economic Development

Northern Ireland Grown Challenge (NIGC)
Northern Ireland Economic Council (NIEC)
Enterprise Ulster

Other Government Sites

Northern Ireland Local Councils

Antrim Borough Council
Ards Borough Council
Castlereagh Borough Council
Derry City Council
Larne Borough Council
Moyle District Council
North Down Borough Council
Strabane District Council

Miscellaneous Government Related Topics

The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department
HPSS—Health and Personal Social Services
The Drive for Energy Efficiency
Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee

Other Internet Service Providers

GPL www Server
Unite Solutions www Server
NIWEB www
Northern Ireland Global Gateway
BIC Systems
TRIP
BTNET
Ireland On-line
Compuserve
Unipalm pipex
Digital Equipment Co. Ltd.
Nova Internet
CMI Ltd.
Rexco's Irish Trade Page
Aaranet
The American Ireland Fund
Direct Net @ccess
Creative Online Media Ltd.
Infosite
The Internet Business
PM workshop
The Trinity Group Ltd.
The Solutions Group
Belfast ISP—WydeWorld.Com

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who has responsibility to (a) define the political parameters of, (b) set goals and targets for and (c) maintain and update the Government internet website. [87486]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 June 1999]: Material appearing on the Northern Ireland public service website is the sole responsibility of the originating organisation (Northern Ireland Office, departments, agencies, non-departmental public bodies, other public bodies and commissions) as is the responsibility for setting parameters, goals and targets. The Business Development Service (BDS) provide a technical maintenance service including the design and update of information provided by the originating organisations. BDS is currently reviewing the management and editorial responsibilities associated with the Northern Ireland Public Service website.

Voting Applications

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many absent vote applications were made for each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland for the election held on 10 June; how many applications were made on each ground for which such an application can be made, in each constituency; for each constituency how many applications were made for proxy votes; and how many in each category were (a) granted and (b) refused; [87598]

(2) what evidence she has obtained of attempts fraudulently to acquire absent votes in parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland for the election to the European Parliament on 10 June; and in which parliamentary constituencies investigations are being undertaken. [87599]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 22 June 1999]: The only readily available statistics for absent vote applications in respect of the European Parliamentary elections on 10 June 1999 relate to the overall number of absent vote applications, granted and refused, for each parliamentary constituency in the Northern Ireland region. This information is detailed in the table.

As far as evidence of fraudulently acquired absent votes, the Secretary of State is aware that the Chief Electoral Officer is currently investigating attempts made to abuse the absent voting system but his investigations are as yet incomplete.

European Parliamentary election—10 June 1999
Northern Ireland electoral region

Constituency	Registered electors applying to vote by post		Registered electors applying to vote by proxy
	Granted	Refused	Granted	Refused
Belfast East	214	8	39	1
Belfast North	115	3	201	35
Belfast South	215	10	99	9
Belfast West	115	35	222	35
East Antrim	206	5	58	1
East Londonderry	488	5	140	11
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	1,659	39	815	53
Foyle	579	16	701	34
Lagan Valley	358	5	56	6
Mid Ulster	823	24	1,063	101
North Antrim	345	7	102	3
North Down	322	5	62	1
Newry and Armagh	630	30	534	33
South Antrim	192	23	63	0
South Down	302	8	225	13
Strangford	354	5	51	2
Upper Bann	367	6	87	0
West Tyrone	931	28	1,079	86
Totals	8,215	262	5,597	424

Land Registers

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for Land Registers of Northern Ireland in 1999–2000. [88209]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000, the following performance targets have been set for LRNI:

1. To achieve a customer satisfaction rate, measured against complaints of 98.5 per cent.
2. To achieve a registration accuracy rate of at least 98.5 per cent.
3. To process regular Land Registry dealings in an average of 20 days.
4. To process regular Registry of Deeds dealings in an average of 4 days.
5. To process regular Statutory Charges Registry dealings in an average of 15 days.
6. To process pre-completion Land Information Applications in an average of 5 days.
7. To achieve a weighted unit cost target of £24.80 (exclusive of PFI costs).
8. To process 115 application units per member of staff per month.
9. To increase overall productivity by at least 1.5 per cent.
10. To cover Agency costs out of Free Income.

EU Support Programme

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the level of take-up by the two main communities in Northern Ireland has been of funds under the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation for each of its sub-programmes and for the main types of funding body. [88206]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The figures requested are listed in Tables 1 and 2: Technical details of the research on which these figures are based are given in "European Union Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation—Analysis of Community Uptake Report", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Table 1: Approved funding by sub programme and religious community

Percentage

Estimated take-up	Catholic	Protestant
Employment	59	41
Urban and Rural Regeneration	63	37
Cross-border Development	46	54
Social inclusion	58	42
Productive investment	42	58
Partnerships	52	48
Programme overall	54	46

Table 2: Approved funding by funding body and religious community

Percentage

Estimated take-up	Catholic	Protestant
District Partnerships	52	48
Government Departments	48	52
Intermediate Funding Bodies/Sector Partners	57	43
Programme overall	54	46

Notes:

1. Figures are based on 14,748 project applications out of a total of some 15,460 applications for funding within Northern Ireland notified by September 1998.
2. The religion of beneficiaries of funding is based on the religious composition of the geographical area of origin of the application.

Agency Targets

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Environment and Heritage Service in 1999–2000. [88207]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000 the following performance targets have been set for the Environment and Heritage Service.

Volume of Output

Bring about a 10 per cent. reduction in the number of 'high' and 'medium' severity water pollution incidents by the year 2000 on 1996 figures.

Establish regulatory systems for the COMAH (Control of Major Accident Hazard) Regulations in conjunction with the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland by 31 December 1999.

Issue large combustion plant authorisation under the Industrial Pollution Control Order by 31 October 1999.

Progress the Areas of Special Scientific Interest designation programme by:

declaring 15 Areas of Special Scientific Interest bringing the total to 174, and preparing statements of conservation objectives for 50 sites.

Complete public consultation on the draft Northern Ireland Biodiversity Strategy and publish the agreed strategy and implementation plan.

Consult on and publish a policy statement on Protected Landscapes.

Schedule 70 historic monuments to bring the total to 1,435.

Complete an assessment of the condition of state care monuments.

Complete the second survey of historic buildings in 24 wards to bring the total resurveyed to 78.

Publish an EHS strategy for environmental education.

Quality of Customer Service

Respond to 90 per cent. of written inquiries or requests for information within 15 working days.

Determine 85 per cent. of applications of Water Act consents, wildlife licences, ASSI and scheduled monument consents within the timescales quoted in our Customer Service Guides.

Provide a round the clock response for water pollution incidents. We will assess and prioritise all reported incidents within 30 minutes of receipt by EHS, and aim to begin investigation of such incidents as soon as practicable—in all cases within 24 hours.

Efficiency

Achieve the following unit and activity cost and efficiency targets:

Water Act Consents—trade consent reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs—domestic consent reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs.

Food and Environment Protection Act—construction licence reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs—disposal licence reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs.

Radioactive Substances Act certificates (section 7/10) reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs (section 13/14) reduce by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs.

Not to exceed 1998–99 running cost expenditure levels for ongoing existing activities for operation Country Parks.

Reduce total Corporate Affairs activity costs by 1 per cent. on 1998–99 costs.

Not to exceed 1998–99 running cost expenditure levels for ongoing existing activities for presenting and marketing Historic Monuments.

Achieve 3.75 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.

Complete implementation of EHS's Y2K action plan by 31 December 1999.

These targets are subject to endorsement or amendment by local Ministers in the event of the Northern Ireland Assembly being established.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Valuation and Lands Agency in 1999–2000. [88208]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The 1999–2000 the following key performance targets have been set for the Agency:

1. To complete 85 per cent. of new rating revision casework within three months of receipt, up to a maximum volume of 23,000 casework units.

2. To reduce the backlog of rating revision casework so that by 31 March 2000 the average age of outstanding casework will be two months or less.

3. To achieve a turnaround of 16 weeks on average for all rating appeals.

4. To complete 97 per cent. of all client casework subject to Service Level Agreements within agreed time limits.

5. To review all client Service Level Agreements, agree service requirements and establish meaningful customer service measurement criteria for the next business year, by 31 December 1999.

6. To achieve a unit cost of casework no greater than the 1998–99 unit cost in real terms.

7. To achieve a standard in all rating valuations such that 90 per cent. of those determined on appeal are within plus or minus 10 per cent. of the initial assessment.

8. To issue 93 per cent. of certificates for Continuous Revision cases subject to retrospective backdating within 12 months of the event giving rise to the revision of the Valuation List.

9. To demonstrate the ability to achieve full cost recovery in respect of client services.

10. To have in place by 31 January 2000 an agreed specification by which external providers could bid for new systems design and installation.

11. To achieve Investors in People accreditation by 31 March 2000.

Full details are set out in the Agency's Forward Plan, copies of which have placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Booster Classes

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children have attended year 6 booster classes in 1998–99. [87676]

Ms Estelle Morris: We do not yet have this information. LEAs are required to provide a report on the number of Year 6 pupils who attended the booster classes. The information is to be provided at the end of the 1999 Summer term.

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans there are to continue year 6 booster classes in 1999–2000. [87677]

Ms Estelle Morris: We will make an announcement shortly about the 1999–2000 Year 6 booster programme.

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in which (a) local education authorities and (b) districts year 6 booster classes have been introduced. [87675]

Ms Estelle Morris: All LEAs were allocated funding for additional literacy and numeracy classes for Year 6 pupils.

We do not hold nationally data on the distribution of Standards Fund grant at district level.

Drug Education Forum

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants he has made to the Drug Education Forum; who are its members; what arrangements he has made to monitor its use of funds; and if he will make a statement. [87892]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 22 June 1999]: We have agreed to a grant of up to £50,000 for the Drug Education Forum for each of the three years from 1998–99 to 2000–01. This supports a full-time co-ordinator post, and also covers administrative and information support, including the production of a drug education newsletter for teachers in schools. Grants of £13,000 and £26,000 were provided in 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively.

The Forum's membership is made up of representatives of each of the six main teacher unions; the Association of Chief Police Officers; the Drug Education Practitioners

Forum; the Evangelical Coalition on Drugs; the Health Education Authority; Hope UK; Life Education Centres; the Local Government Drugs Forum; the National Association of Youth and Community Education Officers; the National Children's Bureau; the National Health Education Group; the National Standing Committee of Advisors, Inspectors and Consultants of Personal and Social Education; Release; the Roehampton Institute London; the Standing Conference on Drug Abuse, and the Advisory Council on Alcohol and Drug Education.

A condition of grant to the Forum is that the books and records relating to the claiming and use of the grant are open to inspection by the National Audit Office and representatives of the Secretary of State as and when they may require. The Forum's work is also monitored by officials from my Department, along with those of Department of Health, Home Office and the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordination Unit, who attend the Forum's regular meetings as observers.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Adult Protective Legislation

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to reform (a) adult protective legislation and (b) enduring power of attorney. [87632]

Mr. Vaz: The Government published the consultation paper "Who Decides?" in December 1997 about the recommendations of the Law Commission on decision-making for mentally incapacitated adults, which included proposals for reform of enduring powers of attorney. We wish to give very careful consideration to all the issues involved before deciding the way forward. No decisions have yet been taken on whether there should be legislation and, if so, when it should be introduced.

SCOTLAND

Genetically Modified Fish

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to license test projects for the farming of genetically modified fish in Scotland. [87259]

Mr. Macdonald: None. No applications for consent to release GM fish into the environment have been made under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 (as amended).

Policy on this issue will be devolved from 1 July 1999.

DEFENCE

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests were carried out on members of the 21 EOD Squadron who conducted clean-up operations in Kuwait in 1991 in relation to damage from ingesting depleted uranium dust. [86947]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1999]: None. However, as I set out in the detailed paper, "Testing for the Presence of Depleted Uranium in UK Veterans of the Gulf conflict: The Current Position", published on 19 March 1999, all Gulf veterans who are concerned that their health has been adversely affected by service during the Gulf conflict (that is, August 1990 to July 1991), including by possible exposure to depleted uranium (DU), are entitled to seek a referral to the Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) for a full medical assessment. Copies of the DU Testing paper have been placed in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the timetable for disarming the KLA. [87306]

Mr. George Robertson: In the undertaking signed with KFOR on 21 June, the KLA have agreed that, within thirty days, all prohibited weapons with the exception of automatic small arms will be handed in to secure weapons storage sites. Automatic small arms will be handed in in phases over ninety days.

I am placing a copy of the undertaking in the Library of the House.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what day to day contact British officers have with their Russian counterparts in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [87569]

Mr. George Robertson: Day-to-day communication between British forces and the Russian contingent in Kosovo has been through a Russian-speaking UK liaison officer. There have also been meetings between KFOR commander Lt Gen Jackson and the commander of the Russian forces in Kosovo, Gen Zavarzin. Gp Capt Morley, the UK officer responsible for the establishment of an air port of disembarkation (APOD) for NATO forces at Pristina airport, has also held discussions with Russian officers. Following the recent agreement on the integration of Russian forces into the peacekeeping effort in Kosovo, more formal lines of communication are now being established.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure NATO remains solely in charge of Operation Joint Guardian in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [87568]

Mr. George Robertson: Operation Joint Guardian remains a NATO led operation. As far as Russian participation in KFOR is concerned, the arrangement recently negotiated between the US and Russian Defence Ministers, and agreed by the North Atlantic Council, ensures that there will be unity of command under the NATO Commander of Operation Joint Guardian, Lieutenant General Sir Mike Jackson. Political direction will continue to be given by the North Atlantic Council, with consultations on Russian participation through the Permanent Joint Council.

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of British forces committed to Kosovo operations. [88210]

Mr. George Robertson: As of 21 June, some 13,000 UK service personnel were deployed on Kosovo related operations, as follows:

Royal Navy: 880

Army: 10,320 (7,300 in Kosovo, 2,900 in Former Yugoslavia Republic of Macedonia and 120 in Albania)

RAF: 1,800.

The RAF element of the UK contribution to Kosovo operations will be reduced to around 900 as a result of the decision announced yesterday to re-deploy all 12 RAF Tornados from Solenzara in Corsica to RAF Bruggen, five VC10 tankers from Ancona in Italy to RAF Brize Norton and 10 Harrier GR7s from Gioia del Colle in Italy to RAF Wittering. Six GR7s will remain in at Gioia del Colle, two Tristars at Ancona and up to three E-3Ds at Aviano in Italy. Nimrod R reconnaissance sorties will continue to be flown, albeit at reduced frequency. The aircraft withdrawn to their home bases remain available for Kosovo operations if required.

Agency Targets

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Bases and Supply Agency for 1999–2000. [88277]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following targets have been set for the Naval Bases and Supply Agency for 1999–2000.

Key Target 1:

To provide 31,871 Standard Berthing Unit days.

Key Target 2:

To complete the Fleet Time Maintenance Loading programme to within three per cent. of budget.

Key Target 3:

To supply 80 per cent. of available Material within demand timescales while achieving agreed targets for high priority operational defects.

Key Target 4:

To supply 95 per cent. of available, maintained Munitions within demand timescales.

Key Target 5:

To ensure 99 per cent. availability of the Food product range in meeting customer's requirements.

Key Target 6:

To provide 30 per cent. of entitled personnel with Accommodation to JSP 315 Grade 2 standard or better and the remainder with Grades 3 and 4.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Ships Support Agency for 1999–2000. [88278]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following key targets have been set for the Ships Support Agency for 1999–2000.

Key Target 1:

To deliver upkeep periods with less than eight per cent. overrun.

Key Target 2:

To contain the cost of upkeep periods within three per cent. of the budget.

Key Target 3:

To limit to less than six per cent. the fleet time during which vessels are unable, for Material reasons, to perform their programmed tasks.

Key Target 4:

To limit to less than four the average number of Operational Defects outstanding per vessel in fleet time.

Key Target 5:

To provide 70 per cent. materially available vessel days.

Key Target 6:

To provide materially available vessel days for less than £39.4K each.

Key Target 7:

To achieve a stock turnover ratio of less than 2.9:1.

Military Provost Guard

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Military Provost Guard Service. [88076]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following a two year pilot scheme of the use of the Military Provost Guard Service to carry out armed guarding duties at a number of Army establishments, I have decided, subject to consultation, to extend the scheme. Over five years, the Military Provost Guard Service will initially expand from its existing strength of 118 local engagement regulars to a strength of over 600, providing armed guarding services to a total of 27 Army establishments nation-wide. They will in most cases replace Ministry of Defence Police who currently carry out armed guarding duties but who will in future concentrate on their primary role of carrying out constabulary duties. Where the MPGS replace MDP they will provide a cost-effective method of guarding, achieving savings rising to over £7 million per annum by comparison with existing arrangements once the scheme is fully up and running. This will be done without any changes to security standards. There will be consultation with the Defence Police Federation on these proposals which will involve a reduction in the overall numbers of MOD Police.

I am writing to hon. Members whose constituencies are to be affected by these changes, and a report by the Commander in Chief Land Command on the pilot scheme will be placed in the Library.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment were engaged for (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) three years, in (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987. [87849]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bloody Sunday

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 10 June 1999, Official Report, column 808, concerning the disclosure of soldiers' names, if he has decided to provide protection to those potentially at risk. [87828]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 22 June 1999]: We have assessed the implications of the disclosure of six names. The former soldiers concerned are being offered appropriate assistance. For obvious reasons I cannot give further details.

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations Reform

Q19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to promote reform of the United Nations. [86823]

The Prime Minister: We have given strong support to the UN Secretary General's plans for reform of the UN and its institutions. We recognise the need for new ways to be found to ensure that the UN and the Security Council work more efficiently and effectively. The Government will be pursuing this with other member states in the coming months. At the same time we will continue to press for enlargement of the Security Council to make it more representative of the world today. We will be working towards securing proper funding for the UN together with effective and transparent accountability arrangements. We will also discuss how the UN might improve co-ordination of its activities.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 23 June. [87660]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the number and percentage of private sector landlords whose rent is derived from housing benefit in each local authority area in England. [87349]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available in the format requested as the Department does not collect data on the total number of private sector landlords. The table gives information on the number of tenants in receipt of rent allowance in each local authority.

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Adur	810
Allerdale	1,420
Alnwick	440
Amber Valley	1,410
Arun	3,120
Ashfield	1,360
Ashford	890
Aylesbury Vale	900
Babergh	910
Barking	2,240
Barnet	6,920
Barnsley	3,200
Barrow in Furness	2,300
Basildon	1,450

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Basingstoke and Deane	590
Bassetlaw	1,510
Bath and North East Somerset	2,330
Bedford	1,960
Berwick upon Tweed	480
Bexley	2,700
Birmingham	17,240
Blaby	470
Blackburn with Darwen	2,630
Blackpool	8,690
Blyth Valley	830
Bolsover	1,470
Bolton	3,990
Boston	540
Bournemouth	7,380
Bracknell Forest	600
Bradford	10,900
Braintree	1,200
Breckland	1,230
Brent	10,060
Brentwood	420
Bridgnorth	520
Brighton and Hove	13,290
Bristol	7,590
Broadland	1,060
Bromley	3,110
Bromsgrove	510
Broxbourne	710
Broxtowe	1,350
Burnley	2,390
Bury	2,070
Calderdale	3,470
Cambridge	1,010
Camden	5,650
Cannock Chase	740
Canterbury	2,720
Caradon	2,050
Carlisle	1,320
Carrick	2,290
Castle Morpeth	440
Castle Point	1,230
Charnwood	2,010
Chelmsford	1,010
Cheltenham	1,760
Cherwell	1,330
Chester	1,790
Chester le Street	490
Chesterfield	1,710
Chichester	1,190
Chiltern	1,220
Chorley	910
Christchurch	500
City of London	120
Colchester	2,050
Congleton	570
Copeland	1,010
Corby	430
Cotswold	850
Coventry	6,740
Craven	810
Crawley	410
Crewe and Nantwich	1,300
Croydon	7,600
Dacorum	890
Darlington	1,760
Dartford	1,020
Daventry	370
Derby	4,020
Derbyshire Dales	610
Derwentside	1,260
Doncaster	5,070
Dover	3,070

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Dudley	2,050
Durham	610
Ealing	7,370
Easington	1,420
East Cambridgeshire	570
East Devon	2,070
East Dorset	740
East Hampshire	860
East Hertfordshire	750
East Lindsey	3,320
East Northamptonshire	720
East Riding of Yorkshire	5,870
East Staffordshire	1,370
Eastbourne	3,050
Eastleigh	910
Eden	600
Ellesmere Port and Neston	620
Elmbridge	1,100
Enfield	5,620
Epping Forest	1,150
Epsom and Ewell	580
Erewash	2,140
Exeter	2,510
Fareham	600
Fenland	1,450
Forest Heath	500
Forest of Dean	820
Fylde	1,580
Gateshead	3,860
Gedling	1,350
Gloucester	2,500
Gosport	890
Gravesham	1,530
Great Yarmouth	3,080
Greenwich	4,410
Guildford	1,180
Hackney	8,710
Halton	1,520
Hambleton	880
Hammersmith and Fulham	4,080
Harborough	370
Haringey	11,870
Harlow	540
Harrogate	2,110
Harrow	4,060
Hart	360
Hartlepool	2,190
Hastings	5,330
Havant	1,080
Havering	2,500
Herefordshire	2,670
Hertsmere	650
High Peak	1,300
Hillingdon	3,140
Hinckley and Bosworth	730
Horsham	790
Hounslow	3,620
Huntingdonshire	1,080
Hyndburn	2,120
Ipswich	2,210
Isle of Wight	4,140
Isles of Scilly	20
Islington	4,700
Kennet	750
Kensington and Chelsea	3,470
Kerrier	2,700
Kettering	900
Kings Lynn and West Norfolk	1,850
Kingston upon Hull	7,810
Kingston upon Thames	1,460
Kirklees	6,440
Knowsley	2,950

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Lambeth	7,170
Lancaster	4,590
Leeds	10,640
Leicester	3,960
Lewes	1,660
Lewisham	7,000
Lichfield	510
Lincoln	2,040
Liverpool	20,680
Luton	3,870
Macclesfield	1,360
Maidstone	1,480
Maldon	670
Malvern Hills	680
Manchester	14,160
Mansfield	1,610
Medway	4,750
Melton	430
Mendip	1,850
Merton	3,000
Mid Bedfordshire	620
Mid Devon	1,160
Mid Suffolk	660
Mid Sussex	1,000
Middlesbrough	2,980
Milton Keynes	1,660
Mole Valley	600
New Forest	1,840
Newark and Sherwood	1,280
Newcastle under Lyme	940
Newcastle upon Tyne	6,290
Newham	12,960
North Cornwall	2,680
North Devon	2,690
North Dorset	410
North East Derby	690
North East Lincoln	4,820
North Hertfordshire	900
North Kesteven	730
North Lincolnshire	2,280
North Norfolk	1,920
North Shropshire	710
North Somerset	4,050
North Tyneside	3,470
North Warwickshire	750
North West Leicester	610
North Wiltshire	820
Northampton	2,100
Norwich	2,490
Nottingham	5,980
Nuneaton and Bedworth	1,460
Oadby and Wigston	480
Oldham	2,670
Oswestry	520
Oxford	2,480
Pendle	1,900
Penwith	2,470
Peterborough	3,120
Plymouth	7,730
Poole	2,280
Portsmouth	4,980
Preston	1,790
Purbeck	730
Reading	2,750
Redbridge	6,650
Redcar and Cleveland	2,100
Redditch	460
Reigate and Banstead	790
Restormel	3,070
Ribble Valley	500
Richmond upon Thames	2,190
Richmondshire	450

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Rochdale	3,420
Rochford	830
Rossendale	1,060
Rother	2,460
Rotherham	3,010
Rugby	670
Runnymede	670
Rushcliffe	950
Rushmoor	750
Rutland	260
Ryedale	690
Salford	4,540
Salisbury	1,630
Sandwell	2,940
Scarborough	3,490
Sedgefield	850
Sedgemoor	1,750
Sefton	6,470
Selby	510
Sevenoaks	860
Sheffield	5,660
Shepway	3,710
Shrewsbury and Atcham	1,140
Slough	1,520
Solihull	1,180
South Bedfordshire	820
South Buckinghamshire	350
South Cambridgeshire	610
South Derbyshire	1,020
South Gloucestershire	1,630
South Hams	1,610
South Holland	570
South Kesteven	1,320
South Lakeland	1,490
South Norfolk	1,000
South Northants	410
South Oxfordshire	910
South Ribble	620
South Shropshire	650
South Somerset	1,940
South Staffordshire	590
South Tyneside	2,060
Southampton	5,460
Southend on Sea	7,040
Southwark	3,950
Spelthorne	720
St. Albans	790
St. Edmunsbury	820
St. Helens	2,100
Stafford	880
Staffordshire Moorlands	740
Stevenage	1,170
Stockport	3,620
Stockton on Tees	2,620
Stoke on Trent	3,810
Stratford on Avon	1,060
Stroud	1,180
Suffolk Coastal	1,810
Sunderland	4,670
Surrey Heath	330
Sutton	1,550
Swale	2,310
Swindon	1,670
Tameside	3,330
Tamworth	500
Tandridge	460
Taunton Deane	1,950
Teesdale	390
Teignbridge	2,850
Telford and Wrekin	1,310
Tendring	3,930
Test Valley	640

Rent allowance recipients in the private sector in England (excluding housing association) August 1998

Local authority	Recipients
Tewkesbury	680
Thanet	6,490
Three Rivers	480
Thurrock	1,830
Tonbridge and Malling	830
Torbay	6,560
Torridge	1,920
Tower Hamlets	2,610
Trafford	2,480
Tunbridge Wells	1,160
Tynedale	600
Uttlesford	500
Vale of White Horse	690
Vale Royal	820
Wakefield	3,450
Walsall	2,120
Waltham Forest	8,830
Wandsworth	5,630
Wansbeck	1,230
Warrington	1,650
Warwick	1,230
Watford	1,020
Waveney	4,100
Waverley	830
Wealden	1,670
Wear Valley	950
Wellingborough	660
Welwyn Hatfield	470
West Berkshire	980
West Devon	1,060
West Dorset	1,170
West Lancashire	1,330
West Lindsey	1,210
West Oxfordshire	820
West Somerset	990
West Wiltshire	1,620
Westminster	5,660
Weymouth and Portland	1,750
Wigan	3,270
Winchester	750
Windsor and Maidenhead	1,080
Wirral	11,730
Woking	560
Wokingham	550
Wolverhampton	2,810
Worcester	1,350
Worthing	2,520
Wychavon	710
Wycombe	850
Wyre	2,060
Wyre Forest	1,050
York	2,380

Source:
Housing Benefit Management Information System.

George Green Tunnel (Wanstead)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the Highways Agency staged the mock accident in the George Green Tunnel, Wanstead; what the results were; and if he will make a statement. [87278]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A limited staged incident was held on 28 May 1999 in the George Green Tunnel. It was arranged to give the London Fire Brigade the opportunity to react to and deal with a mock accident within the tunnel, before it is opened to traffic. In addition a smoke generator was employed to confirm that smoke from an incident would dissipate from the tunnel. Both exercises were carried out successfully and the Highways Agency is expecting to receive a copy of the fire brigade's report on the exercise in due course.

A full staged incident, involving all the emergency services, will be undertaken after the whole of the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road works are completed in the autumn. Staged incidents are carried out as a normal part of the Highways Agency's safety procedures and in this tunnel, are likely to be repeated every few years.

World Environment Day

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what events were organised by his Department to mark World Environment Day on 5 June. [87495]

Mr. Meale: We ran special adverts, referring to World Environment Day, on TV and Radio as part of the 'Are You Doing Your Bit?' campaign which was launched on 17 June. The theme of the campaign—the impact individuals can make to improve the environment—is closely linked with the World Environment Day theme, 'Our Earth—Our Future—Just Save it!'.

Environment Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals (a) originating from and (b) relevant to United Kingdom environmental policy are due for discussion at the Environment Council in Luxembourg on 25 June. [87503]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Council will take place in Luxembourg over two days on 24–25 June. The following proposals will be discussed and will be relevant to United Kingdom environmental policy;

Proposal for a Council Directive on incineration of Hazardous waste

Common Position

Amended Proposal for a Council Regulation on a revised Community eco-label award scheme

Common Position

Amended proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive amending Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms

Common Position

Proposal for a Council Regulation allowing voluntary participation by organisations in a community eco-management and audit system

Common Position

Proposal for a Council Regulation concerning the financial instrument for the environment (LIFE)

Common Position

Proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to the noise emission by equipment used outdoors

Common Position

Proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive on action to be taken against the emission of gaseous and particulate pollutants by engines intended to power agricultural or forestry tractors and amending Council Directive 74/150/EEC

Common Position

Proposal for a Council Directive on end-of-life vehicles

Common Position

Amended proposal for a Council Directive on the effects of certain plans and programmes on the environment

Policy Debate

Situation in the negotiations with automobile manufacturers which are not members of the EAMA (JAMA/KAMA)

Council Conclusions

Preparation for the 5th Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity

Council Conclusions

Development of the European Community's policy on chemical products

Council Conclusions.

Transport and Works Act 1992

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average period of time taken by his Department to process applications for orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992 following submission of an Inspector's report. [87581]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For those Transport and Works Act applications that have been decided following a public inquiry, the average time taken from receipt of the Inspector's report to decision has been 11 months.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions applications for orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992 have been opened up to further consultation with objectors following an interim decision letter from him. [87580]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Three Transport and Works Act applications have been subject to further consultation following an interim letter from the Secretary of State. These cases related to the East London Line extension; the proposed international station at Sratford on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link; and the Welsh Highland Railway.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the working of the Transport and Works Act 1992. [87579]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The operation of the Transport and Works Act 1992 is constantly kept under review. Although we have no immediate plans to amend the Act itself, we do intend shortly to revise the Rules governing the procedures for dealing with applications for orders under Part I of the Act. The new Rules will implement the revised EC Directive on environmental impact assessments and will make a number of improvements based on experience of operating the existing Rules.

Landfill Directive

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how oil and grease will be classified under the new landfill directive. [87623]

Mr. Meale: The Special Waste Regulations 1996, implementing the Hazardous Waste Directive, classify certain difficult to handle wastes as special. In general all mineral oils, for example hydraulic oils and lubricating oils, are likely to be special wastes. The Landfill Directive is not expected to have any impact on waste classification.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the climate change levy is being imposed on timber-based industries. [87682]

Mr. Meale: All sectors will need to play their part in achieving our climate change targets, including the legally binding Kyoto target of a 12.5 per cent. reduction in greenhouse gas emissions over the period 2008 to 2012 compared with 1990. By changing relative prices, the climate change levy will help stimulate the implementation of further measures to improve energy efficiency in all sectors of business. These measures are expected to lead to a reduction in carbon dioxide emissions of 1.5 million tonnes carbon per annum by 2010. The revenue from the levy will be recycled in full to business, principally through a 0.5 per cent. cut in employers' NICs.

Taxicard

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to transfer responsibility for Taxicard to Transport for London; [87657]

(2) what powers he has to transfer responsibility for Taxicard from London boroughs to the Greater London Authority. [87658]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 June 1999]: We will honour the commitment made in the White Paper, "A Mayor and Assembly for London" (Cm 3897) to transfer Taxicard to Transport for London (TfL). However, we have also indicated that the precise timing of the transfer will be for the Mayor to decide, in the context of his or her overall transport strategy. That is the most sensible way forward, given the current complexity of the scheme, which is operated, on a discretionary basis, by only 29 boroughs with differing levels of funding and services.

Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, the Mayor will have the necessary powers to effect the transfer of the Taxicard scheme, or to operate a similar scheme. I made clear on 25 February 1999, Official Report, Standing Committee A, column 865, that the GLA Bill provisions concerning London boroughs' Local Implementation Plans will be able to deal with Taxicard. The Mayor will be required to include in his or her transport strategy proposals for the provision of transport which is accessible to persons with mobility problems. Those proposals will doubtless include measures on how Taxicard and services like it should be operated. The Mayor will be able to require the boroughs to reflect those proposals in their Local Implementation Plans. Each borough will be required to submit these plans to the Mayor for his or her approval.

Rail Companies (Void Days Rule)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the benefits of abolishing the void days rule that allows rail companies to exclude certain performance data from their published figures. [87862]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No days are excluded from the Opraf financial incentive/penalty schemes on the grounds of failure to provide an effective service. Neither are days taken out of the Opraf contractual threshold for cancellations on these grounds.

Opraf are aware that the omission of void days from the Passenger's Charter performance statistics does not give a comprehensive picture of the overall performance of the Train Operating Companies and is consulting widely within the rail industry with a view to devising a better method of presenting performance data.

National Railway Track

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of national railway track was classified as (a) poor, (b) good and (c) very good for each year from 1990 to date. [87603]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 June 1999]: The following figures are available from the Booz-Allen & Hamilton report commissioned by the Office of the Regulator:

Track quality 1994/95–1997/98

	Condition percentage of network
Date	Very good	Satisfactory	Poor	Very poor
1 January 1994	63.7	26.2	7.1	2.8
1 January 1995	62.6	26.6	7.5	3.2
1 February 1996	58.8	28.3	8.8	3.9
19 February 1997	59.4	28.4	8.5	3.6
31 January 1998	62	26.8	7.8	3.2

These figures represent passenger comfort issues associated with the quality of ride experienced. It does not follow that track classified as 'poor' or 'very poor' on this measure is therefore unsafe.

Figures between 1990 and 1993 are not available on the same basis.

British Railways Board (Land Sales)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the land sales by the British Railways Board since the moratorium on such sales was introduced, giving in each case (a) the date of sale, (b) the location and (c) the price agreed. [87605]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 June 1999]: Land sales by the British Railways Board since 20 July 1998 are as follows. Individual sale prices cannot be given as they are commercially confidential.

Sales completions since 20 July 1998		Date sold
Ayr Harbour	Land off Saltpans Rod	19 November 1998
Boston	Former Park Sidings	3 August 1998
Boston	Land at Broadfield Street	14 April 1999
Brandon	Downside Yard	19 February 1999
Bristol Temple Meads	Former garage	4 November 1998
Cheddar	Bridge over River Yeo	31 March 1999
Chislehurst	Former yard	30 March 1999
Crainlarich	5 houses	11 November 1998
Darlington	Land off Haughton Road	12 October 1998
Glasgow Barnhill	Land at Petershill Road	7 April 1999
Glasgow	St. Rollox	7 April 1999
Glenboig	Section of closed branch line	18 March 1999
Guide Bridge	Former station offices and land	14 December 1998
Hull	Priory Park[1]	4 May 1999
Inverness	Eastgate	4 May 1999
Leeds Stourton	Former Rothwell Haigh sidings	15 April 1999
Liverpool	Part Speke sidings	29 April 1999
+Liverpool	Part Speke sidings	4 May 1999
Melksham	Former upside yard	31 March 1999
Meltham	Footbridges 20 and 21	22 December 1998
Montrose	Land at Provost Reid's Road	3 November 1998
Northampton	Southbridge Yard (Far Cotton)	23 December 1998
Oswestry	Former cattle pens	30 July 1998
Plymouth	Head of cattlewater branch	17 November 1998
Skegness	Land off Richmond Drive	12 August 1998
Southport	Derby Road yard	6 May 1999
Strathcarron	Station House	12 February 1999
Swindon	Shell Oil Depot	24 September 1998
Tadworth	Land near Kingswood Road	23 April 1999
Trowbridge	Innox Footpath	4 December 1998
Uckfield	Sewer[2]	5 March 1999
Wigston	Former carriage and wagon depot	14 May 1999
Woodville	Land over tunnel	7 August 1998
Worcester (Midland)	Land off Midland Road	13 January 1999
York	Land at Toft Green	28 September 1998
York	Holgate Dock	16 February 1999

[1] Transaction is a lease
[2] A phased disposal part sold and part still to be sold
[3] Transaction was the grant of a permanent easement

Bicycle Parking (Stations)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department gives to Railtrack and other station operators on the provision of parking for bicycles. [87703]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 June 1999]: We encourage all operators to adopt the voluntary Code of Practice, "Providing for Cyclists" which sets out a checklist of things that operators can do to improve facilities for cyclists. The objectives, Instructions and Guidance which we issued to the Franchising Director also require him to encourage franchise operators to provide suitable facilities for cyclists at stations. My Department is also contributing to the consultancy Bikerail, which is able to offer guidance to Railtrack and train operators on integrating bicycle use with rail journeys.

Red Routes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of red routes cover the Greater London area; what is the proposed red route mileage outstanding in the London Borough of Wandsworth area; and if he will make a statement. [87974]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The total length of the red route network is 315 miles. The roads in Wandsworth designated as red routes are the A3, A24, A205, A214, A217, A306, A3205, and A3220. Together these total some 21 miles. The current implementation timetable in Wandsworth is given in the table. The aim is to have the whole of the network operational in 2000.

Red route	Implementation
A3	Most fully operational. Remainder to have red line controls before the end of 1999. Implementation of remaining measures[1] to be complete by the end of 2001.
A24	All red line controls fully operational. Implementation of remaining measures[1] to be complete by end of 1999.
A205	All red line controls fully operational. Implementation for remaining measures[1] to be complete by the end of 1999.
A214	Detailed design recently commenced.
A217	Detailed design underway. Red line controls to be operational by end of 1999.
A306	Fully operational.
A3205	All red line controls fully operational. Implementation of remaining measures[1] to be complete by the end of 1999.
A3220	Detailed design recently commenced.

[1] As well as red line controls, red routes consist of a package of measures such as bus and cycle lanes, facilities for pedestrians and traffic calming, which will vary depending on local needs. These are aimed at improving the movement of people and goods and providing particular help for buses, cyclists, pedestrians and people with disabilities.

Tenant Participation Compacts

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the consultation exercise earlier this year on tenant participation compacts. [88073]

Ms Armstrong: On 25 January 1999 we published the consultation paper, "Tenant Participation Compacts". This put forward the Government's proposals for increasing tenant involvement through negotiation of local agreements (tenant participation compacts) between local authority landlords and tenants on how tenants are involved in local decisions relating to their homes.

The consultation paper flowed from the work of the Best Value in Housing Steering Group, whose work also informed the consultation paper Best Value in Housing Framework on which I made a separate announcement on 25 May 1999.

Consultation on the framework for tenant participation compacts ended on 31 March 1999. We received 386 responses from across a wide range of local authorities, tenant and resident associations, housing associations, housing groups and individual tenants.

These responses have been considered and have informed the "National Framework for Tenant Participation Compacts" which is being launched today.

The consultation showed overwhelming agreement with the principle of developing tenant participation through compacts, building on existing good practice. Respondents also identified the links between best value in housing and tenant participation as fundamental to giving tenants a real say in local decision making. However, tenants, officers and elected members would need to work together to make compacts successful.

In supporting the principles behind compacts, a number of respondents raised resource, staffing and budgetary concerns relating to the implementation of compacts. We accept that there are likely to be some initial set up costs in implementing compacts properly, and I am making available £12 million to local authorities over the next two years, specifically to help them and their tenants to implement compacts.

The national framework for tenant participation compacts is a toolkit to help local authorities and tenants develop, implement and review their local compacts, including the standards considered necessary to ensure meaningful and sustainable tenant participation.

It will allow compacts to be tailored to meet the needs of the local area and to reach specific groups of tenants such as the elderly, young people, or ethnic minority tenants. (Compacts can also be developed to involve the wider community or to extend beyond housing services where tenants and local authorities wish). The framework also takes account of respondents' concerns that new tenants' groups should be encouraged and that demands on existing organisations should be reasonable. However, tenants' organisations with a role in decision-making will be expected to be accountable, democratic and open to all tenants.

The framework does not impose particular structures. It will allow compacts to de developed at a pace at which tenants are comfortable and which they can sustain; and tenants can choose how they will be involved and what they will be involved in.

We recognise that not all tenants and councils will be able to implement compacts that meet the full needs of tenants by 1 April 2000. Nonetheless, by that date, we will expect all tenants and local authorities to have agreed the final outcomes expected from compacts and have in place a clear, measurable action plan, matched by resources, to bring these about. Tenants and local authorities should be working towards this.

The published framework is being sent to all local housing authorities, and to tenant and other interested organisations, and copies are available in the Library of the House.

I am placing a list of the respondents, excluding any who requested confidentiality, in the House Library together with a report providing an analysis of the responses. The list and specific responses are available in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions Library, Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1E 6DE, telephone 0171 890 3039.

GM Crops

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of trials for the growing of genetically modified crops. [86788]

Mr. Meacher: The farm-scale evaluations are investigating whether there are any differences in the diversity and abundance of wildlife associated with the management of genetically modified (GM) herbicide tolerant oil seed rape and maize compared with the management of equivalent conventional crops.

The research contractors, the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology, the Institute of Arable Crop Research and the Scottish Crop Research Institute have begun to assess the biodiversity in each field. This year there are now two paired comparisons of winter oil seed rape and four of maize.

The ecological studies are being reviewed by an independent scientific steering committee. The committee comprises scientists drawn from English Nature, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, the Game Conservancy Trust and academia. The first meeting was on June 14 and the progress of the research was reviewed. The committee considered the work to be making satisfactory progress and that the approach being taken to investigate the effects on wildlife was scientifically sound. Details of progress and steering committee meetings will be made publicly available. A web-site is being set up to provide this information in due course.

Later this year farm-scale evaluations of winter oil seed rape fields will commence. Next year the ecological studies in the farm-scale evaluations will be extended to approximately 20 paired comparisons of each crop.

Regional Chamber (North-East)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will designate the regional chamber for the North East Regional Development Agency. [88211]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to announce that we have today issued a direction to One North East designating the North East Regional Chamber as its regional chamber under the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998.

Section 8 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 provides that if the Secretary of State is of the opinion that there is a body which is representative of those in the RDA's area with an interest in its work, and that body is suitable to be given the role of regional chamber for the RDA, he may designate it.

RDAs must take full account of regional interests. Regional chambers will provide a mechanism through which RDAs can take account of regional views and account for their activities. Ministers expect that each RDA will have regard to the chamber's view in preparing its strategy, consult the chamber on its corporate plan and give an account of its performance to the chamber.

We are currently considering applications for designation from bodies in other regions.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Fraud (Chernobyl)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimates he has made of the extent of fraud in the EU budget relating to decontamination payments following the Chernobyl accident. [87379]

Clare Short: My Department is unaware of any fraud in the EU budget relating to decontamination payments following Chernobyl. There has been no reference to this in reports by the Court of Auditors.

If my hon. Friend has any such information, I would be grateful for details.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BSI BS8600

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage the use of the new BSI BS8600 for customer complaints. [85339]

Dr. Howells: The Government support the work of the British Standards Institution in creating better and fairer systems for the benefits of consumers and suppliers. This Department is keen to promote the rights and responsibilities of customers in all sectors and notes the new BSI standard for customer complaints as a contribution to this.

Knowledgeable and well informed consumers play an important role in enhancing the competitiveness of UK businesses. The new standard BS8600 offers useful guidance and is one of a number of options that can help businesses in setting up effective systems for responding to customer complaints.

Dog and Cat Pelts

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the extent of the trade in dog and cat pelts through British ports; and if he will make a statement. [87417]

Mr. Wilson: There are no official figures relating to the trade in dog and cat pelts. Imports of dog and cat pelts are not separately classified in the HM Customs and Excise Integrated Tariff.

Animal Welfare

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take action to provide safeguards for the welfare of animals in the European Union autumn trade round. [87416]

Mr. Wilson: The Government are committed to promoting high standards of animal welfare.

Following initiatives taken by the UK during our Presidency last year, the agreement on the Directive concerning the protection of farm animals included a commitment that the Commission should consider the scope for seeking changes to WTO rules in the next round to accommodate animal welfare concerns. We will consider this further in the run-up to the third WTO Ministerial at the end of this year.

Exports (Northern Ireland)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the (a) volume and (b) value of exports from Britain to Northern Ireland for each of the last five years for which information is available. [87642]

Mr. Wilson: Official statistics on exports relate to the United Kingdom, as a whole. It is, therefore, not possible to provide information on the value or volume of exports from Britain to Northern Ireland.

European Commission Information Exchange

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the extent of interchange of information with Unit A-1 of Directorate-General IV; and if he will deposit papers published by the Unit in the Library. [87692]

Dr. Howells: DTI officials are from time to time in contact with Unit A-1 of Directorate General IV on a variety of issues relating to competition policy. The Unit does not publish papers in its own right; material published on behalf of the Commission by Directorate General IV can be found on the Commission's internet site.

Business Links

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what procedures his Department has established to monitor the quality of services by Business Links. [87714]

Mr. Wills: The Department has a range of procedures to monitor the quality of services provided by Business Links.

The main procedure is a system of Accreditation under which each Business Link is required to meet rigorous quality standards in order to be able to use the Business Link brand. These standards are set by an independent Accreditation Advisory Board and include meeting ISO9001 and Investors in People requirements as well as other specific requirements, for example, on customer service. The Accreditation Advisory Board is responsible for advising Ministers on whether or not each Business Link is meeting the standards.

Business Links are also required to submit information on a quarterly basis on the number of businesses and individuals who have accessed different services and the fee income they have generated. Government Offices use this data, along with local intelligence, to monitor the performance of individual Business Links. Copies of these reports are held in the Library of the House. From April 1998, we have also required Business Links to track the impact of their services on client businesses.

At national level the performance of the Business Link Network as a whole is assessed through regular customer satisfaction and evaluation studies. The most recent evaluation report on Business Links was published in October 1998. A copy of this is also available in the Library of the House.

Small Businesses

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 400–01, on small businesses, what assessment was made of the level of awareness of business support services by small business owners in the research conducted since May 1997. [87772]

Mr. Wills: The September 1997 MORI survey showed that spontaneous (able to name Business Link) awareness of Business Link was 19 per cent. and prompted awareness was 66 per cent. among directors of businesses with 10–200 employees. For businesses with between 5 and 9 employees, spontaneous awareness of Business Link was 16 per cent. and prompted awareness was 59 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

GM Material (Irradiation)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the studies which he has evaluated examining the effects of irradiation processes on GM material; what safety requirements apply to such practices; and if he will make a statement [87512]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 June 1999]: I am not aware of any studies specifically to examine the effects of irradiation on GM material but a considerable amount of work has been carried out on the effect of this treatment on a wide range of genetic material consumed as food. There is therefore already an extensive body of information available to show that irradiation of non-living material, whatever its make-up, does not render it inherently harmful.

GM Food Additives and Flavourings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in securing labelling of genetically modified additives and flavourings in food. [87607]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 June 1999]: Progress on this in Brussels has been delayed as a result of the resignation of the Commission. However, we are continuing to press for proposals to be brought forward as quickly as possible.

Recombinant Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessments he has made of the implications for animal welfare of the use of recombinant bovine somatotropin on cows. [87610]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 June 1999]: A Working Group of the independent Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has considered human and animal safety aspects of the use of recombinant bovine somatotropin in dairy cows. The Group has reported to the VPC and the VPC will advise Ministers when it has considered the report. Also, the Farm Animal Welfare Council (FAWC), which also provides independent advice to Ministers, reported on the Welfare of Dairy Cattle in 1997. The report covers the subject of rBST and copies were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relationship between levels of insulin-like growth factor 1 in milk from cows which have been injected with recombinant bovine somatotropin and the incidence of breast and prostate cancers in humans; and if he will make a statement. [87609]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 25.

Bovine TB

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the research obtained by his Department from the Irish Republic on the subject of bovine TB. [87295]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 21 June 1999]: My offices liaise with their counterparts in many other countries, including the Republic of Ireland, regarding research into TB in cattle and badgers. It is for other countries, not MAFF, to publish research for which they are responsible. The project to remove badgers in East Offaly in Ireland was recently reviewed in the Irish Veterinary Journal (Volume 52(4) 1 April 99).

Contaminated Animal Feeds (Belgium)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government first received reports of the possibility of dioxin-contaminated animal feeds in Belgium. [87156]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 480–81.

Eggs (Battery Cages)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on ending egg production in battery cages. [87638]

Mr. Morley: I am delighted to say that the Council of Agriculture Ministers has decided that this practice must end across the EU by 1 January 2012.

Farms (Taxation)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will discuss with the Inland Revenue the case for reviewing the rules that a farm must make a profit once in seven years if its losses are to be tax-allowable against profits from other sources. [87263]

Mr. Rooker: Prior to the last Budget the agriculture industry submitted to the Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer various detailed tax proposals including the recommendation that the rules restricting the set-off of farming losses against other income should be modified. These were considered.

At present losses cannot be set off against profits from other sources if a farming business has made losses for five years. The "five year tax rule" was introduced to protect the Exchequer from subsidising the cost of continued loss-making farming activities where farming is taken up by people who are not dependent upon it for a livelihood. However tax relief is not lost as losses can be carried forward against future profits from the same source. Thus farming losses can be offset against future farming profits.

Pesticides

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions his Department has had with the Treasury regarding the proposed tax on pesticides; and if he will make a statement. [87292]

Mr. Rooker: My officials have taken part in discussions with Treasury and other departments on various issues relating to the current consultation exercise on possible pesticides tax. As with all taxation matters, a final decision on such a tax lies with my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87275]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of all those affected by them.

Although the nature of the Ministry's responsibilities means that much of its legislative programme does not have a gender specific impact potentially interested women's groups are included in the consultations over proposed legislation. Groups which have been consulted this Session are listed on the following schedule.

Responses to such consultation exercises are generally available upon request unless those who respond indicate that they wish their response to be confidential.

Women's groups which have been consulted this Session by MAFF

Al-Hasaniya Moroccan Women's Centre
An-Nisa Society
British Housewives' League
Co-operative Women's Guild
Good Housekeeping Institute
National Alliance of Women's Organisations
National Association of Women's Clubs
National Association of Women of Great Britain
National Council of Women
National Federation of Women's Institutes
National Federation of Women's Institutes, Welsh Office
National Housewives' Association
Royal College of Midwives
Soroptomist International
Townswomen's Guild
UK Federation of Business and Professional Women
Wiltshire Federation of Women's Institute
Women's Environmental Network
Women's Farm and Garden Association
Women's Food and Farming Union
Women's National Commission
Women's Royal Voluntary Service.

Transgenic Plants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding his Department provides to scientists at (a) Rothamsted and (b) elsewhere investigating the nectar and pollen production of transgenic plants and the foraging behaviour of bees on transgenic plants. [87180]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry has placed a programme of research at the Institute of Arable Crops Research at Rothamsted, to investigate the interactions between insects and plants. Funding of £950,000 is planned for 1999–2000. This work underpins EU and DETR funded research which looks specifically at interactions between GM crops and beneficial insects. MAFF is also funding a project at the Scottish Crops Research Institute, costing £57,000 in 1999–2000, which includes studies of the role of bees in cross-pollination of genetically modified oilseed rape. Relevant research on the role of bees was reviewed in the recent MAFF report on organic farming and gene transfer from GM crops. This review cost £25,000.

The Ministry currently funds no work on nectar and pollen production in transgenic plants.

CABINET OFFICE

Emotional Intelligence (Civil Servants)

9. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to enhance awareness of, and competence in, emotional intelligence issues among civil servants. [86789]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Civil Service College has run courses for over a decade which deal with leadership, management and interpersonal skills and two new courses, specifically on these subjects, for both junior and senior managers, will start in the Autumn.

GM Organisms

10. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment he has made of the co-ordination of policy on genetically modified organisms across Government Departments. [86790]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Policy on genetically modified organisms is co-ordinated through the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification (MISC 6) which I chair.

19. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what representations the ministerial group on biotechnology and genetic modification has received on the importation of genetically modified seeds and food products from the USA. [86799]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: None.

Electronic Red Boxes

11. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made with electronic red boxes. [86791]

Mr. Kilfoyle: A variety of secure technologies are available to link Ministers with their private offices.

Long-term Planning

12. Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps he is taking to ensure that Government policy takes account of the need for long-term planning. [86792]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Modernising Government White Paper highlighted the need for policies to be better focused on the Government's long-term goals. The Performance and Innovation Unit is working with Departments to identify the key challenges that the Government will face in the medium to long term.

Next Steps Agencies

13. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to appraise the effectiveness of the provisions for quinquennial review of the continued status of each next steps agency as a public sector body. [86793]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Modernising Government White Paper set out our commitment to change the approach to quinquennial reviews. In the future, reviews will be directed more closely through our drive for high quality public services. We will publish guidance on the new approach in the Autumn.

Public Appointments

14. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent representations he has received about the procedures for making public appointments. [86794]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have received a small number of recent representations from hon. Members and others about the public appointments scheme.

Electronic Correspondence

15. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress he has made in co-ordinating the development of a system to enable Departments to deal with hon. Members' correspondence by e-mail. [86795]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Through the Government Secure Intranet we are building up an infrastructure to enable services such as these to be developed. Twenty-six departments and agencies are now connected to the GSI.

Better Government Initiative

16. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the better government initiative. [86796]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Modernising Government White Paper clearly sets out our programme for the reform and renewal of public services. This is a long term programme with a significant package of initiatives designed to provide services to better meet the way people live their lives. We will publish the milestones for meeting the commitments in the White Paper, and the criteria against which to judge their success, this summer.

Duchy of Lancaster

18. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how he intends to celebrate the 600th anniversary of the Duchy of Lancaster. [86798]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I will welcome Her Majesty The Queen, Duke of Lancaster and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to Lancaster next month on the 600th anniversary of the Duchy's link with the crown.

Regional Government Offices

20. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects to publish the findings of the study by the performance and innovation unit on the role of Government offices in the regions. [86800]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Performance and Innovation Unit is studying the "Role of Central Government at the Regional and Local Level". The study is due to be completed in the Autumn. I expect decisions flowing from the study to be announced in due course.

Archway Tower

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has for the use of Archway tower, Junction road, London, N19; and if he will make a statement. [86802]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Refurbishment of Archway Tower is almost complete. Marketing is currently underway to let the building within Government or the private sector.

Drugs Tsar

22. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what representations he has received following publication of the first annual report and national plan by the UK anti-drugs co-ordinator. [86803]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have received many favourable representations, some from hon. Members, following the publication of the UK Anti-drugs Co-ordination Report.

Policy Presentation

23. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps he is taking to encourage cross-departmental co-ordination on the presentation of Government policy. [86804]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I hold regular meetings with Ministers and officials to improve the co-ordination and the presentation of Government policy.

2 Marsham Street

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects to make a decision on the future of the former Government buildings in Marsham street. [86797]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The decision to demolish 2 Marsham street has already been made. However, immediate demolition has been deferred because re-use is one of the options being considered by the Home Office under its PFI project. A final decision on the timing of demolition cannot be made until the Home Office has completed another round of bidding, the result of which is expected later this year.

Security Facilities Executive

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on progress on the transfer of services previously provided by the Security Facilities Executive. [87774]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Security Facilities Executive closed as an Agency on 30 June 1998 and became a Division of the Cabinet Office—Security Facilities Division (SFD).

The security guarding services are gradually being transferred to their home departments and are either being taken in-house or market tested (TUPE will apply). 339 Custody Guards have already transferred and the remaining 251 will transfer from SFD by the end of this calendar year.

Assessment and development of security equipment and explosive protection advice is planned to transfer to the Home Office (Police Scientific Development Branch) later this year. The remaining services which mainly comprise the manufacture, installation and maintenance of the AC12 alarm system and associated security devices and the consultancy advice to customers are being considered for a public private partnership.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 24 June 1999

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kosovo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral Statement of 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 22–33, on Kosovo, what response he has received from Hashen Thaqi about ending violence in Kosovo. [87591]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As the Prime Minister pointed out in his statement to the House on Kosovo on 21 June 1999, Official Report, columns 761–64, and at the G8 Summit, the KLA has now agreed an undertaking to demilitarise in phases over 90 days, beginning with an immediate ceasefire.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the gathering of evidence in Kosovo on behalf of the War Crimes Commission. [87875]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are doing all we can to help ICTY investigate crimes against humanity in Kosovo. A UK Scenes of Crime team has been initially tasked by ICTY to examine sites of two of the worst atrocities thought to have taken place in Kosovo. The UK team was the first such team operating on the ground in Kosovo.

In April, we appointed a UK Kosovo war crimes co-ordinator who is responsible for ensuring that as much information as possible is passed to ICTY that might be relevant to the Tribunal's investigations.

We have contributed an extra £290,000 this year to ICTY in addition to the UK's assessed contribution of US$5.1 million.

Euro (EC Seminars)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will deposit in the Library documentation relating to the seminars provided by the European Commission to EU consumer organisations in November and December on training in important aspects of the transition to the euro, from the consumer's viewpoint; [87672]

(2) if he will make a statement on the (a) nature and (b) cost of the assistance supplied by the European Commission to the TUC to encourage public debate on EMU; [87686]

(3) if he will make a statement on the nature of the project financed by the European Commission relating to vulnerable sectors of the population and preparation for the advent of the euro. [87659]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

These projects appear to be financed by the European Commission from the European Union Budget, line B3–306, Information Programme for European Citizens (Prince).

The Prince programme exists to stimulate public debate on the EMU. I understand that the Commission gave the European Trades Union Congress (ETUC) 200,000 euro under the Prince programme in 1997. ETUC distributed this money to the national trades union organisations. The money received by the TUC was used to help organise seven conferences aimed at stimulating public debate on the EMU.

The seminars for consumer organisations were also organised under the Prince programme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Special Advisers (US Visits)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 253, which special advisers visited the United States of America on 10 and 11 September 1997; and if he will list the meetings which these special advisers held with members and officials of the US Government during the visit, stating the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the US ministers and officials at each meeting. [87414]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), as the then President of the Board of Trade met Charlene Barshefsky (US Trade Representative), William Daley (US Commerce Secretary) and Elizabeth Moler (US Deputy Energy Secretary) during her visit to the United States of America in September 1997. She also participated in other meetings involving Senators and Congressmen. She was accompanied by her Special Adviser, Mr. Corry, at these meetings.

US Tariffs

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the tariffs imposed by the United States on European Union goods as a result of the banana dispute. [87506]

Mr. Wilson: The point at issue in this dispute is the compatibility of the EU's banana import regime with the rules of the World Trade Organisation (WTO).

This regime was revised during 1998 to take account of the earlier adverse WTO rulings, but the WTO Panel ruled on 12 April that the revised regime is still not fully WTO-compliant. In addition, the WTO arbitrator determined that the annual loss to the US from the current regime is $191.4 million. On 19 April, the US was given formal WTO authority to retaliate up to that level.

The US issued a revised retaliation list on 9 April removing several sectors which had been included on an earlier list. Whilst this scaling down was welcome, we remain acutely aware that many UK businesses are adversely affected by the retaliation still in effect.

We are continuing to make representations to the US about the harm which is being caused to UK businesses in the affected sectors.

We are also continuing to press for the EU to work with the US and other interested parties to achieve an early end to this unnecessary damage to business. We are pressing for further intensive consultations with all the parties involved on the options for reforming the banana regime, in order to make it unambiguously compatible with the WTO.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will reply to the letter of 18 May from Rosemary Maddock of Highclere, Slapton, near Kingsbridge, Devon, about a former employee of Anchorpac Ltd. [87986]

Mr. Wills: I understand that a reply was sent by an Official in the Employments Relations Directorate on 23 June.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rosemary Nelson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the security force helicopters operating in the Ashgrove area of Lurgan on Sunday 14 and Monday 15 March were equipped with still or video cameras; and if photographs or video footage from them has been made available to the policy inquiry team investigating the murder of Rosemary Nelson. [86174]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 June 1999]: All matters of security force activity in this area over the period of 12–15 March are the subject of major lines of inquiry for Mr. Port's continuing investigation. It is not, therefore, appropriate to go into detail at this stage. However, he has access to all the available information, in whatever form.

Weapons Amnesty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many weapons and of what calibre were collected during the 1971 weapons amnesty; and how those weapons were disposed of. [87154]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 June 1999]: The Northern Ireland Office does not hold the information in the form requested. I understand, however, that a total of 1,619 firearms and 99,440 rounds of ammunition were handed in.

Pre-school Places

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each (a) controlled, (b) maintained, (c) integrated and (d) voluntary sector school in each Education and Library Board area the number of, and the expenditure on, PEAG places for the school year 1998–99. [87674]

Mr. McFall: Under 1998–99 Pre-school Education Development Plans, my Department approved the establishment of new statutory nursery units at the following schools.

School	Education and Library Board area	Management Type	Capital cost (£000)	Number of part-time places
Harryville Primary School, Ballymena	North Eastern	Controlled	80	52
St. Joseph's Primary School, Crumlin	North Eastern	Maintained	60	52
Bloomfield Road Primary School, Bangor	South Eastern	Controlled	90	52
Abbey Primary School, Newtownards	South Eastern	Controlled	70	52
St. Aloysius' Primary School, Lisburn	South Eastern	Maintained	90	52
Craigavon Primary School, Gilford[1]	Southern	Controlled	20	12
St. Clare's/St. Colman's Abbey Primary School, Newry	Southern	Maintained	55	52
Ballykelly Primary School	Western	Controlled	66	52

[1] This is an extension to an existing nursery unit

FE Lecturers (Conditions of Service)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if lecturers in Northern Ireland further education colleges prior to April 1993 were employed on conditions of service similar to the Silver Book agreement in England. [87785]

Mr. McFall: Yes, subject to minor regional variations.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 12 June the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishments shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [87962]

Mr. Ingram: The number of paramilitary attacks during the period 6–12 June 1999 are as shown.

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	4	2
Shootings	2	0
Total	6	2

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 12 June the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [87961]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 6–12 June 1999 are as shown:

	Number
Deaths	0
Shooting incidents	2
Bombing incidents	3

The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	4	2
Shootings	2	0
Total	6	2

Notes:

1. Figures may be subject to minor amendment
2. The shooting and bombing incidents cannot as yet be firmly attributed to a grouping

Belfast Harbour

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have for any sum exceeding the projected £70 million raised from the proposed privatisation of Belfast Harbour; and if she will make a statement. [88118]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The scheme for transferring Belfast Port to the private sector has not yet been finalised and no plans beyond the £70 million assumed in the Northern Ireland estimates for 1999–2000 have therefore been made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

London River Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 332, on the London River Police, what estimate he has made of the (a) cost of overtime payments and (b) total cost for the service, over the millennium public holiday, at a strength of (i) 89 and (ii) 101. [87405]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner for the Metropolitan Police tells me that all police officers on duty on the millennium public holiday will be entitled to overtime payment for being on duty. It is likely that every officer will be working a 12-hour duty, at an average cost of £297.69 per officer.

The total cost of the millennium public holiday river policing arrangements, based on a 12-hour duty on 31 December and a 12-hour duty on 1 January, using the same figure will be £595.38 per officer. This gives a total cost of £52,988.82 for 89 officers, and £60,133.38 for 101 officers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 332, on the London River Police, for what reasons there will be a reduction in the number of river police in the period to 1 January 2000. [87402]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the reduction of numbers of river police, to 89 from 101, will align resources more closely to known and potential policing demands and so enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the river police.

Prisons (Cell Confinement)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in which prisoners are confined to cells for 22 hours a day or more; how many prisoners in each prison are so confined; and what the reasons are. [87957]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service does not collect centrally information on the time individual prisoners spend confined to their cell.

Provisional data show that, for the year 1998–99, the average time prisoners were locked in their cells was 13.4 hours on a weekday and 14.7 hours at weekends.

Within a prison establishment, the period for which individual prisoners or groups of prisoners are unlocked will vary according to a number of factors, including their level on the incentives and earned privileges scheme. Some prisoners may be confined to their cells for most of the day, though usually only for short periods. Reasons for this might include for the maintenance of good order and discipline, because the individual prisoner has declined regime activity or because of operational demands.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Torbay of 9 May, in regard to the return of Mr. Melik's passport. [87839]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Mr. Melik was granted leave to remain as a visitor and his passport returned to him on 21 June. A reply to the hon. Member will shortly be sent to this effect.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Torbay, of 9 May in regard to the return of documents belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Strange. [87840]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will reply shortly, but can say that Mrs. Strange has been given leave to remain in the United Kingdom for a further 12 months and her passport was returned on 22 June.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the performance of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [87838]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's caseworking operation is undergoing major accommodation and organisational changes. These changes are necessary to modernise the work of the Directorate to enable it to meet the Government's commitment to a fairer, firmer, faster immigration control. I regret any delays caused by this.

My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, has established a project team, working to tight deadlines, to plan and deliver urgent measures to ensure the Directorate returns to previous levels of service.

The team is looking at a range of organisational and strategic measures aimed at improving the performance of the Integrated Casework Directorate, and has developed systems for projecting future output levels so as to target improvements more effectively.

Siemens Business Services delivered the computer system on 14 June. It will now be rigorously tested and piloted to ensure that the Directorate's requirements are met. The system will then be progressively introduced and should become operational early next year.

Police Car Response Times

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 93, on police car response times, what plans he has to commission research on this matter. [87975]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to commission research on this subject.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on his inspection of HMP Wormwood Scrubs to be published. [88449]

Mr. Straw: I understand that Sir David Ramsbotham intends to publish his inspection report on Wormwood Scrubs prison on Monday 28 June. I have arranged for copies of his report to be placed in the Library and the Vote Office on publication.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Film Companies (Locations)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support the Government give to encourage film companies to use British locations. [87877]

Janet Anderson: The Government fund the British Film Commission (BFC), which provides information and advice to overseas and domestic film production companies on making use of suitable British locations and facilities. In addition, the Government contribute to the British Film Office in Los Angeles which provides similar advice within the Hollywood community.

The UK also has a network of regional film commissions which work to attract filming to their regions. On 15 June the British Tourist Authority published its "Movie Map" which highlights the number of first class films which were made in this country.

Stonehenge (Vandalism)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of damage to Stonehenge and the World Heritage Area over the period of the summer solstice; and if he will make a statement. [88091]

Mr. Alan Howarth: While I deplore the public disorder at Stonehenge over the summer solstice, I am pleased that specialist staff from English Heritage have ascertained that there has been no structural damage to the monument. The modern perimeter fence was damaged and there was some scuffing and dislodging of lichen caused by those who climbed on the stones. The National Trust has also confirmed that although there were people camping and lighting small fires on its adjoining land within the area of the World Heritage Site, no damage was caused beyond scorching and flattening of grass.

BBC Director-General

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Chairman of the BBC concerning the procedures for selecting the next Director-General; and if he will make a statement. [88149]

Janet Anderson: None. The appointment of the Director-General of the BBC is a matter for the Board of Governors.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Gambia

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects for which aid has been provided to the Gambia during the last three years and the amounts for each project. [87946]

Clare Short: The following table shows British aid provided to the Gambia during the last three years. (The totals have been rounded up or down to the nearest £000).

£000

Project/programme title	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1996–97 to 1998–99
Good Government (Voter Registration Programme)	147	—	30	177
In-Service Education	296	226	16	539
Health Management Strengthening	106	24	—	130
Hospital Maintenance	40	14	9	63
Primary Health Care	60	87	—	148
Economic Management Capacity Building	—	—	50	50
Assistance to Auditor General	—	—	50	50
Mainstreaming Poverty and Gender	—	—	25	25
Records Management Improvement Project	—	—	120	120
Action Aid Capacity Building	—	—	100	100
Total expenditure	649	351	400	1,402

Kosovo

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about her Department's involvement in the planned reconstruction of Kosovo. [88115]

Clare Short: The European Union, with the support of the World Bank, will assume the lead role in the reconstruction of Kosovo within the overall UN-led civil implementation structure. We are in close touch with all the international agencies, as well as bilateral donors, concerned with reconstruction.

The European Union and World Bank, who have set up a joint headquarters in Brussels, are coordinating damage and needs assessment and will be organising a series of donor conferences over the coming months to mobilise the necessary international effort to help reconstruct Kosovo.

We are working to ensure that the arrangements for managing EU assistance are effective and allow programmes to be implemented speedily. We are also seeking to ensure that the World Bank plays as wide a role in reconstruction as the legal status of Kosovo will allow.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people were employed by the Child Support Agency Independent Case Examiner in each of the past three years; [87575]

(2) how many cases have been dealt with by the Child Support Agency Independent Case Examiner in each of the past three years; [87573]

(3) what was the average time taken by the Child Support Agency Independent Case Examiner to conclude each case referred to him in the past three years; [87574]

(4) what plans there are to review the role and responsibility of the Child Support Agency Independent Case Examiner. [87576]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Jim Murphy, dated 23 June 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Independent Case Examiner.

I have answered three of your questions by presenting the information in table format annexed to this letter.

Table 1 shows the numbers of staff employed by the Independent Case Examiner (ICE). Senior management grades and the Independent Case Examiner herself are included in the category of investigation staff. The ICE Office began its work on 7 April 1997 but staff were recruited and receiving training from the preceding February.

Table 2 shows the intake of cases for two complete years of operation. It breaks down the number dealt with to those which received a full investigation and those which were rejected. When a complaint is received, the issues are identified and ICE check that the case can be accepted. If, for example, the Child Support Agency's complaints procedures have not been exhausted ICE will reject the case.

The rise in figures might at first sight suggest a deterioration in CSA customer service, however, this can be attributed to the legitimately rising workloads coupled with rising awareness of ICE following the launch of the first ICE Annual Report in September 1998 which generated a great deal of media interest and new work. September 1998 was the highest intake for ICE in a single month.

Table 3 gives the average time taken to carry out an investigation and report findings. A process was introduced in 1998/99 which allows appropriate cases to be identified and referred to the Child Support Agency for early resolution of the problem by taking prompt action. Thus negating the need for a full investigation by ICE. One effect of this initiative is to lengthen the average time taken to resolve those complaints where early resolution proved impossible and full investigation was needed.

In your fourth question you asked what plans there are to review the role and responsibility of the ICE. The post of Independent Case Examiner is a three year, fee paid, contract with the Department of Social Security, with the possibility of renewal by mutual consent. The three-year period for Mrs Parker does not expire until February 2000. Any announcements about this will be made to Parliament in the normal way.

The ICE acts as an impartial referee and conducts investigations into cases where CSA customers feel that they have been badly treated by the Agency. The ICE makes recommendations on redress, whether that takes the form of an apology, or financial compensation, and also makes recommendations on how the Agency might improve its administrative systems for the benefit of customers. The ICE role does not extend to investigating complaints relating to Child Support legislation, or those which have undergone, or are undergoing, investigation by the PCA.

There are also certain criteria that need to be satisfied for a complainant to obtain the services of the ICE. The ICE will only take on a case if the Agency's own complaints procedures have been exhausted, and the complainant has received a letter from, or on behalf of, myself in response to their complaint, within the last 6 months.

I hope you find this helpful.

Table 1: Number of staff employed by ICE

Year	Investigation staff	Support staff	Total
1996–97	35	5	40
1997–98	36	5	41
1998–99	34	4	38

Table 2: Intake of cases

	1997–98	1998–99
Number at start of year	0	267
New cases	1,087	1,536
Total	1,087	1,803
Dealt with:
Rejected	616	832
Investigated	204	474
Total dealt with	820	1,306
Carried forward	267	497

Table 3: Average time for investigation and report

weeks

Year	Early resolution	Full report
1997–98	—	17.4
1998–99	17.2	33.6

Note:
These figures should be viewed in conjunction with Table 2 showing increased intake and outputs

Stakeholder Pensions Advisory Group

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in setting up his stakeholder pensions advisory group. [88722]

Mr. Darling: The new stakeholder pensions advisory group will complement the formal consultation process for stakeholder pensions. It will draw on the experience of people with day-to-day experience of pensions—including employers and the pensions industry—to help make sure that the detail of stakeholders pensions is right, and that costs for the pensions industry and employers are kept to a minimum.

Members of the group will be: Chair: Tom Ross (Aon Consulting and Scottish Life); large employer: Mark Hodgkinson (Barclays Bank); medium-sized employer: Judy Lever (Blooming Marvellous Ltd.); small employer: Ken Lewis (Dutton Engineering); insurance industry: Adrian Boulding (Legal & General); occupational pension scheme: David Morgan (CMT); independent financial adviser: Terry Bennet (PIFC); union fund: Joanne Segars (TUC); trust manager: Dugald Eadie (Hendersons).

Housing Benefit Claimants (Rent)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for how many current recipients of housing benefit their eligible rent is below the actual rent which they pay because of (i) the single room rent rules, (ii) the average reference rent rules and (iii) either of the above; and, in each case, what is the average amount by which the eligible rent falls short of the actual rent paid. [87778]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. We do not centrally collect information of individuals' contractual rent because it will commonly include items not eligible for Housing Benefit.

The measures which limit the rent for Housing Benefit purposes are:

certain service charges included in the contractual rent which are not generally eligible for Housing Benefit, for example, charges for cleaning, laundry, fuel, meals and personal care and nursing;

the range of determinations, including determinations of single room rents, made by rent officers in respect of most claims from tenants living in the private rented sector; and where local authorities consider that the rent is unreasonably high or the accommodation overlarge or the eligible rent is nonetheless too high in respect of a particular case.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the existing pension schemes with charges at or below one per cent. to which he referred in his press statement of 2 June; and if he will make a statement on whether these schemes meet the other proposed requirements of stakeholder pensions. [86459]

Mr. Darling: I have written to the hon. Member today in response to his question. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

Poverty Audit Index

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to establish and publish the Poverty Audit Index. [87087]

Angela Eagle: We will publish the first annual report on tackling poverty and social exclusion later this year.

Incapacity and Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women have claimed (i) invalidity benefit and (ii) incapacity benefit in each year since 1991. [87589]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

The number of spells of Invalidity Benefit[1] (1991–92 to 1994–95) and Incapacity Benefit[2] short-term higher rate and long-term rate (the equivalent of Invalidity Benefit) (1995–96 to 1997–98) that commenced during each statistical year

	Men	Women
1991–92	233,000	90,000
1992–93	239,000	98,000
1993–94	242,000	106,000
1994–95	232,000	109,000
1995–96	174,000	97,000
1996–97	179,000	104,800
1997–98	182,000	104,000

[1] Invalidity Benefit from 1991–92 to 1994–95.

[2] Incapacity Benefit at the short-term higher and long-term rates (the equivalent of Invalidity Benefit) from 1995–96 to 1997–98.

Notes:

1. It is possible for a person to have more than one spell of benefit during a year.
2. Figures are from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

HEALTH

Yellow Card Scheme

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to take to increase the awareness of the yellow card scheme among medical and dental practitioners. [86157]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) continue to investigate methods to increase the awareness of the yellow card scheme among medical and dental practitioners.

A survey of general practitioners was recently undertaken and consideration is currently being given to the findings. Steps that have already been taken or are planned include:

Education:

A forthcoming edition of "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" will include a special feature on what happens to reports of suspected adverse reactions and how they help to protect public health.

The MCA and CSM representation and presentations at conferences attended by doctors and pharmacists.

Encouraging Medical Schools to include adverse drug reactions and promote an understanding of the methods of drug safety monitoring as core parts of the curriculum.

Publication of articles in medical and pharmaceutical journals.

Making yellow cards more widely available and easier to use and introducing alternative reporting methods eg fax, phone and electronic.

An electronic yellow card that automatically populates the fields of a pre-formatted yellow card and allows the GP to send the report directly to the MCA via a modem is already in use by a number of GPs.

Improving feedback on the scheme, including changing the format and content of the bulletin "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" and the MCA and CSM internet homepages.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what maintenance checks are made on refurbished NHS wheelchairs before they are despatched to disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [87571]

Mr. Hutton: National Health Service Supplies arranges contracts on behalf of NHS trusts for the repair, modification and maintenance of wheelchairs.

Rehabilitation engineers are employed by NHS trusts and among their duties carry out checks on a representative batch of the work completed by the repairers. If the batch inspected fails to meet the standard required, the whole consignment is rejected and has to be reprocessed by the repairer.

Nurses (Costs)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average daily cost to the NHS of employing nursing staff through private employment agencies, at each grade; and if he will make a statement; [87425]

(2) what is the average daily cost of nursing staff employed directly by the NHS, at each grade; and if he will make a statement. [87426]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Insulin Pen Needles

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects pen needles used by insulin-dependent diabetics to be available free of charge; and if he will make a statement. [87641]

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make an announcement concerning the prescribing of insulin pen needles; and if he will make a statement. [87644]

Mr. Denham: We have received representations from most of the organisations consulted. We are considering them, and are seeking clarification on certain points before we make our final decisions.

ME

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress made by the working group on ME. [87872]

Mr. Hutton: The chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis working group, supported by a sub group looking at children's issues and a wider reference group, is making good progress and remains on target to report to the Chief Medical Officer by the end of next year.

Cloning

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Government response to the Joint Human Genetics Advisory Commission and Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority report, "Cloning Issues in Reproduction, Science and Medicine", to be published. [88432]

Ms Jowell: The Government's response to the joint Human Genetics Advisory Commission (HGAC) and Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) report, "Cloning Issues in Reproduction, Science and Medicine" has today been placed in the Library.

Following public consultation, the joint HFEA/HGAC report's recommendations included the proposal that consideration be given to regulations under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 to allow research for therapeutic purposes which involved cloning techniques.

The Government reaffirm their policy that human reproductive cloning is ethically unacceptable and cannot take place in this country. Also, more evidence is needed of the potential benefits to human health before the use of cloning for therapeutic purposes is allowed in research. We recognise that regulations to allow therapeutic research should be very carefully considered. We believe, however, that more evidence is required of the need for such research, its potential benefits and risks and that account should be taken of alternative approaches that might achieve the same ends.

That is why we have asked the Chief Medical Officer, Professor Liam Donaldson, to set up and chair an independent expert advisory group to seek the views of a range of experts, both here and abroad, so that we have a clearer idea of the potential benefits of such research for human health.

We expect it will begin work during the summer and report its findings to Ministers early next year.

We welcome the HGAC/HFEA report's recognition that the safeguards currently in place are wholly adequate to prevent human reproductive cloning in the United Kingdom, and that the Government's policy of forbidding this practice received support during the public consultation.

The Government accept the report's recommendations that the adequacy of the safeguards and related issues should be kept under review in order to address public concerns about the rapidity of development in these areas at the cutting edge of science and medicine.

NHS Procurement

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to modernise NHS procurement. [88643]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is today publishing the report of a Cabinet Office Review of NHS Procurement which sets out a range of recommendations to develop NHS procurement.

Copies have been placed in the Library. We have accepted the broad thrust of these recommendations and the Department of Health, NHS Trusts, and the NHS Supplies Authority will now start to put in place the new arrangements to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of purchasing and supply in the NHS.

A key recommendation was to establish a Supplies Co-ordination Body, drawn from the existing NHS Supplies Authority purchasing and strategy functions to provide a stronger central focus for procurement work. We are announcing today our intention to establish a NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency from 1 April 2000 to take this work forward in the Department of Health.

Waiting Times

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the waiting times are for orthopaedic (i) initial consultation and (ii) operations in (a) Dorset, (b) Somerset and (c) Bristol; and if he will make a statement on the procedures for the referral of a patient for an operation to a hospital outside his health authority area. [88020]

Mr. Denham: The latest information available on inpatient and outpatient orthopaedic waiting times in Avon, Dorset and Somerset Health Authorities is shown in the tables:

Percentage

	Avon	Dorset	Somerset
Waiting time for trauma and orthopaedic inpatients—Quarter 4 1998–99
0–5 months	57	100	70
6–11 months	34	0	25
12–17 months	9	0	5
18 months plus	0	0	0
Waiting time for trauma and orthopaedic outpatients—Quarter 4 1998–99
0–3 weeks	25	20	20
4–12 weeks	30	46	29
13–25 weeks	19	32	29
26 weeks plus	26	2	22

Under the new arrangements for commissioning patient services, general practitioners and consultants will retain the clinical freedom to refer patients for the most appropriate treatment and will base their decision on their professional judgment and assessment of the case.

Where there are consistent patterns of referrals to a service, whether a specialised service or more locally, these are being built into service agreements. Cases that do not fit this will be covered by the new arrangements for out of area treatments. Unlike the extra contractual referral arrangements, there is no formal prior approval mechanism for out of area treatments, so the process for such referrals is simpler.

All out of area treatment referrals will be covered by the standards for quality and effectiveness specified in the main commissioner's service agreement and will be treated under the same agreements and on exactly the same basis.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Press Releases

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of pages issued as press releases from his Department for 16 and 17 June; and if he will make a statement. [87973]

Mr. Mudie: The Department issued nine Press Releases consisting of 29 pages.

Age Diversity

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means he plans to monitor the effectiveness of the recently published code of practice for age diversity in employment. [87855]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We plan to evaluate fully the effectiveness of the Code of Practice for Age Diversity. The evaluation will look in detail at employer policies and practices in recruitment and employment and the impact this has on age diversity in their workforce. After a competitive tendering exercise, we have commissioned an independent organisation, NOP, to carry out a large scale research project to help evaluate the effectiveness of the Code.

An employer survey will involve telephone interviews with a random sample of companies employing 10 or more people. The sample will provide a good coverage of different industrial sectors, regions and size of employers. There will also be in-depth case studies in order to explore practices and attitudes towards age discrimination in employment in more detail and to discuss the issues with managers and workers at the establishment.

In addition, a random sample of older people will be interviewed on their current situation and their employment experiences and on whether they have experienced any employment discrimination on grounds of age.

In order to provide a baseline against which to measure change, an initial survey or employers and individuals has been carried out prior to the publication of the Code. Two further surveys will be carried out, towards the end of this year and in late Autumn 2000 to measure the impact of the Code. The evaluation will be completed and findings published early in 2001.

We will also be using the range of key labour market indicators that we set out in Annex E of Action on Age to monitor changes and trends in the labour market activity of older workers. These will be published annually in June/July.

Expelled Pupils

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many year 11, 10 and 9 pupils were expelled from schools in London and the South East in 1997–98. [87856]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of permanent exclusions for pupils aged 15, 14 and 13 is shown in the following table:

Academic year 1997–98 (age as at August 1997)

	15	14	13
Inner London	106	174	147
Outer London	250	349	249
London (Total)	356	523	396
South East	355	513	355
Total (London and South East)	711	1,036	751

This total represents a significant reduction from the 1996–97 year when 757 pupils aged fifteen, 1,070 pupils aged fourteen and 847 pupils aged thirteen were permanently excluded from schools in London and the South East.

Rainsford School, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 21 May 1999, Official Report, column 475, when he expects to reach a decision on the appeal made by Rainsford School, Chelmsford, against the direction of Essex County Council to admit a pupil, whose name has been supplied to his Department. [88081]

Ms Estelle Morris: Officials have now received the necessary information from Essex LEA and are drawing up advice for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to make his final decision on the case shortly.

EU Education Council

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the outcome of the Council of EU Education Ministers held on 7 June. [88573]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 7 June, the Council of EU Education Ministers held an exchange of views on the preparations for the implementation of the new EC education and training programmes Leonardo da Vinci II and Socrates II. Ministers also discussed the contribution of education to the European Employment Pact and Forward Planning in the field of education.

Ministers received information on the Conference of European Education Ministers in Budapest from 24 to 26 June 1991, and on the Conference of EU Higher Education Ministers which will take place in Bologna on 18 and 19 June. No formal decisions were taken.

A copy of the official minutes of the Council will be placed in the Library when they become available.

School Standards and Framework Act 1998

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to consult on draft regulations under section 38 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. [88572]

Ms Estelle Morris: These are significant regulations on which it will be important to have the widest debate. The Education Sub-Committee of the Education and Employment Select Committee is conducting an Inquiry into the Role of Governing Bodies, taking evidence from governing body, head teacher and other interests. As the Inquiry is expected to be completed before the summer recess, I have written to the Chairman of the Sub Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North (Mr. Wicks), to inform him that we plan to consult on the regulations in September 1999 to enable account to be taken of the Inquiry's recommendations. Copies of my letter have been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions when special advisers in his Department have travelled abroad in an official capacity accompanied by Ministers; and if he will give the total travel cost of each occasion and the place visited. [82431]

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what dates special advisers from his Department have travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the special advisers who travelled abroad on each occasion. [87410]

Mr. Prescott: In the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999, Special Advisers in my Department have accompanied Ministers overseas in an official capacity on 36 occasions to Asia and the Far East, Australasia, the USA, South America and mainland Europe. The total cost of travel and any hotel accommodation is £68,500. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

A303(T)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about progress towards construction on the A303 (T) of (a) the Winterbourne Stoke bypass, (b) the cut-and-cover tunnel past Stonehenge and (c) a flyover at Countess Roundabout. [86846]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The responses to the Public Consultation on these proposals are being considered. An announcement will shortly be made.

Drivers (Licences and Insurance)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the numbers of drivers (a) driving without a full licence and (b) driving without adequate insurance; and what plans he has to reduce these numbers. [87149]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1997 there were 130,500 prosecutions for driving without a licence, 46,000 for driving while disqualified and 48,500 for failing to produce a driving licence. This suggests that in any one year 225,000 people or approximately 0.8 per cent. of drivers are detected driving while unlicensed. We intend, when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs, to introduce legislation to empower police services to have direct access, in defined circumstances, to the driver licensing database so that offences can be more readily detected at the roadside.

It is estimated that between 4 per cent. and 6 per cent. of motorists drive while uninsured, an offence for which 310,500 people were prosecuted during 1997. Plans for a motor insurance database have been drawn up by the insurance industry with the support of my Department. Once implemented, police will be able to check insurance details at the roadside.

Rail Services (Carriage of Bicycles)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss with the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and South West Trains the re-instatement of bicycle carriage on all trains to a minimum of 10 spaces per five car train. [87256]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The franchise agreements which govern the provision of service require train operators to provide facilities for the carriage of bicycles, so far as it is practicable for them to do so and subject to the availability of space on their rolling stock. The only five car trains operated by South West Trains are Wessex Electrics on services from London Waterloo to Southampton–Bournemouth, Weymouth and Poole. These trains can currently carry five bicycles per five car unit in specially designed racks. We have made it clear that one of the key criteria to be considered in any franchise renegotiation will be the commitment to promote Integrated Transport.

Welsh Highland Railway

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to approve the application for an order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 for the reconstruction of the Welsh Highland Railway between Dinas and Porthmadog. [87583]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The application is being given the most careful consideration and I will ensure that my hon. Friend is informed of the outcome.

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998 indicating the dates and locations, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials in each case. [87428]

Mr. Prescott: The information for DETR is as follows:

Date	Location	DETR	Irish Minister
23 February 1998	Dublin	Angela Eagle	Tom Kitt, Minister for Labour, Trade and Consumer Affairs
24–25 April 1998	Chester	Michael Meacher	Noel Dempsey, Minister for the Environment
25 January 1999	London	Glenda Jackson	Mary O'Rourke TD, Minister for Housing
19 February 1999	Dublin	Hilary Armstrong	Robert Molloy, Minister for Housing
25 February 1999	London	Michael Meacher	Joe Jacob, Minister for Agriculture

Relevant officials were also in attendance.

Road Safety (Traffic Speeds)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of how the Slow Down Campaign will benefit vulnerable users of rural roads. [87635]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The DETR is currently engaged in a comprehensive review of speed policy. This will include a full assessment of the measures needed to improve speed management in rural areas and the safety of all road users, particularly the more vulnerable pedestrians, cyclists and equestrians. Officials have met a number of interested parties, including the Slower Speeds Initiative (formerly the Slow Down Campaign).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many crashes on rural roads causing injury were associated with excessive speed, listing the fatalities, serious injuries and slight injuries, in the most recent year for which figures are available. [87634]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The national reporting system for injury road accidents does not specifically record whether an accident took place on a "rural road". However, the 1998 casualty data for accidents which took place on roads with a speed limit in excess of 40 mph are shown in the table.

The contribution of speed to these accidents is not comprehensively recorded, but it is estimated that speed is a contributory factor in one third of road accidents on all roads.

Casualties on non built-up roads: GB 1998

Severity	Casualties
Fatal	1,855
Serious	14,321
Slight	71,882
All severities	88,058

Note:
Roads with a speed limit in excess of 40 mph with the exception of motorways

Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many listed buildings in each category have been destroyed since 1992. [87629]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department records, on a financial year basis, cases where local planning authorities in England notify the Department that they intend to grant consent for the total demolition of a listed building, consents which the Department itself issues, and other total demolitions which are brought to our attention. Since the House of Lords judgment in the case of Shimizu (UK) Ltd. v. Westminster City Council, the demolition of a curtilage building is likely to be treated as an alteration and hence is no longer included in the demolition statistics from 1997–98. The figures for the last seven years are:

Year	Grade I	*Grade II	Grade II
1992–93	0	0	68
1993–94	0	2	62
1994–95	1	12	79
1995–96	2	0	49
1996–97	1	5	55
1997–98	0	2	56
1998–99	0	0	50

Records are not kept centrally on the extent to which consents are implemented.

Recycling

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measures he is taking to encourage recycling by (a) local authorities, (b) businesses and (c) individuals; [87950]

(2) what measures he is taking to encourage a market for recycled products with particular reference to paper; [87951]

(3) what measures he is taking to encourage the use of recycled products. [87952]

Mr. Meale: In July 1998 the Government established a Market Development Group to consider the measures that could be taken to enhance the markets for recycled materials, including paper, and to develop proposals to help overcome any barriers. The Group considered a range of measures, including the use of economic instruments; quality standards and specifications for recycled goods and materials; the concept of eco-design; whether longer term contracts for the sale of recyclable materials might be helpful; and whether it is desirable to set mandatory levels of recycled content for specified goods.

The Group has now finished its work and its report and recommendations for action will be published for consultation at the same time as the draft waste strategy.

Wembley

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with English Partnerships about the regeneration of Wembley around the new English National Stadium. [87792]

Mr. Raynsford: English Partnerships, LB Brent, the English Stadium Trust and Development Company, Sports England and the Government Office for London have jointly sponsored a comprehensive regeneration framework for Wembley. This work is shortly to be completed and in its next stage involves an area masterplan running in parallel with the design of the stadium and intended to secure a significant upgrade in Wembley's economic and physical environment.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with local police and transport police about passenger safety and crowd control at Wembley Park, Wembley Central and Wembley Stadium stations. [87788]

Mr. Raynsford: Wembley's ability to handle large crowds through its public transport infrastructure was central to its successful bid for the new National Stadium. Issues of passenger safety and crowd control are a matter for the long standing and successful liaison arrangements between the stadium operator, local police, London Transport and other rail operators.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to ensure that the quality of the built environment surrounding the new English National Stadium is adequate to accommodate international events. [87790]

Mr. Raynsford: This is a matter for the London Borough of Brent as local planning authority in the first instance. Their unitary development plan contains policies to protect and enhance the built environment around the Stadium which they will apply to the planning application for the Stadium when it is made and those for other development proposals as they come forward.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to ensure that the redevelopment of Wembley Stadium brings economic benefits to the local area. [87845]

Mr. Raynsford: The Wembley Park Regeneration Partnership between local public and private sector interests was formed for just this purpose. The Partnership has secured Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund support of £15,255,000, towards an overall £137 million seven year programme of infrastructure and training/employment initiatives in the Business Park surrounding the Stadium. The programme commenced in April 1996.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the applicability of lessons learned from the regeneration at Greenwich to the regeneration of Wembley. [87793]

Mr. Raynsford: There are distinct differences between the Greenwich Peninsula and the development context at Wembley; not least in the depth and extent of contaminated land and pre-existing levels of transport provision. We are keen however that appropriate lessons from both Greenwich and other key London Regeneration sites are incorporated into the Wembley solution.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Sport England and the local planning authority on the capacity of the public transport infrastructure around the new English National Stadium. [87789]

Mr. Raynsford: Wembley's successful bid for the National Stadium was based on the adequacy of its local transport infrastructure. The impact of the Stadium on this infrastructure will turn both on detailed design which will not be unveiled until mid summer, and the substance of the planning application to the London Borough of Brent, which I understand will not be made until October. In the meantime I am a member of the Stadium Development Monitoring Committee, which is the natural focus for visitor management issues, and at which Sport England are represented.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Government Office for London about the SRB5 bid for Wembley submitted by the London Borough of Brent; and on what dates. [87794]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning met with GOL officials and the London Development Partnership on 14 June to discuss all London bids in the current SRB round.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), has to visit Wembley to inspect the public transport infrastructure around the new English National Stadium. [87791]

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend has been invited by the London Borough of Brent to visit the area in early July. No itinerary has yet been finalised but there may well be an opportunity to visit the Stadium environs.

Liquid Petroleum Gas

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what grants are available towards the cost of converting private motor vehicles to be able to use liquid petroleum gas. [87959]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme, funded by my Department, provides grants towards the cost of converting new vehicles (up to one year old) to run on alternative fuels, such as liquid petroleum gas. The value of the grant, which can cover up to 75 per cent. of the conversion costs, is determined by the improvement in emission performance as a result of the conversion. To date, the Powershift programme which is targeted at fleet operators has assisted in the purchase of over 1,000 vehicles.

Voluntary Sports Clubs

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 245, on voluntary sports clubs, what was the outcome of the review into rate relief for non-profit making sports clubs; and if he will make a statement. [87874]

Mr. Meale: We are making good progress with the review of the arrangements under which local authorities may grant relief from non-domestic rates to non-profit making sports clubs and will issue a consultation paper later in the year.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many hours HSE inspectors have spent undertaking field inspections of genetically modified trial crop sites for each month since October 1997. [87602]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 June 1999]: Over the period in question, on average, HSE has devoted 75 inspector hours per month to inspection and enforcement on GM trial sites under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1997 (as amended) as required by the agency agreement with DETR. The detailed figures requested are given in the following table, up to April 1999, which is the most recently available information.

	Inspection hours
1997
October	58.8
November	75.6
December	92.4
1998
January	105.2
February	79.8
March	86.5
April	71.4
May	56.7
June	132
July	118
August	16.8
September	153.3
October	109.2
November	79.8
December	75.6
1999
January	42.3
February	21
March	0
April	58.8

Transport Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the Transport Council held in Luxembourg on 17 to 18 June; and if he will make a statement. [87977]

Mrs. Liddell: The Transport Council met in Luxembourg on 17 June. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council expressed its condolences to the French and Austrian transport Ministers following the recent fatal fires in the Mont Blanc and Tauern Tunnels. The Presidency said that, during the coming months, the Council would be considering recommendations on tunnel safety, in accord with the remit of the European Council in Cologne.

The Council agreed a common position on a draft Directive aimed at avoiding pollution at sea by ensuring that ships discharge their waste while they are in port into properly planned and adequate waste reception facilities.

A common position was agreed on an amendment to the guidelines on transport Trans-European Networks (TENs), to clarify the eligibility of sea and inland ports for TENs funding.

The Council agreed a Resolution giving its support to the definition phase of the Galileo satellite navigation project. Ministers agreed that the Council should maintain oversight of this work, and at my request the Resolution included an instruction to the Commission to present the results to the Council as soon as they are available, to allow early consideration of the validity of the project and of its advantages compared with current systems and their developments. The Council agreed to my suggestion that the Commission should in any case present a further report to the October Council.

The Council agreed a Resolution expressing concern about growing air traffic delays. I expressed concern about the inconvenience caused to business and leisure travellers and stressed the need to ensure that the powers in EUROCONTROL's new Convention were implemented and properly used to improve the situation.

The Council took note of reports by Member States on action they are taking to deal with the Year 2000 computer problem in their transport sectors, and agreed to return to the issue at the October Council. The Commission undertook to convene a high-level group to consider whether additional action was needed at Community level.

I joined others at the Council in suggesting that it is time for further progress to be made on EU rail liberalisation. At the end of the debate no agreement was reached, and the Presidency asked for further work to be done.

Under other business, the Council heard reports from the Commission on its negotiations towards Community membership of EUROCONTROL and the proposed new European Aviation Safety Authority. The Commission also reported on: the successful outcome of the renegotiation of the Warsaw Convention, which brings air passenger liability rights in line with Community rules; the establishment of a high-level group to prepare for an "innovation forum", as requested by the informal Transport Council at Dortmund; and the proposed allocation of quotas for lorry transit traffic through Switzerland.

Out-of-town Stores

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Government policy towards planning applications for out-of-town stores. [88119]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's policy toward out-of-town retail development is set out in our Response to the House of Commons Environment Committee report on Shopping Centres [Cmnd 3729], which reaffirmed our commitment to Planning Policy Guidance note 6 (PPG6): Town Centres and Retail Developments. Further clarification of PPG6 was given in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, West and Hessle (Mr. Johnson) on 11 February 1999, Official Report, columns 309–10.

Walking

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of journeys were on foot in the most recent year for which data are available. [88162]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1995–97, 28 per cent. of journeys in Great Britain were on foot.

Urban Task Force Report

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Urban Task Force report will be published. [88448]

Mr. Prescott: The Urban Task Force report will be published at 10.30 am on Tuesday 29 June. Copies of the Report and the Executive Summary will be placed in the Vote Office and the Library.

Rail Performance

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's latest assessment of trends in rail performance. [88571]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department has today published the latest quarterly Bulletin of Rail Statistics, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Comparing the fourth quarter of 1998–99 with the fourth quarter of 1997–98, punctuality fell from 93.3 per cent. to 92.5 per cent. This is an unacceptable decline in performance. At the Rail Summit in February this year, rail companies agreed to improve performance year on year.

A calculation error made in 1996 means that the figures for national average punctuality have previously been understated. This does not affect the percentage punctuality figures that have been published for individual operating companies. The reliability figures are also unaffected.

However, current measures, including the corrected figures in this Bulletin, remain misleading. They are derived from Passenger Charter statistics, which do not cover all services and allow operators to disregard days ("void days") on which performance is very bad. The shadow Strategic Rail Authority are currently consulting on an improved measure of punctuality and reliability to be finalised this Autumn.

Punctuality is just one of a number of factors considered important by passengers. The new National Passenger Survey will ensure that all major passenger concerns will be monitored for each TOC. This will allow precise identification of areas for improvement and give passengers a voice in the running of the railway. First results from the National Passenger Survey will be published by the end of the year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Treasury Counsel (Common Law)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General what (a) representations he made, (b) correspondence he had and (c) meetings he held about (i) the creation of the vacancy for Treasury Counsel (Common Law) in May 1997 and (ii) the filling of the vacancy. [88016]

The Attorney-General: Soon after I was appointed Attorney-General in May 1997, I became aware of the fact that I would need to appoint a new First Treasury Counsel (Common Law) relatively soon as, although it was a matter for the Lord Chancellor, I believed that the then incumbent might be appointed as a High Court judge shortly. The then Solicitor-General and I consulted widely, in meetings between May and November 1997, with members of the senior judiciary, the Treasury Solicitor's Department and others who could assist us in reaching a view as to who should be appointed as the next First Treasury Counsel (Common Law). I appointed Philip Sales after a meeting with him on 17 November 1997.

My Department had correspondence with the Treasury Solicitor's Department on the subject and latterly with the Lord Chancellor's Department so that the announcement of the judicial appointment could be synchronised with the announcement of Mr. Sales' appointment.

Hayes v. Attorney-General

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library copies of the witness statements disclosed by the respondent in the case of Hayes v. Attorney General. [88017]

The Attorney-General: No. The statements are subject to legal professional privilege.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the documents disclosed by the respondent in the case of Hayes v. Attorney General and place copies in the Library. [88018]

The Attorney-General: No. The documents were disclosed to the applicant only for the purposes of the proceedings in the employment tribunal, where the interests of justice required their disclosure. Many of the documents contain information about third parties which was imparted to me and to others in confidence. I believe that it would be inappropriate to disclose them further. It was not necessary to compile a list of the documents disclosed in the case and to publish a full list now would also breach the confidences referred to above.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine TB

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response the Government have made to recommendation 69 of the Standing Committee to the Bern Convention regarding TB and badgers. [88644]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Government submitted a formal response to this recommendation on 12 April. A copy has been placed in the House Libraries.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the closure of the TA base in Caernarfon was announced; and if he will make a statement on the consultation carried out prior to the decision. [82268]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 27 April 1999]: The Territorial Army (TA) Centre in Caernarfon will remain open as the home of Company 3 Caernarfon Detachment, the Royal Welsh Regiment. This was announced on 17 November 1998. The plan was included, but not challenged, during the extensive rounds of consultation with the Army, TA and TAVRAs, held before decisions were taken in November.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to encourage recruitment to the Territorial Army. [87876]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Territorial Army units continue to recruit locally to meet the overall target of some 10,000 recruits for this year. A national campaign to raise awareness of the TA and to attract recruits was run in February/March of this year involving the press, TV and a National Open Day. This was designed to show that the TA is maintaining its recruitment effort throughout the reform process. A further national campaign specifically aimed at recruiting into the Royal Army Medical Corps is planned for the autumn.

HMS Newcastle

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (i) current crew size and (ii) establishment of HMS Newcastle; and if he will make a statement. [86379]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The ship's company of HMS Newcastle on 11 June 1999 was 215 and her complement 226.

HMS Monmouth

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the long term future of HMS Monmouth. [86384]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On current plans HMS Monmouth will remain operational for the foreseeable future.

HMS Birmingham

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the short-term and long-term future of (a) HMS Birmingham and (b) HMS London; and if he will make a statement. [86374]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS London was decommissioned earlier this month. HMS Birmingham is currently on operational duty and is expected to be decommissioned later this year.

HMS Beaver

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) operational state and (b) future of HMS Beaver; and if he will make a statement. [86373]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMS Beaver was decommissioned earlier this year and has since been placed on the disposal list.

Helicopters (Royal Family)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances Chinook helicopters are made available by his Department for travel by the Royal Family. [87783]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Royal Family's rotary wing air travel requirements are normally met by a dedicated Sikorsky S76C+ operated by the Royal Household or else by chartered helicopter. However, RAF

Support Helicopters, including the Chinook, are available to transport members of the Royal Family if required, subject to other operational requirements.

Gambia

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what talks have taken place between British Military personnel and the Chief of Staff of the Gambian armed forces in recent months; and what was the purpose of the talks. [87948]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Two British military officers visited Gambia in May this year. The purpose of the visit was primarily fact finding, but also to make contact with the Gambian military. During the visit the British officers paid a call on the Chief of Staff of the Gambian armed forces, Colonel Jatta. Discussions covered regional peacekeeping matters.

Submarine Spent Nuclear Fuel Cores

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of submarine spent nuclear fuel cores that have been transported to Sellafield in each of the last 10 years. [87706]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 June 1999]: The number of spent submarine fuel cores that have been transported to BNFL Sellafield for long term storage in each of the last 10 years was:

Year	Fuel cores
1989	1
1990	2
1991	1
1992	1
1993	0
1994	1
1995	3½
1996	3
1997	½
1998	1
1999 (to date)	1

These figures are rounded to the nearest ½ reactor fuel core. Each "NTL3M" transport container will carry a number of individual components equivalent to ¼ of a submarine reactor fuel core.

NATO Peacekeeping Force (Young Soldiers)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in relation to the deployment of under 18 year olds from British armed forces in the international peace force in Kosovo. [87976]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Ms Jones) on 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1161, in which I stated that Service personnel would no longer be deployed if under 17 years of age. That policy applies to the operations currently underway in Kosovo.

Greenwich Hospital

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the annual financial estimates and accounts for Greenwich Hospital. [88574]

Mr. Spellar: Greenwich Hospital is a Crown charity, of which my right hon. Friend is the sole trustee. It derives all its income from its property and investments and applies it for the benefit of seafarers and their dependants. I am today laying before Parliament copies of the audited accounts for Greenwich Hospital for 1997–98. Following an undertaking given during the passage of the Greenwich Hospital Bill in 1967 by the then Under-Secretary of State for the Navy (Mr. Foley) it has been the practice also to place in the Library of both Houses copies of the annual financial estimates for Greenwich Hospital which, nowadays, are prepared solely for this purpose. This practice no longer serves a useful purpose, given the more informative published financial accounts, and I have therefore decided to discontinue it.

Tomahawk Missiles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to replace stocks of Tomahawk missiles used in the Kosovo theatre; what contracts exist with the United States for replacement of Tomahawk stocks; and if he will make a statement. [87829]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 24 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about proposals for the replacement of stocks of TOMAHAWK missiles used in the Kosovo theatre, and contracts with the United States for replacement of TOMAHAWK stocks. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The arrangements for obtaining replacement TOMAHAWK missiles for those expended in the Kosovo campaign are being discussed with the US government. The US government is approaching these discussions in a positive manner but I am unable to provide further details at present.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) total expenditure by his Department on Tomahawk missiles from the United States and (b) average cost of each missile, including support costs. [87831]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley, to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 24 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Ministry of Defence's total expenditure on TOMAHAWK missiles from the United States and the average cost of each missile, including support costs. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Total expenditure on the procurement of Tomahawk missiles, under the current Foreign Military Sales case with the US, is to be some £52M. The average procurement cost per missile is just over £800K. In addition each missile is likely to need two planned refurbishments at a cost of £210K per refurbishment, but no such payments will be incurred for missiles which have been expended.

Missile costs make up only a part of the overall cost of procuring the Tomahawk system. Overall costs include the procurement of the missiles, test and training systems, submarine weapon handling, and fire control systems, and provision of a mission planning and targeting facility.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tomahawk missiles were (a) available for use by the British armed forces and (b) in stock on (i) 20 March and (ii) 16 June. [87833]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding the detailed information you requested under Section 1a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Sufficient Tomahawk missiles were available throughout the conflict to enable the UK to maintain its significant contribution to the successful NATO campaign.

Defence Aviation Repair Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress made with setting up the Defence Aviation Repair Agency. [87830]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Aviation Repair Agency (DARA) came into being on 1 April this year and I had the pleasure of attending the Agency's Launch Day on 7 April 1999 at St. Athan. DARA has been formed by merging the former Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation with elements of the RAF's Maintenance Group Defence Agency and provides MOD's deep maintenance (third line) capability for fixed and rotary wing aircraft. The Ministerial Advisory Board, which I chair, has approved the DARA's Corporate Plan which is now being implemented. This includes moving to Trading Fund status in due course.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to renegotiate the RAF repair, overhaul modification and upgrade contracts held by private companies once responsibility for such contracts is transferred to the new Defence Aviation Repair Agency; which RAF repair, overhaul, modification and upgrade contracts are currently under review; and if he will make a statement. [87832]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has no plans to renegotiate or review these contracts as a result of the launch of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency (DARA) and no responsibility for the administration of such contracts is being passed to the Agency.

TA Deployment

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Territorial Army are currently deployed on operations in (a) Kosovo, (b) Bosnia and (c) Germany. [88128]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 300. There are currently no members of the Territorial Army deployed to Germany.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 148, if he will place in the Library the March 1999 paper produced by his Department's Gulf Veterans' Illness Unit in respect of testing for the presence of depleted uranium. [87834]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Copies of the detailed paper entitled "Testing for the Presence of Depleted Uranium in UK Veterans of the Gulf Conflict: The Current Position" were placed in the Library of the House when it was published on 19 March 1999.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 146, on depleted uranium, by what means service personnel can identify a vehicle damaged by depleted uranium ammunition; and if he will make a statement. [87835]

Mr. George Robertson: If Service personnel must, for operational reasons, approach damaged vehicles, they will visually examine the vehicle to identify if the damage is consistent with depleted uranium calibre ammunition. However, Service personnel are instructed not to approach any damaged vehicles unless operationally necessary, due to the wide variety of dangers they present.

WALES

Gwrych Castle

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the condition of Gwrych Castle; and if he will make a statement. [87987]

Mr. Michael: Since June 1997 I have received letters on six occasions (from three sources) expressing concern about the deteriorating condition of Gwrych Castle. It is privately owned but the ownership is presently subject to legal dispute. When this has been resolved, Cadw:Welsh Historic monuments would be willing to consider grant assistance towards a project to repair the fabric of this Grade 1 listed building.

Following the transfer of functions, CADW will be responsible to the National Assembly.

Education Budgets

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the education budgets for each county in Wales for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000, indicating the additional allocations of ring-fenced education funding from central Government. [87985]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is given in the following table.

Local authority education budgets

£000

	Budget 1998–99	Budget 1999–2000	Local authority share of earmarked funding 1998–99	1999–2000
Isle of Anglesey	28,906	30,755	1,196	1,689
Gwynedd	47,433	50,045	1,979	2,833
Conwy	40,172	42,388	1,651	2,407
Denbighshire	36,711	37,732	1,554	2,233
Flintshire	59,366	62,705	2,417	3,494
Wrexham	46,783	49,392	1,904	2,737
Powys	55,711	58,850	2,217	3,158
Ceredigion	32,580	34,325	1,234	1,747

Local authority education budgets

£000

	Budget 1998–99	Budget 1999–2000	Local authority share of earmarked funding 1998–99	Local authority share of earmarked funding 1999–2000
Pembrokeshire	50,340	53,410	1,986	2,853
Carmarthenshire	75,554	81,158	2,942	4,165
Swansea	90,124	93,102	3,588	5,142
Neath Port Talbot	60,023	63,616	2,224	3,215
Bridgend	54,499	57,682	2,198	3,155
Vale of Glamorgan	45,366	47,707	1,961	2,833
Cardiff	117,464	124,672	4,868	7,189
Rhondda Cynon Taff	108,752	114,760	4,208	6,014
Merthyr Tydfil	28,401	29,991	1,114	1,571
Caerphilly	73,246	78,797	3,055	4,404
Blaenau Gwent	30,587	32,087	1,214	1,762
Torfaen	39,309	41,784	1,654	2,380
Monmouthshire	31,377	32,788	1,281	1,864
Newport	59,228	62,340	2,323	3,356
Wales	1,211,932	1,280,086	48,767	70,201

Net of all education specific grants and excluding all continuing education and payments to the Further and Higher Education Funding Councils

Source:

Local authority revenue account returns

This will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales from 1 July 1999.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Law Reform

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the timetable for the implementation of outstanding Law Commission recommendations for law reform. [87781]

Mr. Vaz: The Government will assess the priority for legislation implementing Law Commission recommendations in the context of the legislative programme as a whole.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for legislation to implement outstanding Law Commission reports on law reform. [87780]

Mr. Vaz: The Government are considering carefully a number of Law Commission reports. Legislation implementing those Law Commission recommendations, which the Government accept, will be introduced when Parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the savings in costs to public and private funds of the implementation of outstanding Law Commission recommendations over the last four years. [87782]

Mr. Vaz: No such assessment has been made to date. However, under the Better Regulation provisions we will in future be required to make an assessment of the risks, costs and benefits whenever new legislation is published.

Treasury Counsel (Common Law)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) representations he made, (b) correspondence he had and (c) meetings he held about (i) the creation of the vacancy for Treasury Counsel (Common Law) in May 1997 and (ii) the filling of the vacancy. [88019]

Mr. Vaz: None.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Consultation Papers

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make publicly available on a monthly basis a list of Government consultation papers, indicating the title, summary of the proposals, the issue date and the deadline for submissions. [87867]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have no plans to publish a monthly list of Government consultation papers. Each Government department and agency is responsible for publishing its own consultation papers, including a summary of proposals and a deadline for submissions. Last year, the Cabinet Office published a guide on conducting written consultation exercises. This states that departments should publicise the existence of consultation documents (for example through an approximately targeted press release), and wherever possible the internet should be used to publish and receive replies.

Ministerial Visits

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which Ministers have visited the north-west region since May 1997; and which constituencies they visited. [88389]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the pension arrangements for departmental Special Advisers. [87963]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The pension arrangements for Special Advisers are set out in the published Cabinet Office document, "Special Advisers Pay System", which is available in the Libraries of the House.

Special Advisers are not eligible to be members of the Civil Service Pension Scheme, nor do their salaries include any element for pension contribution. Instead, a pension contribution of up to a maximum of 16 per cent. of salary is paid directly into an Adviser's existing or new occupational or personal pension scheme.

TREASURY

Families (Support)

12. Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has put in place to support families. [87068]

Mr. Milburn: The Government have announced an ambitious programme of support for families which will mean that by the end of this Parliament we will be spending an extra £6 billion a year on our 13.8 million children.

Families will benefit from the largest ever increase in Child Benefit—an extra £2.50 a week for the eldest child from this April—and further three per cent. real increases for all children from next April. Together with the introduction of the new Children's Tax Credit in April 2001, a family with one child will receive double the support for their child compared to May 1997—£23 a week. We are also targeting extra support on the poorest families through the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit and increases in IS. On average, £750 more will be going to each of 5.75 million children in low-income households every year by the end of this Parliament. The WFTC will make 1.5 million families on average £24 a week better off, benefiting three million children. It will provide a guaranteed minimum income of £200 a week (£10,400 a year for a family with someone in full-time work on the National Minimum Wage.

These measures combined will lift 700,000 children out of poverty. Families with children will, on average, be £740 a year better off.

English Wine (Duty)

13. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of current duty [illegible] the competitiveness of English wines. [87069]

Mrs. Roche: The Chancellor takes account of the state of all sectors of the alcoholic drinks industry in the run up to the Budget.

EU Withholding Tax

14. Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the proposals for a European withholding tax. [87070]

19. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposal for a council directive to ensure a minimum of effective taxation of savings income in the form of interest payments within the Community. [87075]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government will not accept the draft directive on Savings in its current form because of its likely impact on our financial markets, particularly the Eurobond market. The ECOFIN Council and the European Commission have come to accept our case, agreed a further review and asked us to submit our proposals for excluding the Eurobond market.

We have received a number of representations from both individuals and City Institutions who share our concern to protect the interests of the UK financial markets. We welcome dialogue and are continuing to work closely with the City.

27. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment HM Treasury has made of the effects of the proposed European withholding tax on the financial sector in London. [87084]

Dawn Primarolo: The treatment of international bonds as provided for under the draft European Commission Directive on the taxation of savings risks serious damage to the competitiveness of EU financial markets, in particular wholesale markets. The current draft Directive is therefore unacceptable to the UK.

Public Service Agreements

15. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about Public Service Agreements on key public services. [87071]

Mr. Milburn: We have fulfilled our commitment to publish Public Service Agreements covering all the public services. They set out the concrete improvements to be delivered in return for the extra investment we are making.

Single Currency (Convergence Criteria)

17. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the convergence criteria to be adopted prior to joining the single currency. [87073]

Ms Hewitt: The EC Treaty stresses the need for a

"high degree of sustainable convergence"

in EMU. The Government's fundamental economic test for EMU membership is the same. I have set out five economic tests which must be met before UK membership of the single currency can be considered. Our assessment of those tests concluded that the UK needs a period of stability in order to demonstrate convergence which is settled and sustainable. The Government's new macro-economic framework will help to deliver that stability.

Working Families Tax Credit

18. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of families who will be eligible for the Working Families Tax Credit in its first year of operation. [87074]

Dawn Primarolo: We estimate that 1.4 million families will be eligible for the Working Families Tax Credit in 2000–01, the first full year of operation. These families will on average be £24 a week better off from WFTC alone, or £1,280 a year. Taken together with the reforms to tax, NICs and the largest ever increases in Child Benefit, the WFTC will lift 700,000 children out of poverty.

35. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Working Families Tax Credit. [87093]

Dawn Primarolo: Work is proceeding to plan for the introduction of the Working Families' Tax Credit. From October, this new Tax Credit will provide a guaranteed minimum income of £200 for families with one member in full time work earning the National Minimum Wage.

Third-world Debt

20. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress was made at the G8 summit in Cologne on reducing the debt burden for the world's poorest countries. [87076]

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress was made on debt relief at the Cologne summit. [87081]

Mr. Gordon Brown: At the G7 Finance Ministers Meeting in Frankfurt, I took forward my proposals for faster, deeper and wider debt relief. Agreement was secured at the G8 Summit in Cologne on an initiative which will reduce the debt owed by the poorest countries by $100 billion.

Pensioners (Taxation)

21. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from pensioner organisations concerning tax payments from pensioners' incomes; and if he will make a statement. [87078]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations on income tax matters, including matters relating to pensioners.

VAT (Service Industries)

22. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to raise the VAT threshold for businesses in the service sector. [87079]

Dawn Primarolo: No. A differential threshold for service traders would further complicate the VAT system and create uncertainty, thereby increasing compliance costs for business and administrative costs for Government. Recent consultation on the effect and level of the threshold revealed only minimal support for such a change.

Housebuilding (Brown-field Sites)

23. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce fiscal measures to encourage housebuilding on brown-field sites. [87080]

Mr. Milburn: The Government have no present plans to introduce fiscal measures to encourage housebuilding on brown-field sites. However, the Deputy Prime Minister has announced the Government's desire to see the proportion of new homes provided on brown-field sites increased to 60 per cent. over the next ten years. The Government are considering a wide range of measures to help achieve this target. We will study the recommendations of Lord Rogers' Urban Task Force with great interest; and will publish an Urban White Paper later in the year.

Gold Reserves

25. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the present value in sterling of the United Kingdom's gold reserves; and what its valuation was on 1 January. [87082]

Mr. Milburn: Table 2 of the Quarterly Report on UK Official Holdings of Foreign Currency and Gold for the period October to December 1998 and January to March 1999 provide a breakdown of the size and composition of the United Kingdom's reserve holdings.

Economic and Monetary Union

26. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the economic tests to be met before any British application to join the single European currency. [87083]

Ms Hewitt: In his statement to the House of Commons in October 1997, the Chancellor of the Exchequer set out five economic tests which will have to be met before any decision to join a successful single currency can be taken. Applying the economic tests, the Government have concluded that there is no realistic prospect of the UK economy having demonstrated, before the end of this Parliament, convergence which is sustainable and settled. Barring any fundamental and unforeseen change in economic circumstances, making a decision, during this Parliament, to join is not realistic. This position was restated by the Prime Minister in a statement to the House of Commons on 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84.

30. Mr. Beard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effects of UK non-membership of EMU on his policy of ensuring economic stability. [87088]

Ms Hewitt: Locking in stability is a key element of the Government's economic strategy. Reform of the macroeconomic policy framework through a new, open and transparent monetary framework and a new fiscal framework is helping to deliver low inflation and sound public finances.

Achieving sustainable convergence with the euro area is one of the five economic tests which will have to be met before any decision to join is taken.

Income Tax (Self-assessment)

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been surcharged for failing to return their completed self-assessment forms on time. [87085]

Dawn Primarolo: People who fail to return their completed self-assessment forms on time are charged a penalty of £100, and a further penalty of £100 if the return is more than six months late. Surcharges are applied to people who are late in paying the tax due on their self-assessment. There is a 5 per cent. surcharge where payment is more than 28 days late, and a further 5 per cent. surcharge where payment is more than six months late.

The numbers of surcharges and penalties are increasing all the time as more late-issued returns become overdue. However, the great majority of returns are issued in April, and returns and payments become due at the end of the following January.

Figures for the main issue of returns are as follows:

1996–97 tax return, issued in April 1997

First fixed filing penalty (issued in February 1998)—670,000
Second fixed filing penalty (issued in August 1998)—335,000
First surcharge for late payment (issued in March 1998)—142,000
Second surcharge for late payment (issued in August 1998)—59,000

1997–98 tax return, issued in April 1998

First fixed filing penalty (issued in February 1999)—748,000
First surcharge for late payment (issued in March 1999)—180,000

Kosovo (Cost)

29. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) has been and (b) he estimates will be the effect on the contingency fund of (i) the conflict in Kosovo and (ii) the measures to be taken following the peace agreement relating to Kosovo. [87086]

Mr. Milburn: The Ministry of Defence estimates the total additional cost of Kosovo military operations up to the end of May was £43 million (excluding the costs of munitions). It has been agreed that military costs will form the basis of a claim on the Reserve to the extent that they cannot be absorbed without detriment to other priorities.

It is too early to say what the costs to Departmental Expenditure Limits or the Reserve will be of all the measures to be taken following the peace agreement.

Taxation

31. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the change in tax payable in the last two years. [87089]

Dawn Primarolo: Figures for tax receipts were published in table B10 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Landfill Tax

32. Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the reform of the landfill tax. [87090]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend announced a number of changes to the landfill tax in his 1999 Budget. The case for any further changes will be examined as and when the need arises.

Climate Change Levy

33. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposed climate change levy. [87091]

Ms Hewitt: The climate change levy will make a very significant contribution to meeting the Government's legally binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto Protocol, and their domestic goal of a 20 per cent. cut in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. The levy will encourage energy efficiency in business and is expected to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010.

The design of the levy reflects closely the recommendations made by Lord Marshall. It will entail no increase in the overall burden of tax on business as revenues will be fully recycled via a 0.5 percentage point cut in the main rate of employer National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from an additional £50 million for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

The Government recognise the need for special consideration to be given to the position of energy intensive industries given their energy usage and exposure to international competition. Consequently, the Government intend to set significantly lower rates of tax for those energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving their energy efficiency and these detailed negotiations are now underway.

The Government also want to work with business on the detailed design and administration issues relating to the levy and have just completed a consultation covering these issues.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the climate change levy is to be imposed on combined heat and power schemes. [87681]

Ms Hewitt: It is the intention that climate change levy should be charged on industrial and commercial use of electricity. The levy will be charged at the point of supply to the final consumer which means that the input to generation will be exempt.

Combined Heat and Power (CHP) schemes are a form of electricity generation. The Customs and Excise consultation document asked for views on whether they should be treated as conventional generators, by relieving their input fuels and applying the levy to their outputs, or afforded special treatment whereby their input fuels are subject to the levy and the electricity they produced relieved. Officials are currently analysing responses to this exercise.

Economic Stability

34. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fiscal steps he is taking to ensure economic stability. [87092]

Mr. Milburn: The Chancellor's recent Budget continued to lock in sound public finances and to ensure that our tough fiscal rules will be met. By providing a £6 billion boost to the economy, the Budget is supporting monetary policy and helping to steer a course of stability and lay the foundations for high and sustainable levels of growth and employment.

Tax Hypothecation

36. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allocate funds raised by particular taxes to specified services. [87094]

Dawn Primarolo: No. The Government determine their expenditure according to their priorities. However, we look at each case on its merits.

Capital Controls

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the UK's policy advice to developing countries on capital controls; and what assessment he has made of IMF agreements which prohibit a Government from imposing capital controls. [86942]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 June 1999]: We encourage emerging markets to carry out capital account liberalisation in a careful and well sequenced manner. However, the use of controls on capital inflows may be justified during transitional periods as emerging markets strengthen the institutional and regulatory environment in their domestic financial systems. Controls on capital outflows may sometimes be necessary in exceptional circumstances. But controls on capital flows, particularly on outflows, carry costs and are no substitute for necessary reforms.

The international financial crisis has clearly demonstrated that the IMF should play a constructive role in helping countries to liberalise their capital accounts in an orderly way. But the IMF should also further refine its analysis of the experience of countries with the use of capital controls.

World Bank (Social Principles)

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to ensure that the social principles drafted by the World bank will be adhered to by the IMF and World bank in any future financial crisis lending. [86988]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has consistently stressed the importance of preserving investment in the health, education and social programmes which are essential for growth and poverty reduction. The World bank are currently working with the IMF to translate the social principles into good practices in social policy, and this work is due to be completed by the Annual Meetings later this year. It will create an operational guide for the World bank and IMF which I hope will be drawn upon by the two institutions.

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on incorporating the social principles drafted by the World bank into macro-economic decision-making. [86987]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has consistently stressed the importance of preserving investment in the health, education and social programmes which are essential for growth and poverty reduction. He therefore welcomed the endorsement given by the Development Committee at the Spring Meeting in April to the social principles which the World bank had drafted following his call for action in this area at the Annual Meetings last year.

As a matter of urgency, it was agreed that the World bank should report back to the Annual Meetings on policies and practices that could support national and international implementation of the social principles.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the operation of ISAs; and if he will make a statement. [87420]

Ms Hewitt: The Government will keep ISAs under review and listen to the views of providers and consumers. A large number of providers are providing both CAT and non-CAT ISAs through a variety of channels and we have no plans to change ISA rules.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the people employed as paid special advisers in his Department since 1 May 1997, the dates of their employment and to which minister each was attached. [87455]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

Name	Dates of employment From	To	Minister served
Ed Balls	3 May 1997		Chancellor
Charlie Whelan	3 May 1997	13 January 1999	Chancellor
Ed Miliband	3 May 1997	6 April 1999	Chief Secretary
Ed Miliband	10 May 1999		Chief Secretary
Andrew Maugham	6 May 1997	27 July 1998	Chief Secretary
Spencer Livermore	4 August 1998		Chief Secretary
Ian Austin	21 June 1999		Chancellor

Insurance Companies (Regulation)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the working procedures within his Department regarding the regulation of insurance companies. [87628]

Ms Hewitt: I have no plans to review working procedures regarding the regulation of insurance companies. The Transfer of Functions (Insurance) Order 1997 transferred Department of Trade and Industry responsibility for regulation of insurance business to the Treasury. The Contracting Out (Functions in Relation to Insurance) Order 1998 empowered the Treasury to authorise a third-party—the Financial Services Authority—to carry out most of these functions from 1 January 1999. Subject to Parliamentary approval, the Financial Services and Markets Bill will vest this responsibility with the Financial Services Authority in its own right. In the meantime, the Treasury retains statutory and policy responsibility.

Employment Rate (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed in Shrewsbury and Atcham (a) on the last date for which figures are available and (b) in May 1997. [87796]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 24 June 1999:

In the absence of the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of people employed in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

Information is available for the number of Employee Jobs, derived from the Annual Employment Survey (AES) for September 1997 (latest available date) and September 1996. The persons holding these jobs may live outside the area shown.

Employee jobs at September

Thousand

Year	Shrewsbury and Atcham
1996	38.3
1997	39.0

Local Authority District

EU Tax Reform (Joint Working Group)

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations represented on the joint working group with business representatives set up by the Paymaster General to examine EU tax reform; which representatives were invited from the accountancy profession; and if he will make a statement. [87988]

Dawn Primarolo: The joint Government-CBI Group on EU tax issues is an informal working group whose main purpose is to allow the Government to get the views of business on European tax matters. At the first meeting of the Group in March, the CBI's team consisted of senior CBI officials and representatives of major companies.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish a revised version of PFI Technical Note No. 1 on How to Account for PFI Transactions. [88733]

Mr. Milburn: I am today issuing revised Treasury guidance, approved by the Financial Reporting Advisory Board (FRAB), setting out the rules governing accounting for PFI transactions within Government.

I am placing a copy of the Revised Guidance in the Library.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to improve the fiscal position of people over retirement age. [87077]

Mr. Milburn: The Government recognise that pensioners need fair and decent support. The average pensioner household will be £240 a year better off as a result of measures in the March 1998 and March 1999 Budgets. These measures include a fivefold increase in the winter allowance from £20 to £100, the introduction of a Minimum Tax Guarantee which will mean that no-one over 64 will pay income tax unless their income is over £110 a week, and the minimum income guarantee through Income Support which is set at £75 per week for single pensioners from April 1999.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 25 June 1999

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Over-50s)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress on the introduction of New Deal 50 plus. [89006]

Mr. Blunkett: The New Deal 50 plus, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech, 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–90, will offer real and substantial support to people over 50 who wish to find jobs.

The New Deal will be voluntary and will offer people 50 and over who have spent six months on either JSA, Income Support, Incapacity Benefit or Severe Disablement Allowance help with jobsearch through individual advice from an employment adviser and programme centre provision. When an eligible 50 plus client finds a job they can claim an employment credit of £60 per week for full-time work or £40 per week for part-time work for 52 weeks and training support of up to £750. The Employment Credit, when taken with the minimum wage, will represent a minimum income guarantee of £9,000 for people taking full-time jobs. I believe this represents a huge step in providing real help to older workers who face greater difficulties in finding sustainable employment.

We have confirmed the following New Deal units of delivery as pathfinder areas for the launch of New Deal 50 plus in October:

Black Country; City Pride; Dorset; Durham; Edinburgh East and Midlothian; Hull; North Derbyshire; North East Wales; and Oxfordshire.

The pathfinders will enable us to learn lessons about the operation of New Deal 50 plus and spread good practice before national roll out in early 2000.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 11 May on behalf of a constituent, Mrs. Hallam. [88409]

Mr. Mudie: A reply will be issued on 28 June 1999.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the percentage of participants in each of the New Deal for Young People options who have left for unsubsidised employment up to the most recent date for which information is available; and what assessment he has made of the performance against Government targets on improving employability through undertaking New Deal options. [87179]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of April 1999 show that 23,900 young people have left one of the New Deal options. Of these 8,860 (37 per cent.) are known to have found sustained unsubsidised employment. This breaks down to 56 per cent. of young people leaving the Employer option, 35 per cent. from the FTET option, 41 per cent. from the Voluntary Sector option and 35 per cent. from the Environment Task Force.

These figures under-estimate the true proportion of young people finding work because many of the clients recorded as having "unknown destinations" will, in fact, have found work although they have not notified the Employment Service.

A recent large scale quantitative survey of young people who left the New Deal for unknown destinations showed that at least 43 per cent. have moved into work.

A quantitative survey of individual participants was launched earlier this year which will assess improvements in employability. Initial results from this survey are expected in September 1999.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate how many participants in (a) the New Deal for Young People and (b) the New Deal for over 25s have left the New Deal to be transferred from unemployment benefits to incapacity benefit in the categories of those leaving for (i) other known destinations, (ii) unknown destinations and (iii) transfers to other benefits. [87177]

Mr. Andrew Smith: People who leave New Deal to transfer to Incapacity Benefit are recorded as "transfers to other benefits" in the published statistics as it is not currently possible to break the statistics down to specific types of benefit. The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of April 1999 show that 19,170 young people had left New Deal to transfer to other benefits and 7,100 clients left the New Deal for long term unemployed people aged 25 and over for other benefits.

A quantitative survey of individual participants was launched earlier this year which will assess movements into other benefits. Initial results from this survey are expected in September 1999.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the proportion of those individuals leaving the New Deal for Young People for unknown destinations who have left to work in the black economy. [87178]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is difficult to make any reliable estimate of the number of young people who have left New Deal for unknown destinations who have left to work in the "black economy". People who were working and claiming benefit until caught out by the New Deal are unlikely to declare that when they cease claiming Jobseeker's Allowance. Anyone who attempts to reclaim Jobseeker's Allowance within 13 weeks of leaving New Deal will automatically re-enter the New Deal at the point which they left. That reduces significantly the risk of young people working and claiming benefits.

Disabled People (Employment Opportunities)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the implications for employment opportunities for the disabled of the withdrawal of the Green Card DP21, version 1/93. [87493]

Ms Hodge: The arrangements now in place to improve employment opportunities for disabled people are more effective than the previous system based on registration as a disabled person under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 giving access to a "quota" of jobs in larger organisations. Experience showed that the registration process leading to the issue of the Green Card (DP21) and quota system failed to secure job opportunities for disabled people.

The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA) provides a framework of rights for disabled people which are enforced through Employment Tribunals. We have already demonstrated our commitment to comprehensive enforceable civil rights for disabled people through a reduction in the threshold for employment rights to 15 bringing in an extra 70,000 disabled employees within the scope of the DDA; and by introducing the Bill to establish a Disability Rights Commission. The Disability Rights Task Force will be reporting on what further is needed to strengthen employment rights.

Equally, many disabled people are benefiting from the New Deals introduced in the last two years. The New Deal for Disabled People is testing a range of initiatives, to help disabled people and those with long-term illness into work at a cost of £195 million. We have also expanded the specialist disability employment programmes run by the Employment Service. These include help from Disability Employment Advisers, the Supported Employment Programme, Access to Work and the Job Introduction Scheme.

Remploy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what consultations he had with trades unions in the preparation of the Remploy Corporate Plan; [87491]

(2) what plans he has to review Remploy's Corporate Plan in respect of its potential effect on the skill levels of Remploy employment; [87492]

(3) what guidelines exist to promote the replacement of employees of Remploy with other disabled persons. [87501]

Ms Hodge: There have been no discussions between the Remploy Trade Unions, which represent the weekly paid employees, and the Remploy Management in preparing the Remploy 1999–02 Corporate Plan. I understand that the Remploy Trade Unions were invited by the Remploy Board of Directors to a meeting to discuss the Plan in April this year. The Remploy Trade Union, MSF, which represents the majority of the monthly paid employees, was the sole union to attend the meeting. The Remploy Board have made clear that they would welcome discussions with the Trades Unions before, and during, the development of the next Corporate Plan.

As the Corporate Plan 1999–02 has just been published, there are no plans to review it. I understand that Remploy are not expecting deskilling of employees as a result of planned changes. Remploy has necessarily had a long experience of retraining its disabled employees to adapt to changes in the labour market and increased competition from other countries. By taking the initiative in this way, Remploy continues to best protect the interests of its disabled workforce.

The Government have set the Remploy Board of Directors a range of annual performance targets that are the parameters within which Remploy operates. The targets for 1999 have been announced recently in the House, and include a target to increase the number of disabled people employed by the Company. This year's target is to employ an overall total of 10,150 disabled people. How this will be achieved is a matter for the Remploy Board, but the chief means of doing this will be by recruitment through Remploy's interwork programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further Education Lecturers

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the changes made in Northern Ireland further education lecturers' conditions of service between 1993 and 1998. [87784]

Mr. McFall: In 1996 a revised contract for full-time FE lecturers was introduced. The working year was increased from 190 to 200 days and the number of vacation days reduced to 49 days plus public holidays. The working week was increased from 30 hours to 36 hours and the maximum number of student contact hours within the working week was increased from 21 to 23 hours. A copy of the contract will be placed in the Library.

Decommissioning

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is her policy that Sinn Fein should be allowed to hold an executive position in the Assembly before the IRA has started decommissioning weapons. [87901]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government's policy is to implement the Belfast Agreement in full. The Agreement requires the establishment of an Executive Committee on a proportionate basis dependent on the number of seats each party has in the Assembly. The Agreement also commits all parties to the total disarmament of all paramilitary organisations and to use whatever influence they may have to achieve decommissioning of all paramilitary arms within two years of the referendum and in the context of the implementation of the overall settlement. Decommissioning, though not a prior pre-condition to the establishment of the Executive, is a requirement of the Agreement. In order to achieve the successful implementation of the Agreement, everyone must be confident that all aspects will be implemented.

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been (a) arrested and (b) charged with offences under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. [87890]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 22 June 1999]: To date no one has been arrested or charged under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Fuel Tax Escalator

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the fuel tax escalator on car users in rural areas. [87865]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department always keeps under review policies that impact significantly on the areas of transport, environment and other policy areas for which it is responsible, including on any specific sectors, and continues to monitor the impact of the fuel duty escalator. We are, of course, concerned to ensure that a balance is struck between legitimate environmental concerns and the transport needs of rural motorists. Increasing fuel taxation by itself will not be sufficient to achieve all our environmental objectives. People ultimately need real alternatives to the car, and this is one of the reasons behind our development of an integrated transport policy—the framework for which we published in July 1998 in our White Paper on the future of transport, A New Deal for Transport. We are also seeking to improve transport choice through the £170 million of additional funding which we have made available for public transport in rural areas.

Car Safety Equipment

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to make the carrying of a warning triangle, first aid kit and spare set of vehicle bulbs, compulsory for all car owners; and if he will make a statement. [87873]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The carriage of warning triangles and first aid kits is already recommended in the Highway Code. However, as it would be dangerous to walk on some roads to place a warning triangle the recommended distance behind the vehicle, the Highway Code advised that they should never be used on motorways.

Most fuel stations carry replacement bulbs and in many cases the motoring rescue and recovery organisations would be able to supply and fit replacements when necessary.

We therefore have no plans to require the carriage of warning triangles, first aid kits or spare bulbs in cars.

Pollution (Older Vehicles)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on pollution caused by older cars, lorries and buses. [87898]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Research into the emission performance of older vehicles is regularly undertaken by my Department, to inform the National Atmospheric Emission Inventory and other air quality models. This involves the comprehensive testing of in-use vehicles of different ages, under different driving conditions. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force has also been looking at the contribution of older vehicles to traffic pollution, in order to identify the most cost-effective options for reducing emissions from vehicles already in use.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to support the development of new technologies which can be fitted to older vehicles to reduce their emissions; and if he will make a statement. [87899]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are pleased to support the use of technologies to reduce the environmental impact of older vehicles. We provide a VED incentive of up to £1,000 to hauliers and bus operators whose vehicles meet high environmental standards. These standards can be reached through conversion to run on alternative fuels, or the fitment of technologies like particulate traps. Through the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme, the Government are providing £12 million to support the development of a wide range of automotive related technologies. These include exhaust after-treatment systems which can be retrofitted to existing vehicles, as well as hybrid drive systems and lightweight materials for use in the next generation of vehicles. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force has also been looking at what the most cost-effective solutions for reducing emissions from vehicles in use are.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 28 April to the Minister of State on behalf of a constituent, Mrs. Bamsley; [88408]

(2) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 28 April to the Minister of State on behalf of a constituent, Mrs. Boyall. [88410]

Mr. Meacher: I wrote to the right hon. Gentleman on 22 June about his constituent's concerns regarding urban trees.

District Line Closure

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies are in progress into the feasibility of the proposed closure next year of the London Underground District Line between Earl's Court and High Street Kensington. [88428]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground are building on the lessons learned from the review of this month's Circle Line closure into the planning process for next year's District Line closure between Earl's Court and High Street Kensington.

So far, two options have been modelled and additional modelling is being commissioned by London Underground to forecast the impacts on passenger flows across the whole Underground network.

Recycled Newsprint

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Recycled Content of Newsprint Bill. [87798]

Mr. Meale: One of the aims of this Bill is to increase the amount of recycled newsprint used in newspapers and magazines. We support that aim. We are giving serious consideration to what measures will need to be taken to achieve this, including an assessment of the impact and practicalities of a statutory scheme such as the one my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) has proposed.

We have not ruled out the possibility of introducing legislation ourselves, perhaps under existing powers.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Serbia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how her Department will differentiate between humanitarian aid and aid for reconstruction in relation to Serbia. [88117]

Clare Short: Humanitarian assistance is clearly different from reconstruction and development assistance throughout the international system. We have no plans to support reconstruction as long as Milosevic is in power. We believe this approach is widely shared by our partners and allies.

Montenegro

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what help her Department is planning for Montenegro. [88116]

Clare Short [holding answer 24 June 1999]: We have allocated £90 million for humanitarian assistance in the region, including Montenegro. We shall continue to provide humanitarian assistance there whilst refugees remain and needs exist.

Before the crises we were providing advice on the Government's programme of privatisation. We will review our support in the context of political developments in the region and the plans of the international community.

We are also providing support through the EU, which has donated 13 million euro for refugee-related budgetary assistance to the Government of Montenegro.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stop and Search

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 264, on stop and search, if he will list the figures for stop and search nationally. [88228]

Mr. Boateng: Statistics on stop and search are collected centrally only on a quarterly basis. Figures are not yet complete for the period January to March 1999.

Statistical bulletin "Operation of Certain Police Powers unde PACE, England and Wales, 1997–98" (Issue 2/99) contained stop/search figures on an annual basis. A copy is in the Library.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions against persons taking drugs into prisons have taken place in each of the last five years; how many resulted in conviction; and of those, how many resulted in a custodial sentence. [88231]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office Court Proceedings Database identifies prosecutions, convictions and type of sentence given for offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, as amended. But it does not identify the location of the offence.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 27 April, regarding a constituent. [88230]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I replied to my hon. Friend on 24 June 1999.

Parcelforce

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what data he has collated on the extent of the cross-subsidy of Parcelforce by Royal Mail in the financial years from 1994 to 1998. [85734]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The losses incurred by Parcelforce in recent years have been covered by loans from the Group Centre.

Sub-Post Offices

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post offices in Scotland have closed (a) in total and (b) on a temporary basis since 1997; and how many have subsequently been reopened. [87902]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that, since 1997, two sub-post offices in Scotland have closed permanently, 77 have closed temporarily, 39 have reopened and three new offices have been opened.

Post Office Pension Scheme

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what actuarial advice was received on the employee contribution rate to the Post Office Pension Scheme; and if his approval was sought for the rate chosen; [85736]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Post Office about the future of the Post Office Pension Scheme and Post Office Staff Superannuation Scheme. [85735]

Mr. Ian McCartney: None. Issues concerning the Post Office pension funds are primarily a matter for Post Office management and the trustees of the funds who include representatives of the workforce.

DEFENCE

Peacekeeping

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Government intend to sign the Memorandum of Understanding with the UN in relation to peacekeeping operations. [88805]

Mr. George Robertson: The Memorandum of Understanding with the UN will be signed in New York today. Our Ambassador to the UN and the UN Under-Secretary General for Peacekeeping will sign on behalf of the Government and the UN respectively. The MOU, which declares the UK forces potentially available for UN peacekeeping operations, reflects the priorities established in the Strategic Defence Review for improvements in our Armed Forces: a larger and better rapid reaction capability; additional strategic lift; and better logistics support. These capabilities are those most relevant to the UN and will enable the UK to make a more effective contribution to UN peacekeeping and humanitarian operations in future.

Submarine Spent Fuel Cores

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract for the new Used Core Transport Package for transporting submarine spent fuel cores was awarded; and what was the cost. [87705]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 June 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 31 July 1998, Official Report, column 714.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter of 6 May from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire on behalf of Mr. Lee, a constituent. [88407]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have now responded.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current Government policy in relation to the sale of land by the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement. [87443]

Mr. Macdonald: We have stopped large scale sales of forest land by the Forestry Commission. Our policy is that the Commission may only sell agricultural land, land associated with houses and other buildings, unplantable land and relatively small and isolated blocks of forest land which do not make a significant contribution to its objectives and which are surplus to its requirements. The Commission may also sell areas for development where this is in the public interest. Areas of forest land which are important for public access will not be sold unless an access agreement is in place.

Abattoirs

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the review of the costs of abattoirs and producers to be completed. [87690]

Mr. Macdonald: The review was established earlier this year, in response to widespread concerns, to assess the impact of meat inspection costs on abattoirs and producers and to look at the efficiency of the Meat Hygiene Service. The work is currently underway, the Government hope to complete the review quickly and will announce its conclusions in due course.

HEALTH

Cancer Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the Commission for Health Improvement will review and report progress made by the NHS across the country in cancer services; [87367]

(2) when he will publish new standards for the treatment of certain cancers; [87369]

(3) when he plans to set up a cancer action team to improve cancer care in hospitals; [87364]

(4) when he will set up the NHS on-line guide to cancer symptoms and advice. [87370]

Mr. Hutton: On 20 May at a seminar attended by Health Ministers and leading cancer clinicians, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced a plan of action to tackle cancer and save lives. This included the establishment of a Cancer Action Team to work with the National Health Service in raising standards of cancer treatment and care in all hospitals to that which is already being achieved in the best. A Director for the Cancer Action Team has now been appointed and will take up the post in July.

The Commission for Health Improvement, working with the Audit Commission, will look at cancer as an early priority. Although the establishment of the Commission depends on legislation currently awaiting Royal Assent, the intention is that the Commission be established later this year and make a start on its first full year programme of work from April 2000.

In response to concerns expressed about the different regional approaches used in the implementation of Calman/Hine, we are developing a set of common national standards and performance measures. We plan to test them this year and roll out nationally next year.

The Government fully support the need for patients to have clear information about cancer services. NHS Direct on-line will be launched in November this year. It will include a range of information about diseases and their treatment including access to good quality accredited information about cancers.

Adoption

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of Hampshire Social Services record in respect of the processing of applications from aspiring adoptive parents relative to that of other social services departments. [87846]

Mr. Hutton: A survey will begin in July, to be carried out by the Social Services Inspectorate, of adoption services provided by each local authority in England. This is part of a planned assessment of progress made by local authority in implementing guidance we issued last August under circular Local Authority Circular (98) 20: "Adoption—Achieving the Right Balance". The survey will be followed later on in the year by a more detailed questionnaire and an inspection of a number of authorities. The results will be published in 2000.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to take to accelerate social services departments' processing of applications from parents to adopt. [87847]

Mr. Hutton: I announced to the House on 16 June 1999, Official Report, columns 353–54, our intention to give responsibility for the regulation and inspection of adoption agencies to the commissions for care standards which are to be established as part of the Government's proposals for improving social services, and which were envisaged in the White Paper "Modernising Social Services". These inspections will cover all aspects of the adoption service including the process for handling adoption applications.

Medicines (Advertising)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the circumstances under which (a) a notice, (b) a threat of notice and (c) a request to cease advertising would be made by (i) him and (ii) the Medicines Control Agency under the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999 (SI 267); and if he will make a statement on the powers of the Independent Review Panel concerning such actions. [88003]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency undertakes its statutory role in the control of medicines advertising on behalf of Health Ministers. Any notice issued by the Agency is therefore issued for, and on behalf of Ministers.

There are specific circumstances under which notices may be issued to advertisers under the procedures in the amending Regulations. These are:

Under paragraph 1—to request a copy of an advertisement,

Under paragraph 3—to advise an advertiser that Health Ministers are "minded to" make a decision that an advertisement is in breach of the Advertising Regulations,

Under paragraph 4—to advise an advertiser that an advertisement would not be in breach, and

Under paragraph 5—to advise an advertiser that, after consideration of the advice of the Independent Review Panel Health Ministers have decided an advertisement is in breach.

Notices under paragraphs 1 or 3 may require an advertiser to cease advertising on an interim basis. At any stage the recipient of a notice can seek judicial review of the decision to issue that notice.

The issue of notices under the Schedule will not be automatic—the Medicines Control Agency will continue, as now, to discuss problems with advertising with the company concerned so as to secure acceptable changes. The formal procedures will come into play only when informal negotiation fails to reach an appropriate outcome.

The remit of the Independent Review Panel will be to consider written representations from advertisers who have been issued with a notice under paragraph 3 and advise Health Ministers on the compatibility of the advertisement in question with the Advertising Regulations. The panel will not consider the issue of notices or other procedural matters. The amending Regulations provide for the making of written representations by the company concerned but do not preclude oral hearings where these are considered appropriate by the Panel. We have no objection to the reports of the Review Panel meetings being made publicly available. Furthermore, the Medicines Control Agency has already established a working group, the Medicines Advertising Liaison Group, to provide a forum for all regulatory and self regulatory bodies concerned with the advertising of medicines to exchange information and opinions on advertising issues.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the travel expenses of the special advisers to his Department's Ministers since May 1997. [86454]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 1. I also refer the hon. Member to the further answer I gave to the hon. Member for Chichester today, Official Report, columns 482-83.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the current paid special advisers to Ministers and the Ministers whom they advise. [87409]

The Prime Minister: For details of the Special Advisers employed in my office, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) on 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 143. Since then, I have appointed Bill Bush. At 21 June, my ministerial colleagues had appointed the following Special Advisers.

Appointing Minister	Name of appointee
Chief Whip	Ian McKenzie Sue Jackson
Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	Tom Greatrex Kieran Simpson
Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport	John Newbiggin Andy Burnham
Secretary of State for Defence	Bernard Gray Alasdair McGowan
Secretary of State for Education and Employment	Conor Ryan Tom Engel—part time Sophie Linden—part time
Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions	Joe Irvin Paul Hackett—part time Joan Hammell Darren Murphy—part time
Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs	David Clark Andrew Hood
Secretary of State for Health	Joe McCrea Simon Stevens
Secretary of State for the Home Department	Ed Owen Justin Russell
Lord Chancellor	Garry Hart
Secretary of State for International Development	David Mepham Dee Sullivan
Leader of the House of Lords and Minister for Women	Clare Cozens Jo Gibbons
Secretary of State for Northern Ireland	Nigel Warner Andrew Lappin
Minister for the Cabinet Office	Tim Walker Anna Healy
President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons	Sheila Watson Nicci Russell
Secretary of State for Scotland	Richard Olszewski
Secretary of State for Social Security	Andrew Maugham Elsbeth Johnson
Secretary of State for Trade and Industry	Dan Corry Jo Moore
Chancellor of the Exchequer	Ed Balls Ian Austin
Chief Secretary	Ed Millband Spencer Livermore
Secretary of State for Wales	Julia Crowley Andrew Bold

In addition, the Minister for the Cabinet Office has appointed Mr. Keith Hellawell as the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and Mr. Michael Trace as his Deputy. Professor Michael Barber has been appointed as the Standards and Effectiveness Adviser to the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has appointed Mr. Chris Wales, Mr. Paul Gregg and Ms Shriti Vadera as members of the Council of Economic Advisers. All are employed on Special Adviser terms.

Policy Unit (US Visits)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions members of his Policy Unit have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 January 1998, indicating the name of the member and the dates of travel in each case. [87433]

The Prime Minister: Members of my Policy Unit have accompanied me or other Ministers on visits to the United States of America on 4 occasions since 1 January 1998. Separately, individual members of the Policy Unit have travelled to the United States of America to attend official engagements on three occasions since 1 January 1998 (6–9 December 1998, 29–31 January and 21–28 March 1999). All visits have been undertaken in line with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code.

Kosovo

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what action Her Majesty's Government plan to take to publicise throughout Europe the war crimes committed in Kosovo; [87308]

(2) if he will consult with the other allied political leaders on the preparation of a joint White Paper to be issued on the war crimes in Kosovo and placing of such a paper to be placed before the parliaments of all the countries that took part in the allied campaign. [87311]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1999]: We are appalled at the evidence which has emerged and continues to emerge day by day of the atrocities committed in Kosovo. We always warned at what we would find inside Kosovo. Now cameras can enter Kosovo, the full horror of Milosevic's ethnic cleansing is clear to everyone.

We are doing all we can to support the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia with their investigations into the atrocities. We are doing all we can to support the work of the Tribunal, in particular we are seconding a police team to investigate scenes of crimes. The first priority must be for the Tribunal to gather the information which would be needed to sustain any prosecutions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other NATO Governments are taking to assist gypsies (i) suspected of having been informers for the Yugoslav authorities and (ii) who have moved out of Kosovo into other parts of Yugoslavia. [88078]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 June 1999]: KFOR is tasked to provide robust and even-handed protection for all the people of Kosovo, regardless of their ethnic, religious or cultural background. It is the responsibility of the host Governments to provide security for those who have fled Kosovo. UNHCR is trying to help with security arrangements in refugee camps and we support those efforts.

Under UN Security Council Resolution 1244, a main responsibility of the UN civilian mission in Kosovo is to protect and promote the human rights of all the inhabitants of Kosovo.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 21 June 1999, on Kosovo, with reference to the question from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, column 772, if he will list the claims of environmental damage in Yugoslavia which had been exaggerated. [88077]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 June 1999]: Mr. Klaus Toepfer, the Executive Director of the UN Environment Programme (UNEP) said, when he met my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development on 15 June, that the claims about the extent of the pollution of the Danube and the impact of the use of depleted uranium weaponry had been exaggerated.

We believe that objective information is needed to combat rumours about the environmental impact of the conflict. We welcome the joint task force set up by UNEP and the UN Commission on Human Settlements to assess the environmental and health effects of the conflict. We remain, as ever, ready to co-operate with the task force.

Separately, the EU commissioned a report from the Regional Environmental Centre for Central and Eastern Europe. The Centre's preliminary assessment was that there was no evidence of a large-scale ecological catastrophe in the region, although some local environmental damage may have occurred.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the agreement on the demilitarisation of the KLA made between its leadership and Lieutenant General Sir Michael Jackson. [88421]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 23 June 1999, Official Report, column 396, to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow).

Wal-Mart

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he has had with Wal-Mart; and what subjects were discussed. [88120]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) on 6 May 1999, Official Report, columns 451–52.

Armed Forces Pay Review Body

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about appointments to the Armed Forces Pay Review Body. [89005]

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to announce that I have today appointed Mr. John Davies and Mr. Michael Ward as new members of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body and re-appointed Mrs. Kay Coleman, OBE, for a second three year term. These are the first appointments to this Pay Review Body conducted under the Peach Code of Practice on appointments to public bodies. I should also like to inform the House that Baroness Dean of Thornton-le-Fylde has assumed the Chairmanship of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body, having previously served as a member.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 1, how many overseas visits he made between 1 May 1997 and 3 March 1999; what was the average cost per head for each accompanying official; and if he will list the number of occasions on which his chief press secretary and chief of staff travelled abroad without the Prime Minister in the same period, giving the costs of each visit. [81142]

The Prime Minister: For details of visits made by me overseas costing more than £500 during the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 196–97. This information includes numbers of officials accompanying me and the total cost. During this period, my Chief of Staff travelled overseas without me on four occasions at an average cost of £375 per visit; my Chief Press Secretary made no such visits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates special advisers from his Department travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited; and what were the names of the special advisers in each case. [87400]

Mr. Robin Cook: Special Advisers in my Department have visited the following countries on official business since 2 May 1997:

Andrew Hood

Date	Country visited
18–20 May 1997	USA
20–23 June 1997	USA
25 June 1997	France
27 June-1 July 1997	Hong Kong
28 July-3 August 1997	Egypt
	Occupied Territories
	Israel
21–25 September 1997	USA
20 November 1997	Luxembourg
	Switzerland
13–16 January 1998	Israel
10–13 February 1998	Oman
	UAE
	Egypt
15–18 March 1998	Cyprus
	Egypt
	Jordan
	Israel
	Syria
	Lebanon
5–9 December 1998	Israel
14–18 December 1998	France
	Belgium
	Germany
5–7 March 1999	France
8–11 March 1999	Nigeria
	Ghana
	Cote d'Ivoire

David Clark

Date	Country visited
1 May 1997	France
	Germany
19–20 May 1997	Netherlands
5–6 June 1997	Sweden
16–17 June 1997	Netherlands
25 June 1997	France
7–9 July 1997	Spain
28–30 July 1997	Croatia
	Bosnia and Herzegovina
7–8 October 1997	Gibraltar
20 November 1997	Luxembourg
25–28 November 1997	Hungary
	Czech Republic
	Poland
14 January 1998	France
18–19 May 1998	Turkey
10–11 December 1998	Austria
19–24 April 1999	USA

Cambodia

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the recommendations of the UN Group of Experts on Cambodia for the establishment of an ad hoc international tribunal outside Cambodia to try senior Khmer Rouge leaders are implemented; and if he will make a statement. [88189]

Mr. Hoon: The Government strongly support efforts to bring the Khmer Rouge leaders to justice and therefore welcomed the report by the UN Group of Experts earlier this year. We have made clear to the Cambodian Government our support for an international tribunal, and have encouraged them to co-operate with the international community on this issue.

EU General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 21 and 22 June; and if he will make a statement. [88334]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 21 June 1999. Accession Conferences with the six applicants engaged in negotiations took place on 21 and 22 June. An EU/South Caucasus Summit took place on 22 June. The Council adopted the A points listed in document 9362/99 and 9367/99. Copies of the documents listing the A points will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

Comitology: The GAC gave political agreement to a Decision on Comitology. This sets out procedures for overseeing implementation by the Commission of legislation delegated to it by the Council and European Parliament.

Modern Means of Communication: The GAC discussed proposals to test a multilateral video-conferencing system and to establish a secure phone/fax network between Foreign Ministers' offices. It was agreed that work should begin on both proposals.

Association Agreement with Egypt: After four and a half years of negotiations, the Council agreed the terms of an Association Agreement with Egypt. The Presidency and Egypt will now initial the final text and the Commission put a formal proposal to the Council.

EU/Mercosur and EU/Chile Trade Negotiations: The Council reached agreement on how to take forward trade liberalisation negotiations with Mercosur and Chile. The agreement provides for talks to start this year on regulatory issues and on the removal of non-tariff barriers to trade, as well as for co-operation before and during the forthcoming WTO Round of multilateral trade negotiations. Negotiations on tariff issues will begin not later than 1 July 2001, with their outcome taking into account the results of the multilateral trade negotiations.

Western Balkans: The Council welcomed the adoption of UNSCR 1244 and urged all parties to co-operate in implementing it. It called on all Kosovo residents to remain in Kosovo and work for a democratic, multi-ethnic Kosovo. It welcomed the agreement on Russian participation in KFOR. It emphasised that the EU would participate fully in the UN mission in Kosovo. It invited the Commission to report further on the region's humanitarian and reconstruction needs. It condemned the mass killings in Kosovo and emphasised that EU member states would co-operate fully with ICTY.

The Council agreed that the EU would create a new category of Stabilisation and Association Agreements for Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Macedonia. Countries would be eligible once they met the relevant conditions. The Council reviewed performance of individual countries and agreed on next steps, including preparation of a feasibility study on opening negotiations for a Stabilisation and Association Agreement with Albania, and examination of the feasibility study on an Agreement with Macedonia and of the proposals for upgrading the trade regime with Albania.

Reports on Summits with Third Countries: The Presidency and Commission reported on the recent Summit meetings with the US, Canada and Japan.

Black Sea Economic Forum: The Council discussed a proposal for strengthening relations between the EU and the Black Sea Economic Forum.

Enlargement: The third round of Ministerial Accession Conferences took place after the GAC and noted progress made in negotiations during the German Presidency. Of the 31 chapters in the acquis, all of the candidates have opened 15 and closed between six and 10. The Conferences looked forward to further progress during the Finnish Presidency.

EU/Switzerland: After several years of negotiation, seven bilateral agreements between the EU and Switzerland were signed in the margins of the GAC. The agreements cover Free Movement of Persons, Air Transport, Land Transport, Agriculture, Mutual Recognition of Standards, Public Procurement and Science and Technology.

EU/South Caucasus: A Summit was held with the Presidents of Armenia and Georgia and the Prime Minister of Azerbaijan on 22 June to mark the entry into force on 1 July of Partnership and Co-operation Agreements with all three countries. A joint declaration issued at the meeting stressed the political and economic importance the EU attaches to the South Caucasus and looked forward to a closer partnership.

EU Latin America/Caribbean Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agenda for the EU-Latin America/Caribbean summit of 25 to 29 June prior to the meeting. [88332]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The EU/Latin America/Caribbean Summit will take place in Rio de Janeiro on 28 and 29 June. It will be preceded by meetings of Foreign Ministers and officials on 25 to 27 June. The agenda for the Summit will be as follows:

28 June 1999

Working Session 1—Political Dialogue

A) Democracy, pluralism and good governance, human rights, regional integration processes, co-operation in international fora, including the reform of the UN system.

B) The rule of law, combat against terrorism, combat against organised crime and the drug problem.

C) Sustainable development in all its aspects, combat against poverty, protection of the environment and social equity.

29 June 1999

Working Session 2—Economic and Trade Themes

A) The international financial situation: evaluation and prospects (the new "architecture"); consequences of introduction of the Euro.

B) The importance of trade negotiations and liberalisation: multilateral and bilateral.

C) The challenge and opportunities of globalisation and development.

Working Session 3—Education, Culture and Human Dimension

A) Education (including co-operation on basic formation, vocational training and among higher education institutions), Science and Technology.

B) Cultural dimension, media and cultural management; preservation of cultural heritage and diversity.

C) The human dimension: women's participation in all spheres; protection of children; the role of civil society in interregional relations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef (Intervention Stores)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of beef have been released from intervention stores in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland on to the United Kingdom beef market in each of the last 12 months. [87185]

Mr. Rooker: The tonnage of intervention beef released from UK intervention stores during the period 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999 is as follows:

	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Total
1998
June	789	121	0	200	1,110
July	954	242	6	558	1,760
August	418	40	0	950	1,408
September	1,329	176	0	1,111	2,616
October	1,560	117	0	882	2,559
November	1,250	28	0	1,126	2,404
December	1,665	78	0	838	2,581
1999
January	1,769	82	0	509	2,360
February	1,705	38	5	1,856	3,604
March	2,470	442	4	3,898	6,814
April	1,749	350	4	2,208	4,311
May	2,324	359	1	4,508	7,192
Total	17,982	2,073	20	18,644	38,719

Thailand

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 129, on Thailand, if he will publish the findings of his Department's inspectors who visited Thailand to inspect the welfare and hygiene standards relating to locally raised poultry. [87408]

Mr. Rooker: A report of the inspection visit can be found on the Ministry's internet site, the address of which is http://www.maff.gov.uk. The full document is also available to all Members in the Library of the House.

Linseed Fibre Flax

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the tonnage of linseed fibre flax produced in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years; and what was the total financial subsidy paid on this crop in each of those years. [87651]

Mr. Rooker: Payments made under the EU fibre flax scheme are based on the area of flax grown. The area of fibre flax grown in the United Kingdom in 1996, 1997 and 1998 was 20,200 hectares, 19,200 hectares and 16,800 hectares respectively. Based on the average yields achieved in those three years the tonnage of fibre flax produced would have been in the region of 27,000 tonnes in 1996, 16,000 tonnes in 1997 and 25,000 tonnes in 1998.

The total amount of subsidy paid out under the EU fibre flax scheme in the United Kingdom in 1996, 1997 and 1998 amounted to some £11.6 million, £12.5 million and £10.7 million respectively.

Sheep

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that sheep grazing on upland areas affected by radiocaesium contamination do not enter the food chain. [87860]

Mr. Rooker: Affected areas are subject to orders made under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 which restrict the sale, movement and slaughter of sheep. Sheep to be moved off restricted farms must be monitored, and if found to be over the action level of 1000 becquerels per kilogram (Bq/kg) of caesium, are marked as ineligible for slaughter. Marked sheep can be moved to clean grazing and released for slaughter three months later when the radiocaesium has decayed to safe levels. Random check monitoring of sheep carcases at slaughterhouses serving the restricted areas has confirmed that no animals over the action level are getting into the food chain. The highest radiocaesium level ever found in a carcase was 533 Bq/kg (in 1991).

WALES

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households in Wales would meet the eligibility criteria for the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme if it were to be applied in Wales. [88153]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There is no information readily available on the number of households in Wales who would meet the eligibility criteria for the new HEES scheme if it were to be applied in Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly. Consultation proposals for the new HEES in Wales will be published on Monday 28 June 1999.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the debt inherited by each unitary authority in Wales from the predecessor authorities; and what estimate he has made of each authority's exposure to future financial liabilities from those authorities. [88400]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on the outstanding loan debt of county and county borough councils at 1 April 1996 is set out in paragraph 6 of the notes to Table 1.2 of the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1997–98, which was approved by the House in February 1997.

I have made no estimate of any financial liabilities that councils inherited from their predecessor authorities because information on such liabilities is not held centrally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 333

SESSION 1998–99

14th June—25th June 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements', and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.

A14
78w

A40
Wales 72w

A303
440w

Abbott, Ms Diane
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 198
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 272, 280–3, 289–90, 297, (16.06.99) 414–5, 428–9, 437–42, 453, 469, 473, 484–5

Absent voting
229w, 379w
Northern Ireland 390–1w

Access funds
Students 341w

Access to Justice Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
Allocation of time motion (22.06.99) 933–4
Ways and Means res*, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 980–1079

Accident and emergency departments
Administrative delays 11w

Accidents
Chinook helicopters 326–7w
Fishing vessels 79w
Railways 1164
Roads 37w, 441–2w

Administration of justice
EC action 108w
Young offenders 164w

Adoption
(16.06.99) 349–55, 477w
Hampshire 477w

Advertising
Drugs 12–4w, 382–3w, 477–8w
Metropolitan Police 104–5w
Prostitution 347w
Tobacco 225w

Advisory bodies
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 20–1w

Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education
see National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment
247–50w

Advocacy
Special hospitals 14w

Aerials
Planning permission 250w

Afghanistan
Overseas aid 174–5w

Age of consent
220–1w

Agency nurses
Costs 435w

Agriculture
see also Farmers

Ainsworth, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 668, 673–84, 697, 699, 718

Ainsworth, Mr Peter*—*continued
Questions
Millennium Exhibition, Voluntary organisations 343w
Minimum wage, Horse riding 316w
National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education, Publications 89w
Theatre, Hammersmith and Fulham 343–4w

Air bags
247w

Air pollution
Aircraft 82w
Carbon dioxide 83w

Aircraft
Air pollution 82w

Airguns
Safety (23.06.99) 1257–66

Albania
Arms control 115–6w

Al-Fayed, Mohammed
(22.06.99) 1081–8

Allan, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 271, 275–6, 288, 290, 292–3, 295–7, (16.06.99) 397, 403–4, 410, 414, 424–30, 440, 444, 468, 470, 480–2, 494–5, 505–7, 509–10

Allergies
Grain 281w

Alternative energy
2w, 203w

Alzheimer's disease
289–90w

Ambassadors for British business
278w

Amess, Mr David
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 56–69
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 216
Questions
Complaints, Standards specifications 413–4w
Local government finance, Southend 78w
Police, Manpower 57w
Public appointments 420w
Seasonal workers, Working hours 555–6

Ammunition
Lead 137w, 149

Anaesthetics
Dental services 9–10w

Anchorpac
Correspondence 425w

Anderson, Mr Donald
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 27, (17.06.99) 583–4, 617–21

Anderson, Janet, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture Media and Sport*
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 674, 679–80, 731–4
Questions
BBC 366w
BBC, Audit 88w, 344w
BBC, Public appointments 430w
Film 429–30w
Holidays abroad 180w

Anderson, Janet*—*continued
Millennium Exhibition 180w
Millennium Exhibition, Voluntary organisations 343w
Tourism 365–6w
Tourism, Balance of payments 179–80w

Animal experiments
380–1w

Animal feed
Bovine spongiform encephalopáthy 391–2
Contamination 123w
Genetically modified organisms 122w, 192–3w

Animal Procedures Committee
57w
Annual reports 350w

Animal products
Drugs 382w

Animal welfare
EC action 414w

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986
Questions
380w

Anniversaries
Duchy of Lancaster 125–6w, 420w

Antarctic
Environment protection 134w

Antibiotics
Genetically modified organisms 136w

Antisemitism
Iran 227–8w, 253–4w
Russia 354w

Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(21.06.99) 862–900
HC procedure (18.06.99) 734

Arbitration
Common agricultural policy 123w

Armed conflict
Kosovo 65–6w, 277w, 302–4w, 306–7w, 313–4w, 327–8w, 354w, 381–2, 423w, 451w, 461w, 481–2w, 743–5, 755, 917–20
Sudan 253w

Armed forces
Divorce 751
Education 301w
Females 258w
Gambia 451w
Health services 256w, 752–4
Homosexuality 145w
Insignia 263w
Medical profession 213w
Paternity leave 147w
Peace keeping operations 305w
Recruitment 150w
Training 305w

Armed Forces Pay Review Body
482w

Arms control
Albania 115–6w

Arms trade
Export controls 359w

Armstrong, Rt Hon Hilary, Minister of State for Local Government and Housing, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Questions
Beacon councils 143–4
Council housing, Finance 337–9w
Council housing, Rents 201w

Armstrong, Rt Hon Hilary—continued*
Council housing, Tenant management organisations 411–2w
Council tax, Shropshire 80w
Empty property 149–50
Local government, Elections 77w
Local government, Ethics 77w
Local Government Commission for England 286w
Local government finance 78w, 286w
Local government finance, Southend 78w
Standard spending assessments 79w

Army
Cadets 147w, 262w
Deployment 257w
Manpower 260–1w, 306w, 309w
Vacancies 261w

Army Air Force and Naval Discipline Acts (Continuation) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(14.06.99) 115

Army Training and Recruiting Agency
Standards 149w

Arrests
National Front 161w

Asbestos
Imports 200w

Ashcroft, Michael
1272–3

Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Questions
Belfast Agreement 1162–3

ASSIST programme
117–8w

Assisted areas
Kent (23.06.99) 1143–50

Asthma
Children (16.06.99) 365–72

ASTOR system
Contracts 65–6w

Asylum
see Political refugees

Atherton, Ms Candy
Questions
Eclipse 1999, Health education 384w

Atkins, Charlotte
Questions
Probation Board for Northern Ireland 70–1w
Remedial education 394w
Standard spending assessments 79w

Atkinson, Mr David
Debates etc.
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 577
Questions
Business questions 566
Coroners 62w

Atkinson, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 830–2
Questions
Business questions 565

Attorney General
Females 300w

Autism
286–7w

Automated credit transfer
Social security benefits 33–4w

Aviation
206w

Aviation—continued*
Excise duties 312w

Avon
Orthopaedics 437w

AWE Aldermaston
328w
Radioactive wastes 329w

Axle weights
Lorries 281w

Bacillus thuringiensis
119–20w

Badgers
see Bovine tuberculosis

Bahai sect
Iran 228w

Baker, Norman
Debates etc.
Flood control, Lewes (16.06.99) 533–6, 540
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 334–7
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1369–72, 1378
Questions
Biotechnology 109w
Biotechnology Presentation Group 127w, 1155–6
Bovine somatotropin 416w
British Railways Board, Land 408–9w
Church Commissioners, Genetically modified organisms 316w
Church Commissioners, Investment 297w
Civil servants, Recruitment 363–4w
Drugs, Animal products 382w
European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters 104w
Firearms 103w
Genetic Modification Technology Interdepartmental Group 126w
Genetically modified organisms 146–7
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 124–5w, 136w, 445–6w
Genetically modified organisms, Developing countries 72w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 124w, 193w, 415–6w
Genetically modified organisms, Tree planting 336w
Government Communications Headquarters 360w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 65–6w
Monsanto, Cabinet Office 194w
Palace of Westminster, Parking 316w
Railtrack, Capital investment 282w
Railtrack, Finance 281w
Railway track 408w
Royal family, Protection 104w
Shamrock Farms 104w
Transport, Ministry of Defence 301–2w
Unleaded petrol 336w

Balance of payments
Tourism 179–80w

Balkans
Economic situation 356–7w
Overseas aid 175–6w, 376–9
Stability Pact 255w
Territorial Army 300w

Ballard, Jackie
Questions
Bacillus thuringiensis 119–20w
Economic and monetary union 1168–70
Females, Attorney General 300w
Females, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w
Females, Dept for Education and Employment 296–7w

Ballard, Jackie—continued*
Females, Dept for International Development 345w
Females, Dept of Social Security 234w
Females, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 332–3w
Females, Dept of Trade and Industry 270w
Females, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 255w
Females, Home Office 346w
Females, Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w
Females, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 417–8w
Females, Ministry of Defence 262–3w
Females, Northern Ireland Office 386–7w
Females, Scottish Office 330w
Females, Welsh Office 225w
Quarantine 216w
Railways, Rural areas 77w

Ballot papers
230w

Bamieh, Maria
317w

Bananas
EC external trade 177–8w, 424–5w

Bank of Credit and Commerce International
28w

Bankruptcy
Farmers 299w

Banner Committee
see Animal Procedures Committee

Barnes, Mr Harry
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 378
Kosovo, Armed conflict 744

Barron, Mr Kevin
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 821–5
Questions
Food Standards Draft Bill Select Committee 124w
Tobacco, Advertising 225w

Battery hens
417w

Battle, Mr John, Minister of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Debates etc.
Footwear (17.06.99) 660–4
Questions
Alternative energy 2w, 203w
Aviation 206w
Biotechnology 109w
British Nuclear Fuels 209w
British Steel 206w
Climate change levy 188w
Companies, Environment protection 5w
Diesel engines 556
Electricity 1–2w
Energy, Consumption 209w
Energy, Trade competitiveness 203–4w
Fuel poverty 547–8
Higher Education Reach-out to Business and the Community Fund 108–9w
Lead, Research 207–8w
Manufacturing industries 208w
Manufacturing industries, Capital investment 2–3w
Matra Marconi Space UK 550
Non-fossil fuel obligation, Essex 109w
Oil and Gas Industry Task Force 271–2w, 543–4
Plutonium 269–70w
Radioactive materials, Japan 5w, 271w
Utilities, Standing charges 548

Battle, Mr John*—*continued
Visits abroad, Dept of Trade and Industry 207w
Written questions, Dept of Trade and Industry 189w

Bayley, Mr Hugh, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Social Security*
Questions
Disability living allowance, Eligibility 34–5w, 107–8w
European Social Fund, Employment schemes 34w
Incapacity benefit 362w, 434w
Industrial injuries disablement benefit, Benefits rules 32w
Invalid care allowances 182w, 361w, 367w
Invalid care allowances, Earnings rules 182w
Social security benefits, Disabled 35–6w
War pensions, Medical examinations 295w

BBC
366w
Audit 88w, 344w
Public appointments 430w

Beacon councils
143–4

Beard, Mr Nigel
Questions
Economic and monetary union 460w
NATO enlargement 301w

Beckett, Rt Hon Margaret, President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons*
Debates etc.
Business statements (14.06.99) 111–5, (23.06.99) 1230–2
Millennium compliance, Ministerial statements (17.06.99) 571–9
Speaker, Leave of absence (23.06.99) 1256
Questions
Business statements 559–70, 1285–98
Members, Car allowances 74w
Millennium compliance 71w, 151w

Bedford-Bletchley railway line
137–8w

Beef
Common agricultural policy 121w
Intervention stocks 486w

Begg, Miss Anne
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 842, 847

Beggs, Mr Roy
Questions
Beef, Intervention stocks 486w
Climate change levy, Northern Ireland 28–9w
Occupational therapy, Northern Ireland 49–50w

Beith, Rt Hon A J
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 780
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Orders (23.06.99) 1174
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1392–4, 1397
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1345, 1349
Questions
Drugs, Abuse 267w
Beith, Rt Hon A J*—*continued
Drugs, Medical treatments 349–50w
Drugs, Young people 364w
Economic and monetary union 386
European Police Office, Interpol 346w
Habitual offenders, Drugs 347w
Identity cards 4
Parish councils, Public appointments 285w
Political refugees, Voucher schemes 386
Refugees, International law 346–7w
Schools, Drugs 340w
Security Facilities Executive 422w
Stephen Lawrence Death Inquiry, Disclosure of information 58–9w
United Kingdom Passport Agency, Compensation 374w

Belfast Agreement
1160–3

Belfast Harbour
427w

Belgium
Dioxins 416–7w
EC grants and loans 116w

Bell, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 631–2
Questions
Armed forces, Divorce 751
Kosovo, Refugees 355–6w

Bell, Mr Stuart, Second Church Estates Commissioner*
Debates etc.
Care of Places of Worship Measure (23.06.99) 1250–1, 1254
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1233–4, 1247–9
Questions
Church Commissioners, Expenditure 760
Church Commissioners, Genetically modified organisms 316w
Church Commissioners, Investment 297w
Church of England, Investment 756–7
Churches, VAT 757–8
Clergy, Pay 758

Benefits Agency
see Social Security Benefits Agency

Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service
Manpower 295–6w

Benn, Hilary
Debates etc.
Maiden speech (23.06.99) 1198–200
Oaths and affirmations (14.06.99) 33
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1198–200

Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Debates etc.
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1385–6, 1388
Sub judice rule, Points of order (24.06.99) 1382
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 377
Economic and monetary union 390–1

Bennett, Mr Andrew F
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1374–5, 1379
Questions
Northern Ireland Industrial Research and Technology Unit, Standards 143w

Bercow, Mr John
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 114
Clocks and watches, Points of order (22.06.99) 929
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 47–8, 51, 53–4, 57–8, 61–3, 65, 67, 70–2, 75–6, 80–1, 86–7, 90, 92, 94–6, 98–110
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 189, 195–6
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 223–4, 226–7
Innovation (25.06.99) 1417, 1423–5, 1430, 1432, 1450, 1454–67, 1473, 1477, 1481, 1483–5
London Underground (15.06.99) 166
Medicines Control Agency, Petitions (25.06.99) 1413
Oral question time intervention (17.06.99) 546
Pre-school education (18.06.99) 735–40
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1191–2, 1204
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 937–8
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 678–80
Questions
Administration of justice, EC action 108w
Albania, Arms control 115–6w
Armed forces, Females 258w
Armed forces, Homosexuality 145w
Balkans, Stability Pact 255w
Belgium, EC grants and loans 116w
Better government programme 420w
Better government programme, Elderly 1153–4
British Council, Public appointments 256w
Business questions 568–9, 1297–8
Centre for European Reform, Finance 76w
Council of Europe, Publications 115w
Departmental records, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 116w
EC budget 312w
EC Culture Council 88w
EC defence policy 264w
EC integration 115w
EC staff, Business interests 276w
EC working groups 255w
Electronic surveillance, EC action 92w
Embassies, Email 116w
European Central Bank, Codes of practice 168w
European Commission, Conflict of interests 133w
European Commission, Pay 168w
European Communities, Flags 115w
European Movement, Finance 76w
European Parliament elections, Publicity 267–8w
Fares, Concessions 140
Fishing catches 216–8w
Human rights 226w
Intergovernmental Conference 2000 195w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 277w, 303–4w, 306–7w, 313w
Kosovo, Ethnic groups 16w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 195w, 396w
Kosovo, Refugees 187w, 265w
Kosovo, Uranium 307w
Libyan Arab Republic, Sanctions 109–10w
Macedonia, Export controls 133w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 916
Modernisation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 32w
National Audit Office 759–60
National security 16w
Oil and Gas Industry Task Force 543–4
Overseas aid, Fraud 173w

Bercow, Mr John—continued*
Panel 2000 31–2w
Parliamentary questions, Scottish Office 235w
Parliamentary questions, Welsh Office 275w
Pinochet, Augusto 115w
Research, EC action 359w
Road traffic offences, EC action 92w
Sandeels 218w
Schengen Agreement 116–7w
Schengen Agreement, Costs 92–3w
Schengen Agreement, Information technology 160–1w
Seeds, Marketing 122w
Taxation, Business 1279
Taxation, EC action 324–5w
Taxation, Italy 27w
Vandalism 15
Western European Union 309w
Withholding tax 168–9w
Working hours, Fisheries 270–1w

Berry, Mr Roger
Questions
Incapacity benefit 362w, 434w
Learning disability, Intimidation 1167

Best, Mr Harold
Questions
Land use, Databases 154

Better government programme
420w
Elderly 1153–4

Betting shops
Tax yields 170–1w

Bicycles
Railway stations 409w
Trains 441–2w

Biotechnology
109w

Biotechnology Presentation Group
127w, 1151–3, 1155–6

Blackman, Mrs Liz
Questions
Primary education, Literacy 1166–7

Blair, Rt Hon Tony, Prime Minister, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister for the Civil Service*
Debates etc.
Kosovo, Ministerial Statements (21.06.99) 761–76
Questions
Armed Forces Pay Review Body 482w
Belfast Agreement 1160–3
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Animal feed 391–2
Council of Europe, UK delegations 18w
Crimes of violence, Northern Ireland 388
Devolution 387
Disadvantaged, Children 1166
EC external trade, USA 388–9
Economic and monetary union 322w, 386, 390–1, 1164–6, 1168–70
Economic policy 386–7
Electronic commerce 313w
Employment, EC law 389
European Central Bank, Gold and foreign exchange reserves 389–90
Government departments, Correspondence 71w
Heart disease, Surgery 1168
House of Lords, Reform 1164
Interception of Communications Commissioner, Annual reports 196w
Intergovernmental Conference 2000 195w
Iraq, Sanctions 387
Kashmir 187w, 387–8
Kosovo, Armed conflict 313–4w, 481–2w
Kosovo, Ethnic groups 16w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 195w
Kosovo, Refugees 187w, 383
Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee 321w
Learning disability, Intimidation 1167
Lords Lieutenant, Public appointments 321w
M4, Bus lanes 1167
Members, Correspondence 314w
Ministerial policy advisors 478–9w
Ministerial policy advisors, Prime Minister 478w
Ministers, Visits abroad 196–7w
National Bus Company, Pension funds 385–6, 1166
National security 16w
New deal for young people 1160
NHS, Finance 1168
Official engagements 399w
Parachute Regiment, Correspondence 18–9w
Political refugees, Voucher schemes 386
Primary education, Literacy 1166–7
Privy Council, Public appointments 17w
Proportional representation 387
Proportional representation, Referendums 383–5, 1163
Railways, Accidents 1164
Rover Group 1163
Royal Naval Hospital Haslar 15–6w
Security Service Commissioner, Annual reports 195–6w
South Africa, Overseas aid 389
Sports, Schools 1163–4
Teenage pregnancy 17–8w
Tinsley House Immigration Detention Centre 390
United Nations, Reform 399w
USA, Prime Minister 479–80w
Visits abroad, Prime Minister 482–3w
Wal-Mart 482w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 390

Blears, Ms Hazel
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 913–4
Stansted Airport 138–9w

Blizzard, Mr Bob
Questions
Capital gains tax, Offshore industry 75w
Nigeria 923–4
Oil and Gas Industry Task Force 543
Sex Offences Review 58w
Working families tax credit 458w

Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry
Disclosure of information 398w
Legal costs 9w
Solicitors 268w

Blunkett, Rt Hon David, Secretary of State for Education and Employment*
Questions
New deal for 50 plus 467w
Overseas students 244–5w

Blunt, Mr Crispin
Questions
Army, Manpower 399w
Dairy farming 193w
East Timor 917
Excise duties, Aviation 312w
Milk Marque 298w

Blyth Valley
Drugs 1154–5

Boateng, Mr Paul, Minister of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Air guns, Safety (23.06.99) 1260–6
Police, Rural areas (23.06.99) 1139–42
Questions
Absent voting 379w
Cleveland Police Authority 348w
Committal proceedings 97–8w, 162w
Community safety local partnerships 14–5
Crime, Children 161–2w
Crime prevention, Schools 57w
Crime prevention, Voluntary organisations 56–7w
Crimes of violence 7–8
Criminal injuries compensation 221–2w
Criminal Records Bureau, Fees and charges 58w
Crown courts, Trials 220w
Cycling, Pedestrian areas 230w
Cycling, Road traffic offences 348w
Dangerous driving 58w
Disadvantaged, Voluntary organisations 13, 55–6w
Driving offences, Convictions 379w
Drugs, Abuse 106w
Drugs, Prison sentences 106–7w
Evidence, Disclosure of information 56w
Females, Home Office 346w
Fines, Enforcement 55w
Firearms 61w, 103w
Firearms, Compensation 221w
Firearms, Licensing 380w
Juries 54w, 96–7w
Mental health services, Young people 100w
Paedophilia 375–6w
Police, Disciplinary proceedings 62w
Police, Emergency calls 93w, 429w
Police, Festivals and special occasions 220w
Police, Helicopters 266w
Police, Millennium 55w
Police custody 101–2w
Prisoners on remand 97w
Prisons, Drugs 474w
Prostitution, Advertising 347w
Riot control weapons, Medical treatments 220w
Royal family, Protection 104w
Sex Offences Review 58w
Stop and search 474w
Trials, Costs 98–9w
Vandalism 15
Voluntary organisations, Minimum wage 14
Young offenders, Rehabilitation 378w

Boating
Safety measures (15.06.99) 169–73

Body, Sir Richard
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 100–1
Questions
Ambassadors for British business 278w
Directorate General for Competition 414w
Economic and monetary union 423–4w

Bombings
Dublin 263–4w
Iraq 301w
Monaghan 263–4w
Omagh 353w

Borrow, Mr David
Questions
Armed forces, Education 301w
Plutonium 269–70w

Boswell, Mr Tim
Questions
Balkans, Economic situation 356–7w
Civil service, Personnel management 419w
Developing countries, Information technology 178w
Electricity 1–2w
Energy, Consumption 209w
Further education, Disciplinary proceedings 63w
NHS, Managers 382w
Police, Disciplinary proceedings 62w
Small businesses, Parental leave 209w
Universities, Disciplinary proceedings 63w

Bottomley, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1045
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1233, 1236, 1238
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 269–70, 279–80, 285, (16.06.99) 402, 404–5, 479, 488–9, 493, 502
Questions
Battery hens 417w
Churches, VAT 758
Law, Reform 455w
National Front, Arrests 161w
Prisoners 60–1w
Prisoners, Per capita costs 265–6w
Racial harassment, Ealing 161w
Roads, Speed limits 441–2w

Bottomley, Rt Hon Virginia
Questions
Harrier aircraft 306w

Bovine somatotropin
416w

Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
Animal feed 391–2
USA 192w

Bovine tuberculosis
416w
Disease control 449w

Bracknell
Genetically modified organisms 336w

Bradley, Mr Peter
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 747–8
Fines, Enforcement 55w
Roads, Accidents 37w

Bradshaw, Mr Ben
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 596, 615, 633, 647
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 749
Trains, Bicycles 441–2w

Brady, Mr Graham
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 41, 45–55, 57, 60, 66, 69–70, 101, 106, 110
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 176, 190, 193–201
Questions
Business questions 567
EC Social Charter, Costs 204–5w
Excise duties, Lorries 1274
Heart diseases, Surgery 1168
NHS, Public appointments 288w
Written questions, Cabinet Office 225–6w
Written questions, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w

Brady, Mr Graham—continued*
Written questions, Dept for Education and Employment 244w
Written questions, Dept for International Development 345w
Written questions, Dept of Health 186w
Written questions, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 282w
Written questions, Dept of Trade and Industry 189w
Written questions, Home Office 374w
Written questions, Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w
Written questions, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 193w
Written questions, Northern Ireland Office 232–3w
Written questions, Scottish Office 215w
Written questions, Treasury 172w
Written questions, Welsh Office 235w

Brake, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 161
Questions
Alternative energy 2w
Balkans, Overseas aid 376–7
Carbon dioxide, Air pollution 83w
Chinook helicopters, Royal family 450–1w
London Underground, Joint ventures 137
Radioactive materials, Japan 150–1w

Brazier, Mr Julian
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 349–51, 354
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Points of order (17.06.99) 580

Brazil
Loans 325w

Breed, Mr Colin
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1375–8
Questions
Criminal Records Bureau, Fees and charges 58w

Brinton, Mrs Helen
Questions
Evidence, Disclosure of information 56w
Refrigeration, Dept for Education and Employment 128w
Refrigeration, Greenhouse effect 5–6w, 9w, 50–2w

Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry
319w

British Broadcasting Corporation
see BBC

British Cattle Movement Service
Costs 24w

British Council
Public appointments 256w

British dependent territories
924–5

British Leyland
see Rover Group

British nationality
230w

British Nuclear Fuels
209w, 228w
Secondment 253w

British Railways Board
Land 408–9w

British Steel
206w

British Waterways Board
Public appointments 202w

Broadcasting programmes
Ministry of Defence 148w

Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1056–7, 1059
Care of Places of Worship Measure (23.06.99) 1253–4
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1243–5
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 781
London Underground (15.06.99) 162
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1398–9
Speaker, Leave of absence (23.06.99) 1256
Questions
Business questions 1288–9
Regional government 145

Brown, Rt Hon Gordon, Chancellor of the Exchequer*
Debates etc.
Financial Services and Market Bill, 1R (17.06.99) 581
Questions
Commemorative coins, Public libraries 29w
Debts, Developing countries 458–9w, 1274–7
Economic and monetary union 1267–71
Economic growth 1268–9
Euro Preparations Advisory Group 1269
Excise duties, Lorries 1273
Gold and foreign exchange reserves, International Monetary Fund 1276
Members, Correspondence 475w
Tax yields 1271–2
Working families tax credit 1277–8

Brown, Rt Hon Nicholas, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food*
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 786–96, 798, 804
Questions
Bovine tuberculosis, Disease control 449w
EC Agriculture Council 215–6w, 297w

Brown, Mr Russell
Questions
Employment Service, Standards 223–4w

Browne, Mr Desmond
Questions
Community relations, Northern Ireland 391–2w
Land Registers of Northern Ireland, Standards 391w
Part-time employment, EC law 203w
South Africa, Elections 920–1

Browning, Mrs Angela
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1421
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 573–4
Questions
Inventions 552–3
Small businesses, Rural areas 546

Bruce, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 113
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 178
Petitions, Points of order (22.06.99) 929
Safety at Sea Bill, 1R (15.06.99) 171–3

Bruce, Mr Ian—continued*
Questions
Government departments, Correspondence 1158–9
Government departments, Email 420w
Mongolia 923
New deal for communities 151
Voluntary organisations, Minimum wage 14
Working families tax credit 1277–8

Bruce, Mr Malcolm
Questions
Economic and monetary union 1269

Buchanan Centre
Rates and rating 52w

Buck, Ms Karen
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep 430–3
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 340–2

Burden, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1185, 1205–7
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 355w
Turkey, Nuclear power stations 133–4w

Burgon, Mr Colin
Questions
Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment 247–50w
British Waterways Board, Public appointments 202w
Crime prevention, Schools 57w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 396–7w

Burnett, Mr John
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 986–8, 1007, 1035–6, 1044–5, 1053–4, 1074
Mentally incapacitated, Community care (14.06.99) 128

Burns, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1190, 1212–4
Questions
Countryside, Access 45–6w, 201w
Lead, Ammunition 137w
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust 186w
Ramsford School Chelmsford 439w
Tax yields 461w

Burstow, Mr Paul
Questions
International Monetary Fund, Structural adjustment 178w
Railways, Standards 82w
Taxis, Disabled 407w

Bus lanes
M4 1167

Bus services
Standards 85w

Business
Taxation 30–1w, 1279–80

Business interests
EC staff 276w

Business links
187–8w, 414–5w

Business plans
Environment Agency 333–4w

Business statements
(14.06.99) 111–5, 559–70, (23.06.99) 1285–98

Butterfill, Mr John
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1425, 1431, 1436, 1439–40, 1446–7, 1449, 1461, 1466–7, 1470–4, 1478

Byers, Rt Hon Stephen, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry*
Questions
USA, Dept of Trade and Industry 424w

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee
see Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee

Cabinet Office
Monsanto 194w
USA 125w
Written questions 225–6w

Cable, Mr Vincent
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 485–7, 509–10
Questions
Age, Discrimination 438w
Animal experiments 380–1w
Further education, Standards 128w
Government, Policy 419w
International Monetary Fund, Gold and foreign exchange reserves 312w
Inventions 551
Kosovo, Armed conflict 743
Millennium compliance, Emergency services 89–90w
Nigeria, Debts 175–6w
Police, Emergency calls 93w, 429w
Political refugees, Visas 100w
Pupil exclusions, South East region 438–9w
Quarantine 119w
Rabies, Disease control 118–9w
Racial violence, Greater London 151–9w
Sewers, Oils 334w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Computers 184w
Taxation, Business 1280
Taxation, Recruitment agencies 27–8w
Tipping of waste, Oils 406–7w
Young offender institutions 377–8w
Young offenders, Education 376w, 378w
Young offenders, Rehabilitation 378w
Young offenders, Remand in custody 377w
Young offenders, Sexual offences 376–7w

Cable systems
Inland waterways 285w

Caborn, Rt Hon Richard, Minister for the Regions Regeneration and Planning, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1344, 1350–6, 1359
Questions
Aerials, Planning permission 250w
Derelict land 83w
Household surveys 44w, 46w
Households, Gloucestershire 77w
Land use, Databases 154
London Economics 246–7w
New deal for communities 151
Out of town shopping centres 447w
Planning permission 138w
Regional development agencies, North East region 413w

Caborn, Rt Hon Richard—continued*
Regional development agencies, North West region 79w
Regional government 145–6
Sustainable development 86–7w

Cadets
Army 147w, 262w

CADW Welsh Historic Monuments
331w

Caernarfon
Territorial Army 449–50w

Campbell, Mrs Anne
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 800, 802
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1196, 1220
Questions
Local government finance 84w

Campbell, Rt Hon Menzies
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1100–1
Kosovo (14.06.99) 26, (17.06.99) 603–7, 645, (21.06.99) 767
Questions
Defence Aviation Repair Agency 453w
EC common foreign and security policy 912
Gulf war syndrome, Medical examinations 150w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 744–5
Tomahawk missiles 452–3w

Campbell, Mr Ronnie
Questions
Drugs, Blyth Valley 1154–5
Proceeds of crime 54w

Campbell-Savours, Mr Dale
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 28, (21.06.99) 773
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1187
Questions
Identity cards 2–3, 381w
Regional development agencies, North West region 79w

Cancer
Colchester 288–9w
Health services 320w, 476–7w
Research 319w

Cannabis
Medical treatments 106w
Prison sentences 105–6w

Capital gains tax
Offshore industry 75w
Tax avoidance 171w

Capital Modernisation Fund
Greater Manchester 171w

Capital punishment
Caribbean (23.06.99) 1089–108

Car allowances
Members 74w

Carbon dioxide
Air pollution 83w

Care of Places of Worship Measure 1999
Debates etc.
(23.06.99) 1250–4

Caribbean
Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1089–108
Overseas aid 48w

Cars
Greater London 80w

Cars—continued
Prices 207w
Rural areas 471w
Safety 471w

Cash, Mr William
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 321
Questions
EC aid 380

Cash limits
Dept for Education and Employment 243w
Dept for International Development 72w

Catering
Dept for Education and Employment 223w
Sportsgrounds 123–4w

Cathedrals Measure 1998
Debates etc.
(23.06.99) 1233–49

Caton, Mr Martin
Questions
Dioxins, Health hazards 335w
Industrial injuries disablement benefit, Benefits rules 32w
Physiotherapy 385w
Physiotherapy, Wales 373w

Cattle
Ear tagging 24w

Cattle tracing system
120–1w

Central America
Disaster relief 177w

Centre for European Reform
Finance 76w

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster
Ministerial duties 126w
Roads 126w
USA 125w

Chancellor of the Exchequer
see Treasury

Chapman, Mr Ben
Debates etc.
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 579
Questions
Clergy, Pay 758
Drugs, Abuse 1154
Economic policy 462w
Fuel poverty 547
General practitioners, Working hours 111–2w
New deal for 50 plus 467w
Prescription drugs, Packaging 186w
Quality protects programme 250–1w

Charitable donations
310w

Charities
Tax allowances 75w

Chaytor, Mr David
Questions
British Nuclear Fuels 209w, 228w
British Nuclear Fuels, Secondment 253w
Business questions 566–7
Free movement of capital, Developing countries 462–3w
Overseas investment 311w
Radioactive materials, Japan 305w, 927–8
Radioactive materials, Transport 79w
Utilities, Standing charges 548
World Bank 49w

Chelsea
Military bases 256–7w

Chernobyl
EC grants and loans 413w

Chidgey, Mr David
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1445–53, 1480, 1482

Child Abuse in North Wales Judicial Inquiry
236w

Child Support Agency
431–2w

Children
Abuse 318w
Asthma (16.06.99) 365–72
Crime 161–2w
Disabled 250–1w
Disadvantaged 1166

Children in care
251–2w
Somerset 251w

China
Political prisoners 276–7w

China western poverty reduction project
197–8w

Chinook helicopters
Accidents 326–7w
Computer software 327w
Royal family 450–1w

Chisholm, Mr Malcolm,
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 40, 43, 66–7
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 191, 203

Chope, Mr Christopher
Questions
Biotechnology Presentation Group 1151
Business questions 1297
Commemorative coins, Millennium 171w
Electronic commerce 313w
Excise duties, Lorries 1273
Metropolitan Police, Advertising 104–5w
Millennium compliance 71w
Open government 105w
Passports, Administrative delays 94–5w

Christianity
India 909

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Working Group
435w

Church Commissioners
Expenditure 760
Genetically modified organisms 316w
Investment 297w

Church of England
Investment 756–7

Churches
VAT 757–8

City technology colleges
340–1w

CityFlyer Express
1w

Civil servants
Recruitment 363–4w

Civil service
Personnel management 419w

Civil service agencies
419w

Clapham, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Air guns, Safety (23.06.99) 1257–8, 1262–3

Clappison, Mr James
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 269, 271–4, 288, 292–3, (16.06.99) 398, 400, 403, 407–8, 416–21, 464–5, 467, 504–5
Questions
Home detention curfews 59w
Identity cards 4–5
Immigration controls 165w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 915–6
Political refugees, Administrative delays 93w

Clark, Rt Hon Dr David
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 805–7

Clark, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1145–6

Clarke, Mr Charles, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment
Debates etc.
Swimming, Curriculum (21.06.99) 905–8
Questions
Drugs, Schools 132w
Grants for education support and training 394–5w
Physical education 131–2w
Schools, Drugs 340w

Clarke, Mr Eric
Questions
Debates, Digital broadcasting 74–5w

Clarke, Rt Hon Kenneth
Questions
Economic and monetary union 1268

Clarke, Rt Hon Tom
Questions
EC budget, Contributions 1283

Clarke, Mr Tony
Questions
Strategic Rail Authority 281w

Class sizes
239–43w
Primary education 190w

Clergy
Pay 758

Cleveland Police Authority
348w

Climate change levy
135w, 169w, 188w, 407w, 461–2w, 1280–2
Northern Ireland 28–9w

Clones
383–4w, 436w

Closed circuit television
Crime prevention 17–8

Clwyd, Ann
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 30–1, (21.06.99) 774
Questions
Arms trade, Export controls 359w
Business questions 1290–1
Child Abuse in North Wales Judicial Inquiry 236w
Debts, Developing countries 1274–6
Indonesia, Debts written off 273–4w

Coaker Mr Vernon
Questions
Crime, Children 161–2w
Drug abuse resistance education programme 1155
Hedges and ditches 84w
Motor vehicles, Waste disposal 83–4w
Overseas students 244–5w
Passports, Administrative delays 229w
Railways, Passengers 138
Recycling 443w
Rights of way 280–1w

Cohabitation
Immigration rules 164w

Cohen, Mr Harry
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 162–3
Questions
Cash limits, Dept for International Development 72w
EC budget, Fraud 413w
Fire services, Training 404–5w
Human remains, Devon 162w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 303w
Lapwings, Conservation 282w
Police, River Thames 375w, 427w
Proceeds of crime, Internet 170w
Tax yields, Betting shops 170–1w
UN Register of Conventional Arms 226w

Coinage
Counterfeit manufacturing 169–70w

Colchester
Cancer 288–9w
Military bases 262w

Coleman, Mr Iain
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 454–8

Collins, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 966–72

Colman, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
World Health Organisation (15.06.99) 298–301, 304
Questions
Landfill tax 29w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 913–4

Cologne summit
Ministerial statements (21.06.99) 761–76

Commemorative coins
Millennium 171w
Public libraries 29w

Commission for Integrated Transport
see Integrated Transport Commission

Commission of the European Communities
see European Commission

Committal proceedings
97–8w, 162w

Common agricultural policy
Arbitration 123w
Beef 121w

Commonwealth Development Corporation
Cuba 178w

Commonwealth Institute
117w

Community care
Mentally incapacitated (14.06.99) 127–36

Community charge
Wales 72–3w

Community relations
Northern Ireland 67w, 211–2w, 391–2w

Community safety local partnerships
14–5

Companies
Environment protection 5w

Company law
Video conferencing 189w

Competition
204w
Regional airports 78w

Comptroller and Auditor General
see National Audit Office

Computer software
Chinook helicopters 327w

Computers
Probation and aftercare 165w
Social Security Benefits Agency 184w

Conflict of interests
European Commission 133w

Connarty, Mr Michael
Questions
Energy, Conservation 81–2w

Conscientious objectors
Taxation 1278

Conservation
Energy 81–2w
Lapwings 282w

Consultation papers
456w

Consumer goods
Prices 541–2

Consumption
Energy 209w

Contamination
Animal feed 123w

Contracts
ASTOR system 65–6w

Contracts for services
Roads (24.06.99) 1404

Contributions
EC budget 1278–9, 1282–3

Convictions
Driving offences 399w

Cook, Frank
Questions
Business questions 562
Kosovo, Mines 344w

Cook, Rt Hon Robin, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs*
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 582–9, 594–5, 614–5
Kosovo, Ministerial statements (14.06.99) 21–33
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 910–2
Government Communications Headquarters 360w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 354w, 917–20
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 355w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 355w, 913–7
Modernisation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 32w
Nigeria 923–4
Visits abroad, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 358w, 483w

Corbett, Mr Robin
Questions
Custody officers, Training 56w
EC aid 380
Government departments, Standards 1156–7
Inventions 551
Iran, Diplomatic relations 356w
Rover Group 1163

Corbyn, Mr Jeremy
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 269, 278–9, 291, (16.06.99) 415–6, 452–4, 502–3
Kosovo (21.06.99) 772
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1387
Questions
Antarctic, Environment protection 134w
AWE Aldermaston 328w
AWE Aldermaston, Radioactive wastes 329w
Balkans, Overseas aid 176w
Bedford-Bletchley railway line 137–8w
Council housing, Rents 201w
Council housing, Single people 337w
Cycleways, Greater London 137w
Education, Islington 342w
Government departments, Buildings 194w, 420w
Hamill, Robert 351–2w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 328w
Nelson, Rosemary 140w, 210w, 352w, 425–6w
North London railway line 138w
Nuclear submarines 451w, 475w
Nuclear submarines, Decommissioning 329–30w
Nuclear submarines, Gibraltar 329w
Political refugees, Finance 187w
Railtrack, Capital investment 282w
Railway stations, Bicycles 409w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Portadown 351w
Social rented housing, Greater London 336–7w
Taxation, Conscientious objectors 1278
United Nations, Reform 399w
West Midlands Police 322w

Cormack, Sir Patrick
Debates etc.
Business question time intervention (17.06.99) 569, (24.06.99) 1287
Business questions (14.06.99) 114–5
Care of Places of Worship Measure (23.06.99) 1251–3
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1245–7
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1190–1, 1193, 1203, 1221–5
Speaker, Leave of absence (23.06.99) 1255–6

Coroners
62w

Corruption
Zimbabwe 359w

Corston, Jean
Questions
Promoting social inclusion initiative, Northern Ireland 141w

Cosmetics
Genetically modified organisms 199–200w

Cotter, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Debts, Developing countries (16.06.99) 357, 363–4

Cotter, Mr Brian—continued*
Health foods, Petitions (16.06.99) 532
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1353–4
Questions
Business links 187–8w, 414–5w
Business questions 1291
Information society initiative 188w
Small Business Service 207w
Small businesses 415w
Small businesses, Rural areas 545

Council housing
Finance 337–9w
Greater London 337w
Rents 201w
Single people 337w
Tenant management organisations 411–2w

Council of Europe
Publications 115w
UK delegations 18w

Council of Ministers
Voting methods 354–5w

Council tax
Shropshire 80w
Single people 83w

Council tax benefits
367w

Counterfeit manufacturing
Coinage 169–70w

Countryside
Access 45–6w, 201w

Court Service
Maladministration 108w

Cousins, Mr Jim
Questions
Probation officers 55w
Regional government 145

Cox, Mr Tom
Questions
Cycling, Road traffic offences 348w
Driving offences, Convictions 379w
Flax 487w
Gibraltar 358–9w
Heavily indebted poor countries initiative 274–5w
Homelessness, Greater London 283w
Hospital wards, Greater London 384w
Illegal immigrants 379–80w
Income support, Wandsworth 366–7w
International Year of Older Persons 1999 32w
Priority routes, Greater London 410w
Prisoners, Employment 347–8w
Prisons, Drugs 266w, 378–9w

Cran, Mr James
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 944

Cranston, Mr Ross, Solicitor-General*
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 996–1000, 1052, 1058–9
Questions
Crown Prosecution Service 219w

Creative and Cultural Education Advisory Committee
see National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education

Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia
318–9w

Crewe-Holyhead railway line
144–5

Crime
Children 161–2w

Crime prevention
Closed circuit television 17–8
Schools 57w
Voluntary organisations 56–7w

Crimes of violence
7–8
Northern Ireland 141w, 231–2w, 388, 425–7w

Crimestoppers
Greater Manchester 5

Criminal injuries compensation
221–2w
Sexual offences 221–2w

Criminal Justice Review
Costs 144–5w

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998
Questions
471w

Criminal Records Bureau
Fees and charges 58w

Crops
Genetically modified organisms 43–4w, 124–5w, 135–6w, 147–8, 199w, 216w, 334w, 412w, 418w, 445–6w

Crown courts
Trials 220w

Crown Prosecution Service
219w, 317w
Disclosure of information 318w

Cryer, Mr John
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 164
Questions
Business questions 564–5
Fire services 54–5w
National Rail Summit 76–7w
Teachers, Northern Ireland 425w, 470w

Cryptography
Electronic commerce 553

Cuba
Commonwealth Development Corporation 178w

Cultural heritage
Kosovo 356w

Cummings, Mr John
Questions
Diabetes, Medical equipment 435w

Cunningham, Rt Hon Dr Jack, Minister for the Cabinet Office
Questions
Better government programme 420w
Biotechnology Presentation Group 127w, 1151–3, 1155–6
Drug abuse resistance education programme 1155
Drugs, Abuse 1154–5
Drugs, Blyth Valley 1154–5
Drugs, Netherlands 127w
Drugs, Schools 1154
Drugs, Young people 126w, 364w
Duchy of Lancaster, Anniversaries 125–6w, 420w
Genetic Modification Technology Interdepartmental Group 126w
Genetically modified organisms 419w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 1151–2, 1157–8
Government, Policy 421w

Cunningham, Rt Hon Dr Jack—continued*
Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee 225w
Ministerial duties, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
Public appointments 420w
Regulation 1159
Roads, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator 421w
USA, Cabinet Office 125w
USA, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 125w
Written questions, Cabinet Office 225–6w

Cunningham, Mr Jim
Questions
East Timor 917

Cunningham, Ms Roseanna
Questions
Age of consent 220–1w
Criminal injuries compensation 221–2w
Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body 172–3w

Currency speculation
Taxation 311w

Curriculum
Swimming (21.06.99) 901–8

Curtis-Thomas, Ms Claire
Debates etc.
Mentally incapacitated, Community care (14.06.99) 128–9, 133
Questions
Complaints, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 280w
Driving, Licensing 440–1w
Driving instruction 38w
Driving instruction, Standards 38–41w
Driving Standards Agency 41w, 279w
Driving tests 38–42w, 278–80w
Grain, Allergies 281w
Weather 308–9w

Custody officers
Training 56w

Customs and Excise
Redundancy 28w

Cycleways
Greater London 137w

Cycling
Pedestrian areas 230w
Road traffic offences 348w

Dafis, Mr Cynog
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 786
Questions
Lorries, Axle weights 281w

Dairy farming
193w

Dalyell, Mr Tam
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 29, (17.06.99) 584–5, 605, 613, 623, 628, 643, 655–6, (21.06.99) 769
Kosovo Liberation Army, Points of order (15.06.99) 168
London Underground (15.06.99) 165
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 577–8
Oral question time intervention (24.06.99) 1279
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (continuance) orders (23.06.99) 1175–6
Questions
Business questions 1294–5
Clones 383–4w

Dalyell, Mr Tam—continued*
Diego Garcia 925
Fisheries, Protection 252–3w
Fletcher, Yvonne 18–20
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 418w
Iraq, Bombings 301w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 423w, 461w, 481–2w
Kosovo, Overseas aid 344–5w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 751–2
Libyan Arab Republic 557
Nigeria: Overseas aid 176w
River Danube, International assistance 176w

Dangerous driving
58w

Darling, Rt Hon Alistair, Secretary of State for Social Security*
Questions
Pensions 433w
Stakeholder pensions 433w

Databases
Land use 154

Davey, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 313, 318–20
London Underground (15.06.99) 164
Nuts, Labelling (24.06.99) 1405–8, 1412
Questions
Debts, Developing countries 1276–7
Roads, Expenditure 42–3w

Davey, Mrs Valerie
Debates etc.
Swimming, Curriculum (21.06.99) 901–4
Questions
Housing benefit, South West region 361–2w
Science enterprise challenge 557–8
Social rented housing, South West region 333w

Davidson, Mr Ian
Questions
Asbestos, Imports 200w
Buchanan Centre, Rates and rating 52w
Sierra Leone 922
Zimbabwe, Corruption 359w
Zimbabwe, Elections 360w
Zimbabwe, Human rights 360w
Zimbabwe, Police 359w

Davies, Rt Hon Denzil
Questions
Taxation, EC action 166w

Davies, Mr Geraint
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1417, 1421, 1428–30, 1439, 1465–70
London Underground (15.06.99) 167
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 940–1, 943–4
Questions
Economic growth 1268–9
Integrated Transport Commission, Public appointments 139w
Kosovo 355w
NHS, Managers 320–1w
Railways, Passengers 138–9

Davies, Mr Quentin
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 321–4

Davis, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 350
Innovation (25.06.99) 1420–1, 1424
Parliamentary Control of the Executive Bill, 1R (22.06.99) 930–2

Davis, Mr Terry
Questions
Council of Europe, UK delegations 18w

Dawson, Mr Hilton
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 351–3
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 459–61, 465–6
Innovation (25.06.99) 1427, 1438, 1440, 1444, 1458, 1474–6
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1355, 1358, 1372–4
Questions
Local Government Commission for England 286w

Day, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1374–5

Debates
Digital broadcasting 74–5w

Debts
Developing countries 173–4w, (16.06.99) 356–64, 373, 373w, 374–6, 458–9w, 1274–7
Nigeria 175–6w

Debts written off
Developing countries 312w
Indonesia 273–4w

Deer
West Sussex 44w

Defence Aviation Repair Agency
453w

Defence equipment
Exhibitions 262w

Defence Estate Organisation
Standards 65w

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency
145–6w, 261–2w

Defence Medical Training Organisation
Standards 6–7w

Dementia
289–90w

Demolition
Listed buildings 442–3w

Demonstrations
Ministerial statements (21.06.99) 777–85

Denbighshire County Council
(25.06.99) 1486–92

Denham, Mr John, Minister of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 35–6, 42, 48, 69–73, 88, 96, 104–5
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 224–9, 238–42, 244–8, 250–1
Questions
Accident and emergency departments, Administrative delays 11w
Agency nurses, Costs 435w
Dental services, Anaesthetics 9–10w
Devonshire Royal Hospital 112w
Diabetes, Medical equipment 435w
Doctors, Disciplinary proceedings 11w
Doctors' list of patients 385w
Eclipse 1999, Health education 290–2w, 384w

Denham, Mr John—continued*
Eclipse 1999, Ophthalmic services 292w
General practitioners, Working hours 111–2w
Gynaecology, North Yorkshire 184–5w
Health services, OECD countries 112w
Hospital wards, Greater London 384w
Hospitals, Food 292w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 14–5w
Junior doctors, Working hours 10–1w, 319w
Medical profession, Disciplinary proceedings 11w
Medicine, Students 10w
Medicines Control Agency 321w
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust 186w
NHS, Managers 382w
NHS, Pay 110–1w
NHS, Procurement 436–7w
NHS, Public appointments 288w
NHS Pensions Agency, Standards 186w
Orthopaedics, Avon 437w
Physiotherapy 385w
Prescription drugs, Packaging 186w
Public Health Laboratory Service 185w
Refrigeration, Greenhouse effect 9w

Dental services
Anaesthetics 9–10w

Departmental records
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 116w

Departmental responsibilities
Forestry 215w

Deployment
Army 257w
Land Command 257w
Navy 259–60w
Territorial Army 300–1w, 453w
Ulster Defence Regiment 398w

Deportation
230w
Mental patients 266w

Dept for Culture Media and Sport
Females 269w
Republic of Ireland 343w
Written questions 269w

Dept for Education and Employment
Cash limits 243w
Catering 223w
Females 296–7w
Press releases 438w
Refrigeration 128w
Written questions 244w

Dept for International Development
Cash limits 72w
Females 345w
Written questions 345w

Dept of Health
Republic of Ireland 383w
Written questions 186w

Dept of Social Security
Females 234w

Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Buildings 76w, 421–2w
Complaints 280w
Females 332–3w
Republic of Ireland 442w
USA 82w
Visits abroad 440w
Written questions 282w

Dept of Trade and Industry
Females 270w
USA 424w
Visits abroad 207w

Dept of Trade and Industry—continued*
Written questions 189w

Derelict land
83w
Taxation 459w

Detainees
Immigrants 58w
Scotland 58w

Developing countries
Debts 173–4w, (16.06.99) 356–64, 373, 373w, 374–6, 458–9w, 1274–7
Debts written off 312w
Education 175w
Free movement of capital 462–3w
Genetically modified organisms 72w, 176–7w
Information technology 178w
Non-governmental organisations 174w

Devolution
387

Devon
Human remains 162w

Devon and Cornwall Constabulary
100–1w

Devonshire Royal Hospital
112w

Diabetes
Medical equipment 435w

Diego Garcia
925

Diesel engines
556

Diesel fuel
Excise duties 542–3

Digital broadcasting
Debates 74–5w

Dioxins
Belgium 416–7w
Health hazards 335w

Diplomatic relations
277w
Iran 356w

Dir86/609/EEC
380w

Dir98/43/EC
225w

Director of Public Prosecutions
see Crown Prosecution Service

Directorate General for Competition
414w

Disability living allowance
Eligibility 34–5w, 107–8w
Single benefit gateway 224w

Disabled
Children 250–1w
Employment 296w, 339–40w, 469w
Employment Service 130w
Housing improvement 200–1w
Social security benefits 35–6w
Taxis 407w

Disadvantaged
433–4w
Children 1166
Voluntary organisations 13, 55–6w, 135w

Disaster relief
Central America 177w

Disciplinary proceedings
Doctors 11w
Further education 63w
Medical profession 11w

Disciplinary proceedings—continued*
NHS 6w
Police 62w
Universities 63w

Discrimination
Age 438w

Disease control
Bovine tuberculosis 449w
Rabies 118–20w, 297–8w

Dismore, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1021, 1035, 1053, 1070, 1073
Questions
Bamieh, Maria 317w
Court Service, Maladministration 108w
Employment tribunals, Disclosure of information 449w
Iran, Antisemitism 227–8w
Judicial Appointments and Silk Equal Opportunities Joint Working Party 323–4w
Legal profession, Public appointments 317–8w, 322–3w
Russia, Antisemitism 354w
Treasury Counsel 448–9w, 455–6w

District line
472–3w

Divorce
Armed forces 751

Dobson, Rt Hon Frank, Secretary of State for Health*
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 855
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 174–6, 178, 180, 197, 204
Questions
Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry 319w
NHS, Managers 320–1w
Tobacco, Advertising 225w

Doctors
Disciplinary proceedings 11w

Doctors' list of patients
385w

Domestic violence
381–2w
Immigrants 164–5w

Donaldson, Mr Jeffrey M
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 876–80, 894
Questions
Bombings, Omagh 353w
Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 471w
Higher education, Northern Ireland 352–3w
Regional development agencies 190w
Small businesses, Rural areas 545–6

Donohoe, Mr Brian H
Questions
Scottish Parliament, Correspondence 1157

Dorrell, Mr Frank
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 838–41

Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (Kuwait) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(21.06.99) 900

Dover House
172w

Dowd, Jim, Lord Commissioner of Her Majesty's Treasury*
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 208

Down School
268w

Drew, Mr David
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 810
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1343, 1363, 1376–7
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1307
Questions
Bovine tuberculosis 416w
Business questions 1295
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 216w
Road traffic control, Standards 84–5w
Roads, Noise 152–3
Slaughterhouses, Fees and charges 21–2w
Small businesses, Rural areas 544–5
Trains, Overcrowding 85w

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency
Standards 142w

Driving
Insurance 440–1w
Licensing 440–1w

Driving instruction
38w
Standards 38–41w

Driving offences
Convictions 379w

Driving Standards Agency
41w, 279w

Driving tests
38–42w, 278–80w

Drown, Ms Julia
Debates etc.
Debts, Developing countries (16.06.99) 362
Questions
Debts, Developing countries 1274–5
World Bank, Social policy 463w

Drug abuse resistance education programme
1155

Drugs
Abuse 106w, 267w, 1154–5
Advertising 12–4w, 382–3w, 477–8w
Animal products 382w
Blyth Valley 1154–5
Habitual offenders 347w
Medical treatments 349–50w
Netherlands 127w
Prison sentences 106–7w
Prisons 105–6w, 266w, 378–9w, 474w
Schools 132w, 340w, 1154
Switzerland 127w
Young people 126w, 364w

Drugs Czar
see UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator

Dublin
Bombings 263–4w

Duchy of Lancaster
Anniversaries 125–6w, 420w

Duncan, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1416, 1419, 1424, 1426–38, 1479, 1482–4
Questions
Eclipse 1999, Health education 291–2w

Duncan, Mr Alan—continued*
Eclipse 1999, Ophthalmic services 292w

Duncan Smith, Mr Iain
Questions
Kosovo, Armed conflict 745
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 752
Territorial Army, Deployment 453w

Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 181, 185–7, 205–6
London Underground (15.06.99) 160–1
Questions
Aircraft, Air pollution 82w
Business questions 1289
Excise duties, Lorries 1273–4
Regional airports 141
Rolling stock 43w
Voting behaviour 11

Eagle, Angela, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Social Security*
Debates etc.
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1318, 1332–7
Questions
Child Support Agency 431–2w
Council tax benefits 367w
Disadvantaged 433–4w
Disadvantaged, Children 1166
Earnings top-up 182–3w
European Social Fund, Employment schemes 34w, 107w
Females, Dept of Social Security 234w
Habitual residence test 36–7w
Housing benefit 399–404w
Housing benefit, Benefits rules 293w, 433w
Housing benefit, South West region 361–2w
Income support, Mortgages 293–4w
Income support, Wandsworth 366–7w
Means tested benefits 372w
Social security benefits, Appeals 370–2w
Social security benefits, Automated credit transfer 33–4w
Social security benefits, Payments 33w
Social security benefits, Post offices 33w
Social security benefits, Postal services 182w
Social Security Benefits Agency, Computers 184w
"Support in Bereavement Consultation Paper" 181–2w
Widowed people, Employment 294w

Eagle, Maria
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 943
Questions
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 750

Ealing
Racial harassment 161w

Ear tagging
Cattle 24w

Earnings rules
Invalid care allowances 182w

Earnings top-up
182–3w

East Timor
917
Overseas aid 379

EC action
Administration of justice 108w
Animal welfare 414w

EC action—continued*
Electronic surveillance 92w
Genetically modified organisms 44w
Research 359w
Road traffic offences 92w
Taxation 166w, 324–5w, 465w
Waste disposal (21.06.99) 900

EC Agriculture Council
215–6w, 297w

EC aid
380

EC budget
312w
Contributions 1278–9, 1282–3
Fraud 413w

EC Commission
see European Commission

EC common foreign and security policy
357w, 747–9, 910–2

EC Cons Doc 6528/99
(14.06.99) 126

EC Culture Council
88w

EC defence policy
264w, 304w, 306w

EC Education Council
439w

EC enlargement
Organised crime 5–6

EC Environment Council
405–6w

EC external relations
Japan 134w

EC external trade
Bananas 177–8w, 424–5w
USA 388–9

EC Finance Council
75w, 166–8w

EC Fisheries Council
19–20w

EC Foreign Affairs Council
484–5w

EC grants and loans
210w
Belgium 116w
Chernobyl 413w
Urban areas 315w

EC Health Council
183–4w

EC integration
115w

EC internal relations
358w

EC justice and home affairs
89w, 91w

EC law
6
Employment 389
Part-time employment 203w

EC reform
357w, 926

EC Social Charter
Costs 204–5w

EC staff
Business interests 276w

EC Transport Council
45w, 446–7w

EC working groups
255w

EC Youth Council
191w

Eclipse 1999
Health education 290–2w, 384w
Ophthalmic services 292w

Economic and monetary union
322w, 383–6, 390–1, 423–4w, 458w, 460w, 1164–6, 1168–70, 1267–71

Economic growth
1268–9

Economic policy
386–7, 462w

Economic situation
Balkans 356–7w

Education
Armed forces 301w
Developing countries 175w
Finance 64w
Islington 342w
Wales 454–5w
Young offenders 376w, 378w

Education and Employment Select Committee
(14.06.99) 126

Edwards, Mr Huw
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 148
Kosovo, Armed conflict 302w
Lead, Ammunition 149

Efford, Mr Clive
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 164–5

Elderly
Better government programme 1153–4
Housing improvement 200w

Elections
Local government 77w
Mozambique 371–2w
Public participation 9
South Africa 920–1
Zimbabwe 360w

Electricity
1–2w

Electronic commerce
205w, 313w, 553–4
Cryptography 553

Electronic surveillance
EC action 92w

Ellman, Mrs Louise
Questions
Exports, Northern Ireland 414w
Imports, Northern Ireland 387w
Overseas trade, Republic of Ireland 271w
Tourism 365–6w

Email
350–1w
Embassies 116w
Government departments 420w
Ministers 419w

Embassies
Email 116w
Internet 116w
Wales 237–8w

Emergency calls
Police 93w, 429w

Emergency services
Millennium compliance 89–90w

Emery, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Kosovo (21.06.99) 774–5
Questions
Armed forces, Recruitment 150w
Firearms, Compensation 221w
Income tax, Forms 172w
Probation and aftercare, Computers 165w
South West Water, Water charges 201–2w

Employment
191w, 342w
Disabled 296w, 339–40w, 469w
EC law 389
Prisoners 347–8w
Shrewsbury 464w
Widowed people 294w

Employment schemes
European Social Fund 34w, 107w, 238w

Employment Service
Disabled 130w
Standards 223–4w
Wales 130w

Employment tribunals
Disclosure of information 449w

Empty property
149–50
Home Office 62–3w

Energy
Conservation 81–2w
Consumption 209w
Taxation 118w
Trade competitiveness 203–4w

English Sports Council
180–1w

Ennis, Mr Jeff
Debates etc.
Air guns, Safety (23.06.99) 1257–60, 1265–6

Environment Agency
Business plans 333–4w

Environment and Heritage Service see Northern Ireland Environment and Heritage Service

Environment protection
Antarctic 134w
Companies 5w

Equal opportunities
Northern Ireland 143–4w

Equality Commission Working Group
see Northern Ireland Equality Commission Working Group

Essex
Non-fossil fuel obligation 109w

Etherington, Bill
Questions
Dental services, Anaesthetics 9–10w
Hospitals, Sunderland 10w
Medicine, Students 10w
Poultry 121w, 192w
Scotland, Forests 476w
Yellow card scheme 110w, 434–5w
Yellow card scheme, Metrizamide 110w

Ethics
Local government 77w

Ethnic groups
Kosovo 16w
Metropolitan Police 57–8w

Euro Preparations Advisory Group
1269

European Central Bank
Codes of practice 168w

European Central Bank*—*continued
Gold and foreign exchange reserves 389–90

European Commission
Conflict of interests 133w
Pay 168w

European Committee for the Prevention of Torture
266w

European Communities
Flags 115w

European Communities
see also EC headings

European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters
104w

European Movement
Finance 76w

European Parliament elections
Gibraltar 925
Publicity 267–8w

European Police Office
1–2, 60w
Interpol 346w

European Social Fund
Employment schemes 34w, 107w, 238w

Evans, Mr Nigel
Questions
Drugs, Schools 1154
Gwrych Castle 454w
Territorial Army, Caernarfon 449–50w

Evidence
Disclosure of information 56w

Excise duties
Aviation 312w
Diesel fuel 542–3
Fuels 471w, 1283–4
Lorries 1273–4
Motor vehicles 310–1w
Wines 457w

Exercise Dimming Sun
8w

Exhaust emissions
80w, 472w

Exhibitions
Defence equipment 262w

Export controls
Arms trade 359w
Macedonia 133w

Exports
Northern Ireland 414w

Exservicemen
Prisoners 60w

Fabricant, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 36–40, 42–5, 57–60, 63–4, 79, 83–7, 89, 97, 103
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 176, 183–5, 195–7, 199–200, 205–6, 209–11, 215
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 669–70, 674–5, 689–91, 696–9, 707–13, 716, 718
Questions
Business questions 1295–6
Middle East, Peace negotiations 916
Ministers, Email 419w
Proportional representation, Referendums 1163
Tax yields 1271–2

Falkland Islands
360–1w

Fallon, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 949–50
Questions
BBC 366w
BBC, Audit 88w, 344w
Consumer goods, Prices 542
Economic and monetary union 322w
Parcelforce 474w
Post Office, Pensions 475w

Families
456–7w

Family Law Act 1996
Questions
213–4w

Fares
Concessions 139–40

Farmers
Bankruptcy 299w
Tax allowances 417w

Fearn, Mr Ronnie
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 671, 687–90

Females
Armed forces 258w
Attorney General 300w
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w
Dept for Education and Employment 296–7w
Dept for International Development 345w
Dept of Social Security 234w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 332–3w
Dept of Trade and Industry 270w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 255w
Home Office 346w
Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 417–8w
Ministry of Defence 262–3w
National insurance contributions 29w
Northern Ireland Office 386–7w
Scottish Office 330w
Welsh Office 225w

Fertility
Medical treatments 320w

Festivals and special occasions
Police 220w

Field, Rt Hon Frank
Debates etc.
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1238–9
Questions
Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service, Manpower 295–6w
Disability living allowance, Single benefit gateway 224w
Means tested benefits 372w
New deal for young people 190–1w
Pensioners, Personal income 368–9w
Social security benefits, Abuse 197w
Social security benefits, Payments 33w
Social security benefits, Postal services 4–5w, 182w
State retirement pensions 367–70w

Fifteen minutes rule
Rulings and statements (21.06.99) 786

Film
429–30w

Financial services
VAT 75w

Financial Services and Markets Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (17.06.99) 581

Financial Services and Markets Draft Bill Joint Select Committee
222w

Fines
Enforcement 55w

Fire prevention
61w, 163–4w

Fire services
54–5w
Training 404–5w
Water supply 91–2w

Firearms
61w, 103w
Compensation 221w
Licensing 380w

Firing ranges
Shoeburyness 304w

Fish
Genetically modified organisms 330w, 395w
Scotland 330w

Fisheries
23w
Protection 252–3w
Working hours 270–1w

Fishing catches
216–8w

Fishing vessels
Accidents 79w
Scotland 22–3w

Fitzpatrick, Jim
Debates etc.
Gaming clubs, Petitions (18.06.99) 665
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 327–30
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 695
Questions
Defence equipment, Exhibitions 262w
New deal for communities 151

Fitzsimons, Lorna
Debates etc.
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1109–10
Questions
Bovine tuberculosis, Disease control 449w
Defence Estate Organisation, Standards 65w
North West region 456w
Public safety zones 86w

Flags
European Communities 115w

Flax
487w

Fletcher, Yvonne
18–20

Flight, Mr Howard
Questions
Insurance companies, Regulation 464w
Kashmir 357w
Pensions 34w

Flint, Caroline
Questions
Organised crime, EC enlargement 5–6

Flood control
Lewes (16.06.99) 533–40

Flynn, Paul
Questions
Cannabis, Medical treatments 106w

Flynn, Paul*—*continued
Cannabis, Prison sentences 105–6w
Drugs, Abuse 106w
Drugs, Netherlands 127w
Drugs, Prison sentences 106–7w
Drugs, Prisons 105–6w
Drugs, Schools 132w
Drugs, Young people 126w
Iraq-Kuwait conflict, Uranium 148–9w, 395–6w
Mortgages, Misrepresentation 26–7w
Motor vehicles, Lighting 46w
Passports, Administrative delays 95–6w
VAT, Financial services 75w
Women's prisons, Prescription drugs 105w

Follett, Barbara
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1453–5

Food
Genetically modified organisms 25w, 124w, 192–3w, 415–6w, 1151–2, 1157–8
Hospitals 292w

Food Standards Agency
Wales 134–5w

Food Standards Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
2R and money res* (21.06.99) 786–861

Food Standards Draft Bill Select Committee
124w

Footwear
(17.06.99) 657–64

Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Departmental records 116w
Females 255w
Minimum wage 114w
Modernisation 32w
Visits abroad 358w, 483w

Foreign exchange
VAT 166w, 222w

Foreign investment in UK
Wales 236w

Foreign relations
India 920
Pakistan 920
Spain 359w

Forestry
Departmental responsibilities 215w

Forests
Scotland 476w

Forms
Income tax 172w

Forsythe, Mr Clifford
Questions
Northern Ireland Planning Appeals Commission 387w
Tipping of waste, Northern Ireland 140–1w

Fort Whiterock
Property development 51w

Forth, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 113
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 107–10
Oral question time intervention (17.06.99) 557–8, (23.06.99) 1153
Questions
Business questions 566, 1290

Foster, Mr Don
Debates etc.
Traffic Reduction (Air Quality and Health) Bill, 1R (17.06.99) 581

Foster, Mr Don*—*continued
Questions
Schools, Finance 130w
Schools, Standards 339w
Standard assessment tasks 130w
Teachers, Standards 245w

Foster, Mr Michael Jabez, (Hastings and Rye)
Debates etc.
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1306, 1314, 1320–2

Foulkes, Mr George, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 174–5w
East Timor, Overseas aid 379
EC aid 380
Overseas aid, Fraud 173w

Fowler, Rt Hon Sir Norman
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 188–91
Questions
Voting behaviour 11–2

Fox hunting
163w

Fraser, Mr Christopher
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 850

Fraud
EC budget 413w
Overseas aid 173w

Free movement of capital
Developing countries 462–3w

Frigates
Satellite broadcasting 7w

Fuel poverty
547–8

Fuels
Excise duties 471w, 1283–4

Furs
Imports 414w

Further education
Disciplinary proceedings 63w
Northern Ireland 352–3w
Scotland 330–1w
Standards 128w

Fyfe, Maria
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 373w
Widowed people, Employment 294w

Galbraith, Mr Sam
Questions
Diplomatic relations 277w
Individual savings accounts 463w
Overseas aid 345–6w
Retirement, Age 363w

Gale, Mr Roger
Questions
Catering, Sportsgrounds 123–4w

Gambia
Armed forces 451w
Human rights 372–3w
Overseas aid 430w

Gaming Act 1968
Debates etc.
(18.06.99) 665

Gaming clubs
Petitions (18.06.99) 665

Gapes, Mr Mike
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 420, 471–2, 505
London Underground (15.06.99) 166
Questions
Armed forces, Peace keeping operations 305w
Interception of Communications' Commissioner, Annual reports 196w
Political refugees 15–6
Security Service Commissioner, Annual reports 195–6w

Gardiner, Mr Barry
Questions
Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency, Standards 69–70w
Public Health Laboratory Service 185w
Smuggling, Tobacco 223w
Wembley Stadium 443–5w

Garnier, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 982–4, 992, 998, 1010, 1020–4, 1033–4, 1054–5, 1058–61, 1069–73
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1095–8
Family Law Act 1996, Points of Order (18.06.99) 666
Questions
Crime prevention, Closed circuit television 18
Juries 54w
Local government, Elections 77w
Secondary education, Leicestershire 191w

GCE A level
128–9w

General Certificate of Secondary Education
128–9w

General practitioners
Working hours 111–2w

Genetic Modification Technology Interdepartmental Group
126w

Genetically Modified Food and Producer Liability Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (24.06.99) 1298

Genetically modified organisms
146–7, 419w
Animal feed 122w, 192–3w
Antibiotics 136w
Bracknell 336w
Church Commissioners 316w
Cosmetics 199–200w
Crops 43–4w, 124–5w, 135–6w, 147–8, 199w, 216w, 334w, 412w, 418w, 445–6w
Developing countries 72w, 176–7w
EC action 44w
Fish 330w, 395w
Food 25w, 124w, 192–3w, 415–6w, 1151–2, 1157–8
Gloucestershire 334w
Inspections 445–6w
Research 325–6w
Safety 298w
Scotland 395w
Seeds 298w, 346w
Tree planting 336w

George, Mr Andrew
Questions
EC grants and loans 210w
Genetically modified organisms 419w

George, Mr Bruce
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 599–603

Gerrard, Mr Neil
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 273–5, 293–5, (16.06.99) 421–4, 511
Questions
Political refugees 16
Taxation 462w

Gibb, Mr Nick
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1356–60, 1364
Questions
Diesel fuel, Excise duties 542–3

Gibraltar
358–9w
European Parliament elections 925
Nuclear submarines 329w

Gibson, Dr Ian
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 816
Questions
Cancer, Health services 320w, 476–7w
Cancer, Research 319w
Disadvantaged 433–4w
Radioactive wastes, Waste disposal 142–4
Teachers, Pay 341w
Teachers, Science 341w

Gift aid
310w

Gill, Mr Christopher
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 789, 825–7
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 312, 318
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1189
Questions
Business questions 570
Council tax, Shropshire 80w
Kidderminster Hospital 12w
Police custody 101–2w

Gillan, Mrs Cheryl
Debates etc.
Debts, Developing countries (16.06.99) 364
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 378–9
Kosovo, Armed conflict 919–20

Gilroy, Mrs Linda
Questions
Armed forces, Health services 753–4
Kosovo, Armed conflict 304w

Glasgow Homeopathic Hospital
Waiting lists 53w

Glencree Reconciliation Centre
51w

Gloucestershire
Genetically modified organisms 334w
Households 77w

Godman, Dr Norman A
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 864, 874–6, 884
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 427, 461–2
Kosovo (17.06.99) 585–6, 602
Questions
Fishing vessels, Accidents 79w
Immigrants, Detainees 58w

Godman, Dr Norman A—continued
ROF Bishopton 754

Goggins, Mr Paul
Questions
Crimestoppers, Greater Manchester 5
Invalid care allowances 182w, 361w, 367w
Invalid care allowances, Earnings rules 182w

Gold and foreign exchange reserves
(16.06.99) 307–26, 459w
European Central Bank 389–90
International Monetary Fund 312w, 1276

Golding, Mrs Llin
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 355

Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 471
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1109–16
Questions
Exhaust emissions 80w

Government
Policy 419w, 421w

Government Communications Headquarters
360w

Government departments
Buildings 194w, 420w
Correspondence 71w, 1157–9
Email 420w
Standards 1156–7

Government offices for the regions
420w

Grain
Allergies 281w
Seaforth 281w

Grants for education support and training
394–5w

Gray, Mr James
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1460–1
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1344, 1346, 1348–9, 1354, 1359, 1362–7
Questions
Business questions 1296–7
Cars, Greater London 80w
Crimes of violence 8
EC common foreign and security policy 748
London Economics 246–7w

Greater London
Cars 80w
Council housing 337w
Cycleways 137w
Homelessness 283w
Hospital wards 384w
Priority routes 410w
Racial violence 151–9w
Railway network (16.06.99) 327–48
Social rented housing 336–7w

Greater Manchester
Capital Modernisation Fund 171w
Crimestoppers 5

Green, Mr Damian
Questions
New deal for young people 190w
Sudan, Peace negotiations 226w
Territorial Army, Deployment 300–1w

Greenhouse effect
Northern Ireland 50–1w
Refrigeration 5–6w, 9w, 50–2w

Greenhouse effect*—*continued
Scotland 51–2w
Wales 5–6w

Greenway, Mr John
Questions
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Animal feed 391–2
European Police Office 2

Greenwich Hospital
451–2w

Grieve, Mr Dominic
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 990–2, 1008, 1029, 1032, 1054, 1057, 1059, 1074–5
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 784–5
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 699, 709, 717, 724–6
Questions
House of Lords, Reform 1164
Kosovo, Armed conflict 381
Weapons, Northern Ireland 390

Griffiths, Jane
Questions
Indonesia 356w
Inside Out Trust 59–60w
Khmer Rouge 484w
Political refugees, Correspondence 374–5w
Prisoners, Rehabilitation 162w

Griffiths, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 797, 814–7
Questions
Electronic commerce, Cryptography 553
Kosovo, Armed conflict 381, 917–8
Kosovo, Refugees 383

Griffiths, Mr Win
Questions
Energy, Trade competitiveness 203–4w

Grogan, Mr John
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 690–3
Questions
EC defence policy 304w
Mongolia 922
NHS, Procurement 436–7w
Taxation, Derelict land 459w

Guided weapons
147w

Guillotine
(15.06.99) 174–222, (22.06.99) 933–4

Gulf War
see Iraq-Kuwait conflict

Gulf war syndrome
Medical examinations 150w

Gummer, Rt Hon John
Debates etc.
Business questions (23.06.99) 1231–2
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1240–4

Gwrych Castle
454w

Gynaecology
North Yorkshire 184–5w

Habitual offenders
Drugs 347w

Habitual residence test
36–7w

Hague, Rt Hon William
Debates etc.
Kosovo (21.06.99) 764–5, 767
Questions
Belfast Agreement 1160–2
Economic and monetary union 1164–6
Proportional representation, Referendums 383–5

Hain, Mr Peter, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office
Questions
A40, Wales 72w
Education, Wales 454–5w
Embassies, Wales 237–8w
Food Standards Agency, Wales 134–5w
Foreign investment in UK, Wales 236w
Higher education, Wales 224w
Mining, Wales 73w
Social inclusion partnerships, Wales 73w
Tourism, Wales 236–7w
Voluntary organisations, Wales 135w

Hamill, Robert
230–1w, 351–2w

Hamilton, Rt Hon Sir Archie
Debates etc.
Kosovo (21.06.99) 768

Hamilton, Mr Fabian
Questions
EC grants and loans, Urban areas 315w

Hammersmith and Fulham
Theatre 343–4w

Hammond, Mr Philip
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 36–41, 47, 50–2, 56, 61, 64, 70–3, 75–6, 85–98
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 197, 211–4
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 227–8, 231, 236–8, 240, 243–4, 246
Questions
Juries 54w

Hampshire
Adoption 477w

Hancock, Mr Mike
Debates etc.
Safety at Sea Bill, 1R (15.06.99) 169–71
Questions
Armed forces, Health services 256w
Chinook helicopters, Accidents 326–7w
Chinook helicopters, Computer software 327w
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency 145–6w, 261–2w
Guided weapons 147w
HMS Beaver 450w
HMS Birmingham 450w
HMS Brave 213w
HMS Campbeltown 146w
HMS Chatham 146w
HMS Fearless 212–3w
HMS Monmouth 450w
HMS Newcastle 450w
HMS Southampton 146–7w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 303w
Navy, Deployment 259–60w
Navy, Manpower 258–9w
Peace keeping operations, Expenditure 326w

Harman, Rt Hon Harriet
Debates etc.
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 346

Harrier aircraft
306w

Harris, Dr Evan
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 113–4
Disclosure of information, Points of order (14.06.99) 34
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 68, 74–85
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 182, 203, 222
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 227–31, 248–50
Questions
Drugs, Advertising 12–4w
Immigration officers, Training 355w
Individual learning accounts 27w
Interest rates 223w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 302–3w
Tax allowances, Vocational training 27w

Hawkins, Mr Nick
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1004–7, 1044, 1046–9, 1053, 1075–6
Questions
Beacon councils 143–4

Hayes, Mr John
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 113
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 67, 82, 89, 91, 94–5
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1203, 1206, 1216
Questions
Business questions 1291–2

Heald, Mr Oliver
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1193

Healey, Mr John
Debates etc.
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1110, 1121–3
Questions
EC reform 357w
European Social Fund, Employment schemes 34w, 107w, 238w
Industrial injuries scheme 238w
Landfill tax 461w
Small Business Service 554–5

Health Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
Rep (14.06.99) 35–110
Business questions (14.06.99) 111–5
Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 174–222
Rep and 3R* (15.06.99) 223–66

Health education
Eclipse 1999 290–2w, 384w
Salt 385w

Health foods
Petitions (16.06.99) 532

Health hazards
Dioxins 335w

Health services
Armed forces 256w, 752–4
Cancer 320w, 476–7w
OECD countries 112w

Heart diseases
Surgery 1168

Heath, Mr David
Debates etc.
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1313, 1322–5
Questions
Children in care 251–2w
Children in care, Somerset 251w
Excise duties, Wines 457w
Government offices for the regions 420w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 302w
Sierra Leone 921–2

Heathcoat-Amory, Rt Hon David
Questions
Climate change levy 1281
Taxation, Business 30–1w

Heavily indebted poor countries initiative
274–5w

Hedges and ditches
84w

Helicopters
Police 266w

Henderson, Mr Doug, Minister for the Armed Forces*
Questions
Armed forces, Education 301w
Armed forces, Females 258w
Armed forces, Gambia 451w
Armed forces, Health services 256w, 752–4
Armed forces, Homosexuality 145w
Armed forces, Insignia 263w
Armed forces, Peace keeping operations 305w
Armed forces, Recruitment 150w
Armed forces, Training 305w
Army, Cadets 147w, 262w
Army, Deployment 257w
Army, Manpower 260–1w, 306w
Army, Vacancies 261w
Army Training and Recruiting Agency, Standards 149w
Balkans, Territorial Army 300w
Bombings, Dublin 263–4w
Broadcasting programmes, Ministry of Defence 148w
Chinook helicopters, Accidents 326–7w
Chinook helicopters, Computer software 327w
Chinook helicopters, Royal family 450–1w
Defence Medical Training Organisation, Standards 6–7w
Exercise Dimming Sun 8w
Females, Ministry of Defence 262–3w
Frigates, Satellite broadcasting 7w
Gulf war syndrome, Medical examinations 150w
HMS Beaver 450w
HMS Birmingham 450w
HMS Fearless 212–3w
HMS Monmouth 450w
HMS Newcastle 450w
Iraq-Kuwait conflict, Uranium 148–9w, 395–6w, 453–4w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 451w
Military bases, Colchester 262w
Military Provost Guard Service 398w
Naval Bases and Supply Agency, Standards 397w
Navy, Deployment 259–60w
Navy, Manpower 258–9w
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment 7w
Royal Naval Hospital Haslar 752–3w
Ships Support Agency, Standards 397–8w
Territorial Army, Caernarfon 449–50w
Territorial Army, Deployment 300–1w, 453w
Territorial Army, Recruitment 450w

Henderson, Mr Doug, continued*
Ulster Defence Regiment, Deployment 398w

Henderson, Mr Ivan
Questions
United Nations, Peace keeping operations 475w

Hepburn, Mr Stephen
Questions
Aerials, Planning permission 250w
Regional development agencies, North East region 413w

Heppell, Mr John
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 373

Hesford, Mr Stephen
Questions
Taxation, Currency speculation 311w

Hewitt, Ms Patricia, Economic Secretary to the Treasury*
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 324–6
Questions
Bank of Credit and Commerce International 28w
Charitable donations 310w
Climate change levy 135w, 169w, 461–2w, 1280–2
Climate change levy, Northern Ireland 28–9w
Coinage, Counterfeit manufacturing 169–70w
Commemorative coins, Millennium 171w
EC budget 312w
EC Finance Council 75w, 166–8w
Economic and monetary union 423–4w, 458w, 460w
Employment, Shrewsbury 464w
European Central Bank, Codes of practice 168w
European Commission, Pay 168w
Excise duties, Fuels 1283–4
Excise duties, Lorries 1273–4
Excise duties, Motor vehicles 310–1w
Financial Services and Markets Draft Bill Joint Select Committee 222w
Free movement of capital, Developing countries 462–3w
Individual savings accounts 463w
Insurance companies, Regulation 464w
Interest rates 223w
International Monetary Fund, Gold and foreign exchange reserves 312w
Landfill tax 29w, 461w
Loans, Brazil 325w
Lund Humphries, Pensions 312–3w
Minimum wage, Treasury 168w
Ministerial policy advisors, Treasury 463–4w
Mortgages, Misrepresentation 26–7w
Overseas investment 311w
Proceeds of crime, Internet 170w
Smuggling, Petrol 28w
Tax allowances, Charities 75w
Tax yields, Motor vehicles 26w
Taxation, Currency speculation 311w
Taxation, Italy 27w
Taxation, Pesticides 312w
Taxation, Recycling 311–2w
VAT, Financial services 75w
World Bank, Social policy 463w
Written questions, Treasury 172w

Higher education
Finance 340w
Northern Ireland 352–3w
Wales 224w

Higher Education Reach-out to Business and the Community Fund
108–9w

Highways Act 1980
Questions
280–1w

Hillgrove Farm Witney
350w

HMS Beaver
450w

HMS Birmingham
450w

HMS Brave
213w

HMS Campbeltown
146w

HMS Chatham
146w

HMS Fearless
212–3w

HMS Intrepid
212–3w

HMS Monmouth
450w

HMS Newcastle
450w

HMS Southampton
146–7w

Hodge, Ms Margaret, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment*
Debates etc.
Pre-school education (18.06.99) 738–42
Questions
Employment 342w
Employment, Disabled 296w, 339–40w, 469w
Females, Dept for Education and Employment 296–7w
Remploy 469–70w

Hoey, Miss Kate, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Al-Fayed, Mohammed (22.06.99) 1086–8
Questions
Custody officers, Training 56w
EC law 6
Electronic surveillance, EC action 92w
European Committee for the Prevention of Torture 266w
European Police Office 1–2, 60w
European Police Office, Interpol 346w
Metropolitan Police, Advertising 104–5w
Metropolitan Police, Ethnic groups 57–8w
National Front, Arrests 161w
Organised crime, EC enlargement 5–6
Police, River Thames 375w, 427w
Racial harassment, Ealing 161w
Racial violence, Greater London 151–9w
Schengen Agreement, Costs 92–3w

Hogg, Rt Hon Douglas
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 114
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 782
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 207–8
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 507, 513, 530–1
Kosovo (14.06.99) 32, (17.06.99) 587, 598, (21.06.99) 771

Holiday leave
558

Holidays abroad
180w

Home detention curfews
59w

Home energy efficiency scheme
Wales 488w

Home Office
Annual reports 54w
Empty property 62–3w
Females 346w
Republic of Ireland 266–7w
Written questions 374w

Homelessness
Greater London 283w

Homeopathy
52–3w

Homosexuality
Armed forces 145w

Hood, Mr Jimmy
Questions
EC Agriculture Council 215–6w
EC Finance Council 167–8w
EC Fisheries Council 19–20w
EC Foreign Affairs Council 484–5w
EC Health Council 183–4w
EC Transport Council 446–7w
Military bases, Chelsea 256–7w

Hoon, Mr Geoffrey, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office*
Questions
Ambassadors for British business 278w
British Council, Public appointments 256w
British Nuclear Fuels 228w
China, Political prisoners 276–7w
Departmental records, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 116w
Diplomatic relations 277w
East Timor 917
Embassies, Email 116w
Immigration officers, Training 355w
India, Christianity 909
India, Foreign relations 920
Indonesia 356w
Iran, Antisemitism 227–8w, 253–4w
Iran, Bahai sect 228w
Iran, Diplomatic relations 356w
Iran, Human rights 226–7w, 254–5w
Iran, Transplant surgery 371w
Israel, Human rights 357–8w
Japan, Radioactive materials 927–8
Kashmir 114w, 357w
Khmer Rouge 484w
Mongolia 922–3
Panel 2000 31–2w
Sudan 253w
Sudan, Armed conflict 253w
Sudan, Peace negotiations 226w
Suharto, Mohamed 277w
USA, Travel information 255–6w

Hope, Mr Phil
Debates etc.
Footwear (17.06.99) 657–8
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1113–4, 1120, 1123–5
Questions
Business questions 565–6
Earnings top-up 182–3w
Email 350–1w

Hopkins, Mr Kelvin
Questions
Alternative energy 203w
Taxation, EC action 465w

Hormone treatments
Milk 25–6w

Horse riding
Minimum wage 316w

Horticulture
Taxation 118w

Hospital beds
Pensioners 331–2w
Wales 331–2w

Hospital wards
Greater London 384w

Hospitals
Food 292w
Sunderland 10w
Waiting lists 14–5w

House of Commons
Minimum wage 272w
Pay 272–3w

House of Commons Disqualification (Amendment) Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (16.06.99) 393–5

House of Commons Liaison Committee
(17.06.99) 656

House of Lords
Reform 1164

Household surveys
44w, 46w

Households
Gloucestershire 77w

Housing benefit
399–404w
Benefits rules 293w, 433w
South West region 361–2w

Housing improvement
Disabled 200–1w
Elderly 200w

Housing stock
Lancashire 283–4w

Howard, Rt Hon Michael
Debates etc.
Business questions (23.06.99) 1231
Kosovo (14.06.99) 23–5
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (continuance) orders (23.06.99) 1178
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1397–8, 1400, 1403–4

Howarth, Mr Alan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture Media and Sport*
Questions
EC Culture Council 88w
Stonehenge 430w

Howarth, Mr George, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1189, 1223–5
Questions
Absent voting 229w
Animal experiments 380–1w
Animal Procedures Committee 57w
Animal Procedures Committee, Annual reports 350w
Ballot papers 230w
Cannabis, Medical treatments 106w
Cannabis, Prison sentences 105–6w
Coroners 62w
Crimestoppers, Greater Manchester 5

Howarth, Mr George — continued*
Deportation, Mental patients 266w
Drugs, Abuse 267w
Empty property, Home Office 62–3w
European Parliament elections, Publicity 267–8w
Fire prevention 61w, 163–4w
Fire services 54–5w
Fire services, Water supply 91–2w
Habitual offenders, Drugs 347w
Hillgrove Farm Witney 350w
Home detention curfews 59w
Human remains, Devon 162w
Identity cards 381w
Inside Out Trust 59–60w
Licensing laws 6–7
Life imprisonment 99–100w
Paedophilia, Disclosure of information 348–9w
Prison accommodation 428w
Prisoners 60–1w
Prisoners, Employment 347–8w
Prisoners, Exservicemen 60w
Prisoners, Per capita costs 265–6w
Prisoners, Rehabilitation 162w
Prisoners on remand 99w
Prisoners' transfers, Special hospitals 62w
Prisons, Drugs 105–6w, 266w, 378–9w
Probation and aftercare, Computers 165w
Probation officers 55w
Proceeds of crime 54w
Sentence Review Commission 165–6w
Shamrock Farms 104w
Women's prisons, Prescription drugs 105w
Young offender institutions 377–8w
Young offenders, Education 376w, 378w
Young offenders, Remand in custody 377w
Young offenders, Sexual offences 376–7w

Howarth, Mr Gerald
Debates etc.
Al-Fayed, Mohammed (22.06.99) 1082
Questions
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Disclosure of information 398w
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Legal costs 9w
CityFlyer Express 1w
Parachute Regiment, Correspondence 18–9w
Stop and search 474w

Howells, Dr Kim, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Questions
Cars, Prices 207w
CityFlyer Express 1w
Complaints, Standards specifications 413–4w
Consumer goods, Prices 541–2
Diesel fuel, Excise duties 542–3
Directorate General for Competition 414w
Females, Dept of Trade and Industry 270w
Inventions 551–3
Libyan Arab Republic 557
Monopolies and Mergers Commission, Publications 2w, 269w
Petrol, Retail trade 3–4w
Science enterprise challenge 557–8

Hoyle, Mr Lindsay
Questions
Absent voting 229w
Cars, Prices 207w
House of Commons, Pay 272–3w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 302w
Military aircraft, Procurement 746

Hughes, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 225, 228, 230–1, 234–6, 241–2, 249
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 175w
Church of England, Investment 756–7
Debts, Developing countries 459w
Juries 54w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 750
Manufacturing industries, Trade competitiveness 206–7w
Open government 381w

Human remains
Devon 162w

Human rights
226w
Gambia 372–3w
Indonesia 277w
Iran 226–7w, 254–5w
Israel 357–8w
Zimbabwe 360w

Human Rights Act 1998
Questions
214w

Humble, Mrs Joan
Questions
Disadvantaged, Voluntary organisations 13
Wormwood Scrubs 429w

Hunter, Mr Andrew
Questions
Adoption 477w
Adoption, Hampshire 477w
Fertility, Medical treatments 320w
Firearms, Licensing 380w
Roads, Noise 152
Ulster Defence Regiment, Deployment 398w

Hutton, Mr John, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 351–5
Asthma, Children (16.06.99) 369–72
Mentally incapacitated, Community care (14.06.99) 132–6
Questions
Adoption 477w
Adoption, Hampshire 477w
Alzheimer's disease 289–90w
Autism 286–7w
Cancer, Health services 320w, 476–7w
Cancer, Research 319w
Children in care 251–2w
Children in care, Somerset 251w
Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Working Group 435w
Hospitals, Sunderland 10w
Kidderminster Hospital 12w
Long-Term Care Royal Commission 320w
Mental health review tribunals 292–3w
Political refugees, Finance 187w
Quality protects programme 250–1w
Radiotherapy, Medical equipment 11w
Residential homes 386w
St Dunstan's Charity 185w
Secure psychiatric units 113w
Special hospitals, Advocacy 14w
Wheelchairs 435w

Iddon, Dr Brian
Questions
Drugs, Advertising 477–8w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 913–4
Prostitution, Advertising 347w

Identity cards
2–5, 381w

Illegal immigrants
379–80w

Immigrants
Detainees 58w
Domestic violence 164–5w

Immigration and Asylum Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 111–4
Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 174–222
Rep (15.06.99) 267–97
Rep and 3R* (16.06.99) 396–531
Questions
386

Immigration and Nationality Directorate
57w, 428–9w

Immigration controls
165w

Immigration officers
Training 355w

Immigration rules
163w
Cohabitation 164w

Imports
Asbestos 200w
Furs 414w
Northern Ireland 387w

Incapacity benefit
362w, 434w

Income support
Mortgages 293–4w
Pensioners 369–70w
Wandsworth 366–7w

Income tax
Forms 172w
Pensioners 459w

Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland
Costs 144–5w
Internet 352w

India
Christianity 909
Foreign relations 920

Individual learning accounts
27w

Individual savings accounts
463w

Indonesia
356w
Debts written off 273–4w
Human rights 277w

Industrial health and safety
Intimidation 46–7w

Industrial injuries disablement benefit
Benefits rules 32w

Industrial injuries scheme
238w

Industrial relations
4w

Industrial Research and Technology Unit
see Northern Ireland Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Information society initiative
188w

Information technology
Developing countries 178w
Schengen Agreement 160–1w

Ingram, Rt Hon Adam, Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office*
Questions
Bombings, Omagh 353w
Crimes of violence, Northern Ireland 141w, 231–2w, 425–7w
Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 471w
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland 143–4w
Fort Whiterock, Property development 51w
Hamill, Robert 230–1w, 351–2w
Imports, Northern Ireland 387w
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland, Costs 144–5w
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland, Internet 352w
Nelson, Rosemary 140w, 210w, 231w, 352w, 425–6w
Northern Ireland Equality Commission Working Group 145w
Northern Ireland Industrial Research and Technology Unit, Standards 143w
Parades Commission 211w
Royal Ulster Constabulary 353–4w
Royal Ulster Constabulary, Portadown 351w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 426w

Inland waterways
Access 245–6w
Cable systems 285w

Innovation
(25.06.99) 1414–85

Inside Out Trust
59–60w

Insignia
Armed forces 263w

Insurance
Driving 440–1w

Insurance companies
Regulation 464w

Integrated Transport Commission
Public appointments 139w

Interception of Communications Commissioner
Annual reports 196w

Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology
see Genetic Modification Technology Interdepartmental Group

Interest rates
223w

Intergovernmental Conference 2000
195w

International assistance
River Danube 176w

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
see World Bank

International law
Refugees 346–7w

International Monetary Fund
Gold and foreign exchange reserves 312w, 1276
Structural adjustment 178w

International Year of Older Persons 1999
32w

Internet
Embassies 116w
Fees and charges 544
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland 352w

Internet continued
Northern Ireland Office 388–90w
Proceeds of crime 170w

Interpol
European Police Office 346w

Intervention stocks
Beef 486w

Intimidation
Industrial health and safety 46–7w
Learning disability 1167

Invalid care allowances
182w, 361w, 367w
Earnings rules 182w

Invalidity benefits
434w

Inventions
551–3

Investors in People UK
129w

Iran
Antisemitism 227–8w, 253–4w
Bahai sect 228w
Diplomatic relations 356w
Human rights 226–7w, 254–5w
Transplant surgery 371w

Iraq
Bombings 301w
Sanctions 387

Iraq-Kuwait conflict
Uranium 148–9w, 395–6w, 453–4w

Islington
Education 342w

Israel
Human rights 357–8w

Italy
Taxation 27w

Jack, Rt Hon Michael
Questions
Annual reports, Home Office 54w

Jackson, Ms Glenda*, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Debates etc.
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 335–6, 343, 346–8
Questions
A14 78w
A303 440w
Air bags 247w
Bedford-Bletchley railway line 137–8w
British Railways Board, Land 408–9w
Bus services, Standards 85w
Cars, Greater London 80w
Cars, Safety 471w
Complaints, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 280w
Cycleways, Greater London 137w
Driving, Licensing 440–1w
Driving instruction 38w
Driving instruction, Standards 38–41w
Driving Standards Agency 41w, 279w
Driving tests 38–42w, 278–80w
Exhaust emissions 80w, 472w
Fire services, Training 404–5w
Fishing vessels, Accidents 79w
Fuels, Excise duties 471w
Lorries, Axle weights 281w
Lorries, Road traffic offences 280w
Motor vehicles, Lighting 46w
Motor vehicles, Waste disposal 83–4w
North London railway line 138w
Petrol 44w
Petrol alternatives, Motor vehicles 445w

Jackson, Ms Glenda continued
Polegate bypass 284–5w
Priority routes, Greater London 410w
Public safety zones 86w
Radioactive materials, Transport 79w
Railtrack, Capital investment 282w
Railtrack, Finance 281w
Railway stations, Bicycles 409w
Railway stations, Parking 152
Railway track 408w
Regional airports 141–2
Rights of way 280–1w
Road traffic control, Standards 84–5w
Roads, Accidents 37w
Roads, Expenditure 42–3w, 45w
Roads, Speed limits 441–2w
Rolling stock 43w
Stansted Airport 138–9w
Strategic Rail Authority 281w
Taxis, Disabled 407w
Taxis, Plymouth 337w
Train operating companies, Standards 408w
Trains, Bicycles 441–2w
Trains, Overcrowding 85w
Transport and Works Act 1992 406w
Unleaded petrol 336w
Walking 447w
Welsh Highland railway 442w
West coast railway line, Modernisation 137w

Jackson, Helen
Questions
Animal welfare, EC action 414w
Developing countries, Debts 173–4w
Furs, Imports 414w

Jackson, Mr Robert
Questions
Kosovo, Cultural heritage 356w

Japan
EC external relations 134w
Radioactive materials 5w, 150–1w, 271w, 305w, 927–8

Jenkin, Mr Bernard
Debates etc.
Ministerial statement intervention (15.06.99) 159, 164
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 335, 340, 342–5, 348
Questions
Railways, Passengers 139

Jenkins, Mr Brian
Questions
Licensing laws 6

Jobseeker's allowance
361w

Johnson, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1217–9

Johnson, Miss Melanie
Questions
Employment 342w

Johnson Smith, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Questions
Farmers, Tax allowances 417w

Joint Consultative Committee with the Liberal Democratic Party
see Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee

Jones, Rt Hon Barry
Questions
Climate change levy 135w
Community charge, Wales 72–3w

Jones, Rt Hon Barry continued
Crewe-Holyhead railway line 144
Food Standards Agency, Wales 134–5w
Higher education, Wales 224w
Mining, Wales 73w
Ministerial duties, Welsh Office 235w
NHS trusts, Wales 275w
Social inclusion partnerships, Wales 73w
Voluntary organisations, Wales 135w

Jones, Helen M
Questions
Cash limits, Dept for Education and Employment 243w
Hospitals, Food 292w
Local government, Ethics 77w
Millennium compliance 71w, 151w
New deal for young people 1160
Prisoners' transfers, Special hospitals 62w
Special hospitals, Advocacy 14w
Working families tax credit 1277
Working hours 558

Jones, Mr Jon Owen*, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office*
Debates etc.
Denbighshire County Council (25.06.99) 1489–92
Questions
Community charge, Wales 72–3w
Home energy efficiency scheme, Wales 488w
Local government finance, Wales 488w
NHS, Disciplinary proceedings 6w
NHS trusts, Wales 275w
Pensioners, Hospital beds 331–2w
Physiotherapy, Wales 373w
Refrigeration, Greenhouse effect 5–6w
Secure psychiatric units, Wales 73–4w
Sites of special scientific interest, Wales 275w

Jones, Dr Lynne
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1009
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 467–8, 474
Questions
Political refugees 93w

Jones, Mr Martyn David
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 817
Questions
Climate change levy 407w, 462w
Recycling, Wood 285w

Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa*, Minister for Public Health, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1127–9
World Health Organisation (15.06.99) 302–6
Questions
Cancer, Colchester 288–9w
Clones 383–4w, 436w
Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia 318–9w
Drugs, Advertising 12–4w, 382–3w, 477–8w
Drugs, Animal products 382w
Drugs, Medical treatments 349–50w
EC Health Council 183–4w
Fertility, Medical treatments 320w
Health education, Salt 385w
Pertussis vaccine 185w
Republic of Ireland, Dept of Health 383w
Written questions, Dept of Health 186w
Yellow card scheme 110w, 434–5w
Yellow card scheme, Metrizamide 110w

Judicial Appointments and Silk Equal Opportunities Joint Working Party
123–4w

Junior doctors
Working hours 10–1w, 319w

Juries
54w, 96–7w

K4 Committee
90–1w

Kashmir
114w, 187w, 357w, 387–8

Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1089–95
Kosovo (21.06.99) 768
Questions
Caribbean, Overseas aid 48w
Members, Correspondence 314w

Keeble, Ms Sally
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 799, 812–3, 819–20, 844–6
Footwear (17.06.99) 658
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1343
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1300–1
Questions
Medicines Control Agency 321w
West coast railway line, Modernisation 137w

Keen, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1214–6

Keen, Ann
Questions
Sustainable development 86–7w

Keetch, Mr Paul
Questions
Fire services, Water supply 91–2w
Press releases, Dept for Education and Employment 438w

Kemp, Mr Fraser
Questions
Domestic violence 381–2w

Kennedy Inquiry
see Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry

Kent
Assisted areas (23.06.99) 1143–50

Key, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Care of Places of Worship Measure (23.06.99) 1252, 1254
Cathedrals Measure (23.06.99) 1234–7
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 784
Questions
A303 440w
Church Commissioners, Expenditure 760
Frigates, Satellite broadcasting 7w
Lorries, Road traffic offences 280w
ROF Bishopton 754–5
Stonehenge 430w

Khabra, Mr Piara S
Questions
Developing countries, Genetically modified organisms 176–7w

Khmer Rouge
484w

Kidderminster Hospital
12w

Kidney, Mr David
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1006, 1024–5, 1031
Questions
Army, Cadets 147w, 262w
Passport Office, Liverpool 93–4w
Passports, Administrative delays 94w
Small businesses 203w
United Kingdom Passport Agency, Standards 159–60w

Kilfoyle, Mr Peter, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Cabinet Office*
Questions
Better government programme, Elderly 1153–4
Buildings, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 421–2w
Civil servants, Recruitment 363–4w
Civil service, Personnel management 419w
Civil service agencies 419w
Consultation papers 456w
Government, Policy 419w
Government departments, Buildings 194w, 420w
Government departments, Correspondence 1157–9
Government departments, Email 420w
Government departments, Standards 1156–7
Government offices for the regions 420w
Ministerial policy advisors, Pensions 456w
Ministers, Email 419w
Monsanto, Cabinet Office 194w
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 1158–9
North West region 456w
Scottish Parliament, Correspondence 1157
Security Facilities Executive 422w

King, Ms Oona
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 446–8, 473, 482
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1186, 1208, 1211
Questions
Crime prevention, Voluntary organisations 56–7w
Greenwich Hospital 451–2w
Habitual residence test 36–7w

King, Rt Hon Tom
Debates etc.
Business questions (23.06.99) 1230
Kosovo (14.06.99) 28–9
Ministerial statement intervention (23.06.99) 1176
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Orders (23.06.99) 1174–5
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1389, 1395–7, 1401
Questions
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 750–1

Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1208–9, 1225
Rover Group, Points of order (23.06.99) 1180–1
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 940, 960–2, 966, 969–71
Questions
Minimum wage 549–50

Kirkwood, Mr Archy
Questions
House of Commons, Pay 272–3w
Line of route 74w
Minimum wage, House of Commons 272w
Palace of Westminster, Parking 316w

Kosovo
355w, 431w, (17.06.99) 582–656
Armed conflict 65–6w, 277w, 302–4w, 306–7w, 313–4w, 327–8w, 354w, 381–2, 423w, 451w, 461w, 481–2w, 743–5, 755, 917–20
Cultural heritage 356w
Ethnic groups 16w
Mines 47–8w, 344w
Ministerial statements (14.06.99) 21–33, (21.06.99) 761–76
Overseas aid 344–5w
Peace keeping operations 195w, 355w, 396–7w, 750–2
Refugees 16–7, 47–9w, 71–2w, 102–3w, 179w, 187w, 265w, 345w, 355–6w, 383
Uranium 148w, 307w, 454w
War crimes 423w

Kumar, Dr Ashok
Questions
Cleveland Police Authority 348w

Labelling
Nuts (24.06.99) 1405–12

Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee
225w, 321w

Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 404, 419, 428–9

Laing, Mrs Eleanor
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 163
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1203–4, 1210, 1215–7

Lait, Mrs Jacqui
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 671, 692–8, 702, 708
Questions
Licensing laws 7

Lancashire
Housing stock 283–4w

Land
British Railways Board 408–9w

Land Command
Deployment 257w

Land Registers of Northern Ireland
Standards 391w

Land use
Databases 154

Landfill tax
29w, 461w

Landlords
283w

Lansley, Mr Andrew
Questions
Biotechnology Presentation Group 1152–3

Lapwings
Conservation 282w

Law
Reform 455w

Law Officers' Dept
see Attorney General

Lawrence, Ms Jackie
Questions
A40, Wales 72w
Capital gains tax, Tax avoidance 171w
Commemorative coins, Public libraries 29w
Pension rights, Private sector 29–30w
Private finance initiative 465–6w

Lawrence, Stephen
see Stephen Lawrence Death Inquiry

Laxton, Mr Bob
Questions
Petrol alternatives, Motor vehicles 445w

Lead
Ammunition 137w, 149
Research 207–8w

Learning disability
Intimidation 1167

Leave of absence
Speaker (23.06.99) 1255

Legal aid
Northern Ireland 53w, 233w

Legal costs
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry 9w

Legal profession
Public appointments 317–8w, 322–3w

Leicestershire
Secondary education 191w

Leigh, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1202
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 965–6, 968, 971
Questions
Buildings, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 76w, 421–2w
Council of Ministers, Voting methods 354–5w

Lepper, Mr David
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1367–9
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 713–6

Leslie, Mr Christopher
Questions
Economic policy 386–7
Tax yields 1272

Letwin, Mr Oliver
Questions
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, USA 192w
Business questions 1298
Government departments, Correspondence 71w
Tax yields 1272

Levitt, Mr Tom
Questions
Devonshire Royal Hospital 112w

Lewes
Flood control (16.06.99) 533–40

Lewis, Mr Ivan
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 181

Lewis, Dr Julian
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 782–3
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1219, 1224

Lewis, Dr Julian —continued
Questions
Business questions 1292–3
EC common foreign and security policy 748–9
Economic and monetary union 460w
Kosovo, Refugees 179w
Voting behaviour 10

Libyan Arab Republic
557
Sanctions 109–10w

Licensing laws
6–7

Liddell, Rt Hon Mrs Helen, Minister for Transport, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Questions
Aircraft, Air pollution 82w
Crewe-Holyhead railway line 144–5
District line 472–3w
EC Transport Council 45w, 446–7w
Integrated Transport Commission, Public appointments 139w
London Underground, Joint ventures 80–1w
National Rail Summit 76–7w
Railways 78w
Railways, Passengers 138–9
Railways, Rural areas 77w
Railways, Standards 82w, 448w
Regional airports, Competition 78w
Roads, Noise 152–4
Transport, Local authorities 80w

Life imprisonment
99–100w

Lighting
Motor vehicles 46w

Lindane
233–4w

Line of route
74w

Linton, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1034
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1196, 1198
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 330–4
Questions
Elections, Public participation 9
Voting behaviour 9

Listed buildings
Demolition 442–3w

Literacy
Primary education 1166–7

Liverpool
Passport Office 93–4w

Lloyd, Mr Tony, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1105–8
Questions
Albania, Arms control 115–6w
Antarctic, Environment protection 134w
Arms trade, Export controls 359w
ASSIST programme 117–8w
Balkans, Economic situation 356–7w
Balkans, Stability Pact 255w
British dependent territories 924–5
British Nuclear Fuels, Secondment 253w
Commonwealth Institute 117w
Council of Europe, Publications 115w

Lloyd, Mr Tony —continued
Diego Garcia 925
EC defence policy 264w
Falkland Islands 360–1w
Females, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 255w
Fisheries, Protection 252–3w
Gambia, Human rights 372–3w
Gibraltar, European Parliament elections 925
Kosovo 355w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 277w, 423w
Kosovo, Cultural heritage 356w
Kosovo, Refugees 355–6w
Kosovo, War crimes 423w
Libyan Arab Republic, Sanctions 109–10w
Macedonia, Export controls 133w
Minimum wage, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 114w
Mozambique, Elections 371–2w
Pinochet, Augusto 115w
Rio Summit 485–6w
Sierra Leone 921–2
South Africa, Elections 920–1
UN Register of Conventional Arms 226w
Zimbabwe, Corruption 359w
Zimbabwe, Elections 360w
Zimbabwe, Human rights 360w
Zimbabwe, Police 359w

Llwyd, Mr Elfyn
Questions
Crewe-Holyhead railway line 144–5

Local authorities
Transport 80w

Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Highway Functions) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(24.06.99) 1404

Local government
Elections 77w
Ethics 77w

Local Government Commission for England
286w

Local government finance
78w, 84w, 286w
Southend 78w
Wales 488w

Lock, Mr David
Questions
Railway stations, Parking 152

London Economics
246–7w

London Underground
Joint ventures 80–1w, 137–8
Ministerial statements (15.06.99) 155–67

Lone parents
Social rented housing 335w

Long-Term Care Royal Commission
320w

Lord Chancellor's Dept
Females 299w
USA 53w
Written questions 299w

Lords Lieutenant
Public appointments 321w

Lorries
Axle weights 281w
Excise duties 1273–4
Road traffic offences 280w

Loughton, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 783
Questions
Withholding tax 457w

Love, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1362, 1366

Luff, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 112
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 792–3
Questions
Falkland Islands 360–1w
Monopolies and Mergers Commission, Publications 2w, 269w
Schools, Water charges 63–4w

Lund Humphries
Pensions 312–3w

Lyell, Rt Hon Sir Nicholas
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 180–5
Questions
Climate change levy 169w
Committal proceedings 97–8w, 162w
Junior doctors, Working hours 319w
Juries 96–7w
Prisoners on remand 97w, 99w
Trials, Costs 98–9w

M4
Bus lanes 1167

McCabe, Mr Stephen
Questions
Firearms 61w
Iraq, Sanctions 387
Northern Ireland Environment and Heritage Service, Standards 392–3w
Northern Ireland Valuation and Lands Agency, Standards 393–4w

McCartney, Rt Hon Ian, Minister of State, Dept of Trade and Industry*
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1414–26, 1430–6
Questions
Company law, Video conferencing 189w
Competition 204w
EC Social Charter, Costs 204–5w
Industrial relations 4w
Manufacturing industries, Trade competitiveness 204w
Members, Correspondence 474w
Minimum wage 205w, 548–50
Minimum wage, Horse riding 316w
Parcelforce 474w
Part-time employment, EC law 203w
Post Office, Pensions 475w
Post offices 4w
Post offices, Rural areas 4w
Post offices, Social security benefits 4–5w, 189w
Seasonal workers, Working hours 555–6
Small businesses, Parental leave 209w
Sub post offices, Scotland 474w
Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 208w
Working hours 556, 558
Working hours, Fisheries 270–1w

McDonagh, Ms Siobhain
Debates etc.
House of Commons Disqualification (Amendment) Bill, 1R (16.06.99) 393–5

McDonagh, Ms Siobhain—continued*
Questions
EC Youth Council 191w
Employment 191w
Metropolitan Police, Ethnic groups 57–8w

Macdonald, Mr Calum, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Scottish Office*
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 843
Questions
Buchanan Centre, Rates and rating 52w
Forests, Sales 476w
Genetically modified organisms, Fish 330w, 395w
Glasgow Homeopathic Hospital, Waiting lists 53w
Homeopathy 52–3w
Refrigeration, Greenhouse effect 51–2w
River Tweed 47w
Sites of special scientific interest, Scotland 278w
Slaughterhouses, Scotland 476w
Special areas of conservation, Scotland 278w

McDonnell, Mr John
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 848–9
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 449–52
Questions
Gambia, Armed forces 451w
Gambia, Human rights 372–3w
Gambia, Overseas aid 430w

Macedonia
Export controls 133w

McFall, Mr John, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office*
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 892–900
Questions
Community relations, Northern Ireland 67w
Down School 268w
Glencree Reconciliation Centre 51w
Higher education, Northern Ireland 352–3w
Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency, Standards 69–70w
Nursery schools, Northern Ireland 212w
Occupational therapy, Northern Ireland 49–50w
Pre-school education, Northern Ireland 426w
Primary education, Northern Ireland 67w
Promoting social inclusion initiative, Northern Ireland 141w
Refrigeration, Greenhouse effect 50–1w
Saintfield School, Northern Ireland 67w
School choice, Northern Ireland 68–9w
Teachers, Northern Ireland 425w, 470w

McGrady, Mr Eddie
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 869–72

MacGregor, Rt Hon John
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1195–8

McIntosh, Miss Anne
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 791, 796, 849–52, 859
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 578

McIntosh, Miss Anne—continued*
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1318
Questions
Business questions 1295
Churches, VAT 757
Common agricultural policy, Beef 121w
Electronic commerce 205w, 553–4
Farmers, Bankruptcy 299w
Gynaecology, North Yorkshire 184–5w
Junior doctors, Working hours 10–1w
Police, Millennium 55w
Political refugees 16
Slaughterhouses, Inspections 122–3w
United Kingdom Passport Agency, Standards 160w

McIsaac, Shona
Debates etc.
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1111–2
Questions
Clones 436w
European Police Office 1–2
Regional airports 142

MacKay, Rt Hon Andrew
Debates etc.
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Points of order (17.06.99) 580

Mackinlay, Mr Andrew
Questions
Broadcasting programmes, Ministry of Defence 148w
Company law, Video conferencing 189w
Fares, Concessions 139–40
Internet, Fees and charges 544
Iraq-Kuwait conflict, Uranium 453–4w
Kosovo, Uranium 148w, 454w
Video conferencing 247w

Maclean, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 789, 793, 811, 817–21
Questions
Advisory bodies, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 20–1w
Class sizes 239–43w
Dover House 172w
EC Agriculture Council 297w
EC Finance Council 75w
EC Transport Council 45w
Income support, Mortgages 293–4w
Japan, EC external relations 134w
Ministerial duties, Scottish Office 172w
New deal for young people 467–8w
Rio Summit 485–6w

Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1200–5
Questions
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 1159
Special areas of conservation, Scotland 278w

McLoughlin, Mr Patrick
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1189
Questions
Business questions 569–70
Police, Standards 13

McNamara, Mr Kevin
Questions
Armed forces, Insignia 263w
Bombings, Dublin 263–4w
Equal opportunities, Northern Ireland 143–4w
Hamill, Robert 230–1w

McNamara, Mr Kevin*—*continued
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland, Costs 144–5w
Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland, Internet 352w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 388–90w
Manufacturing industries, Capital investment 2–3w
Nelson, Rosemary 231w
Northern Ireland Equality Commission Working Group 145w
Northern Ireland Housing Executive 210–1w
Parades Commission 211w
Sentence Review Commission 165–6w
Students, Access funds 341w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 426w

McNulty, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Ministerial statement intervention (15.06.99) 157–8
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1343–5, 1360, 1368
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 941
Questions
Crime prevention, Closed circuit television 17–8
Middle East, Peace negotiations 913–5
Northern Ireland Water Service Agency, Standards 69w
Public service, Standards 458w

MacPherson of Cluny Inquiry
see Stephen Lawrence Death Inquiry

MacShane, Mr Denis
Questions
Ashcroft, Michael 1272–3
British Steel 206w
Identity cards 3–4

Mactaggart, Fiona
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 195, 201
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 276–8, 284, (16.06.99) 487–8, 507–8
Questions
Armed forces, Education 301w
ASSIST programme 117–8w
Consumer goods, Prices 542
Deportation 230w
Developing countries, Education 175w
Immigration rules 163w
Kashmir 357w
NHS Pensions Agency, Standards 186w
Refugees, Kosovo 17
Young offenders, Administration of justice 164w

McWilliam, Mr John
Questions
Electronic commerce 205w

Madel, Sir David
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 915

Mahon, Mrs Alice
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 607–11

Maiden speeches
Benn, Hilary (23.06.99) 1198–200

Maladministration
Court Service 108w

Malins, Mr Humfrey
Debates etc.
Business questions (23.06.99) 1232

Malins, Mr Humfrey*—*continued
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (continuance) orders (23.06.99) 1177–8
Questions
Prisons, Drugs 474w

Mallaber, Judy
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 805
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 719–24
Questions
Telecommunications, Regulation 218–9w

Managers
NHS 320–1w, 382w

Manufacturing industries
208w
Capital investment 2–3w
Trade competitiveness 204w, 206–7w

Maples, Mr John
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 589–99
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 911–2

Marketing
Seeds 122w

Marsden, Mr Paul
Questions
Cars, Safety 471w
Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Working Group 435w
Consultation papers 456w
Employment, Shrewsbury 464w
Film 429–30w
Fuels, Excise duties 471w
Genetically modified organisms, Seeds 346w
Health services, OECD countries 112w
Hillgrove Farm Witney 350w
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 396w
Kosovo, War crimes 423w
Long-Term Care Royal Commission 320w
Newsprint 473w
Non-domestic rates, Sports 445w
Radiotherapy, Medical equipment 11w
Small Business Service 315–6w
Territorial Army, Recruitment 450w
Train operating companies, Standards 408w
War pensions, Medical examinations 295w
Wheelchairs 435w

Marshall, Mr David
Questions
Belfast Agreement 1162

Marshall, Mr Jim
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 357w, 910–1

Marshall-Andrews, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1000–4, 1010
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1147

Martlew, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1342, 1347–8, 1357, 1360–2
Questions
Railways, Accidents 1164

Matra Marconi Space UK
550

Maude, Rt Hon Francis
Questions
Economic and monetary union 1269–70
VAT 222–3w
VAT, Foreign exchange 166w, 222w

Mawhinney, Rt Hon Sir Brian
Debates etc.
Kosovo (21.06.99) 769
Questions
Members, Correspondence 467w, 472w, 475w

Maxton, Mr John
Debates etc.
Care of Places of Worship Measure (23.06.99) 1252–3
Speaker, Leave of absence (23.06.99) 1255–6

May, Mrs Theresa
Questions
General Certificate of Secondary Education 128–9w
Taxation, EC action 325w

Meacher, Rt Hon Michael*, *Minister for the Environment, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Questions
Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment 247–50w
Asbestos, Imports 200w
Countryside, Access 45–6w, 201w
Deer, West Sussex 44w
EC Environment Council 405–6w
Environment Agency, Business plans 333–4w
Genetically modified organisms 146–7
Genetically modified organisms, Antibiotics 136w
Genetically modified organisms, Cosmetics 199–200w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 44w, 135–6w, 147–8, 199w, 334w, 412w, 445–6w
Genetically modified organisms, Tree planting 336w
Industrial health and safety, Intimidation 46–7w
Lead, Ammunition 137w, 149
Members, Correspondence 472w
Mixed oxide fuel 334w
Parish councils, Public appointments 285w
Radioactive wastes, Waste disposal 142–4
Scientific Steering Committee 43–4w
South West Water, Water charges 201–2w

Meale, Mr Alan*, *Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions
Debates etc.
Regional planning and development, Stoke on Trent (23.06.99) 1133–6
Questions
British Waterways Board, Public appointments 202w
Buildings, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 76w
Carbon dioxide, Air pollution 83w
Climate change levy 407w
Council tax, Single people 83w
Dioxins, Health hazards 335w
Energy, Conservation 81–2w
Females, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 332–3w
Grain, Allergies 281w
Hedges and ditches 84w
Inland waterways, Access 245–6w
Inland waterways, Cable systems 285w
Lapwings, Conservation 282w

Meale, Mr Alan*—*continued
Lead, Ammunition 149
Local government finance 84w
Newsprint 473w
Non-domestic rates, Sports 445w
Recycling 443w
Recycling, Paper 247w
Recycling, Wood 285w
Regional development agencies 202w
Sewers, Oils 334w
Sites of special scientific interest 284w
Tipping of waste, Oils 406–7w
Tipping of waste, Prosecutions 284w
Video conferencing 247w
World environment day 405w
Written questions, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 282w

Means tested benefits
372w

Medical equipment
Diabetes 435w
Radiotherapy 11w

Medical examinations
Gulf war syndrome 150w
War pensions 295w

Medical profession
Armed forces 213w
Disciplinary proceedings 11w

Medical treatments
Cannabis 106w
Drugs 349–50w
Fertility 320w
Riot control weapons 220w

Medicine
Students 10w

Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999
Questions
382–3w

Medicines Control Agency
321w
Petitions (25.06.99) 1413

Members
Car allowances 74w
Correspondence 235w, 314w, 428w, 467w, 472w, 474–5w

Mental Health Act 1983
Questions
266w, 292–3w

Mental health review tribunals
292–3w

Mental health services
Young people 100w

Mental patients
Deportation 266w

Mentally incapacitated
395w
Community care (14.06.99) 127–36

Merron, Ms Gillian
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 354
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 577
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 704–7
Questions
Higher Education Reach-out to Business and the Community Fund 108–9w
Local government finance 286w

Metrizamide
Yellow card scheme 110w

Metropolitan Police
Advertising 104–5w
Ethnic groups 57–8w

Michael, Rt Hon Alun*, *Secretary of State for Wales
Questions
CADW Welsh Historic Monuments 331w
Child Abuse in North Wales Judicial Inquiry 236w
Females, Welsh Office 225w
Gwrych Castle 454w
Members, Correspondence 235w
Minimum wage, Welsh Office 331w
Ministerial duties, Welsh Office 235w
Parliamentary questions, Welsh Office 275w
Written questions, Welsh Office 235w

Michie, Mr Bill
Questions
Developing countries, Non-governmental organisations 174w
Planning permission 138w

Michie, Mrs Ray
Questions
Devolution 387
Slaughterhouses, Scotland 476w
Sub post offices, Scotland 474w

Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust
186w

Middle East
Peace negotiations 355w, 913–7

Milburn, Rt Hon Alan*, *Secretary of State for Health
Questions
Ashcroft, Michael 1272–3
Capital Modernisation Fund, Greater Manchester 171w
EC budget, Contributions 1278–9, 1282–3
Economic policy 462w
Families 456–7w
Gold and foreign exchange reserves 459w
Individual learning accounts 27w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 461w
Pension rights, Private sector 29–30w
Personal income, Pensioners 466w
Private finance initiative 465–6w
Public service, Standards 458w
Surgery, Costs 30w
Tax allowances, Vocational training 27w
Tax yields 1272
Taxation, Conscientious objectors 1278
Taxation, Derelict land 459w

Military aircraft
Procurement 745–8

Military bases
Chelsea 256–7w
Colchester 262w

Military Provost Guard Service
398w

Milk
Hormone treatments 25–6w

Milk Marque
298w

Millennium
Commemorative coins 171w
Police 55w
Tourism (18.06.99) 666–734

Millennium compliance
71w, 151w
Emergency services 89–90w
Ministerial statements (17.06.99) 571–9

Millennium Exhibition
180w

Millennium Exhibition*—*continued
Voluntary organisations 343w

Millennium volunteers scheme
175w

Miller, Mr Andrew
Questions
Armed forces, Education 301w
Immigration rules, Cohabitation 164w

Mines
Kosovo 47–8w, 344w

Minimum wage
205w, 548–50
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 114w
Horse riding 316w
House of Commons 272w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 23–4w
Northern Ireland Office 66–7w
Scottish Office 114w
Treasury 168w
Voluntary organisations 14
Welsh Office 331w

Mining
Wales 73w

Ministerial duties
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
Scottish Office 172w
Welsh Office 235w

Ministerial policy advisors
478–9w
Pensions 456w
Prime Minister 478w
Treasury 463–4w

Ministerial statements
Cologne summit (21.06.99) 761–76
Demonstrations (21.06.99) 777–85
Kosovo (14.06.99) 21–33, (21.06.99) 761–76
London Underground (15.06.99) 155–67
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 571–9
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Order 1999 (23.06.99) 1171–8
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Partial Continuance) Order 1998 (23.06.99) 1171–8

Ministers
Email 419w
Visits abroad 196–7w

Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food
Advisory bodies 20–1w
Females 417–8w
Minimum wage 23–4w
Written questions 193w

Ministry of Defence
Broadcasting programmes 148w
Females 262–3w
Transport 301–2w
USA 66w

Misrepresentation
Mortgages 26–7w

Mitchell, Mr Austin
Questions
Bank of Credit and Commerce International 28w
EC defence policy 306w
EC justice and home affairs 89w, 91w
European Police Office 60w
Fisheries 23w
Fishing vessels, Scotland 22–3w

Mitchell, Mr Austin—continued*
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 135–6w
K4 Committee 90–1w
Manufacturing industries, Trade competitiveness 204w

Mixed oxide fuel
334w

Moffatt, Laura
Questions
Tinsley House Immigration Detention Centre 390
United Nations, Peace keeping operations 305w

Monaghan
Bombings 263–4w

Mongolia
922–3

Monopolies and Mergers Commission
Publications 2w, 269w

Monsanto
Cabinet Office 194w

Montenegro
Overseas aid 473w

Moore, Mr Michael
Questions
River Tweed 47w

Moran, Ms Margaret
Questions
Crown Prosecution Service, Disclosure of information 318w
Immigrants, Domestic violence 164–5w

Morgan, Mr Alasdair
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 841–4
Questions
Regional airports 142

Morgan, Ms Julie
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 433–6

Morley, Mr Elliot, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food*
Debates etc.
Flood control, Lewes (16.06.99) 537–40
Questions
Advisory bodies, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 20–1w
Battery hens 417w
EC Fisheries Council 19–20w
Fisheries 23w
Fishing catches 216–8w
Fishing vessels, Scotland 22–3w
Minimum wage, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 23–4w
Sandeels 218w
Written questions, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 193w

Morris, Ms Estelle, Minister for School Standards, Dept for Education and Employment*
Questions
City technology colleges 340–1w
Class sizes 239–43w
Class sizes, Primary education 190w
Education, Finance 64w
Education, Islington 342w
General Certificate of Secondary Education 128–9w
Pupil exclusions, South East region 438–9w
Rainsford School Chelmsford 439w

Morris, Ms Estelle—continued*
Remedial education 394w
Schools, Finance 130w
Schools, Joint ventures 439–40w
Schools, Standards 339w
Schools, Transport 64w
Schools, Water charges 63–4w
Secondary education, Leicestershire 191w
Standard assessment tasks 130w
Teachers, Science 341w
Teachers, Standards 245w

Morris, Rt Hon John, Attorney-General*
Questions
Bamieh, Maria 317w
Crown Prosecution Service, Disclosure of information 318w
Employment tribunals, Disclosure of information 449w
Females, Attorney General 300w
Legal profession, Public appointments 317–8w
Treasury Counsel 448–9w

Mortgages
Income support 293–4w
Misrepresentation 26–7w

Moss, Mr Malcolm
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 867–9
Questions
Weapons, Northern Ireland 470w

Motor vehicles
Excise duties 310–1w
Lighting 46w
Petrol alternatives 445w
Tax yields 26w
Waste disposal 83–4w

Mountford, Kali
Debates etc.
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1316–7, 1325–7
Questions
Stakeholder pensions 433w

Mowlam, Rt Hon Marjorie, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland*
Questions
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Solicitors 268w
Community relations, Northern Ireland 211–2w
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Standards 142w
Land Registers of Northern Ireland, Standards 391w
Northern Ireland Environment and Heritage Service, Standards 392–3w
Probation Board for Northern Ireland 70–1w
Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, Standards 142–3w
USA, Northern Ireland Office 69w, 141w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 470w
Written questions, Northern Ireland Office 232–3w

Mozambique
Elections 371–2w

Mudie, Mr George, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Education and Employment*
Questions
Cash limits, Dept for Education and Employment 243w
Catering, Dept for Education and Employment 223w

Mudie, Mr George—continued*
EC Youth Council 191w
Further education, Disciplinary proceedings 63w
Further education, Standards 128w
Higher education, Finance 340w
Investors in People UK 129w
Members, Correspondence 467w
Press releases, Dept for Education and Employment 438w
Refrigeration, Dept for Education and Employment 128w
Students, Access funds 341w
Students, Fees and charges 127–8w, 339w
Teachers, Pay 341w
Universities, Disciplinary proceedings 63w
Written questions, Dept for Education and Employment 244w

Mullin, Mr Chris
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1093, 1098–100
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 788–90
Oral questions, Points of order (16.06.99) 392
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1384, 1394–5
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 373
European Committee for the Prevention of Torture 266w
Lords Lieutenant, Public appointments 321w
Prison accommodation 428w
Prisoners, Exservicemen 60w

Murphy, Mr Jim
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1428–9, 1437–45
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1211
Questions
Child Support Agency 431–2w
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Standards 142w
Further education, Scotland 330–1w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 302w, 919
Middle East, Peace negotiations 355w
Minimum wage 549
Naval Bases and Supply Agency, Standards 397w
Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, Standards 142–3w
Ships Support Agency, Standards 397–8w

Murphy, Rt Hon Paul, Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office*
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 862–7
Questions
Absent voting, Northern Ireland 390–1w
Belfast Harbour 427w
Community relations, Northern Ireland 391–2w
Females, Northern Ireland Office 386–7w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 388–90w
Minimum wage, Northern Ireland Office 66–7w
Northern Ireland Housing Executive 210–1w
Northern Ireland Planning Appeals Commission 387w
Northern Ireland Valuation and Lands Agency, Standards 393–4w
Northern Ireland Water Service Agency, Standards 69w

Murphy, Rt Hon Paul—continued*
Sites of special scientific interest, Northern Ireland 233w
Tipping of waste, Northern Ireland 140–1w

Myodil
Yellow card scheme 110w

National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education
Publications 89w

National Audit Office
759–60
Manpower 300w

National Bus Company
Pension funds 85–6w, 140, 385–6, 1166

National Front
Arrests 161w

National insurance contributions
Females 29w
Social security benefits 35w

National lottery
89w

National Rail Summit
76–7w

National security
16w

NATO enlargement
301w

Naval Bases and Supply Agency
Standards 397w

Navy
Deployment 259–60w
Manpower 258–9w

Naysmith, Dr Douglas
Questions
Local government finance 78w
Matra Marconi Space UK 550
Nuclear disarmament 755–6

Nelson, Rosemary
140w, 210w, 231w, 352w, 425–6w

Netherlands
Drugs 127w

New deal for 50 plus
467w

New deal for communities
151

New deal for young people
190–1w, 467–8w, 1160

New deal schemes
223–4w

Newport
Passport Office 96w

Newsprint
473w

NHS
Disciplinary proceedings 6w
Finance 1168
Managers 320–1w, 382w
Pay 110–1w
Procurement 436–7w
Public appointments 288w
Wales 6w

NHS Pensions Agency
Standards 186w

NHS trusts
Wales 275w

Nicholls, Mr Patrick
Questions
Poultry, Thailand 486–7w

Nigeria
923–4
Debts 175–6w

Noise
Roads 152–4

Non-departmental public bodies
Public appointments 1158–9

Non-domestic rates
Sports 445w

Non-fossil fuel obligation
Essex 109w

Non-governmental organisations
Developing countries 174w

Norman, Mr Archie
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1103–5
Mentally incapacitated, Community care (14.06.99) 127–32
Questions
EC reform 926

North East region
Regional development agencies 413w

North London railway line
138w

North West region
456w
Regional development agencies 79w
Tourism 365–6w

North Yorkshire
Gynaecology 184–5w

Northern Ireland
Absent voting 390–1w
Climate change levy 28–9w
Community relations 67w, 211–2w, 391–2w
Crimes of violence 141w, 231–2w, 388, 425–7w
Equal opportunities 143–4w
Exports 414w
Further education 352–3w
Greenhouse effect 50–1w
Higher education 352–3w
Imports 387w
Legal aid 53w, 233w
Nursery schools 212w
Occupational therapy 49–50w
Pre-school education 426w
Primary education 67w
Prisoners' release 165–6w
Promoting social inclusion initiative 141w
Saintfield School 67w
School choice 68–9w
Sites of special scientific interest 233w
Smuggling 28w
Teachers 425w, 470w
Tipping of waste 140–1w
Weapons 390, 426w, 470w

Northern Ireland Affairs Select Committee
(14.06.99) 126

Northern Ireland (Emergency and Prevention of Terrorism Provisions) (Continuance) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(14.06.99) 115

Northern Ireland Environment and Heritage Service
Standards 392–3w

Northern Ireland Equality Commission Working Group
145w

Northern Ireland Grand Committee
(22.06.99) 1080

Northern Ireland Housing Executive
210–1w

Northern Ireland Industrial Research and Technology Unit
Standards 143w

Northern Ireland Office
Females 386–7w
Internet 388–90w
Minimum wage 66–7w
USA 69w, 141w
Written questions 232–3w

Northern Ireland Parades Commission
see Parades Commission

Northern Ireland Planning Appeals Commission
387w

Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency
Standards 69–70w

Northern Ireland Valuation and Lands Agency
Standards 393–4w

Northern Ireland Water Service Agency
Standards 69w

Northumberland National Park Authority
285w

Nuclear disarmament
755–6

Nuclear power stations
Turkey 133–4w

Nuclear submarines
451w, 475w
Decommissioning 329–30w
Gibraltar 329w

Nursery schools
Northern Ireland 212w

Nursing homes
386w

Nuts
Labelling (24.06.99) 1405–12

Oaten, Mr Mark
Debates etc.
Adoption (16.06.99) 353
Asthma, Children (16.06.99) 365–9

Oaths and affirmations
Benn, Hilary (14.06.99) 33

O'Brien, Mr Mike, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 267–71, 282–5, (16.06.99) 401–3, 405–8, 439, 479, 483, 489–95, 498–504, 510–2
Questions
British nationality 230w
Crime prevention, Closed circuit television 17–8
Deportation 230w
Illegal immigrants 379–80w
Immigrants, Detainees 58w
Immigrants, Domestic violence 164–5w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate 57w, 428–9w
Immigration controls 165w
Immigration rules 163w
Immigration rules, Cohabitation 164w
Members, Correspondence 428w
Passport Office, Liverpool 93–4w
Passport Office, Newport 96w

O'Brien, Mr Mike*—*continued
Passports, Administrative delays 94–6w, 163w, 229w
Political refugees 93w
Political refugees, Administrative delays 93w
Political refugees, Correspondence 374–5w
Political refugees, Visas 100w
Refugees, International law 346–7w
Refugees, Kosovo 16–7, 265w
United Kingdom Passport Agency, Compensation 374w
United Kingdom Passport Agency, Standards 159–60w

O'Brien, Mr William
Debates etc.
Air guns, Safety (23.06.99) 1263
Questions
Bananas, EC external trade 177–8w
Business questions 1288
Crimes of violence 7–8
Income tax, Pensioners 459w

Occupational therapy
Northern Ireland 49–50w

OECD countries
Health services 112w

Official cars
Scottish Executive 234–5w
Scottish Office 234–5w

Official engagements
399w

Offshore industry
Capital gains tax 75w

O'Hara, Mr Edward
Questions
Doctors' list of patients 385w
Housing improvement, Disabled 200–1w
Mentally incapacitated 395w
"Support in Bereavement Consultation Paper" 181–2w

Oil and Gas Industry Task Force
271–2w, 543–4

Oils
Sewers 334w
Tipping of waste 406–7w

Omagh
Bombings 353w

Open government
105w, 381w

Ophthalmic services
Eclipse 1999 292w

Opik, Mr Lembit
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 872–6, 894
Flood control, Lewes (16.06.99) 533
Questions
Agency nurses, Costs 435w
Autism 286–7w
Belfast Harbour 427w
Pensioners, Hospital beds 331–2w

Opposition days
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1182–229
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1340–81
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1299–339

Organised crime
EC enlargement 5–6

Orthopaedics
Avon 437w

Ottaway, Mr Richard
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 749
London Underground, Joint ventures 81w, 137–8
M4, Bus lanes 1167

Out of town shopping centres
286w, 447w

Overcrowding
Trains 85w

Overseas aid
345–6w
Afghanistan 174–5w
Balkans 175–6w, 376–9
Caribbean 48w
East Timor 379
Fraud 173w
Gambia 430w
Kosovo 344–5w
Montenegro 473w
Serbia 473w
South Africa 389
Zimbabwe 178–9w

Overseas investment
311w

Overseas students
244–5w

Overseas trade
Republic of Ireland 271w

Packaging
Prescription drugs 186w

Paedophilia
375–6w
Disclosure of information 348–9w

Paice, Mr James
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 852–6, 859
Questions
Horticulture, Taxation 118w
Rabies, Disease control 120w

Pakistan
Foreign relations 920

Palace of Westminster
Parking 316w

Palmer, Dr Nick
Debates etc.
Air guns, Safety (23.06.99) 1258–9
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 78

Panel 2000
31–2w

Paper
Recycling 247w

Parachute Regiment
Correspondence 18–9w

Parades Commission
211w

Parcelforce
474w

Parental leave
Small businesses 209w

Parish councils
Public appointments 285w

Parking
Palace of Westminster 316w
Railway stations 152

Parliamentary Control of the Executive Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (22.06.99) 930–2

Parliamentary questions
Scottish Office 235w
Welsh Office 275w

Part-time employment
EC law 203w

Passengers
Railways 138–9

Passport Agency
see United Kingdom Passport Agency

Passport Office
Liverpool 93–4w
Newport 96w

Passports
Administrative delays 94–6w, 163w, 229w

Paternity leave
Armed forces 147w

Paterson, Mr Owen
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 791, 793, 797, 801–2, 813, 834–8
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1185
Questions
Business questions 568, 1294
Fuel poverty 547–8

Patten Commission
see Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland

Peace keeping operations
Armed forces 305w
Expenditure 326w
Kosovo 195w, 355w, 396–7w, 750–2
United Nations 305w, 475w

Peace negotiations
Middle East 355w, 913–7
Sudan 226w

Pearson, Mr Ian
Questions
Climate change levy 1281–2
Urban Task Force, Publications 448w

Pedestrian areas
Cycling 230w

Pendry, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 683–6
Questions
Ministers, Visits abroad 196–7w

Pension funds
National Bus Company 85–6w, 140, 385–6, 1166

Pension rights
Private sector 29–30w

Pensioners
Hospital beds 331–2w
Income support 369–70w
Income tax 459w
Personal income 368–9w, 466w

Pensions
34w, 433w
Lund Humphries 312–3w
Ministerial policy advisors 456w
Post Office 475w

Perham, Ms Linda
Questions
Defence Medical Training Organisation, Standards 6–7w
Doctors, Disciplinary proceedings 11w

Personal income
Pensioners 368–9w, 466w

Personnel management
Civil service 419w

Pertussis vaccine
185w

Pesticides
Taxation 312w, 417w

Petitions
Gaming clubs (18.06.99) 665
Health foods (16.06.99) 532
Medicines Control Agency (25.06.99) 1413

Petrol
44w
Retail trade 3–4w
Smuggling 28w

Petrol alternatives
Motor vehicles 445w

Physical education
131–2w

Physiotherapy
385w
Wales 373w

Pickles, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 936–7, 941–6, 961, 968, 970, 972–3, 979–80
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1300, 1303, 1309, 1311, 1314–20, 1327, 1334, 1336

Pickthall, Mr Colin
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 196
Questions
Railways, Standards 448w

Pike, Mr Peter L
Questions
Business questions 1290
Churches, VAT 757–8
Climate change levy 1280–1
Commonwealth Institute 117w
Empty property 150
Immigration and Nationality Directorate 57w
Kashmir 187w
Regulation 1159

Pinochet, Augusto
115w

Planning Appeals Commmision for Northern Ireland
see Northern Ireland Planning Appeals Commission

Planning permission
138w
Aerials 250w

Plaskitt, Mr James
Questions
Disadvantaged, Voluntary organisations 55–6w
Minimum wage 205w
NHS, Finance 1168

Plutonium
269–70w

Plymouth
Taxis 337w

Polegate bypass
284–5w

Police
Disciplinary proceedings 62w

Police*—*continued
Emergency calls 93w, 429w
Festivals and special occasions 220w
Helicopters 266w
Manpower 57w
Millennium 55w
River Thames 375w, 427w
Rural areas (23.06.99) 1137–42
Standards 12–3
Zimbabwe 359w

Police custody
101–2w

Policing for Northern Ireland Independent Commission
see Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland

Political prisoners
China 276–7w

Political refugees
15–6, 93w
Administrative delays 93w
Correspondence 374–5w
Finance 187w
Visas 100w
Voucher schemes 386

Pollard, Mr Kerry
Questions
Customs and Excise, Redundancy 28w
Petrol, Retail trade 3–4w
Smuggling, Petrol 28w

Pond, Mr Chris
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1146

Portadown
Royal Ulster Constabulary 351w

Post Office
Pensions 475w

Post offices
4w
Rural areas 4w
Social security benefits 4–5w, 33w, 189w

Postal services
Social security benefits 182w

Poultry
121w, 192w
Thailand 486–7w

Pound, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Oral question time intervention (15.06.99) 143
Questions
Disability living allowance, Eligibility 34–5w
Social security benefits, Disabled 35–6w
Social security benefits, National insurance contributions 35w

Prentice, Ms Bridget
Questions
Teenage pregnancy 17–8w

Prentice, Mr Gordon
Questions
Absent voting 379w
Animal feed, Contamination 123w
Armed forces, Training 305w
BBC, Public appointments 430w
Business questions 564, 1291
City technology colleges 340–1w
Coinage, Counterfeit manufacturing 169–70w
Duchy of Lancaster, Anniversaries 125–6w, 420w
Housing benefit 399–404w
Housing stock, Lancashire 283–4w

Prentice, Mr Gordon*—*continued
Inland waterways, Cable systems 285w
Iran, Transplant surgery 371w
Kashmir 114w
Labour Liberal Democrats Joint Consultative Committee 225w, 321w
Landlords 283w
Listed buildings, Demolition 442–3w
Ministerial duties, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
Mozambique, Elections 371–2w
Police, Helicopters 266w
Privy Council, Public appointments 17w
Riot control weapons, Medical treatments 220w
Roads, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
Self-assessment of tax 460w
Sheep, Radioactivity 487–8w
Tipping of waste, Prosecutions 284w

Pre-school education
(18.06.99) 735–42
Northern Ireland 426w

Prescott, Rt Hon John, Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Debates etc.
London Underground, Ministerial statements (15.06.99) 155–67
Questions
Fares, Concessions 139–40
London Underground, Joint ventures 81w, 137–8
National Bus Company, Pension funds 85–6w
Republic of Ireland, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 442w
Urban Task Force, Publications 448w
USA, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 82w
Visits abroad, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 440w

Prescription drugs
Packaging 186w
Women's prisons 105w

Press releases
Dept for Education and Employment 438w

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(24.06.99) 1382–404
Ministerial statements (23.06.99) 1171–8

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Partial Continuance) Order 1998
Debates etc.
(24.06.99) 1382–404
Ministerial statements (23.06.99) 1171–8

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(24.06.99) 1382–404

Primarolo, Ms Dawn, Paymaster General*
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 935–41, 944–5, 948, 954–6, 959–60, 962, 964, 967, 970, 973, 978–9
Questions
Capital gains tax, Tax avoidance 171w
Customs and Excise, Redundancy 28w
Income tax, Forms 172w
Income tax, Pensioners 459w

Primarolo, Ms Dawn—continued*
National insurance contributions, Females 29w
Self-assessment of tax 460w
Smuggling, Tobacco 223w
Tax yields 461w
Tax yields, Betting shops 170–1w
Taxation 462w
Taxation, Business 30–1w
Taxation, EC action 166w, 324–5w, 465w
Taxation, Recruitment agencies 27–8w
VAT 222–3w
VAT, Foreign exchange 166w, 222w
VAT, Service industries 459w
Withholding tax 168–9w, 457–8w
Working families tax credit 458w

Primary education
Class sizes 190w
Literacy 1166–7
Northern Ireland 67w

Prime Minister
Ministerial policy advisors 478w
USA 479–80w
Visits abroad 482–3w

Princess Elizabeth Orthopaedic Hospital Exeter
Waiting lists 14–5w

Prior, Mr David
Debates etc.
Police, Rural areas (23.06.99) 1137–9

Priority routes
Greater London 410w

Prison accommodation
428w

Prison sentences
Cannabis 105–6w
Drugs 106–7w

Prisoners
60–1w
Drugs 105w
Employment 347–8w
Exservicemen 60w
Per capita costs 265–6w
Rehabilitation 162w

Prisoners on remand
97w, 99w

Prisoners' release
Northern Ireland 165–6w

Prisoners' transfers
Special hospitals 62w

Prisons
Drugs 106w, 266w, 378–9w, 474w

Private finance initiative
465–6w

Private sector
Pension rights 29–30w

Privy Council
Public appointments 17w

Probation and aftercare
Computers 165w

Probation Board for Northern Ireland
70–1w

Probation officers
55w

Proceeds of crime
54w
Internet 170w

Procurement
Military aircraft 745–8
NHS 436–7w

Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997
Questions
285w

Professions Supplementary to Medicine (Clinical Scientists Board) Order of Council 1999
Debates etc.
(14.06.99) 115–9

Professions Supplementary to Medicine (Paramedics Board) Order of Council 1999
Debates etc.
(14.06.99) 122–5

Professions Supplementary to Medicine (Speech and Language Therapists Board) Order of Council 1999
Debates etc.
(14.06.99) 119–22

Promoting social inclusion initiative
Northern Ireland 141w

Property development
Fort Whiterock 51w

Proportional representation
387
Opposition days (23.06.99) 1182–229
Referendums 383–5, 1163

Prosecutions
Tipping of waste 284w

Prosser, Mr Gwyn
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 436–7

Prostitution
Advertising 347w

Public appointments
420w
BBC 430w
British Council 256w
British Waterways Board 202w
Integrated Transport Commission 139w
Legal profession 317–8w, 322–3w
Lords Lieutenant 321w
NHS 288w
Non-departmental public bodies 1158–9
Parish councils 285w
Privy Council 17w

Public Health Laboratory Service
185w

Public libraries
Commemorative coins 29w

Public participation
Elections 9

Public Record Office of Northern Ireland
Standards 142–3w

Public safety zones
86w

Public service
Standards 458w

Public transport
Expenditure 45w

Publicity
European Parliament elections 267–8w

Pupil exclusions
South East region 438–9w

Quality protects programme
250–1w

Quarantine
118–9w, 216w

Quin, Rt Hon Ms Joyce, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office*
Questions
Belgium, EC grants and loans 116w
Centre for European Reform, Finance 76w
Council of Ministers, Voting methods 354–5w
EC common foreign and security policy 357w
EC Foreign Affairs Council 484–5w
EC integration 115w
EC internal relations 358w
EC reform 357w, 926
EC staff, Business interests 276w
EC working groups 255w
European Commission, Conflict of interests 133w
European Communities, Flags 115w
European Movement, Finance 76w
Gibraltar 358–9w
Human rights 226w
Japan, EC external relations 134w
Research, EC action 359w
Russia, Antisemitism 354w
Schengen Agreement 116–7w
Turkey, Nuclear power stations 133–4w

Rabies
Disease control 118–20w, 297–8w

Racial harassment
Ealing 161w

Racial violence
Greater London 151–9w

Radioactive materials
Japan 5w, 150–1w, 271w, 305w, 927–8
Transport 79w

Radioactive wastes
AWE Aldermaston 329w
Waste disposal 142–4

Radioactivity
Sheep 487–8w

Radiotherapy
Medical equipment 11w

RAF Signals Engineering Establishment
7w

Railtrack
Capital investment 282w
Finance 281w

Railway network
Greater London (16.06.99) 327–48

Railway stations
Bicycles 409w
Parking 152

Railway track
408w

Railways
78w
Accidents 1164
Passengers 138–9
Rural areas 77w
Standards 82w, 448w

Rainsford School Chelmsford
439w

Rammell, Mr Bill
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 638–40
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 747
EC Finance Council 166–7w
Economic and monetary union 1268
Kosovo, Armed conflict 381–2
Minimum wage 205w

Rammell, Mr Bill—continued*
Non-fossil fuel obligation, Essex 109w
Working hours 556

Randall, Mr John
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 629–30, 640–3
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 716–9
Questions
Kosovo, Refugees 345w
Lead, Research 207–8w
Sites of special scientific interest 284w
Sites of special scientific interest, Northern Ireland 233w
Sites of special scientific interest, Scotland 278w
Sites of special scientific interest, Wales 275w

Rates and rating
Buchanan Centre 52w

Raynsford, Mr Nick, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions*
Questions
Council housing, Single people 337w
Homelessness, Greater London 283w
Housing improvement, Disabled 200–1w
Housing stock, Lancashire 283–4w
Landlords 283w
Listed buildings, Demolition 442–3w
Out of town shopping centres 286w
Social rented housing, Greater London 336–7w
Social rented housing, Lone parents 335w
Social rented housing, South West region 333w
Wembley Stadium 443–5w

Recruitment
Armed forces 150w
Civil servants 363–4w
Territorial Army 450w

Recruitment agencies
Taxation 27–8w

Recycling
443w
Paper 247w
Taxation 311–2w
Wood 285w

Redundancy
Customs and Excise 28w

Redwood, Rt Hon John
Debates etc.
London Underground (15.06.99) 157–9
Ministerial statement intervention (15.06.99) 160
Questions
Climate change levy 188w
Out of town shopping centres 447w
Regional aid 109w
Visits abroad, Dept of Trade and Industry 207w
Wal-Mart 482w

Reed, Mr Andrew
Questions
Armed forces, Medical profession 213w
Developing countries, Debts 375–6
Millennium Exhibition 180w

Referendums
Proportional representation 383–5, 1163

Refrigeration
Dept for Education and Employment 128w
Greenhouse effect 5–6w, 9w, 50–2w

Refugees
International law 346–7w

Refugees—continued*
Kosovo 16–7, 47–9w, 71–2w, 102–3w, 179w, 187w, 265w, 345w, 355–6w, 383

Regional aid
4w, 109w

Regional airports
141–2
Competition 78w

Regional development agencies
190w, 202w
North East region 413w
North West region 79w

Regional government
145–6

Regional planning and development
Stoke on Trent (23.06.99) 1130–6

Rehabilitation
Prisoners 162w
Young offenders 376–8w

Reid, Rt Hon Dr John, Secretary of State for Scotland*
Questions
Dover House 172w
Females, Scottish Office 330w
Forestry, Departmental responsibilities 215w
Further education, Scotland 330–1w
Human Rights Act 1998 214w
Minimum wage, Scottish Office 114w
Ministerial duties, Scottish Office 172w
Official cars, Scottish Office 234–5w
Parliamentary questions, Scottish Office 235w
Scottish Executive, Travel 172w
Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body 172–3w
Students, Scotland 114w
Written questions, Scottish Office 215w

Remand in custody
Young offenders 377w

Remedial education
394w

Remploy
469–70w

Rendel, Mr David
Debates etc.
Habitual residence test, Points of order (14.06.99) 34
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1299–309, 1314, 1317, 1324, 1335
Questions
East Timor, Overseas aid 379
Employment, EC law 389
Post offices 4w
Post offices, Rural areas 4w
Post offices, Social security benefits 189w
Social security benefits, Automated credit transfer 33–4w
Social security benefits, Post offices 33w
Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 208w

Rents
Council housing 201w

Republic of Ireland
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 343w
Dept of Health 383w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 442w
Home Office 266–7w
Overseas trade 271w

Residential homes
386w

Retail trade
Petrol 3–4w

Retirement
Age 363w

Rights of way
280–1w

Rio Summit
485–6w

Riot control weapons
Medical treatments 220w

River Danube
International assistance 176w

River Thames
Police 375w, 427w

River Tweed
47w

Road haulage industry
see Lorries

Road traffic control
Standards 84–5w

Road traffic offences
Cycling 348w
EC action 92w
Lorries 280w

Roads
Accidents 37w, 441–2w
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 126w
Contracts for services (24.06.99) 1404
Expenditure 42–3w, 45w
Noise 152–4
Rural areas 37w
Speed limits 441–2w

Robathan, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Orders (23.06.99) 1176
Questions
Economic and monetary union 458w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 744

Robertson, Rt Hon George, Secretary of State for Defence*
Questions
Armed forces, Divorce 751
Armed forces, Medical profession 213w
Army, Manpower 309w
ASTOR system, Contracts 65–6w
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Disclosure of information 398w
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Legal costs 9w
EC common foreign and security policy 747–9
EC defence policy 304w, 306w
Iraq, Bombings 301w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 65–6w, 302–4w, 306–7w, 327–8w, 743–5, 755
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 396–7w, 750–2
Kosovo, Uranium 148w, 307w, 454w
NATO enlargement 301w
Nuclear disarmament 755–6
Peace keeping operations, Expenditure 326w
Tomahawk missiles 452–3w
United Nations, Peace keeping operations 305w, 475w
US Dept of Defense 8w
USA, Ministry of Defence 66w
Western European Union 309w

Robertson, Mr Laurence
Questions
Army, Manpower 306w
Ballot papers 230w
Bananas, EC external trade 424–5w
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency 146w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 136w, 148, 334w
Grants for education support and training 394–5w
Households, Gloucestershire 77w
India, Christianity 909
NHS, Pay 110–1w
Passport Office, Newport 96w
Roads, Expenditure 45w
Sudan 253w
Tax yields, Motor vehicles 26w

Robinson, Mr Peter D
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 864–5, 880–5

Roche, Mrs Barbara, Financial Secretary to the Treasury*
Debates etc.
Debts, Developing countries (16.06.99) 359–64
Questions
Capital gains tax, Offshore industry 75w
Excise duties, Aviation 312w
Excise duties, Wines 457w
Taxation, Business 1279–80

ROF Bishopton
754–5

Rogers of Riverside Task Force
see Urban Task Force

Rolling stock
43w

Rooker, Mr Jeff, Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food*
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 796, 800, 812–3, 815–8, 830–1, 844, 851, 855–60
Nuts, Labelling (24.06.99) 1408–12
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1370, 1378–80
Questions
Animal feed, Contamination 123w
Bacillus thuringiensis 119–20w
Beef, Intervention stocks 486w
Bovine somatotropin 416w
Bovine spongiform encephal[illegible], USA 192w
Bovine tuberculosis 416w
British Cattle Movement Service, Costs 24w
Catering, Sportsgrounds 123–4w
Cattle, Ear tagging 24w
Cattle tracing system 120–1w
Common agricultural policy, Arbitration 123w
Common agricultural policy, Beef 121w
Dairy farming 193w
Dioxins, Belgium 416–7w
Farmers, Bankruptcy 299w
Farmers, Tax allowances 417w
Females, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 417–8w
Flax 487w
Food Standards Draft Bill Select Committee 124w
Genetically modified organisms, Animal feed 122w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 124–5w, 216w, 418w

Rooker, Mr Jeff—continued*
Genetically modified organisms, Food 25w, 124w, 192–3w, 415–6w
Genetically modified organisms, Safety 298w
Genetically modified organisms, Seeds 298w
Horticulture, Taxation 118w
Lindane 233–4w
Milk, Hormone treatments 25–6w
Milk Marque 298w
Pesticides, Taxation 417w
Poultry 121w, 192w
Poultry, Thailand 486–7w
Quarantine 118–9w, 216w
Rabies, Disease control 118–20w, 297–8w
Seeds, Marketing 122w
Sheep, Radioactivity 487–8w
Slaughterhouses, Fees and charges 21–2w
Slaughterhouses, Inspections 122–3w

Rooney, Mr Terry
Questions
Lund Humphries, Pensions 312–3w
Social security benefits, Appeals 370–2w

Ross, Mr Ernie
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 916–7

Ross, Mr William
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 863, 874, 885–8, 897
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1197, 1219–21
Questions
Absent voting, Northern Ireland 390–1w
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry, Solicitors 268w
Business questions 1293
Crimes of violence, Northern Ireland 141w, 231–2w, 388, 425–7w
Legal aid, Northern Ireland 233w
Royal Ulster Constabulary 353–4w

Rover Group
1163

Rowe, Mr Andrew
Questions
Hedges and ditches 84w

Rowlands, Mr Ted
Debates etc.
Caribbean, Capital punishment (23.06.99) 1102–3
Kosovo (21.06.99) 775–6
Questions
Medical profession, Disciplinary proceedings 11w
Minimum wage, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 114w
Minimum wage, House of Commons 272w
Minimum wage, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 23–4w
Minimum wage, Northern Ireland Office 66–7w
Minimum wage, Scottish Office 114w
Minimum wage, Treasury 168w
Minimum wage, Welsh Office 331w
NHS, Disciplinary proceedings 6w

Roy, Mr Frank
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 828–30

Royal Commission on Long-term Care
see Long-Term Care Royal Commission

Royal family
Chinook helicopters 450–1w
Protection 104w

Royal Naval Hospital Haslar
15–6w, 752–3w

Royal Ulster Constabulary
353–4w
Portadown 351w

Ruane, Mr Chris
Questions
Education, Wales 454–5w
Embassies, Wales 237–8w
Foreign investment in UK, Wales 236w
Local government finance, Wales 488w
Tourism, Wales 236–7w

Ruddock, Joan
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 788, 800, 803
London Underground (15.06.99) 162
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 333, 338–40
Questions
Business questions 563
Genetically modified organisms, Animal feed 122w
Genetically modified organisms, Antibiotics 136w
Genetically modified organisms, Cosmetics 199–200w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 147
Genetically modified organisms, Fish 330w, 395w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 192–3w
Genetically modified organisms, Research 325–6w
Genetically modified organisms, Safety 298w

Rural areas
Cars 471w
Police (23.06.99) 1137–42
Post offices 4w
Railways 77w
Roads 37w
Small businesses 544–6

Russell, Bob
Questions
Armed forces, Paternity leave 147w
Army, Manpower 260–1w
Army, Vacancies 261w
British dependent territories 924–5
British nationality 230w
Cancer, Colchester 288–9w
Council tax, Single people 83w
Cycling, Pedestrian areas 230w
Diesel engines 556
Military bases, Colchester 262w
National Bus Company, Pension funds 1166
Police, Festivals and special occasions 220w
St Dunstan's Charity 185w
VAT, Service industries 459w
Walking 447w

Russell, Ms Christine
Questions
Community safety local partnerships 14–5

Russia
Antisemitism 354w

Ryan, Ms Joan
Questions
Business questions 1293
Taxation, Business 1279–80

Safety at Sea Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (15.06.99) 169–73

Safety measures
Boating (15.06.99) 169–73

St Aubyn, Mr Nick
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 314–5, 319
Questions
Aviation 206w
Economic and monetary union 1267–8
Military aircraft, Procurement 745–8
Millennium volunteers scheme 175w
Roads, Noise 153–4

St Dunstan's Charity
185w

Saintfield School
Northern Ireland 67w

Salt
Health education 385w

Salter, Mr Martin
Questions
Beacon councils 143
Fox hunting 163w

Sanctions
Iraq 387
Libyan Arab Republic 109–10w

Sandeels
218w

Sanders, Mr Adrian
Questions
Devon and Cornwall Constabulary 100–1w
Diabetes, Medical equipment 435w
Immigration and Nationality Directorate 428–9w
Members, Correspondence 428w

Sarwar, Mr Mohammad
Questions
Kashmir 387–8

Satellite broadcasting
Frigates 7w

Savidge, Mr Malcolm
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 799, 838, 842
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 174w
India, Foreign relations 920

Sawford, Mr Phil
Debates etc.
Footwear (17.06.99) 657–60
Questions
A14 78w
British Cattle Movement Service, Costs 24w
Cattle tracing system 120–1w
Consumer goods, Prices 541–2

Sayeed, Mr Jonathan
Questions
Dioxins, Belgium 416–7w
Identity cards 3
Industrial relations 4w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 755
Manufacturing industries 208w
Regional aid 4w

Schengen Agreement
116–7w
Costs 92–3w
Information technology 160–1w

School choice
Northern Ireland 68–9w

School Standards and Framework Act 1998
Questions
439–40w

Schools
Crime prevention 57w
Drugs 132w, 340w, 1154
Finance 130w
Joint ventures 439–40w
Sports 1163–4
Standards 339w
Transport 64w
Water charges 63–4w
Worcestershire 63–4w

Science
Teachers 341w

Science enterprise challenge
557–8

Scientific Steering Committee
43–4w

Scope of debate
Rulings and statements (21.06.99) 867

Scotland
Detainees 58w
Fish 330w
Fishing vessels 22–3w
Forests 476w
Further education 330–1w
Genetically modified organisms 395w
Greenhouse effect 51–2w
Sites of special scientific interest 278w
Slaughterhouses 476w
Special areas of conservation 278w
Students 114w
Sub post offices 474w

Scotland Act 1998 (Border Rivers) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Consequential Modifications) (No 2) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Cross-Border Public Authorities) (Adaptation of Functions Etc) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Functions Exercisable in or as Regards Scotland) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Modification of Functions) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Modification of Schedules 4 and 5) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scotland Act 1998 (Transfer of Functions to the Scottish Ministers Etc) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(16.06.99) 532

Scottish Executive
Official cars 234–5w
Travel 172w

Scottish Office
Females 330w
Minimum wage 114w
Ministerial duties 172w
Official cars 234–5w
Parliamentary questions 235w

Scottish Office—continued
Written questions 215w

Scottish Parliament
Buildings 172–3w
Correspondence 1157

Scottish Parliament (Assistance for Registered Political Parties) Order 1999
Debates etc.
(15.06.99) 297

Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body
172–3w

Seaforth
Grain 281w

Seasonal workers
Working hours 555–6

Secondary education
Leicestershire 191w

Secondment
British Nuclear Fuels 253w

Secure psychiatric units
113w
Wales 73–4w

Security Facilities Executive
422w

Security Service Commissioner
Annual reports 195–6w

Sedgemore, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Railway network, Greater London (16.06.99) 337–8
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1116–8

Seeds
Genetically modified organisms 298w, 346w
Marketing 122w

Self-assessment of tax
460w

Sentence Review Commission
165–6w

Serbia
Overseas aid 473w

Service industries
VAT 459w

Sewers
Oils 334w

Sex Offences Review
58w

Sexual offences
Criminal injuries compensation 221–2w
Young offenders 376–7w

Shamrock Farms
104w

Shaw, Mr Jonathan
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1143–5
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 458–9

Sheep
Radioactivity 487–8w

Sheerman, Mr Barry
Questions
Air bags 247w
Dangerous driving 58w
EC external trade, USA 388–9
EC internal relations 358w
Euro Preparations Advisory Group 1269
Financial Services and Markets Draft Bill Joint Select Committee 222w
Government, Policy 421w
Recycling, Paper 247w

Sheerman, Mr Barry*—*continued
Taxation, Recycling 311–2w

Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (15.06.99) 308, 315
Questions
National Audit Office 759–60
National Audit Office, Manpower 300w

Shephard, Rt Hon Gillian
Questions
Regional government 145–6

Shepherd, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 201–9

Ships Support Agency
Standards 397–8w

Shoeburyness
Firing ranges 304w

Short, Rt Hon Clare*, *Secretary of State for International Development
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 616, 649–56
Oral questions, Points of order (16.06.99) 392
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 175–6w, 376–9
Bananas, EC external trade 177–8w
Caribbean, Overseas aid 48w
Cash limits, Dept for International Development 72w
Central America, Disaster relief 177w
China western poverty reduction project 197–8w
Commonwealth Development Corporation, Cuba 178w
Developing countries, Debts 173–4w, 373, 373w, 374–6
Developing countries, Education 175w
Developing countries, Genetically modified organisms 72w, 176–7w
Developing countries, Information technology 178w
Developing countries, Non-governmental organisations 174w
EC budget, Fraud 413w
Females, Dept for International Development 345w
Gambia, Overseas aid 430w
Genetically modified organisms, Seeds 346w
Heavily indebted poor countries initiative 274–5w
Indonesia, Debts written off 273–4w
International Monetary Fund, Structural adjustment 178w
Kosovo 431w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 381–2
Kosovo, Mines 47–8w, 344w
Kosovo, Overseas aid 344–5w
Kosovo, Refugees 47–9w, 71–2w, 179w, 345w
Millennium volunteers scheme 175w
Montenegro, Overseas aid 473w
Nigeria, Debts 175–6w
Nigeria, Overseas aid 176w
Overseas aid 345–6w
River Danube, International assistance 176w
Serbia, Overseas aid 473w
Sudan 198w
World Bank 49w, 198–9w
Written questions, Dept for International Development 345w
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 178–9w

Shrewsbury
Employment 464w

Shropshire
Council tax 80w

Sierra Leone
921–2

Simpson, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Genetically modified Food and Producer Liability Bill, 1R (24.06.99) 1298
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 442–6
Questions
Business questions 560–1
Home energy efficiency scheme, Wales 488w
Loans, Brazil 325w
Scientific Steering Committee 43w

Simpson, Mr Keith
Questions
Army, Deployment 257w

Single benefit gateway
Disability living allowance 224w

Single parents
see Lone parents

Single people
Council housing 337w
Council tax 83w

Sites of special scientific interest
284w
Northern Ireland 233w
Scotland 278w
Wales 275w

Skinner, Mr Dennis
Debates etc.
Business question time intervention (17.06.99) 566, (24.06.99) 1290
Kosovo (21.06.99) 769–70
Questions
Business questions 1296
Voting behaviour 10

Slaughterhouses
Fees and charges 21–2w
Inspections 122–3w
Scotland 476w

Small Business Service
207w, 315–6w, 554–5

Small businesses
203w, 415w
Parental leave 209w
Pay 208w
Rural areas 544–6

Smith, Rt Hon Andrew*, *Minister for Employment and Disability Rights, Dept for Education and Employment
Questions
Age, Discrimination 438w
Disability living allowance, Single benefit gateway 224w
EC Education Council 439w
Employment 191w
Employment Service, Disabled 130w
Employment Service, Standards 223–4w
European Social Fund, Employment schemes 238w
Industrial injuries scheme 238w
Jobseeker's allowance 361w
New deal for young people 190–1w, 467–8w

Smith, Angela
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1207, 1219

Smith, Angela*—*continued
Questions
Animal Procedures Committee 57w
Animal Procedures Committee, Annual reports 350w
Commonwealth Development Corporation, Cuba 178w
Refugees, Kosovo 102–3w

Smith, Rt Hon Chris*, *Secretary of State for Culture Media and Sport
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 666–73, 675, 677–8, 681, 688
Questions
English Sports Council 180–1w
Females, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w
National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education, Publications 89w
National lottery 89w
Republic of Ireland, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 343w
Sportsmark 179w
Telecommunications, Regulation 218–9w
Theatre, Hammersmith and Fulham 343–4w
US Federal Communications Commission 31w
Written questions, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w

Smith, Miss Geraldine
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 698–701, 711
Questions
Jobseeker's allowance 361w

Smith, Jacqui
Questions
South Africa, Overseas aid 389

Smith, Mr John
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 747–8
Kosovo, Armed conflict 354w
Railways 78w
Regional development agencies 202w
Working families tax credit 458w

Smith, Mr Llew
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1202
Questions
EC Environment Council 405–6w
Employment, Disabled 469w
Environment Agency, Business plans 333–4w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 327w
London Underground, Joint ventures 137
Mixed oxide fuel 334w
Paedophilia 375–6w
Paedophilia, Disclosure of information 348–9w
Radioactive materials, Japan 5w, 271w
Remploy 469–70w
Suharto, Mohamed 277w
World environment day 405w

Smith, Sir Robert
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 840, 846–8
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 66
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 238, 242–4, 248
Questions
Human Rights Act 1998 214w

Smuggling
Northern Ireland 28w
Petrol 28w
Tobacco 223w

Smyth, Rev Martin
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 864, 881, 888–91, 897
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 463
Questions
Business questions 564, 1289–90
Developing countries, Debts 374
Kosovo, Overseas aid 344w
Nigeria 924

Snape, Mr Peter
Questions
Transport and Works Act 1992 406w
Welsh Highland railway 442w

Soames, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 30, (17.06.99) 602, 609–10, 621–6, (21.06.99) 773
London Underground (15.06.99) 165
Questions
Alzheimer's disease 289–90w
Deer, West Sussex 44w
Government departments, Correspondence 1157
Nigeria 924

Social inclusion partnerships
Wales 73w

Social policy
World Bank 463w

Social rented housing
Greater London 336–7w
Lone parents 335w
South West region 333w

Social security benefits
Abuse 197w
Appeals 370–2w
Automated credit transfer 33–4w
Disabled 35–6w
National insurance contributions 35w
Payments 33w
Post offices 4–5w, 33w, 189w
Postal services 182w

Social Security Benefits Agency
Computers 184w

Solicitors
Bloody Sunday Tribunal of Inquiry 268w

Somerset
Children in care 251w

South Africa
Elections 920–1
Overseas aid 389

South East region
Pupil exclusions 438–9w

South West region
Housing benefit 361–2w
Social rented housing 333w

South West Water
Water charges 201–2w

Southend
Local government finance 78w

Southworth, Ms Helen
Questions
National Bus Company, Pension funds 385–6

Spain
Foreign relations 359w

Speaker
Leave of absence (23.06.99) 1255

Speaker and deputies
Debates etc.
Amendments and new clauses (14.06.99) 35, 74, (15.06.99) 223, 234, 248, 267, 286, (16.06.99) 396, 406, 409, 480, 498–9, 512–3, (22.06.99) 935, 995–6, 998, 1000–1, 1016, 1028, 1043, 1052, 1060–1, (23.06.99) 1182, (24.06.99) 1299, 1340
Conduct of proceedings (14.06.99) 9, 29, 33, 43–5, 47, 57, 59, 62, 64, 66–8, 72, 75–6, 83, 101, 128, (15.06.99) 178–9, 210–2, 290, 298, (16.06.99) 326, 364, 374, 391, 415, 437, 447, 450, 462, 467, 469, 472, 484, (17.06.99) 554, 580, 630, 658, (18.06.99) 710–1, (21.06.99) 753, 771, 821, 825, 885, (22.06.99) 948, 956, 967–8, 978, 981, 986, 1004, 1055, (23.06.99) 1129, 1151, 1155, 1168, 1197, 1207, 1216, 1230, 1244, 1252, (24.06.99) 1279, 1299, 1308, 1347, 1349, 1381–2, (25.06.99) 1435, 1482
Disallowed questions (14.06.99) 113
Non-procedural matters (23.06.99) 1249
Orders and regulations motions (16.06.99) 532
Points of order (14.06.99) 34, 66, (15.06.99) 176, 187, 222, 286, (16.06.99) 392, 479, 530–1, (17.06.99) 580, 656, (18.06.99) 666, (22.06.99) 929, 985, (23.06.99) 1181, 1233, (24.06.99) 1381–2
Rulings and statements, Disclosure of information (14.06.99) 34
Rulings and statements, Fifteen minutes rule (21.06.99) 786
Rulings and statements, Scope of debate (21.06.99) 867
Rulings and statements, Sub judice rule (14.06.99) 128
Rulings and statements, Ten minutes rule (23.06.99) 1182

Special areas of conservation
Scotland 278w

Special hospitals
Advocacy 14w
Prisoners' transfers 62w

Speed limits
Roads 441–2w

Spellar, Mr John, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence*
Questions
Armed forces, Paternity leave 147w
AWE Aldermaston 328w
AWE Aldermaston, Radioactive wastes 329w
Defence Aviation Repair Agency 453w
Defence equipment, Exhibitions 262w
Defence Estate Organisation, Standards 65w
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency 145–6w, 261–2w
Firing ranges, Shoeburyness 304w
Genetically modified organisms, Research 325–6w
Greenwich Hospital 451–2w
Guided weapons 147w
Harrier aircraft 306w
HMS Brave 213w
HMS Campbeltown 146w
HMS Chatham 146w
HMS Southampton 146–7w
Military aircraft, Procurement 745–8
Military bases, Chelsea 256–7w
Nuclear submarines 451w, 475w

Spellar, Mr John—continued*
Nuclear submarines, Decommissioning 329–30w
Nuclear submarines, Gibraltar 329w
Radioactive materials, Japan 150–1w, 305w
ROF Bishopton 754–5
Transport, Ministry of Defence 301–2w
Weather 308–9w

Spelman, Mrs Caroline
Debates etc.
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1125–7
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 147

Spicer, Sir Michael
Questions
Empty property 149–50
Withholding tax 457w

Sport England
see English Sports Council

Sports
Non-domestic rates 445w
Schools 1163–4

Sportsgrounds
Catering 123–4w

Sportsmark
179w

Spring, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 728–31
Questions
Charitable donations 310w
English Sports Council 180–1w
Holidays abroad 180w
National lottery 89w
Physical education 131–2w
Sportsmark 179w
Tax allowances, Charities 75w
Tourism, Balance of payments 179–80w

Squire, Ms Rachel
Questions
EC common foreign and security policy 912
Kosovo, Armed conflict 755

Stability Pact
Balkans 255w

Stakeholder pensions
433w

Standard assessment tasks
130w

Standard spending assessments
79w

Standards specifications
Complaints 413–4w

Standing charges
Utilities 548

Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 27, (17.06.99) 611–7
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Seeds 298w

Stansted Airport
138–9w

Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Questions
Israel, Human rights 357–8w

State retirement pensions
367–70w

Steen, Mr Anthony
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 788, 790, 794
Questions
Anchorpac, Correspondence 425w
Common agricultural policy, Arbitration 123w
Disability living allowance, Eligibility 107–8w
Empty property, Home Office 62–3w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 44w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 25w
Hospitals, Waiting lists 14–5w
Household surveys 46w
Members, Car allowances 74w
Milk, Hormone treatments 25–6w
National Audit Office, Manpower 300w
Orthopaedics, Avon 437w
Residential homes 386w
Surgery, Costs 30w

Stephen Lawrence Death Inquiry
Disclosure of information 58–9w

Stewart, Mr David
Questions
Debts, Developing countries 458–9w
Forestry, Departmental responsibilities 215w

Stewart, Mr Ian
Questions
Pertussis vaccine 185w

Stinchcombe, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Footwear (17.06.99) 658, 660
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1386–7, 1391–2
Questions
Crown courts, Trials 220w
Crown Prosecution Service 219w
Life imprisonment 99–100w
Lindane 233–4w
Scientific Steering Committee 43–4w

Stoate, Dr Howard
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1146–7
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 792
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 43, 45, 83
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 203
Health Bill (HL), Rep and 3R (15.06.99) 249
London Underground (15.06.99) 167
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1357, 1361–2
Questions
Family Law Act 1996 213–4w
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment 7w

Stoke on Trent
Regional planning and development (23.06.99) 1130–6

Stonehenge
430w

Stop and search
474w

Strategic Rail Authority
281w

Straw, Rt Hon Jack, Secretary of State for the Home Dept*
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, Ministerial statements (21.06.99) 777–85
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 194, 214–7
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 286–92, 297, (16.06.99) 396–400, 409–16, 418–9, 429, 439, 451, 462–75
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Orders for 1998 and 1999, Ministerial statements (23.06.99) 1171–8
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1383–90, 1399–404
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1187–95
Questions
Age of consent 220–1w
Annual reports, Home Office 54w
Devon and Cornwall Constabulary 100–1w
EC justice and home affairs 89w, 91w
Elections, Public participation 9
Email 350–1w
European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters 104w
Fletcher, Yvonne 18–20
Fox hunting 163w
Identity cards 2–5
K4 Committee 90–1w
Millennium compliance, Emergency services 89–90w
Open government 105w, 381w
Police, Manpower 57w
Police, Standards 12–3
Political refugees 15–6
Refugees, Kosovo 102–3w
Republic of Ireland, Home Office 266–7w
Road traffic offences, EC action 92w
Schengen Agreement, Costs 92w
Schengen Agreement, Information technology 160–1w
Stephen Lawrence Death Inquiry, Disclosure of information 58–9w
Voting behaviour 9–12
Wormwood Scrubs 429w
Written questions, Home Office 374w
Young offenders, Administration of justice 164w

Streeter, Mr Gary
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 645–9
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 376
Kosovo 431w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 382
Kosovo, Mines 47–8w
Kosovo, Refugees 47–9w
Montenegro, Overseas aid 473w
Serbia, Overseas aid 473w
Taxis, Plymouth 337w

Stringer, Mr Graham
Questions
Deportation, Mental patients 266w
Mental health review tribunals 292–3w
Regional airports, Competition 78w

Structural adjustment
International Monetary Fund 178w

Stuart, Ms Gisela
Questions
EC reform 926
Families 456–7w
Transport, Local authorities 80w

Students
Access funds 341w
Fees and charges 127–8w, 339w
Medicine 10w
Scotland 114w

Stunell, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 576
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1306, 1313, 1318
Questions
Railways, Passengers 138

Sub judice rule
Rulings and statements (14.06.99) 128

Sub post offices
Scotland 474w

Sudan
198w, 253w
Armed conflict 253w
Peace negotiations 226w

Suharto, Mohamed
277w

Sunderland
Hospitals 10w

Supermarkets
Opposition days (24.06.99) 1340–81

"Support in Bereavement Consultation Paper"
181–2w

Surgery
Costs 30w
Heart diseases 1168

Sustainable development
86–7w

Sutcliffe, Mr Gerry
Questions
EC Education Council 439w

Sutherland Commission
see Long-Term Care Royal Commission

Swayne, Mr Desmond
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 114
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 55–6, 64, 68–9, 93, 100, 105–6
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 672, 676–7, 680, 701–4, 712
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 174–5w
Business questions 567–8
Chinook helicopters, Accidents 327w
Chinook helicopters, Computer software 327w
Climate change levy 169w, 461–2w
EC common foreign and security policy 910
EC law 6
Fire prevention 61w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 1157
Lead, Ammunition 149
Minimum wage 548–9
Ministerial policy advisors, Prime Minister 478w
Official cars, Scottish Office 234–5w
Passports, Administrative delays 163w
Pesticides, Taxation 417w
Scottish Executive, Travel 172w
Students, Scotland 114w
Taxation, Pesticides 312w

Swimming
Curriculum (21.06.99) 901–8

Switzerland
Drugs 127w

Syms, Mr Robert
Questions
Business questions 563–4, 1296
Withholding tax 457–8w

Tapsell, Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 307–17
Kosovo (21.06.99) 776
Questions
European Central Bank, Gold and foreign exchange reserves 389–90
International Monetary Fund, Gold and foreign exchange reserves 1276
Official engagements 399w

Tax allowances
Charities 75w
Farmers 417w
Vocational training 27w

Tax avoidance
Capital gains tax 171w

Tax Credits Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
Allocation of time motion (22.06.99) 933–4
Lords amendts (22.06.99) 935–80

Tax yields
461w, 1271–2
Betting shops 170–1w
Motor vehicles 26w

Taxation
462w
Business 30–1w, 1279–80
Conscientious objectors 1278
Currency speculation 311w
Derelict land 459w
EC action 166w, 324–5w, 465w
Energy 118w
Horticulture 118w
Italy 27w
Pesticides 312w, 417w
Recruitment agencies 27–8w
Recycling 311–2w

Taxis
Disabled 407w
Plymouth 337w

Taylor, Ms Dari
Questions
Kosovo, Armed conflict 743–4

Taylor, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Kosovo (21.06.99) 770

Taylor, Rt Hon John D
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1003
Questions
Community relations, Northern Ireland 67w, 211–2w
Down School 268w
Fort Whiterock, Property development 51w
Glencree Reconciliation Centre 51w
Nursery schools, Northern Ireland 212w
Primary education, Northern Ireland 67w
Saintfield School, Northern Ireland 67w
School choice, Northern Ireland 68–9w

Taylor, Mr John M
Questions
Members, Correspondence 235w
Regional airports 141

Taylor, Mr Matthew
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1340–52, 1359–60, 1380

Taylor, Mr Matthew—continued
Questions
Exercise Dimming Sun 8w
Ministerial policy advisors 478–9w
Ministerial policy advisors, Treasury 463–4w
Republic of Ireland, Dept for Culture Media and Sport 343w
Republic of Ireland, Dept of Health 383w
Republic of Ireland, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 442w
Republic of Ireland, Home Office 266–7w
US Dept of Defense 8w
US Federal Communications Commission 31w
USA, Cabinet Office 125w
USA, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 125w
USA, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 82w
USA, Dept of Trade and Industry 424w
USA, Lord Chancellor's Dept 53w
USA, Ministry of Defence 66w
USA, Northern Ireland Office 69w, 141w
USA, Prime Minister 479–80w
Visits abroad, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 440w
Visits abroad, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 483w

Taylor, Sir Teddy
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 310
Questions
EC budget, Contributions 1282–3
Firing ranges, Shoeburyness 304w

Teachers
Northern Ireland 425w, 470w
Pay 341w
Science 341w
Standards 245w

Teenage pregnancy
17–8w, (23.06.99) 1109–29

Telecommunications
Regulation 218–9w

Ten minutes rule
Rulings and statements (23.06.99) 1182

Tenant management organisations
Council housing 411–2w

Territorial Army
Balkans 300w
Caernarfon 449–50w
Deployment 300–1w, 453w
Recruitment 450w

Thailand
Poultry 486–7w

Theatre
Hammersmith and Fulham 343–4w

Thomas, Mr Gareth
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1050
Denbighshire County Council (25.06.99) 1486–9
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 677, 727–8
Questions
Police, Standards 12–3

Thomas, Mr Gareth R
Debates etc.
Innovation (25.06.99) 1433–4, 1436–8, 1440–1, 1477
Questions
Armed Forces Pay Review Body 482w

Thomas, Mr Gareth R—continued
Companies, Environment protection 5w
Inland waterways, Access 245–6w

Thompson, Mr William
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 866–7, 891–2
Questions
Pre-school education, Northern Ireland 426w

Timms, Mr Stephen, Minister of State, Dept of Social Security*
Debates etc.
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1304–6, 1308–14, 1330
Questions
Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service, Manpower 295–6w
International Year of Older Persons 1999 32w
Pensioners, Personal income 368–9w
Pensions 34w
Retirement, Age 363w
Social security benefits, Abuse 197w
Social security benefits, National insurance contributions 35w
State retirement pensions 367–70w

Tinsley House Immigration Detention Centre
390

Tipping, Mr Paddy, Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office*
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 206

Tipping of waste
Northern Ireland 140–1w
Oils 406–7w
Prosecutions 284w

Tobacco
Advertising 225w
Smuggling 223w

Todd, Mr Mark
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 985
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 832–4
Questions
Health education, Salt 385w

Tomahawk missiles
452–3w

Tonge, Dr Jenny
Debates etc.
Kosovo (17.06.99) 636, 643–5
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1364
Teenage pregnancy (23.06.99) 1118–21
Questions
China western poverty reduction project 197–8w
Developing countries, Debts 375
Kosovo, Armed conflict 451w
Kosovo, Refugees 71–2w
Sudan 198w
Sudan, Armed conflict 253w
World Bank 198–9w

Touhig, Mr Don
Questions
ASTOR system, Contracts 65–6w
Industrial health and safety, Intimidation 46–7w

Tourism
365–6w
Balance of payments 179–80w

Tourism—continued
Millennium (18.06.99) 666–734
North West region 365–6w
Wales 236–7w

Trade competitiveness
Energy 203–4w
Manufacturing industries 204w, 206–7w

Traffic Reduction (Air Quality and Health) Bill 1998/99
Debates etc.
1R (17.06.99) 581

Train operating companies
Standards 408w

Training
Armed forces 305w
Custody officers 56w
Fire services 404–5w
Immigration officers 355w

Training and Employment Agency for Northern Ireland
see Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency

Trains
Bicycles 441–2w
Overcrowding 85w

Trans-European networks
(14.06.99) 126

Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981
Questions
208w

Transplant surgery
Iran 371w

Transport
Local authorities 80w
Ministry of Defence 301–2w
Radioactive materials 79w
Schools 64w

Transport and Works Act 1992
Questions
406w

Travel
Scottish Executive 172w

Travel information
USA 255–6w

Treasury
Minimum wage 168w
Ministerial policy advisors 463–4w
Written questions 172w

Treasury Counsel
448–9w, 455–6w

Tredinnick, Mr David
Questions
Drugs, Advertising 382–3w
Glasgow Homeopathic Hospital, Waiting lists 53w
Homeopathy 52–3w
Monopolies and Mergers Commission, Publications 2w

Tree planting
Genetically modified organisms 336w

Trials
Costs 98–9w
Crown courts 220w

Trustee Delegation Bill (HL) 1998/99
Debates etc.
2R* (14.06.99) 115

Truswell, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 200

Tunnels
Wanstead 404–5w

Turkey
Nuclear power stations 133–4w

Turner, Mr Dennis
Questions
Army Training and Recruiting Agency, Standards 149w

Turner, Dr Desmond
Questions
China, Political prisoners 276–7w

Turner, Dr George
Questions
Business questions 1293–4

Twigg, Mr Derek
Debates etc.
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 579
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 942
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1306–7, 1313, 1315
Questions
Economic and monetary union 1270–1
Military Provost Guard Service 398w

Twigg, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1209–12, 1215, 1217
Questions
Investors in People UK 129w
Iran, Antisemitism 227w, 253–4w
Iran, Bahai sect 228w
Iran, Human rights 226–7w, 254–5w

Tyler, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 112, (23.06.99) 1230
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 807–14, 851
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 187–8, 206
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1381
Questions
Business questions 561–2, 1287–8
Class sizes, Primary education 190w
Eclipse 1999, Health education 290w
Education, Finance 64w
Genetically modified organisms 419w
Line of route 74w
Schools, Transport 64w

Tyrie, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Gold and foreign exchange reserves (16.06.99) 309, 317, 320–1
Questions
Ministerial policy advisors, Pensions 456w
Proportional representation 387
Visits abroad, Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 440w
Visits abroad, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 358w
Visits abroad, Prime Minister 482–3w

UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator
421w

Ulster Defence Regiment
Deployment 398w

UN Register of Conventional Arms
226w

United Kingdom Passport Agency
Compensation 374w
Standards 159–60w

United Nations
Peace keeping operations 305w, 475w
Reform 399w

Universities
Disciplinary proceedings 63w

Unleaded petrol
336w

Uranium
269–70w
Iraq-Kuwait conflict 148–9w, 395–6w, 453–4w
Kosovo 148w, 307w, 454w

Urban areas
EC grants and loans 315w

Urban Task Force
Publications 448w

US Dept of Defense
8w

US Federal Communications Commission
31w

USA
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 192w
Cabinet Office 125w
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster 125w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 82w
Dept of Trade and Industry 424w
EC external trade 388–9
Lord Chancellor's Dept 53w
Ministry of Defence 66w
Northern Ireland Office 69w, 141w
Prime Minister 479–80w
Travel information 255–6w

Utilities
Standing charges 548

Valuation and Lands Agency see Northern Ireland Valuation and Lands Agency

Vandalism
15

VAT
222–3w
Churches 757–8
Financial services 75w
Foreign exchange 166w, 222w
Service industries 459w

Vaz, Mr Keith, Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Dept*
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 980–1, 988–91, 995–8, 1007–10, 1016–20, 1025–6, 1028–33, 1036–7, 1043–5, 1049–53, 1055, 1068–70, 1073, 1076
Questions
Administration of justice, EC action 108w
Court Service, Maladministration 108w
Domestic violence 381–2w
Family Law Act 1996 213–4w
Females, Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w
Judicial Appointments and Silk Equal Opportunities Joint Working Party 323–4w
Law, Reform 455w
Legal aid, Northern Ireland 53w, 233w
Legal profession, Public appointments 322–3w

Vaz, Mr Keith—continued*
Mentally incapacitated 395w
Treasury Counsel 455–6w
USA, Lord Chancellor's Dept 53w
West Midlands Police 322w
Written questions, Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w

Video conferencing
247w
Company law 189w

Viggers, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (continuance) orders (23.06.99) 1177
Questions
Armed forces, Health services 256w, 752–3
Business questions 562–3
Royal Naval Hospital Haslar 15–6w, 752–3w

Visas
Political refugees 100w

Vocational training
Tax allowances 27w

Voluntary organisations
Crime prevention 56–7w
Disadvantaged 13, 55–6w, 135w
Millennium Exhibition 343w
Minimum wage 14
Wales 135w

Voting behaviour
9–12

Voting methods
Council of Ministers 354–5w

Voucher schemes
Political refugees 386

Wales
A40 72w
Community charge 72–3w
Education 454–5w
Embassies 237–8w
Employment Service 130w
Food Standards Agency 134–5w
Foreign investment in UK 236w
Greenhouse effect 5–6w
Higher education 224w
Home energy efficiency scheme 488w
Hospital beds 331–2w
Local government finance 488w
Mining 73w
NHS 6w
NHS trusts 275w
Physiotherapy 373w
Secure psychiatric units 73–4w
Sites of special scientific interest 275w
Social inclusion partnerships 73w
Tourism 236–7w
Voluntary organisations 135w

Walking
447w

Walley, Ms Joan
Debates etc.
Regional planning and development, Stoke on Trent (23.06.99) 1130–3, 1135–6
World Health Organisation (15.06.99) 303
Questions
Exhaust emissions 472w
Fire prevention 163–4w
Petrol 44w

Wal-Mart
482w

Wandsworth
Income support 366–7w

Wanstead
Tunnels 404–5w

War crimes
Kosovo 423w

War pensions
Medical examinations 295w

Ward, Ms Claire
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1218
Questions
Better government programme, Elderly 1153
Catering, Dept for Education and Employment 223w

Wardle, Mr Charles,
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 984–6
Al-Fayed, Mohammed (22.06.99) 1081–6
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 178, 192–4
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 399, 404, 510

Wareing, Mr Robert N
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 32–3, (17.06.99) 632–5

Waste disposal
EC action (21.06.99) 900
Motor vehicles 83–4w
Radioactive wastes 142–4

Water charges
Schools 63–4w
South West Water 201–2w

Water Service
see Northern Ireland Water Service Agency

Water supply
Fire services 91–2w

Waterson, Mr Nigel
Questions
Balkans, Territorial Army 300w
Derelict land 83w
Empty property 150
Household surveys 44w
Housing benefit, Benefits rules 293w
Out of town shopping centres 286w
Personal income, Pensioners 466w
Polegate bypass 284–5w
Refugees, Kosovo 16–7

Watts, Mr Dave
Questions
Central America, Disaster relief 177w
Legal aid, Northern Ireland 53w
Schools, Joint ventures 439–40w

Weapons
Northern Ireland 390, 426w, 470w

Weather
308–9w

Webb, Mr Steve
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 935–6, 946–9, 962–5
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1310, 1327–33
Questions
Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry 319w
Council tax benefits 367w
Debates, Digital broadcasting 74–5w
Housing benefit, Benefits rules 433w

Webb, Mr Steve—continued*
Mental health services, Young people 100w
Pensions 433w
Social rented housing, Lone parents 335w

Wells, Mr Bowen
Debates etc.
Kosovo (14.06.99) 31, (17.06.99) 594, 602, 635–8, (21.06.99) 773–4
Questions
Balkans, Overseas aid 377–8

Welsh Highland railway
442w

Welsh Office
Females 225w
Minimum wage 331w
Ministerial duties 235w
Parliamentary questions 275w
Written questions 235w

Wembley Stadium
443–5w

West coast railway line
Modernisation 137w

West Midlands Police
322w

West Sussex
Deer 44w

Western European Union
309w
UK delegations 18w

Wheelchairs
435w

White, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Millennium compliance (17.06.99) 575
Questions
Competition 204w
Council housing, Finance 337–9w
Council housing, Tenant management organisations 411–2w
Electronic commerce 554

Whitehead, Dr Alan
Debates etc.
Access to Justice Bill (HL), Ways and means res, Rep and 3R (22.06.99) 1034–5
Tourism, Millennium (18.06.99) 710, 712, 715, 726–7
Questions
Civil service agencies 419w

Widdecombe, Rt Hon Ann
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 778–9
Health Bill (HL), Rep (14.06.99) 45, 58–60, 87–8
Health Bill (HL) and Immigration and Asylum Bill, Allocation of time motion (15.06.99) 177–82, 187, 210, 215
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (15.06.99) 268, 287, (16.06.99) 483–4, 513, 531
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Continuance) Orders (23.06.99) 1172–3
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1390–1
Questions
Accident and emergency departments, Administrative delays 11w
Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia 318–9w

Widowed people
Employment 294w
Opposition days (24.06.99) 1299–339

Wigley, Rt Hon Dafydd
Questions
CADW Welsh Historic Monuments 331w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 1157–8
Voting behaviour 10–1

Wilkinson, Mr John
Debates etc.
Demonstrations, City of London (21.06.99) 781
Questions
EC budget, Contributions 1278–9
Gold and foreign exchange reserves 459w
Kosovo, Armed conflict 918–9
London Underground, Joint ventures 80–1w
Military aircraft, Procurement 746–7

Willetts, Mr David,
Debates etc.
Tax Credits Bill, Lords amendts (22.06.99) 948, 956–60, 969
Questions
Students, Fees and charges 127–8w, 339w

Williams, Mr Alan W
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 147–8
Genetically modified organisms, Developing countries 177w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 1151–2
Inventions 551–2

Williams, Mrs Betty
Questions
Employment Service, Disabled 130w
Excise duties, Motor vehicles 310–1w
Secure psychiatric units 113w
Secure psychiatric units, Wales 73–4w

Willis, Mr Phil
Debates etc.
Supermarkets (24.06.99) 1344, 1346
Widowed people (24.06.99) 1304
Questions
Higher education, Finance 340w
USA, Travel information 255–6w

Wills, Mr Michael, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Trade and Industry
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1147–50
Innovation (25.06.99) 1429, 1437, 1459–61, 1463–4, 1467–8, 1472, 1476–85
Questions
Anchorpac, Correspondence 425w
Business links 187–8w, 414–5w
EC grants and loans 210w
EC grants and loans, Urban areas 315w
Electronic commerce 205w, 553–4
Electronic commerce, Cryptography 553
Information society initiative 188w
Internet, Fees and charges 544
Manufacturing industries, Trade competitiveness 206–7w
Regional aid 4w, 109w
Regional development agencies 190w
Small Business Service 207w, 315–6w, 554–5
Small businesses 203w, 415w
Small businesses, Pay 208w
Small businesses, Rural areas 544–6

Wilson, Mr Brian, Minister for Trade, Dept of Trade and Industry
Questions
Animal welfare, EC action 414w
Bananas, EC external trade 424–5w

Wilson, Mr Brian—continued
Exports, Northern Ireland 414w
Furs, Imports 414w
Overseas trade, Republic of Ireland 271w

Wines
Excise duties 457w

Winnick, Mr David
Debates etc.
Appropriation (No 2) (Northern Ireland) Order (21.06.99) 869
Kosovo (14.06.99) 31–2, (17.06.99) 583–4, 594, 608, 627–30, 635, (21.06.99) 771
Ministerial statement intervention (21.06.99) 776
Questions
Business questions 1287
Kosovo, Armed conflict 314w, 481w
Members, Correspondence 474w

Winterton, Mrs Ann
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 173–4w
Drugs, Abuse 1155
UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator 421w

Winterton, Mr Nicholas
Questions
Excise duties, Fuels 1283–4
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 412w
Gibraltar, European Parliament elections 925
Kosovo, Peace keeping operations 355w
Regional airports 141–2
Regulation 1159
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 178–9w

Winterton, Ms Rosie
Questions
Bus services, Standards 85w
Business questions 1292
Fares, Concessions 140
National Bus Company, Pension funds 85–6w

Wise, Audrey
Debates etc.
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 469, 503
Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order (24.06.99) 1398

Withholding tax
168–9w, 457–8w

Women
see Females

Women's prisons
Prescription drugs 105w

Wood
Recycling 285w

Woodward, Mr Shaun
Questions
District line 472–3w

Woolas, Mr Phil
Questions
Capital Modernisation Fund, Greater Manchester 171w
Cattle, Ear tagging 24w
National insurance contributions, Females 29w

Worcestershire
Schools 63–4w

Working families tax credit
458w, 1277–8

Working hours
556, 558

Working hours—continued
Fisheries 270–1w
General practitioners 111–2w
Junior doctors 10–1w, 319w
Seasonal workers 555–6

World Bank
49w, 198–9w
Social policy 463w

World environment day
405w

World Health Organisation
(15.06.99) 298–306

World Trade Organisation
388–9

Wormwood Scrubs
429w

Worthington, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Debts, Developing countries (16.06.99) 356–9
Immigration and Asylum Bill, Rep (16.06.99) 448–9

Wright, Mr Anthony D
Questions
Oil and Gas Industry Task Force 271–2w
Small businesses, Pay 208w

Wright, Dr Tony
Debates etc.
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1184
Questions
Non-departmental public bodies, Public appointments 1158
Sports, Schools 1163–4

Written questions
Cabinet Office 225–6w
Dept for Culture Media and Sport 269w
Dept for Education and Employment 244w
Dept for International Development 345w
Dept of Health 186w
Dept of the Environment Transport and the Regions 282w
Dept of Trade and Industry 189w
Home Office 374w
Lord Chancellor's Dept 299w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food 193w
Northern Ireland Office 232–3w
Scottish Office 215w
Treasury 172w
Welsh Office 235w

Wyatt, Derek
Debates etc.
Assisted areas, Kent (23.06.99) 1145
Equal access (Public and Private Buildings), 1R (23.06.99) 1179–80
Questions
Developing countries, Debts 374–5
Electronic commerce 554
Employment, Disabled 296w, 339–40w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 913–4
Quarantine 118w
Rabies, Disease control 297–8w

Yellow card scheme
110w, 434–5w
Metrizamide 110w
Myodil 110w

Yeo, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Food Standards Bill, 2R (21.06.99) 795–805

Yeo, Mr Tim—continued
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 199w

Young, Sir George
Debates etc.
Business questions (14.06.99) 111, (23.06.99) 1230
Proportional representation (23.06.99) 1182–7, 1195

Young, Sir George—continued
Questions
Business statements 559–66, 1285–7

Young offender institutions
377–8w

Young offenders
Administration of justice 364w
Education 376w, 378w
Rehabilitation 376–8w
Remand in custody 377w

Young offenders—continued
Sexual offences 376–7w

Young people
Drugs 126w, 364w
Mental health services 100w

Zimbabwe
Corruption 359w
Elections 360w
Human rights 360w
Overseas aid 178–9w
Police 359w